

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

1

1

LNA
JCD JF

Cape of Good Hope Supreme Court. 62

"CAPE TIMES" LAW REPORTS

OF ALL CASES DECIDED

IN THE SUPREME COURT

OF THE

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE,

DURING THE YEAR 1907

(WITH INDEX OF CASES AND DIGEST).

REPORTED BY

S. H. ROWSON, B.A., LL.B.,

ADVOCATE OF THE SUPREME COURT.

VOL. XVII.

1907

CAPE TOWN :

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY CAPE TIMES LTD.

1908.

JUDGES OF THE SUPREME COURT DURING THE YEAR 1907.

DE VILLIERS, RIGHT HON. SIR J. H., P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D. (Chief Justice).

BUCHANAN, HON. SIR E. J., Knt., LL.D. (Senior Puisne Judge).

MAASDORP, HON. C. J. (Second Puisne Judge).

HOPLEY, HON. W. M. (Third Puisne Judge).

LAURENCE, HON. P. M. (Judge President of High Court). February 11th to May 15th.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL :

SAMPSON, THE HON. VICTOR, K.C., LL.B.

TABLE OF CASES.

VOL. XVII.—1907.

	PAGE		PAGE
Abels, ex parte	1038, 1094	Alford, Wills and Abbott v. Kopelowitz	931
Abramhamse, ex parte	708	Alie v. Makwena	124
Abrahams v. Abrahams	76, 325	Aliwal N. Reformed Church, ex parte	822
Abrahamson, ex parte	28	Allen v. Colonial Government	1
Abrahamson v. Guardian Assurance Co.	765, 955	Allie v. Amin	14
Abram and Co. v. Van Dyk	27, 87	Allie v. Christianse	1109
Abram's Estate v. Industrial Life Assurance Co.	134	Ally's Estate v. Kriel, Roux and Co.	444
Abroms and Kapelus, ex parte	883	Amalinda Village M. Board v. Colonial Government	224
Adams, ex parte	314, 481, 543	Anders, ex parte	887
Adams v. Mocke	37	Andrews v. Andrews	663, 696
Adler v. Staples	238, 266	Andrews v. Goldstone	250
Adler and Frank v. Scholtz	93	Andrews v. Rawbone	531, 1098
African Banking Corporation v. Courtenay and others	729	Annear v. Cohen	861
African Banking Corporation v. Liquidator Grand Junction Railways	377	Annenberg, ex parte	578
African Banking Corporation v. Norton and Co.	931	Archibald and Another v. Bailey	1069
African Homes v. Archer	1150	Arderne, ex parte	63
African Homes v. Rohm	1123	Arderne v. Abrahamson	404
African Mutual Trust Co. v. Du Plessis	916	Arderne and Others, ex parte	404
African Real Estate Co. v. Attaway	269	Arlosoroff v. Kraitziok	1149
Ahlbom, Gullander and Co. v. Wiid	830	Arnold's Estate, ex parte	1152
Air and Co. v. Williams	265	Assets Realization Association, In re	952
Aitken's Estate, ex parte	1106	Aston v. Beaufort W. Municipality	662
Ajam v. Talbodien and others	370, 538	Atherstone, ex parte	341
Alane, ex parte	548	Attenborough, ex parte	548
Albertse's Estate, ex parte	642	Attenborough v. Attenborough	917
Albertyn v. Engel	870	Attwell, ex parte	447, 720
Albertyn v. Mountain View Quarry	858	Auerbach v. Schwes	540, 722
Albertyn's Estate v. Wallis	668	Austin, ex parte	1093
Albow Bros. and Another v. Isserowe	788, 821	Austin v. Austin	1038
Albrecht's Estate, ex parte ,	251, 269, 666	Ayliff v. Mohr	293
Alexander, ex parte	471	Backman v. Segall	864
Alexander v. Friedlander and Another	891	Bacon v. Hanslo	821
Alexander v. Prestwich and Others	433	Badenhorst, ex parte	445
		Badenhorst's Estate, ex parte	539
		Badenhorst's Estate v. Gordon	279
		Badenhorst's Estate v. Pieter- sen	279
		Badenhorst's Estate v. Pot- gieter	279

	PAGE		PAGE
Badenhorst's Estate v. Pula and Another	350	Biase v. Mahlutshana	650
Badenhorst's Estate v. Smile	350	Biel v. Steenkamp	1114
Bagnall v. Colonial Govern- ment	689	Biggs v. Colonial Government	88
Bailey, ex parte	267, 305	Birch, ex parte	912, 945
Bailey v. Davis	13	Biroh v. Birch	1051
Bailey v. Muir	42	Birt, ex parte	325
Bailey's Executors v. A.B.C. Bank and Another	252	Bishop and Others, ex parte ...	551
Baker's Estate, ex parte ...	821, 912	Black v. Schroeder	272
Bam v. Bam	798	Black and Wife, ex parte ...	721
Baris, ex parte	445	Black's Estate, ex parte ...	251
Barlow v. Law	238	Blaine and Co. v. Kruger ...	370
Barry's Estate, ex parte 822,	1104	Black v. Leve	751
Bartie, ex parte	880	Blankenberg v. Schietkat ...	867
Bartie v. Bartie	972, 978	Bloem v. Auret	107
Bassardien's Estate, ex parte	884	Blumberg and Son v. Van der Walt	13
Basson's Estate, ex parte ...	1000	Blumenfeld v. Field and Co.	673, 677
Bate and Co. v. British Steam Laundry	457, 543	Blumenthal v. Dupper	893
Bate's Estate v. Wheeler ...	982	Boalch v. Rix	976
Bauer, ex parte	295	Board of Executors v. Fock ...	1069
Baum v. Asaro and Another	13	Board of Executors v. Mc- Arthur	519
Baumann v. Kapelus	15	Board of Executors v. Sadie ...	1123
Bavuma v. Morum Bros. ...	740	Board of Executors v. Sonnen- berg	887, 1122
Bawoo v. Shamsodien	123	Board of Executors v. Turner	867
Bayer and Co. v. Strauss, Adler and Co.	68	Boffey v. Boffey	853, 917
Beahnisch, ex parte	1093	Boggs, ex parte	445
Beams v. Colonial Govern- ment	1077	Boltman v. Nieuwoudt	964
Beard v. Beard	475, 624	Bolus v. Farquharson	26
Beard and Others, ex parte	318, 531	Bone, ex parte	245
Beattie v. Beattie	24	Boosé v. Mills and Others ...	640
"Bechuanaland Press," ex parte	800, 884	Boosé's Estate, ex parte ...	728
Beckman v. Segall	893	Booth, ex parte	858, 892
Beeton, ex parte	887	Booth v. Booth	851, 879
Behr, ex parte	1000	Borchardt v. Dillon	456, 516
Bell v. Estate Douglas and Another	810	Bosman, ex parte	443
Benjamin v. Barkman	541	Botha, ex parte	686, 719, 931, 1051
Benning v. Cape Town Town Council	545, 817	Botha v. Coetsee	304
Bergh, ex parte	453	Botha v. De Klerk	454
Bergmann v. Colonial Govern- ment	800, 1117	Botha v. Le Roux	767
Bergmann v. Ferreira	626	Botha v. Milford and Another	966
Berman, ex parte	888	Botha's Estate, ex parte ...	720, 858
Berman v. Castle Wine and Brandy Co.	693	Bothma, ex parte	921
Berning, ex parte	233	Boulton, ex parte	56
Berning v. Kuswaye	385	Boxall v. Drakenstein Manga- nese Syndicate	543
Bestall v. Du Plessis	11	Boyd's Estate, In re	678
Bester, ex parte	269	Boyes, ex parte	160
Bettington v. Scott	238, 581, 657	Boyes v. Boyes	208, 553, 663, 1032
Beukes, ex parte	238	Boyes, Estate, ex parte ...	1000
		Boyle, ex parte	404
		Brady v. Palmer	612
		Brady v. Robertson	257, 525
		Brandon, ex parte	554
		Brandon v. Brandon	802, 1051
		Braude, ex parte	423, 998
		Braude v. Braude	530, 865

INDEX.

iii

	PAGE		PAGE
Bredenkamp v. Schemper...	867	Cairncross's Estate, ex parte ...	862
Bredeveld's Estate, ex parte ...	892	Caledonian Landing Co. and Bregenzer, ex parte ...	708, 865	Another v. East London
Breger, ex parte ...	878	Harbour Board ...	567, 579
Brimacombe, ex parte ...	245	Calitz, ex parte ...	481
Brimacombe v. Brimacombe...	503	Callahan, ex parte ...	888
Brink, ex parte ...	235	Campbell v. Herbert ...	1031
Brinton, ex parte ...	674	Campbell's Estate, ex parte , 331,	892
British South Africa Asphalt		Camp's Bay Extension Co. v.
Co., In re ...	911, 1012	Trautman ...	293
British Steam Laundry. In re .		Cape Canning Co., In re ,
	822, 881	21, 56, 527,	607
Brittain v. Zimmer ...	409	Cape District Building Society
Brooks, ex parte ...	239	v. Estate Brett ...	677
Brooks's Estate, ex parte 251,	705	Cape District Building Society
Brown v. Brown ...	1069	v. Jeffery ...	160
Brown v. Reynolds and An-		Cape Mineral Co., In re ,
other ...	893	720,	822
Brown v. Ward and Co. ...	443	Cape Times Ltd. v. Grane,
Brown and Wife, ex parte ...	697	503, 555,	676
Brownell, ex parte ...	446, 866	Cape Times Ltd. v. Fitzgerald	677
Brownell v. Brownell ...	893	Cape Town Diocese, Trustees
Brumell v. Wheeler ...	369	of, v. Reidel ...	856
Brunner, ex parte ...	835	Cape Town Stock Exchange,
Buchanan's Estate, In re ...	264	ex parte ...	669, 719
Buffalo Cold Storage Co.,		Cape Town Town Council v.
In re , ...	31, 831	Boosé ...	667, 671
Buffalo Cold Storage Co.,		Cape Tramway Co. v. Colonial
Liquidators of, ex parte ...	699	Government ...	156
Buffalo Cold Storage Co.,		Cape Tramway Co. v. Marks
Liquidators of, v. Federal		937,	972
Supply Co. ...	345	Carlyle v. Barsdorf and An-
Builders' Supply Co. v. Faulds	984	other ...	832
Buirski v. Phipps ...	52	Carnarvon Outer Commonage
Bulbring and Co. v. Jacob-		Committee, ex parte ...	280
son ...	15	Carr, ex parte ...	475, 719, 892
Bull, ex parte ...	481	Carr v. Carr ...	965
Burchell v. Burchell and		Carrol v. Quine and Others,
Others...	25, 56	605, 628
Burger, ex parte ...	537, 858	Castle Wine and Brandy Co.
Burger v. Colyn ...	121	v. Marsh ...	15, 17
Burmeister v. Executors Es-		Castle Wine and Brandy Co.
tate Van Rensburg ...	676, 696	v. Wessels and Another ...	765
Burnard v. Greyling ...	1069	Cavanagh v. Nisbet and An-
Burrowes' Estate v. Herman, 15,	17	other ...	55
Busse v. Estate Busse ...	801	Celliers, ex parte ...	669, 912
Busse's Estate v. Thompson		Celliers v. Fagan ...	482
and Another ...	977	Celliers and Others, ex parte	457
Butler v. Butler ...	852	Celliers and Others v. Celliers	543
Buttrum, ex parte ...	111	Central News Agency v. Ed-
Bux v. Abrams and Co. ...	74	wards ...	67
Buyskes v. Davids ...	765	Chadwick, ex parte ...	1094
Bydell, ex parte ...	161, 281	Chadwick v. Stott ...	1123
Byns v. Erasmus ...	18	Chalwin v. Gencarov ...	661
Byrne v. Bilson ...	971	Chase and Another v. Rigg,
		665, 709,	760
Cairncross and Another v.		Christensen, ex parte ...	912
Fagan and Another,		Christianie, ex parte ...	859, 982
49, 175, 196		Christie, ex parte ...	236

	PAGE		PAGE
Churchill and Another, ex parte ...	16	Colonial Government v. S.A. Cold Storage Co. ...	896
Clarabut v. Clarabut ...	878	Colonial Government v. Uitwijk Syndicate ...	1100
Claremont Municipality v. Amardien ...	67, 625	Colonial Orphan Chamber v. Spiro and Another ...	1057
Claremont Municipality v. Cowling ...	1069	Combrink v. Hassforther ...	332
Claremont Municipality v. Hudson ...	552	Commercial Union Assurance Co. v. Braaft ...	269
Claremont Municipality v. Jacobs ...	67	Connolly, ex parte ...	180
Claremont Municipality v. Mohamed ...	67	Connolly Ltd. v. Van der Merwe ...	857, 940
Claremont Municipality v. Von Holdt ...	456	Connor, ex parte ...	480
Clarke and Another v. Greenberg ...	181	Connor's Estate, ex parte ...	447, 683
Clarke and Another v. Levi ...	123	Conradie, ex parte ...	674
Clarke and Co., In re ...	21, 304, 439	Conradie v. Conradie and Another ...	857
Clarke and Co. v. Heathcote ...	408	Conradie's Estate, ex parte ...	208, 552, 787
Classen's Estate v. Colonial Government ...	1012	Cook and Co. v. Estate Stephan ...	658
Cloete, ex parte ...	642, 719	Cooke v. Vanger ...	969
Cloete v. Greyling ...	137	Coomber, ex parte ...	683
Cloete v. Smuts ...	677	Cooper and Another v. Truter ...	1111
Coaton and Another v. Spiro and Another ...	976	Cooper and Co., Liquidators of Estate, v. Cooper ...	17
Coetzee, ex parte ...	32, 653, 669, 931	Cooper's Estate, In re ...	1046
Coetzer, ex parte ...	376	Coosner's Estate, ex parte ...	20
Cohen, ex parte ...	460	Cornelissen, ex parte ...	16
Cohen v. Da Costa ...	11	Coote, Noble and Co., ex parte ...	806, 861
Cohen's Estate, In re ...	686	Corder v. Upton ...	100, 146, 685
Cohen Bros. v. Levini ...	52	Corderoy v. Colonial Government ...	1024
Cohn, ex parte ...	686	Cordes v. Wortreich ...	60
Coleman, ex parte ...	1150	Correia v. Correia and Another ...	434
Collie v. Kalk Bay Municipality ...	281	Cosmelli, Meyer and Co. v. Taylor and Miles ...	13
Collins v. King ...	214	Cossly, ex parte ...	156
Collinet v. Leslie ...	110	Cotterel v. Vorster ...	237
Collison v. Vaile ...	680, 836, 864	Cotton v. Arnold and Co ...	767
Colonial Building Corporation, In re ...	18, 77	Courtenay v. Platnauer ...	641
Colonial Government, ex parte ...	325	Courtis's Estate, ex parte ...	891
Colonial Government v. Amalinda V.M. Board and Another ...	373	Cowling's Estate, ex parte ...	538, 1097
Colonial Government v. Estate Classens ...	880	Cox, ex parte ...	708, 737
Colonial Government v. Fraser ...	865	Cranko's Estate, ex parte ...	966
Colonial Government v. Kopolowitz ...	145	Craven, ex parte ...	33
Colonial Government v. Lilian Syndicate ...	397	Crawford v. Barron ...	29
Colonial Government v. Liquidator of S.A. Supply Co. ...	541	Crawford v. Moller and Another ...	67
Colonial Government v. Mills and Sons ...	290	Cream of Wheat Co. v. S.A. Importers, Ltd. ...	665
Colonial Government v. Nel ...	856	Creaghe v. Jones ...	322
		Croes' Estate, ex parte ...	686
		Cronje, ex parte ...	786
		Crooks v. Schoeman ...	255
		Cross v. Purcell ...	509
		Crowthor and Another v. Elkon ...	369

INDEX.

	PAGE		PAGE
Crozier, ex parte	118	De Wet v. Chorwitz	653
Crozier v. Crozier	368, 886	De Wet's Estate, ex parte	1007
Cruywagen v. Brand	368, 625	De Wit, ex parte	504
Cunningham and Gearing v. Klipheuvcl Farmers' Dairy Co.	323	De Wit v. De Wit	323, 641
Cunningham and Gearing v. Milnerton Estates	1057	De Wit's Estate, ex parte	1104
Curtin v. Curtin	54	Dharsey v. Colonial Government	749
Cyona Press v. Anderson	565	Dicey v. Simpson	177
Daley v. Haak	475	Dichmont, ex parte	1138
Daly, ex parte	932	Diesel and Another, ex parte	256
Dallas, ex parte	367	Distin, ex parte	1139
Daneman Bros., ex parte	384	Distributing Syndicate v. Imperial Cold Storage, 921,	1085
Dapino's Estate v. Automatic Pit Co.	635	Distributing Syndicate v. Walder	641
Darling D.R. Church, ex parte	822	Dold, ex parte	446
Darras, ex parte	52	Dold and Van Breda v. Katz	14
Dawood v. Mohamed	468	Donnellan v. Kohne, 685, 751,	877
De Beers' Estate, ex parte	161	Donovan, ex parte	863
De Clerk v. Du Toit	1000	Doornback v. Estate Doornback	1134
De Donallier, ex parte	391	Doovey v. Casimali	423
De Jager, ex parte	1068	Dorfling's Estate, ex parte	611
De Klerk v. De Klerk	32, 280	Douallier, ex parte	147
De Klerk's Estate v. Lombard	849	Douglas v. Gibbons	856, 1008
De Kock, ex parte	245	Drake, ex parte	1013
De Korte, ex parte	719	Drake v. Meyer and Another	1068
Delponte v. Anderson	15	Dreyer, ex parte	19
Delpont and Another, ex parte	809	Dreyfus and Co. v. Estate Napier	325
De Marillac, ex parte	950, 1133	Dreyfus and Co. v. Estate Reynolds	1098
Dempers and Van Ryneveld v. Groenewald	229	Driesson v. Driesson	33, 76
Dengler v. Klibbe	625	Duckitt, ex parte	752, 831
Denham, ex parte	738	Dumbleton, ex parte	912, 1069
Desvages v. Ayres	737	Duminy v. Imperial Brick Co.	351
Desvages v. Easton	174	Duminy v. Masterton	350
Desco v. Santich	165	Duminy v. Wessels	766
De Villiers, ex parte	545, 878	Dunbar v. Smail	809
De Villiers v. Jacobs	255	Dundas, ex parte	33
De Villiers v. Liebenberg	867	Dundas v. Beukes	182, 272, 281
De Villiers v. Loubser	174	Dunell, Ebdon and Co. v. Fitzgerald	856
De Villiers v. Myburgh	519	Du Pisani v. Willowmore Divisional Council and Another	458
De Villiers v. Nichollas and Co.	275	Du Plessis, ex parte , 35, 367,	1138
De Villiers v. Von Holdt	181	Du Plessis v. The Master	457
De Villiers and Another, ex parte	983	Du Plessis's Estate, ex parte , 682, 1001,	1094
De Villiers' Estate, ex parte , 207,	554	Du Preez, ex parte	229
De Vries v. Du Plessis	519, 934	Du Preez v. Benade	36
De Waal v. Rademeyer and Another	248	Du Preez's Estate, ex parte , 325,	885
De Waal and Another v. De Jager and Others	939	Du Roau v. Estate Van der Merwe	805
Dewar, ex parte	1031	Dusseau and Co., In re	23
De Wet, ex parte , 239, 1125, 1127, 1144		Duthie's Estate, ex parte	1093
		Du Toit, ex parte	32, 737

	PAGE		PAGE
Du Toit v. De Smidt	952	Erlank v. Estate Erlank ...	136
Du Toit v. Roux	834	Erlank v. Tennant and
Du Toit v. Vortman and		Another	241
Another	501	Erlank's Estate, ex parte ...	353
Du Toit's Estate, ex parte ...	862	Espih, ex parte	11, 154
East London Board of Exe-		Esterhuizen, ex parte	146
cutors, ex parte	910	Esterhuizen v. Esterhuizen	367, 890
"East London Daily News"		Ettlinger v. Schocker	1123
Co., In re	20, 369,	Ettman, ex parte	111
479, 553, 684,	687	Evans v. Bucknall Line... ..	114
"East London Daily News"		Evans v. Evans... ..	54, 325, 664
Co. v. Cragg	75	Exham, ex parte	226
Eaton, Robins and Co. v. An-		Exley and Co., In re ,	240
derson's Executor	605	Exley and Co., Estate of,
Eaton, Robins and Co. v.		ex parte	1124
Kramer... ..	931	Fagan, ex parte	880
Eaton, Robins and Co. v.		Fairbairn v. Jandrell	174
Meyers	1122	Fairbridge, Arderne and Law-
Eaton, Robins and Co. v.		ton v. Blumberg	15
Schreuder	822, 827	Falconer v. Williamson	47
Eaton's Estate v. Visser ...	139	False Bay Quarry Co. v.
Eaton's Executors, ex parte ...	269	Hirsch	878, 1132
Ebert and Co. v. Dickson and		Farmers' Co-operative Co. v.
Another... ..	641	Nourse... ..	295
Eclipse Mineral Water Co.,		Faulkner v. Salie	937
In re	258, 331	Faure v. Du Toit	1150
Edmunds v. Davis	519	Fechter v. Transvaal Mines
Edwards, ex parte	520, 543	Labour Co.	304, 351
Edwards v. Edwards	752	Federal Cold Storage Co. v.
Edwards v. Kitch	883	Liquidators of Buffalo
Edwards and Others v. Dis-		Cold Storage Co.	445
tributing Syndicate	821	Feldman, ex parte	16
Eedes, ex parte	677	Fennel, ex parte	453
Egerton Park Estate Co. v.		Fernwood Syndicate, ex parte
Land	706	439, 666
Egerton Park Estate Co. v.		Fernwood Syndicate v. Marks	33
Williams... ..	864, 1138	Ferreira, ex parte
Ehlers v. Estate Loubser ...	823	16, 70, 77, 880, 983, 1052
Eliason v. Katz	565	Ferreira v. Ferreira	182, 1101
Elsworth, ex parte	719	Ferreira's Estate, ex parte ...	966
Ely, ex parte	293	Fick v. Abel	222
Enders, ex parte	976	Field and Co. v. Klass	423
Engel, ex parte	245	Field and Co. v. Nel and An-
Engel v. Engel	279, 861	other	785
Engelbrecht v. Rossouw and		Figlan, ex parte	945
Others	382	Findlay v. Godfrey	475
Engelbrecht and Others, ex		Finkelstein v. Finkelstein
parte	972	331, 831, 1126
Engelbrecht and Others v.		Fitzgerald v. Argus Co....	628, 711
Botha and Others	1054	Flaum v. Gerhard and Hay,
Enslin v. Swanepoel	33, 227, 255	Ltd.	180
Enslin and Another v. Louw		Fleming v. Botha	19, 23, 181
Equitable Fire Insurance Co.,		Fleming v. Corbett	19, 23, 227
ex parte	1133	Fletcher v. Maritz	1100
Equitable Fire Insurance Co.,		Fletcher v. Matthes	238
In re	22, 281	Fletcher's Estate v. Bruyns...	154
Erasmus v. Colonial Govern-		Fletcher's Wholesale v. Stein-ment	802	berg	14

	PAGE		PAGE
Fluckiger v. Fluckiger	182	Garlick and Others, ex parte	56, 671
Foord v. Foord	32	Garlick and others v. Braude	13
Foot, ex parte	944	Gauss v. Harvey	257, 696
Foster v. Beelders	139	Gawranski v. Spunt	29
Fouche, ex parte	235, 304	Geard's Estate v. Ward	856
Fouche v. Fouche	160	Geddes v. Galloway	444
Fourie, ex parte	112, 279, 1013	Geldenbuys, ex parte	267
Fourie v. Brand	1052	General Estate and Orphan Chamber v. Saffierdien	266, 342, 423, 433
Fourie's Estate, ex parte	1105	Gepp v. Gepp and Another	293
Fourie's Estate v. Fourie	270, 272	Gibbs, ex parte	33
Frame v. Bennett	295	Gibson's Estate, ex parte	17
Francis Bros., ex parte	787	Gie, ex parte	396
Francis Bros. v. Estate Span-dau	888	Gill's Estate v. Zies	867
Frank, ex parte	93	Gilpin v. Fynn	427
Frank v. Estate Lotter	676	Gluckman v. Booysen	1152
Frank v. Rogers	883	Gluckman v. Burger	518
Fraser, ex parte	160	Gluckman v. Nothling	1084
Fraser and Sons, Ltd., v. Cohen	30, 227	Goddess v. Pienaar	657
Fraser's Estate, ex parte	556, 880, 949	Goedhals v. Goedhals	1098
Freason v. Freason	184	Golden Mile Mining Syndi-cate, In re	308, 434
Freeman and Co. v. Hanson	74	Goldfoot v. Simson	611, 661, 667
Freislich's Estate v. De Villiers	864, 877	Goldsmith, ex parte	17
French and Co. and Others v. Woods	872	Goldsmith v. Irwin	44, 237
Friedberg v. Deputy Sheriff of Prieska	394	Goldstuck's Estate v. Gold-stuck and Others	788
Friedlander v. Vom Dorp and Another	1038	Golightly, ex parte	405
Friedlander Bros., ex parte	145, 239, 268, 528, 666, 686	Goodchild v. McHugh	472
Friedlander v. Badroodien and Others	719	Good Hope Funeral Associa-tion, ex parte	154, 730, 831
Friedlander v. Estate Gillett	424	Goodman v. Weinstein	469
Friedlander v. Sindler	475	Goosen's Estate, ex parte	885
Friedman v. Koenig	881	Gordon, Mitchell and Co. and Others v. Millstein and Co.	404
Fryer, ex parte	1124	Gordon's Estate v. Siber-bauer, Wahl and Fuller	1138
Fryer v. Estate Louw	373	Gorman, ex parte	912
Fryer v. Executors Estate Hobkirk and Another	75	Gotze v. Ziehl	118
Fuller, ex parte	1032	Gourlay v. Jones	229
Fuller's Estate, ex parte	687	Gouws' Estate, ex parte	1133
Fuller's Estate v. Jackson	855	Gouws v. Gouws	1051
Fulton, ex parte	683	Govey and Co. v. Warner and Others	764
Futter and Sons, Estate of, ex parte	18	Graaf v. Scholtz, N. O.	118
Gabriel, ex parte	111, 178, 231, 1012	Graaf v. Shatzky	676, 856
Gabriel v. Gabriel	435	Gracie v. Monton	30
Gagela v. Ganca	34, 77, 359	Grand Junction Railways, In re	239, 268, 480, 1032
Garcia and Others v. Carr	1047	Grant v. Grant	33, 663, 834
Gardiner v. Gardiner	1051	Gray, ex parte	521, 624
Garland's Estate, ex parte	145	Gray v. Green Point Bowling Club	283
Garlick, ex parte	567	Gray v. Imperial Brick Co.	396
Garlick, v. Jacobsohn	12	Gray v. R.M.'s Clerk, Cape, and Another	232

	PAGE		PAGE
Greef v. Pikthley	15	Haupt, ex parte	888, 972
Greef and Others, ex parte ...	807	Hawkins v. Hawkins	209
Green and Co., ex parte ...	568, 668	Hayward's Estate, ex parte ...	881
Green and Sea Point Municipality v. Becker	328	Haywood v. Pauling	169
Greenan, ex parte	16	Hazell's Estate v. Schmidt ...	146
Greeve, ex parte	314	Head, ex parte	785
Greeve v. Keal... 562, 945, 1052		Heathcote, ex parte	322
Gresse's Estate, ex parte ...	439	Hedley Bros., v. Colonial Government	270
Greybe, ex parte	67	Heinaman v. Badardien	227
Greyling, ex parte	63, 77	Helfrich, ex parte	18
Grobblar, ex parte	17, 724	Helland, ex parte	1032, 1070
Grobblar v. Grobblar ...	323, 520	Hemming and Pattle, ex parte	258
Groenewald, ex parte ...	17, 61, 687	Hennessy v. Furter	1043
Groenewald v. Newmark ...	133	Hennings, ex parte	885
Grundling's Estate, ex parte	737, 1032	Hensley, ex parte	1132
Gudgeon's Estate v. Jacobs ...	237	Henson, ex parte	32, 68
Gunkel v. Turner	225	Hepworths, Ltd. v. McGlashan	404
Gunther, ex parte	370	Herbert, ex parte	11
Guthrie and Theron v. Esterhuysen	118	Herholdt v. Theron and Another	1123
Guthrie and Theron v. Taljaard	181, 229, 259	Herman and Canard v. American Hat Co.	13
Gurland, ex parte	1148	Herschman, ex parte	146
Haarhoff's Estate, ex parte ...	18	Herzfelder, ex parte	1144
Haasbroek v. Haasbroek ...	139	Héuer, ex parte	834
Hahn, ex parte	752, 788	Heunie, ex parte	976
Hall v. Estate Klaassen ...	1125	Heunis, ex parte	911
Hanau, ex parte	207	Hex River Vineyard Co., In re	479, 656
Hanau v. Buchanan 180, 236.	246	Heydenrych v. Beddoes ...	17
Hanau v. Papert and Another	74	Heydenrych v. Estate Buchanan and Others	902
Handler, ex parte	878	Heydenrych v. Estate Mackie, Young and Co. and Another	1105
Handley, ex parte	1012	Heydenrych v. Levi	806
Hanekom's Estate, ex parte ...	62	Heywood's Estate, ex parte ...	866
Hannay v. Hannay	47, 932	Hickson v. Colonial Government and Another	406
Harcombe v. Cosay	238	Hiddings v. Brady	641
Harcombe and Another v. Meyer	433	Hiddings v. Cohen	341
Hare's Estate, ex parte	446	Hiddings v. Stetzkom and Another	250
Hargreaves and Another v. Sekhosana	883	Hiddings's Estate, ex parte , 1094, 1143
Harmening v. Faro	437	Hiddings's Estate v. Field ...	293
Harmening v. Gaffney	466	Hiddings's Estate v. Shilling	279, 799
Harris, ex parte	657, 718	Higg's Estate v. Ruck	14
Harris v. Gaul	555	Hill v. Gundry	1032
Harris v. Gordon	877	Hill v. Hill	999
Hart v. Brolin	625	Hill and Grand Junction Railways, ex parte	480
Hartley v. Anderson	54	Hillsdon v. Hillsdon	1010
Hartley v. Central News Agency	298	Hitge v. Archer	455
Hartley v. Palmer	298	Hoben v. Cape Town Stevedoring, Co., Ltd.	230
Harvey v. Franks	525
Harvey v. Harvey ... 375, 890, 977
Harvey v. Thomas	651
Haskins v. De Gouvea ...	976, 1132
Hassan v. Abduraman	178
Hattingh, ex parte	32, 226

	PAGE		PAGE
Hoben v. Kalk Bay Fish Co., Ltd.	154	Hyde v. Joubert and Another	833
Hobson v. Mwuyniswa	256	Hyde v. Ngewabe and Others	870
Hobson's Estate, ex parte	859	Immelman and Co. v. King Brothers	74
Hockley v. Taylor and Co.	883	Imperial Cold Storage Co. v. Archer	342
Hodgson, ex parte	341	Imperial Cold Storage Co. v. Civil Commissioner (Cape)	314
Hodgson v. Harris	676	Imperial Cold Storage Co. v. Distributing Syndicate, 548, 678, 870, 884
Hoffman, ex parte	520, 865	Imperial Cold Storage Co. v. Rosenberg	323
Hoffman v. Bruyns	833	Industrial Life Assurance Co. v. Estate Felix	244, 476
Hoffman v. Cape Town Town Council	578, 642, 786, 913	Indwe Mutual Building Society, ex parte	21, 119
Hoffman v. Hoffman	854, 965, 1132	Introna, ex parte	1124
Hoffman v. Trustees of Good Hope Funeral Association	123	Irvine v. Goldsmith	599, 677
Hoffman and Co. v. Cooke	444	Isaac v. Barrable	751
Hofmeyr v. Holloway	1123	Ismail v. Ismail	1115
Hofmeyer and Son v. Ross	313	Izaaks v. Nieuwstadt and Co.	742
Holliday v. Roode	540	Jackson, ex parte	566, 628
Holmes v. Konig	12	Jackson v. Cape Colony Tattersall's	176
Holmes v. Marcus	883	Jacobs v. Close	1052
Holmes v. Odendal and Another	322	Jacobs v. Jacobs	280
Holtzmann v. McKenzie	801	Jacobsohn v. Schiller	479
Homes v. Schach	160	Jacobsohn Brothers v. Jacobsohn	565
Honeybun v. Herbert	656	Jagger and Co. v. Fein	887
Hoogendoorn v. Goodall	14	Jagger and Co. v. Weinberg and Others	235, 258
Hook, ex parte	63	Jaliel's Estate, ex parte	1150
Hopkins's Estate v. Coombe	856	Jamie v. Adams	120
Hopkinson, ex parte	682	Jansen, ex parte	185, 331
Hopkinson v. Carter	870	Jansen v. Van der Merwe	449, 678
Hornabrook v. Bright	805, 861	Jansen v. Whillier	145
Horne v. Ruthel	29	Janson v. Janson	527, 664
Horne v. De Marillac	598	January v. January	508
Hosking v. Hosking	605, 696	Jarmain and Wife, ex parte	305
Hotz v. Standard Bank	78	Jarvis, ex parte	503
Hoven v. Cape Town Stevedoring Co.	71	Jarvis's Estate, ex parte	76
Howard v. Mabuya	667	Jawoodien, ex parte	861
Howard, Farrer and Co. and Others v. East London Municipality	1102	Jenks's Estate, ex parte	1125
Howard, Farrer, Robinson and Co. v. Clarke	1120	Jervoise v. Jervoise	32, 182
Howes v. Howes	76, 435	Jizwa v. Meth	40
Howse, Reynolds, and Co. v. Tilbrook	605, 765	Joelson, ex parte	33
Hudson, Vrede and Co. v. De Bruyn	250	Johnson, ex parte	1147
Hudson, Vrede and Co. v. Wassung	267	Johnstone, ex parte	20
Hugo v. Jeppe	237	Johnstone v. Johnstone	33, 295
Hulley's Estate, ex parte	642	Jones's Estate v. Woolff	14
Humphreys, ex parte	682	Jooste v. Jooste	385
Humphreys v. Humphreys	964	Jooste v. Van Heerden	18, 46
Hunkin v. King	1133	Jooste v. Viljoen	861
Hutchinson v. Villiersdorp Municipality	97	Jordaan, ex parte	1153
Huthwaite v. Calder	1149
Hyde, ex parte	554

	PAGE		PAGE
Jordaan v. Jordaan	656	Kleinbooi v. Tayler	435
Jordaan's Estate, ex parte ...	208	Klinck, ex parte	857
Joseph v. Estate Joseph and Others	166	Klopper and Another, ex parte ...	753
Joseph and Co. v. Fourie ...	555	Knox, ex parte	525, 624, 982
Joseph and Co. v. Roux	30	Knox v. Knox	607, 1038
Joubert, ex parte	17	Koch, ex parte	113
Jourdan v. Cohen	13	Koch v. Cohen	71, 97
Joyce v. Alosoroff	91	Koen v. Maske and Co.	1112
Joyce and Another v. Toerien	404	Koenig v. Friedman	881
		Kok, ex parte	481
Kadonga v. Nondivi	106	Kopelowitz v. Auerbach	870
Kaffrarian Steam Mill Co., ex parte	23, 566	Kopelowitz's Estate, ex parte ...	884
Kahn, ex parte	840	Kortjass, ex parte	553, 662
Kaiser Bros., Estate of, v. Hoeschen	472	Kossuth's Estate, ex parte ...	505
Kalk Bay Municipality v. Hurst	182	Koster v. Williams	1031
Kannemeyer's Estate, ex parte ...	753	Kotzé, ex parte	28, 161, 234
Karstens, ex parte	858, 892	Kotzé and Another, ex parte ...	835
Kastopoulos, ex parte	1150	Kotzé's Estate, ex parte ...	147, 1124
Katz v. Nelson	933	Kraitzick v. Alosoroff	1000
Katz and Another v. Becker	255	Kramer v. Estate Kapelowitz and Co.	673
Katzin, ex parte	875	Kramer v. Vas Aas	857
Keegan v. Herstein	481	Kreusch's Estate, ex parte ...	1143
Kehrmann and Co. v. Potts ...	163	Kriel, ex parte	606, 706
Keller, ex parte	341	Kriel v. Kriel	1037
Kellerman, ex parte	1124	Krige, ex parte	863
Kellerman's Estate, ex parte ...	352	Krige v. Willemse	285, 631
Kelly, ex parte	543, 677, 720	Kritzinger v. Kritzinger and Another	13
Kelly v. Mossop	181	Krog-Scheepers, ex parte	674
Kelly v. R.M., Woodstock 48, 342, 739	739	Kruger, ex parte	238
Kemp v. Engelbrecht	313	Kruger v. Hyman	108
Kemp v. Stephan	541, 785	Kruger v. Marx	140
Kemp's Estate, ex parte	687	Kruger v. Morgasen	1098
Kemshed v. Kemshed	938	Krynauw, ex parte	886
Kennedy v. Kennedy	821, 890	Kuhn, ex parte	606
Kent v. Malgas	250	Kuhn v. Kuhn	369
Kets' Estate and Another v. Norden	397	Kunn, ex parte	305, 1153
Keulder's Estate v. Estate Keulder and Another	11	Labuscagnie v. Labuscagnie ...	55
Keys v. Samuel	206	La Compagnie Commercial des Colonies, ex parte ...	504
Khan v. Deenik	523	La Compagnie Commercial des Colonies v. Levy	565
Khan v. Shamsudien	180	Laingsburg Municipality v. Burger	1143
Kimberley Waterworks Co. v. Stewart	229	Laite's Estate v. Van Sittert and Another	976
King v. Grey	845	Lamberto v. Basso	641
King v. Estate Jacobs	676	Lamprecht, ex parte	857
King Bros., Estate of, In re	210	Land Co., Ltd. v. Crote	856
King William's Town Municipality, ex parte	892	Lang, ex parte	882
Kinsley v. Kramer	181	Lange v. Grobler	911
Kitley v. Colonial Secretary ...	113	Lange v. Van Niekerk	833
Klass, ex parte	599	Lanigan v. Estate Dunwoodie	668
Klass' Estate v. Klass	945	Lanigan v. Ford	668
		Lansberg's Estate v. Estate Smit and Another	127

PAGE	PAGE
Lassen v. Roll 888	Litchfield v. Thurmer and An- other 250
Lategan v. Brink 321	Liverpool, London, and Globe Insurance Co. v. Estates Cameron and Another ... 1010
Laubscher, ex parte 32	Lloyd, ex parte 423
Laurence, ex parte 432	Lloyd's Estate, ex parte ... 1105
Law Society v. Celliers ... 688	Lloyd's Estate v. Jacobs... 230, 848
Law Society v. Coulton ... 260	Lloyd's Estate v. N.Y. Mutual "Locked Out" Cigarette Workers' Co., In re ... 226
Law Society v. Jones 371	Lomas v. Lomas and Another 723
Law Society v. Pretorius, 325, 397	Lomax, ex parte 293
Lawlor v. Lawlor and Another 543, 589	Lombard's Estate, ex parte 606, 1144
Lawrence and Co., ex parte ... 331	Lomberts v. Basso 407
Lawrence and Co. v. Misnum 11	Loubser, ex parte 877
Lawrence and Co. v. Powell... 375	Loubser v. Loubser 54
Lazarus v. Estate Lazarus, 161, 244	Loubser's Estate, In re ... 251
Lazarus v. Estate Swart ... 428	Lourens, ex parte 18, 77
Le Fleur and Another v. Pinto 686	Louw, ex parte 264, 456
Legal and General Trust Co. v. Le Sueur 971, 1098	Louw v. Dawood and Another 322
Lehman's Estate, ex parte ... 921	Louw v. Hoogendyk 984
Lehr v. Nicholas 208	Louw v. Ismail 960
Leibbrandt v. Tassiem 226	Louw v. Wessels 848
Lenhoff Bros. v. Van Niekerk 833	Louw and Others, ex parte ... 919
Lennon Ltd. and Others, ex parte 1154	Louw's Estate v. Loftus ... 266
Lensing v. Poley 540	Louw's Estate v. Estate Louw 762
Leon v. Steyn 229	Low, ex parte 205
Le Port v. Le Port 32	Lowe v. Milne Bros. 174
Leppan, ex parte 432	Lowenthal, ex parte 661, 667
Le Riche, ex parte 1103	Lowry Bros, ex parte 18
Le Roux, ex parte 518, 1097	Lowry Bros. v. White ... 56, 279
Le Roux and Another v. Bailie 972, 1051	"Loyal S.A. Band of Hope Lodge" v. Dominicus ... 293
Le Roux's Estate, ex parte ... 1093	Lucheron, ex parte 424
Leslie v. Bailie 661, 668	Luck's Estate, ex parte ... 156
Lester, ex parte 21	Luntz Bros, ex parte 878
Lester v. Lester ... 113, 175, 664	Luntz Bros. v. Hovelmeier 611, 674
Le Sueur, ex parte 1150	Lury v. Lawrence and Co., Ltd. 1039
Levine v. Goldsmith 599	Luyt, ex parte ... 240, 367, 887, 1068
Leving, ex parte 231, 370	Luyt v. Young 237
Leviny, ex parte 890	Lyon, ex parte 206, 835
Leviny v. Leviny 721	Lyons v. Manson 1085
Levy v. Nash 100	Lyons v. Wheeler 1121
Lewin and Another v. Burger and Another 910, 1071	Maartens, ex parte 18
Lewis, ex parte 433, 799	McArthur, Atkins and Co. v. Lewis 865
Lewis v. Davis 433, 443	McBean, ex parte 709, 834
Lewis v. Estate Williams, 521, 664	McCalgan and Co. v. Courtney and Co. 432
Lewis and Co. v. Swanisch 1101, 1122	McCausland, ex parte 565
Liebenberg, ex parte 325	McConnell, ex parte 887
Liebenger v. Balie 267	McDermid, ex parte 686
Lilienfeld Bros. v. Riel ... 154	McDonald's Estate v. Oswald and Another... .. 1092, 1100
Lindsay, ex parte 678
Lindsay v. Lindsay, 1009, 1012, 1069
Lipschitz v. Kleyn 948
Lipschitz v. Peark's Stores ... 177
Lipschitz v. Seligman 205
Lipschitz and Tooch v. Sapiero 567
Litchfield v. Godfrey 432

	PAGE		PAGE
McGregor v. Phillips	223	Marais v. McKenzie	844
McGregor v. Sofie	255	Marais v. Nieuwoudt	964
McGregor's Estate, ex parte ...	1104	Marais v. Trustees of S. David's Lodge	237
McGregor's Estate v. Pattison and Morris	61	Marchiano, ex parte	209
McGregor's Estate v. Vom Dorp	1101	Marcus v. Marcus	33, 367
McGregor Municipality, ex parte	852, 890	Marcuson v. Masour	856
Machaab and Co. v. Shamma	250, 323	Maree, ex parte	17
McKinnon v. McKinnon, 60, 562, 684, 727		Maree v. Maree	234, 527
McLeod v. Estate Bassardien	531	Marincowitz, ex parte ...	861
McLeod v. Cameron	266, 661	Marsh, ex parte	910
McLeod v. Camphausen	719	Marsh v. Jordaan	177
McLeod v. February	719	Marsh v. Estate Villa	330
McLeod v. La Grange	67	Marsh v. Schwartz and Ano- ther	63
Macminn v. Macazimi	1110	Marsh and Sons v. Gross	696
McOwan, ex parte	239	Marsh's Estate, ex parte ...	384, 858
Maggio v. Josselewitz	1100	Marsh's Estate v. Blake	706
Magor and Others v. Mulvihall and Son and Others	967	Marsh's Estate v. Smith	174
Mahler, ex parte	1052	Marsh Memorial Homes, ex parte	1153
Mahomed v. Witton	884	Marsh Memorial Homes v. Kramer	145
Maitland v. Loundar	931	Marsh Memorial Homes v. Van Sittert	174
Majiet v. Zuckerman and An- other	978	Martin v. Inpender and Anot- her	12
Malan v. Furter	542	Martin v. Roberson	216
Malan's Estate, ex parte	264	Martin v. Zulusweni	425
Malcomess and Co. v. Wiborg	830	Mason, ex parte	912
Maling v. Domanowitz	227	Mason v. De Meillon	948
Maling v. Muller	227	Massyn, ex parte	16
Maling v. Schaff	322	"Master," The, v. Trustee Es- tate Dicker and Meiring	607, 835
Mallett, ex parte	1097	"Master," The, v. Trustee Es- tate Morris	835
Mallock v. Somerset East Municipality	753	"Master," The, v. Trustee Es- tate Norris	184
Malmesbury Board of Execu- tors v. De Jongh	313	"Master," The, v. Trustee Es- tate Tucker	699
Malmesbury Board of Execu- tors v. Heydenrych	864	Matare v. Silpert	785
Maloney, ex parte	481	Mathewson v. Wife, ex parte	911
Malony v. Malony	998	Matthew v. Estate Yule	848
Maltinsky v. Maltinsky	1032	Matthews v. Slamdien	805
Manquina v. Jonas	968	Mauerberger and Another v. Rabinowitz	861
Mans v. Van den Heever	14	Maxwell and Earp, ex parte ...	890
Mansell v. Hartmann	213	Maxwell and Earp v. Dreyer	1133
Manson v. Trackman	409	Maxwell and Earp v. Zieper and Another	833
Manson's Estate v. Von Holdt	279	May, ex parte	28
Mantell Bros. v. Zuid Afri- kaanshe Rytuig, etc.	1069	Mayberg, ex parte	240
Marais, ex parte	28, 752	Mazzur v. Aaronson	786
Marais v. Bosman	205	Mazzur v. Meintjes	157
Marais v. Cape Town Ware- house Syndicate	174	Mdlazulwana v. Wade	327
Marais v. Dreyer and Others	368	Mechau v. Mechau	182
Marais v. Holloway	1100	Mehaffey v. Brady	112
Marais v. Kets	13	Mehnert v. Botha	661
Marais v. Langerman	599

	PAGE		PAGE
Meintjes, ex parte ...	322, 835, 964	Mulder and Others v. Estate
Meintjes' Estate, ex parte ...	451	Grundling and Another	1022
Meiring, ex parte ...	653	Mulder's Estate, ex parte ...	325, 858
Melck v. Louw ...	1013	Muller v. Colonial Govern-
Mendelssohn v. Mendelssohn	857	ment... ..	977
Meyer, ex parte ...	154	Muller v. Love ...	442
Meyer's Estate, ex parte ...	697	Muller and Wife, ex parte ...	34
Michaelson v. Wobbe ...	1130	Muller's Estate, ex parte ...	583, 686
Michau, ex parte ...	404	Murdoch, ex parte ...	1124, 1132
Michau and De Villiers v.		Murphy's Estate, ex parte ...	1150
Theron ...	444	Murray, ex parte ...	766, 786
Military Equipment Co. v.		Muzoyi v. Muzoyi... ..	139, 280
Bathurst ...	118	Myers' Estate, ex parte ...	642, 1125
Miller, ex parte ...	950	Myles and Wife, ex parte ...	460
Miller v. Ballantine ...	1152
Miller v. Burger and Another	1031	Naude, ex parte ...	433
Miller v. Oyster ...	102	Naude's Estate v. Durandt ...	482
Millin, ex parte ...	1132	Nel, ex parte ...	456, 653
Mills v. Dickson ...	137	Nel v. Du Plessis ...	948
Mills and Sons, ex parte ...	802	Nel's Estate, ex parte ...	447, 697
Mills and Sons v. Askew... ..	964	Nesbit and Rowe, In re ...	669
Mills and Sons v. Ling Tong		Netherlands Bank v. Barry ...	719
Sen ...	52	Neukivell v. Lacey ...	423
Mills' Estate v. Beyer ...	29	Newman v. Phillips ...	506
Milne, ex parte ...	886	Ngele, ex parte ...	21
Mini, ex parte ...	866	Nicholes, ex parte ...	606
Minnaar v. Gaal ...	878	Nicolas, ex parte ...	662
Mogford v. Barlow ...	94	Nieburg, ex parte ...	1093
Mogford v. Rosenblatt ...	109	Nieuwoudt's Estate, ex parte	871
Moll, Schutte and Co. v. Tied-		Nieuwstadt and Co. v. Gadow	444 man ...	526	Nochamson v. Van der West-
Moller v. Hamman and Others	922	huysen ...	252
Moller v. Wilkinson ...	473	Nolte Bros. v. Kramer ...	124
Moller and Others, ex parte ...	504	Nortje, ex parte ...	738
Molteno v. Hackenberg ...	226	Norton, ex parte ...	887
Molteno v. Macbeth ...	206	Norwich Union Life Assur-
Molteno v. Markolilis... ..	1031	ance Co. v. Barsdorf ...	61
Moravian Missionary Society		Nourse, ex parte ...	799
v. Adonis ...	707	Nugent, ex parte ...	858
Morgan, ex parte ...	267	Nugent v. Nugent ...	888
Morrees v. Visser ...	323, 475
Morser v. Hourwitz ...	801	O'Brien v. Logan ...	410
Morton v. Van Oudtshoorn...	888	O'Callaghan v. Jacobs... ..	30
Morum Bros. v. Herselman...	848	O'Connor, ex parte	600
Morum Bros. v. Voso ...	358	O'Connor v. Stanbury... ..	554
Moses v. Gaul ...	799	Odendall v. Van der Berg and
Moses v. Webb ...	522	Another... ..	311
Mosley v. Mosley ...	1153	Ohlsson's Breweries v. An-
Mosel Bay Divisional Coun-		drews and Another ...	14
cil, ex parte ...	707, 932	Ohlsson's Breweries v. Fer-
Mostert v. Lunderstedt ...	224	guson ...	676
Mostert v. Truter ...	1008	O'Linstry, ex parte	1152
Mostert and Son v. Taha ...	950	Oliver, ex parte	19, 260
Motlhabane v. Matolo ...	679	Oliver v. Oliver ...	31, 555, 719
Mowbray Municipality v.		Oliver's Estate, ex parte ...	175
Austin ...	227	Olivier, ex parte ...	642
Mpkado v. Kemlo ...	477	Olivier v. Estate Olivier ...	392
Mulder and Others, ex parte	892	Olivier v. Goosen ...	916

	PAGE		PAGE
Olivier's Estate, ex parte ...	481	Pepper v. Pantry ...	156
Onrust River Co. v. Allengensky ...	30	Pershouse v. Visser and Another ...	14
Oosthuizen's Estate, ex parte ...	852, 1094	Pershouse and Wife, ex parte ...	1150
Orange River Irrigation Co., In re ...	22, 566	Perl, ex parte ...	821
Orange River Irrigation Co., Liquidator of, ex parte ...	852	Peters v. Qwesha ...	964
Orlandini v. Klugman ...	552	Peterse, ex parte ...	800
Orphan Chamber v. Master-ton ...	396	Petersen v. Webber ...	541, 640
Ortel v. Jacobs ...	60	Petrusville Prospecting Syndicate, ex parte ...	580, 697, 881, 977
Osborne and Co. v. Lawrence (or Lee) ...	1138	Peyper, ex parte ...	1133
Otterstrom v. Estate Stephan ...	62, 156, 161, 176, 184, 287, 338	Phillips, ex parte ...	19
Otto v. Otto ...	686	Phillips v. Colonial Government ...	730
Otto and Another, ex parte ...	1094	Phillips v. Domingo ...	237
Oudtshoorn Building Society v. Fry ...	668	Phillips v. Zinman ...	765
Oudtshoorn Municipality, ex parte ...	18	Phillips and Another v. Rhoodie ...	623
Oudtshoorn Municipality v. Mooichang ...	229	Phillips and Co. v. Muller ...	26
"Owl," The, In re ...	20, 62	Pienaar, ex parte ...	234
Paarl African Trust v. Basson ...	455	Pienaar v. Goddess ...	599
Paarl Board of Executors v. Van Beek ...	1100	Pienaar v. Pienaar ...	520
Page, ex parte ...	1124	Pienaar and Co. v. Rose ...	554, 737
Palmer v. "Owl" Syndicate ...	30	Piet's Estate, ex parte ...	251, 305
Palmer and Another v. Grand Junction Railways ...	697	Pieterse, ex parte ...	662
Pampoen v. Olifant ...	970	Pinnoy, ex parte ...	459
Parker, ex parte ...	765	Pinnoy v. Distrig ...	475, 655, 662
Parker v. Easton ...	174	Pinto v. Pinto ...	16
Parker v. Hoffman ...	856	Piquetberg Divisional Council v. Jacobs ...	469
Parsons, ex parte ...	255	Pitkethley v. Pitkethley ...	13
Parsons, In re ...	857	Pitter v. D'Abren ...	67
Parsons v. Parsons ...	852, 1038	Pitts and Another v. Gerrys ...	404
Pashley, Stafford and Co. v. Brown ...	861	Plastic Decoration Co. v. Crooke and Another ...	1037, 1152
Paterson and Co., ex parte ...	628	Platt v. Brown ...	17
Paterson and Co. v. Geistner ...	15	Port Elizabeth Divisional Council, ex parte ...	976
Paterson and Co. v. Levin ...	205	Potgieter, ex parte ...	341, 800
Paterson and Morris, Estate of, In re ...	185	Potgieter v. Potgieter ...	696, 973
Pattle, ex parte ...	829	Potgieter's Estate v. Hotz ...	867
Pearson, ex parte ...	543	Powelse, ex parte ...	268
Pearson v. Fig ...	932	Power v. Forrester ...	455
Peel v. National Bank ...	354	Powrie v. Van Dieman ...	944
Peile, ex parte ...	757	Preece, ex parte ...	252, 281
Peile v. Peile ...	1052	Pretorius, ex parte ...	34, 352
Penhalongo Mines and Another v. Cockerell ...	399	Pretorius and Others, ex parte ...	68
Penhalongo Mines and Another v. Strickland ...	231, 399	Pretorius' Estate, ex parte ...	1093
Penny and Another, ex parte ...	94	Price Bros. v. De Klerk ...	471, 676
		Priest v. Naser ...	1005
		Prince, Vincent and Co. v. De Bruyns ...	123
		Prince, Vincent and Co. v. Kahn ...	13
		Prince, Vincent and Co. v. Sieff ...	883
		Pritchard, ex parte ...	246
		Provident Land Trust, ex parte ...	553

INDEX.

xv

	PAGE
Provident Land Trust v. Fyne	445
Pure Milk Supply Co., In re	230, 268
Purcell v. Boyd	661
Purcell, Yallop and Everet v. Crooke and Another	1008
Purcell, Yallop and Everet v. Dumbleton	1123
Purcell, Yallop and Everet v. Smookler	177
Purcell, Yallop and Everet v. Thomson	31
Purcell, Yallop and Everet v. Wiid	1085
Puttergill, ex parte	16
Puxty, ex parte	234
Puxty v. Streeter	264, 405
Quine, ex parte	944
Quine v. Cohen and Another	1123
Radloff v. Pienaar	655
Ransby and Another v. Woudberg	141
Rappeport, ex parte	314
Raubenheimer, ex parte	205, 786
Raubenheimer v. Raubenheimer and Another	964
Rawbone v. Rawbone	944, 1032
Rebenstein, ex parte	912
Recreation Syndicate, In re ,	18, 267, 384
Reed, ex parte	244
Reid and Another, ex parte	256
Reid and Co. v. Federal Cold Storage	211
Reid and Co. v. Logan	333
Reid and Co. v. McGregor	30
Reid and Nephew v. Leatherman	226
Reid's Estate v. Saunders	350
Reidel's Estate v. Duke	1070
Rensburg, ex parte	230, 258
Rex v. A.B.	136
Rex v. Abram	1142
Rex v. Abrahams and Another	257
Rex v. Angeli	318
Rex v. Bewsher	288
Rex v. Booi	426
Rex v. Botha	1115
Rex v. Chong	758
Rex v. Christian	477
Rex v. Cloete	1148
Rex v. Cook	1136
Rex v. De Villiers	985

	PAGE
Rex v. De Wei	245
Rex v. Du Plessis	426
Rex v. Gibesela	987, 1115
Rex v. Gous and Another	854, 862
Rex v. Gronbeck	1128
Rex v. Healey	1129
Rex v. Hendricks	184, 470
Rex v. Hop Lee	955
Rex v. Hurst	894
Rex v. Ismail	556
Rex v. Jacobs	531, 556
Rex v. Jafta and Others	855
Rex v. Jantjes	695
Rex v. Japha and Another	39
Rex v. Josephs	882
Rex v. Klein	1116
Rex v. Kruger	212
Rex v. Magogo	1095
Rex v. Martin	227
Rex v. Michelson and Another	1146
Rex v. Myburgh	829
Rex v. Naason and Another	871
Rex v. Naude and Another	721
Rex v. November and Another	987
Rex v. Page	630
Rex v. Papallanasopulo	105
Rex v. Phillips	461
Rex v. Polevnick	827
Rex v. Qopiso	1095
Rex v. Scharff	1127
Rex v. Seymour	1071
Rex v. Shear and Another	218
Rex v. Stratton	953
Rex v. Swarts	422
Rex v. Titties	598
Rex v. Tomaso	296
Rex v. Van Rensburg	209
Rex v. Van Wyk	854
Reynolds v. Exley and Co.	205
Reynolds' Vehicle Factory, Liquidators of, ex parte	409, 450
Rhenish Mission Society, ex parte	405, 456
Rhodes Recreation Ground, Trustees of, ex parte	240
Richards v. Van Breda	824
Richold, ex parte	267
Riegler v. African Lands Co.	505
Riedel's Estate v. Duke	1070
Riel's Estate v. Schoevers	932
Riel's Estate v. Steytler	932
Rigg v. Burger	1031
Rigge's Estate, ex parte	625, 628, 1104
Rittenberg and Co., ex parte	857
Robein v. Robein	434
Roberts, ex parte	642, 890
Robinson, ex parte	56, 94

	PAGE		PAGE
Rolls v. Table Bay Harbour Board	64	Schoeman's Estate v. Nourse	11
Roodebloem Estates, ex parte	369	Scholtz, ex parte ... 19, 28,	882
Roodebloem Estates v. Gaul	267	Scholtz's Estate, ex parte ...	409
Roos' Estate v. Trollip	153	Scholtz's Estate v. Scholtz
Rorich v. Rorich	294	and Another	744
Rosenblatt v. McFarlane	118	Schoombee v. Schoombee	269
Rosenblatt and Another, ex parte ...	331	Schroder v. Gardener	154
Rosenblatt and Another v. Venter	475	Schultze v. The Master and Another	1005
Ross's Estate v. Trollip	360	Schartz v. Burger	992
Rossouw, ex parte ... 861, 865,	912	Scott, ex parte ...	1105
Rossouw v. Raner	781	Scott v. Calder	62, 146
Rossouw's Estate, ex parte	1105	Scott v. Frame	1133
Roux, ex parte ...	226	Scott, W. and G. v. Herbert	864
Rowan v. Estate Louw and Others	308, 945	Scott, W. and G. v. Imperial Brick Company	369
Rowberry v. Liebmann	893	Seeliger and Another, In re	29
Rowe v. Rowe	324, 752	Seeliger v. Herbert and Others	696
Royal Hotel Co., In re ... 18,	71	Seeliger v. Jacobs and Others	661
Royal Hotel Co. v. Watson and Co.	455	Seeliger v. Schach and Another	765
Rubenstein, ex parte ...	578	Sellar Bros. v. Sher and Co.	350
Rudman, ex parte ...	1000	Sellar Bros. and Another, ex parte ...	272
Rudman v. Knoetze and Others	976	Seydell, ex parte ...	44, 93
Rudman's Estate, ex parte ...	1153	Shacknovis, ex parte ...	205
Runciman and Another v. Jenks	266	Shapiro v. Ieven and Another	342
Rynhoud v. Rynhoud and Another	120, 405	Shaskolsky v. Fisher	833, 848
Saayman, ex parte ...	548, 932	Shaw v. Shaw	865
St. John's Lodge Benefit Soc. v. Coates and Cottrell	161	Sher and Co., Estate of, v. Cohen	893
St. Leger v. Beelders	67	Sher and Co., Estate of, v. Kelly	893
Sanderson v. Raven	931	Sherry, ex parte ...	1143
Sands, ex parte ...	662	Siberhagen, ex parte ...	471
Saunderson v. Glaser Bros.	177	Siebert, ex parte ...	686
Savage and Sons v. Bachnisch	255	Siepkert v. Grobler	911
Savage and Sons v. Jacobsohn	237	Siepkert v. Van Niekerk	833
Savage's Estate, In re ...	686	Sieradzki v. Benjamin	503
Saval's Estate, ex parte ...	1010	Sieradzki v. Mitchell	1069
Scarbrow v. Adams	174, 228, 255	Silberman, ex parte ...	156
Schalkwyk v. Fraserburg Divisional Council	65	Silberman v. Silberman.	324, 520, 664
Scharff, ex parte ...	1105	Simpson and Another v. Swinton	24, 429
Scheepers' Estate, ex parte ...	20	Simpson's Estate v. Estate Gresse and Another	561
Schernbrucker's Estate v. Duncan	30	Sivertsen v. Sivertsen	947
Schietekat, ex parte ...	1101	Sivertsen and Others v. Estate Sivertsen	1021
Schmidt, ex parte ...	446	Slabbert, ex parte ...	752
Schmidt v. Schmidt	207, 624, 834, 862, 974	Slabbert's Estate, ex parte ,	112, 409, 451
Schmitt v. Schmitt	834, 1051	Slack, ex parte ...	720
Schocher, ex parte ...	807	Sluiter, ex parte ...	625
Schoeman v. Nourse	177, 986	Smalberger, ex parte ...	251
Schoeman v. Olivier	865, 1007	Smale Bros. v. Dunbar	925
		Smart v. Estate Simey	988

PAGE	PAGE
Swartt Syndicate, Ltd., ex parte ... 921.	S.A. Produce Co. v. Tarr ... 455
Smit, ex parte , 238, 385, 880, 966	S.A. Widows' Fund, In re , 699. 687
Smit v. Baris ... 432	S.A. Wine and Brandy Co. v. Moore ... 139
Smit v. De Beer ... 1150	Southern Life Association v. Trollip ... 1016
Smit v. Nel ... 475	Spangenberg, ex parte ... 390. 834
Smith, ex parte 397, 481, 556. 624	Sparks and Another v. Buffalo Supply Co. ... 921
Smith v. Ceres Municipality... 34	Spiers, ex parte ... 230
Smith v. Du Plessis ... 251	Spilhaus, ex parte ... 1126
Smith v. Imperial Cold Storage Co. ... 767. 850	Spiro's Estate, ex parte ... 268
Smith v. McInnes ... 766	Sprong, ex parte ... 111
Smith and Co. v. Sasso and Co. 14	Stack, ex parte ... 662
Smith's Estate, ex parte ... 269	Stack v. Peel and Another... 1028
Smith's Estate v. Hartshorn. 668. 751	Stadler v. Schaief ... 463
Smith's Estate v. Sadie ... 1123	Stahl v. Kruger ... 237. 250
Smuts v. Beyers ... 883	Standard Bank v. Benkwitz... 806
Smuts and Another v. De Goede ... 29	Standard Bank v. Freeman ... 877
Smuts and Another v. Smith 236	Standard Bank v. Heydenrych 602
Smith v. Kurter... 544	Standard Bank v. Philips, 625. 656
Snell, ex parte ... 267. 800	Standard Bank v. Vaile ... 15
Snodgrass's Estate, ex parte ... 697	Standard Bank v. Van Ryn's Estate ... 30
Snooke, ex parte ... 231	Standard Buildings v. Wheeler, 883. 977
Snyman and Another, ex parte 20	Starling and Others v. Nannucci, Ltd. ... 533
Sockerv. Colonial Government. 1072. 1143	Starling and Co. v. Wahlberg 668
Solgreen, ex parte ... 63	Stassen, ex parte ... 1154
Solomon v. During ... 16	Stayn, ex parte ... 70
Solomon v. Nel ... 293	Steel v. Dreyer... 250. 598
Somerset East Municipality v. Brown ... 101	Steenkamp v. Steenkamp, 232. 256
Somerset Strand Municipality v. Allison ... 11	Steer v. Robertson ... 61
Somerset Strand Municipality v. Deydier ... 670	Steer v. Thomas ... 445
Somerset West Municipality v. Kyran ... 60	Steffen v. De Marillac ... 160
Sonnenberg v. Maitland Municipality ... 950	Steinhobel, ex parte ... 677
Sotewu v. Nosenti ... 156	Stellenbosch Undenominational College v. Howard ... 1009
S.A. Conservatorium of Music v. Hoffman ... 537	Stengel and Co. v. Schaefer and Co. and Another ... 305
S.A. Co-operative Dairy Co., ex parte ... 835. 881	Stephan's Estate, ex parte ... 423
S.A. General Workers' Union, ex parte ... 124, 656. 859	Stephan's Estate v. Estate Stephan ... 699, 920, 923. 1039
S.A. Life Association v. Masterton ... 322	Stephan's Estate v. Otterstrom ... 256
S.A. Mutual Life Assurance Society v. Phillis ... 304. 877	Stephens v. New York Mutual ... 800
S.A. Newspaper Co., ex parte . 552, 662. 684	Stern, ex parte ... 888
S.A. Newspaper Co. and Others v. General Workers' Union, 63. 308	Stevens, ex parte ... 325
S.A. Produce Co. v. Gohlstein and Another ... 266	Stevens's Estate v. Gilchrist and Another ... 366
	Stevens and Another v. Estate Villa ... 341
	Stevenson, ex parte ... 677
	Stewart v. Estate Hyland, 112. 343
	Steyn v. Stephany... 576
	Steyn v. Victor ... 227
	Steyn's Estate, ex parte ... 606
	Steyn's Estate v. Estate Reitz 1104

	PAGE		PAGE
Steytler v. Steytler...	889, 920, 925	Theunis, ex parte ...	460
Steytler and Co., ex parte ...	331	Theunis' Estate v. Perus ...	751
Steytler and Co. v. Opland...	331	Theunissen's Estate, ex parte , 887,	1139
Stigant and Wilson v. Loudon	1039	Theunissen's Estate v. Van Wyk, N. O. ...	256
Stilling and Another, ex parte	677	Thomas, In re ...	396
Stoeke's Estate, ex parte ...	267	Thomas v. Robertson ...	529
Stockham's Estate, ex parte ...	206	Thompson v. Busse ...	685
Stoffberg v. Marais ...	674	Thompson v. Searle ...	801
Stoffels v. James ...	1113	Thomson v. Zuid Afrikaansche Rituig en Bouw Maatsch- appij, Ltd. ...	1001
Stoltenhoff's Estate v. Howard	1090	Thurnau v. Picard ...	318
Stone, ex parte ...	231, 293	Thwait's v. Harris and Another	181
Stone v. Marce ...	856	Touyz, ex parte ...	1069
Stow, ex parte ...	28	Townsend v. Townsend, 109, 324,	520
Strangman v. Palmer ...	304	Townshend, Taylor and Sna- shall v. Colonial Invest- ment Corporation ...	982
Strathisomers Estate Co. v. Colonial Government ...	916	Transvaal Mines Labour Co. v. Fechter ...	304, 351, 441
Strauss, ex parte ...	235	Trediga v. Visser and Another	14
Strauss v. Van der Berg ...	221	Trollip v. Southern Life As- sociation ...	940
Streeter, ex parte ... 71, 182,	281	Truter, ex parte ...	887, 1013
Streeter v. Myers and Another, 53,	205	Truter v. Barendse ...	226
Strobos, ex parte ...	28	Truter, v. Logan ...	1148
Strydom, ex parte ...	205	Truter v. Truter ...	983, 1133
Stucke's Estate, ex parte ...	208, 251	Tshona and Others, ex parte ...	827
Studdt's Estate, ex parte ...	1153	Tudhope's Estate v. Sand ...	990
Subertsky v. Friedgood ...	848, 971	Turf Hall Estate, Ltd., ex parte ...	206
Summerfield v. Summerfield	94	Turnbull v. Gillet ...	548
Sutcliffe v. Barron ...	453	Turnbull v. Ohlsson ...	147
Nutherland v. Roberts, 555, 560,	565	Union-Castle Co. v. Knorr, N. O. ...	263
Swart, ex parte ...	999, 1101	United Free Church of Scot- land, ex parte ...	1139
Swart v. Swart ...	892, 1085	United Tobacco Companies, Ltd., v. Cape Town Town Council ...	886
Swart and Others v. Trustees of Jeffrey's Bay ...	628	United Tobacco Companies, Ltd., v. Daikofski ...	160
Swart's Estate, ex parte ...	1085	Upton v. Corder ...	570
Syfret and Co. v. McFarlane	910	Urman v. Urman ...	46, 322
Symons, ex parte ...	932	Urquhart, ex parte ...	370
Syphus' Estate, ex parte ...	146	Ussher v. Sexton ...	293
Syrkin v. Highman ...	737	Value Supply Co. v. Stewart	14
Table Bay Harbour Board v. Cape Town Town Council	162	Van Aarde, ex parte ...	1093
Table Bay Harbour Board v. Neugebauer ...	206	Van Blerk v. Estate Anret and Another ...	51
Tancred, ex parte ...	888	Van Coppenhagen, ex parte ...	245
Tancred v. Farmer ...	15	Van den Biggelaar, ex parte 521,	668
Taylor, ex parte 16, 537, 606,	965	Van den Heever, ex parte ...	433
Tebb's Estate, ex parte ...	552
Tennant, ex parte ...	766
Tennant v. A. M. E. Church	238
Tessendorp's Estate, ex parte ...	1070
Teubes v. Kaltwasser ...	61
Teubes v. Kloppers ...	1084
Teubes v. Nothling ...	1084
Teubes and Another v. Louw- rens ...	1099
Theophilus, ex parte ...	640
Theron, ex parte ...	446, 662
Thesen and Co. and Others v. Steyn and Another ...	674

PAGE	PAGE
Van den Heever's Estate, ex parte ... 886	Van Riet, ex parte ... 912
Van den Heever's Estate v. Greyling ... 510	Van Riet v. Nicholson ... 1051
Van der Berg v. Riddell ... 219	Van Rhyn v. Burger ... 714
Van der Byl and Co. v. Christiansen ... 13	Van Rooyen and Others v. Mackay ... 70, 156
Van der Byl and Co. v. Klaassen ... 686, 833	Van Rooyen's Estate, ex parte ... 687
Van der Byl and Co. v. Milner Benevolent Society ... 15	Van Ryn's Estate v. Rifkin... 29
Van der Byl and Co. v. Venner ... 205, 751	Van Ryn Wine and Spirit Co. v. Jarrett ... 264
Van der Byl's Estate, ex parte ... 233, 1052	Van Ryn Wine and Spirit Co. v. Klaason ... 565
Van der Linde, ex parte ... 855	Van Schalkwyk and Wife, ex parte ... 305
Van der Merwe, ex parte , 241, 258	Van Schanel, ex parte ... 93
Van der Merwe v. Colonial Government ... 643	Van Schoor, ex parte ... 16
Van der Merwe's Estate v. Raan ... 932	Van Straaten and Others, ex parte ... 33
Van der Merwe's Estate v. Thorne ... 182	Van Tonder v. Van den Berg ... 1094
Van der Meulen v. Greef and Another ... 209	Van Tonder's Estate, ex parte ... 251, 267
Van der Spuy v. Cartoulis... 821	Van Vuren v. Van Vuren ... 716
Van der Venter, ex parte ... 999	Van Winsen, ex parte ... 396
Van der Vyver, ex parte ... 246	Van Wyk, ex parte ... 97, 234, 606
Van der Walt, ex parte ... 207, 1125	Van Wyk v. Van Wyk... 806, 910
Van der Walt v. Fourie ... 1098	Van Wyk's Estate, ex parte ... 1105
Van der Walt's Estate, ex parte ... 120, 123	Van Zyl, ex parte ... 280, 545
Van der Westhuizen, ex parte ... 707	Van Zyl v. Estate Muller and Another ... 570
Van der Westhuizen v. Krafchik ... 1152	Van Zyl v. Van Zyl ... 1125
Van der Westhuizen v. Mulder ... 478	Van Zyl and Another v. Graaf ... 131
Van der Westhuizen's Estate, ex parte ... 1152	Van Zyl and Buissinè v. McKenzie ... 864
Van Eck's Estate and Another v. Van Niekerk and Another ... 430	Van Zyl and Buissinnè v. Oliff and Another ... 306
Van Eyssen, ex parte ... 624	Van Zyl's Estate, ex parte ... 599
Van Eyssen v. Herold... 97	Velkorisky v. Velkorisky... 480
Van Heerden, ex parte ... 295, 822, 826	Venter, ex parte ... 376, 752, 949
Van Heerden v. Estate Van Heerden and Another ... 892	Venter v. Graham ... 279
Van Heerden v. Jooste ... 296, 830	Vermaak, ex parte ... 434
Van Heerden's Estate, ex parte ... 891, 965, 1124, 1152	Vilander Concessions Syndicate v. Colonial Government ... 600
Van Niekerk v. Le Riche ... 28	Viljoen v. Swanepoel ... 52
Van Niekerk Bros. v. Buckland ... 856	Villiersdorp Municipality, ex parte ... 397
Van Noorden's Estate v. De Villiers ... 888	Vink, ex parte ... 234
Van Reenan v. Weinberg... 94	Visser's Estate, ex parte ... 886
Van Rensburg, ex parte ... 342, 822	Von Below, ex parte ... 865
Van Rensburg v. Vermeulen... 1084	Vorster's Estate, ex parte , 268, 1094
	Vos, ex parte ... 464
	Vos v. Reynolds ... 870, 1031
	Vos and Another v. Greef ... 653
	Vosges, ex parte ... 857
	Voskule's Estate, ex parte ... 1150
	Voster, ex parte ... 800
	Wagenaar v. Kleinbooi ... 806
	Wahl, ex parte ... 74

	PAGE		PAGE
Wainstein, ex parte	938	Wiener and Co., ex parte ...	1095
Walker, ex parte	396	Wiener and Co. v. Cassim ...	13
Walker v. Brunt... ..	228, 669	Wiener and Co. v. De Vries
Walker v. Executors Estate		and Another	61
McKendrick	1098	Wiener and Co. v. Hohowsky	249
Walker v. January... ..	322	Wiener and Co. v. Khangool	1069
Walker and Jacobsohn v.		Wiener and Co. v. Kopelowitz	877
Badenhorst	826	Wiener and Co. v. Roode ...	15
Walker and Others, ex parte ...	19	Wiener and Co. v. Schapera	751
Walkers, ex parte	858	Wigg, ex parte	949
Walsh v. Sheminais	695	Wiggins, ex parte	293
Walt, ex parte	835	Wiid v. Van der Merwe ...	322
Walters, ex parte	118, 226	Wilkinson, ex parte	834
War Department v. Duffus		Wilkinson v. Estate Wilkin-
and Co.	50	son and Another, 942, 945.	962
Ward, ex parte	627	Wilkinson v. Muller	38
Ward v. Ward... 16, 75, 423,	1011	Wilkinson v. Wilkinson.
Ward and Co., Estate of, ex			708, 849, 881
parte	459	Wilkinson's Estate v. Wilkin-
Waring, ex parte	481	son	560
Warner, ex parte	878	Willem and Another, ex parte	434
Warner v. Botha	274	Williams, ex parte	369, 720
Warner v. Goniwe	283	Williams v. Estate Williams.
Warren, ex parte	1143		440, 635
Watcham's Estate, ex parte ...	370	Wilputte v. Fagan	368
Watson's Estate. ex parte ...	1007	Wilson, ex parte	624
Webber's Estate, ex parte ...	566	Wilson v. Spence	786
Weber v. Barsdorf... ..	313	Wipplinger and Wife, ex parte ,
Webster's Estate v. Parker ...	176		1142
Weinberg's Estate v. Wein-		Wistaff's Estate, ex parte ...	1069
berg and Another ... 605.	1040	Withinshaw v. Arends	181
Welgemoed, ex parte	230	Witthulm v. Smit	63
Wells' Estate v. Patterson and		Wolfe and Another v. Staack	540
Another	877	Wolhunter v. De Kock and
Wernberg, ex parte	800	Another	787
Wesleyan Church. Clarke-		Wolstenholme, ex parte	1013
bury, ex parte	697	Wolstenholme v. Wolstenholme,
Wessels, ex parte ... 598, 884,	932		707, 879, 888
Wessels and Co. v. Venter and		Wolstenholme's Estate v.
Another	473	Roux	30, 181
Western Wine and Brandy Co.		Wood v. Smith	38
v. Federal Cold Storage 141,	415	Woodv. Wood	68
Western Wine and Brandy Co.		Wood's Estate. ex parte	1153
v. Moore	625, 883	Wood's Estate v. Neezer ...	397
Wheeldon v. Wheeldon and		Woodhead, Plant and Co. v.
Another	55	Nieuwoudt	1097
Whiley, ex parte	765	Woodman, ex parte	521
Whitaker, ex parte	1012	Woodman v. Woodman ...	826, 1051
Whitaker v. Johnson	970	Woodstock Municipality v.
White v. Abdol Bros.	256	Bettington	626
White v. Stevens	238	Worcester Divisional Council,
Whitehead, ex parte	295	ex parte	972
Whitehead v. Estate White-		Worcester Municipality v.
head	724	Colonial Government... ..	178
Whitlock's Executor, ex parte	852	Wordon and Pegram, ex
Wicht v. Birch	676	parte	434, 460
Wicht v. Harris	123	Woutersen, ex parte	118
Wicht v. Lyons	864, 877	Wrench v. Joosten	878
Wicht v. Sargent	1152	Wright, ex parte	156

	PAGE		PAGE
Wykeham v. Wykeham	859	Zeederberg and Duncan v.
Wylie and Sons v. Van der		Levin	599
Linden	29	Zeederberg and Duncan v.
		Myburgh	174
Yeld, ex parte	848	Zeederberg and Duncan v.
Y.M.C.A., Stellenbosch, ex		Zwart and Co.	13
parte	1104, 1133	Zevenfontein Estate v. Viljoen	878
Young's Estate v. Austin	227	Zieper's Estate, ex parte	944
Young's Estate v. Hudson	982	Zietsman, ex parte	230
		Zietsman v. Reynolds' Vehicle
Zeederberg and Duncan v.		Factory	186
Hughes	1100	Zwart, ex parte	682

INDEX OF TITLES IN THE DIGEST.

	PAGE
Accident Policy	1016
Acceptance... ..	1112
Acts 20 of 1856 to 30 of 1906,	passim
Act of Insolvency	1099
Actio Redhibitoria	71
Adiation	744, 762
Adultery	70
Advocate	397
Agent (enrolled)	739
Agency	40, 730
Agreement not to Sell	508
Amendment	626, 579, 831
Animus injurandi	482
Ante-nuptial Contract	945, 1150
Appeal	678, 920, 968
Appropriation of Payments... ..	658
Arbitration	399, 656
Architect	169, 410
Arrest... ..	1039, 1144
Articled Clerk	397, 606
Assignment of Lease	147
Attachment ... 106, 351, 394, 840,	870, 967, 1094
Attestation	56
Attorney... 216, 260, 371, 739,	863
Auctioneer	50
Aval... ..	658
Award	345
Benefit of Excussion	711
Bequest	391
Billiards	219
Bona vacantia	390
Bond	990
Books	223
Brandy Still	544
Breach of Warranty	71
Broker	50
Brokerage	1043
Building Contract	333
Builder	169
Butcher's Licence	985
Cancellation	268, 666
Cape Town Municipal Act	162
Cape Town Town Council	817
Cattle	437, 1115
Cession of Inheritance	510
Change in Course of River	449

	PAGE
Cheque Form... ..	257
Civil Commissioner... ..	314
Civil Imprisonment	53, 133
Civil Service	1077
Claim to Inheritance	1006
Claim in Reconvention	321
Olient	216
Codicil	166
Co-executors	112
Collaterals	390
Comission de bene esse	26
Commissioner... ..	981
Commonage	373, 415
Completion of Service of Ar-	ticles 606
Condition	392
Conditional Bequest	409
Constitution Ordinance	807
Contract 196, 522, 845,	767
Contributory	154
Corporal Punishment	136
Cost	1085
Costs... .. 405, 934,	1126
Counterclaim... ..	844
Covering Bond	1105
Cricket Team	231
Death of Legatee	1054
Debentures	377
Debt	444
Debtor of Execution Debtor... ..	1117
Declaration of Rights	65
Deeds Office	447
Defamation	482
Delivery	463
Discovery	270
Distribution of Estate... ..	699
District Surgeon... ..	42
Divisional Council	458
Divorce 70, 54, 607,	977
Domicile	473, 541
Dredger	1057
Drunkenness	695
Engineer	753
English Marriage Settlement	977
Enrolled Agent... ..	306
Entertainment	219
Evidence 223, 598, 607,	651.
	987, 1005, 1129

PAGE	PAGE
Exception 65, 311	Interpleader 106
Execution 625, 1117	Intestate Succession 390
Executor 442, 1139	Invoice Price 1085
Expenses of Transfer 182
Expropriation 399, 643	Judgment in excess of Claim 425
Extras 333	Judicial Separation 878
	Jurisdiction,
Fall of Derrick 338	38, 442, 541, 840, 1113
Fees 216, 410	Jus accrescendi 1054
Fencing Act 427	Juvenile Offenders... .. 556, 871
Fidei Commisum ... 118, 208, 308,
392, 744, 919, 1022	Land Beacons... .. 127
Fiduciary Heir 447	Landlord and Tenant... .. 147, 211
Fire 435	Lapse of Time... .. 1150
Fixed Establishment 1077	Lapsed Policy 476
Fixtures 544	Last Illness 343
Foreign Judgment 1130	Law Society 260
Forgery 257, 531	Law of Evidence 953
Forum 473	Lease 1125
Free Church 1139	Leave to Sell Property 919
Freight 354	Leave to sue in forma pauperis 287
	Letter of Credit 354
Game 426, 862	Liability of Town Agent to Gaming in Public Place 758	Client 360
"Good For" 219	Libel 298, 612
Goose Club 894	Life Insurance 476
Grant of Land 178	Limited Liability Co... .. 533
Grazing of Cattle 1013	Liquor Licence,
Guarantee 711	288, 827, 882, 1129, 1136
Guarantor 730	Lunacy 760
Helm of Still 141	Magistrate 425
Horse 91	Magistrate's Court ... 40, 107, 108,
Hostile Witness 651	232, 934, 967, 1113
Husband and Wife 911	Magistrate's Finding on Facts,
	556, 854, 1146
Illegal Arrest 978	Magistrate's Jurisdiction,
Illegal Consideration 78	321, 477, 855
Illegal Remission of Customs	Manager 288
Duty 689	Massing... .. 308, 447, 451, 744
Imprisonment for Life 385	Matrimonial Agents 845
In forma pauperis 607, 767	Master and Servant 422
Incola 1039, 1144	Material, but Collateral Facts 1095
Incomplete Plans 753	Measure of Damages 298, 767
Indian 749	Medical Fees 42, 343
Infected Area... .. 1115	Messenger of R.M. Court ... 978
Insane Spouse 708	Mining 529
Insolvency 182, 241, 724, 805,	Minor 867
945, 1090, 1092, 1133, 1134	Mission Lands 102
Insolvent Ordinance,	Mortgage 182, 268
325, 788, 939, 1040	Municipality, 34, 97, 196, 328, 531
Insurance 134	Mutual Will 762
Interdict 1000
Interlocutory Order 678
Interest 345, 579	Native ... 21, 461, 827, 882, 968
Interference with Natural	Necessaries supplied to Wife 650
Flow of Water 449	Negligence 91, 338, 435

INDEX OF TITLES IN THE DIGEST.

xxv

	PAGE
Negotiable Instrument ...	377, 631
Newspaper ...	298
Non-resident Defendant ...	840
Novation ...	248, 1105
Nuisance ...	1102
Occupier's Liability for Owner's Rate ...	328
Opposing Creditors ...	1133
Ordinances ...	131, 805, 947, 1095, 1133, 1134
Over issue of Shares ...	533
Owner of Land ...	714
Parliamentary Voter ...	464
Partners ...	810, 1000
Patent ...	141, 635
Payment for Liquor ...	894
Penalty ...	508
Perjury ...	556, 1095
Permit for Absence from Colony ...	749
Perpetual Interdict ...	1102
Personal Injury ...	64, 114, 850
Plea in Abatement ...	724
Pleading ...	1052
Pledge ...	325, 463
Poisoning of Vermis ...	714
Police Offences ...	695
Policy of Insurance ...	955
Popularis actio ...	689
Possession ...	44
Poundmaster ...	221
Preference ...	343
Presumption of Death ...	111
Principal and Agent ...	960
Priority ...	1105
Private Prosecution ...	131
Privilege ...	298, 482
Procedure ...	351
Prohibition to Mortgage ...	240
Promissory Note, 28, 78, 248, 519, 658, 1090
Prospector's Rights ...	529
Provisional Order of Sequestration ...	1099
Provisional Sentence ...	1130
Public Health ...	42
Public Place ...	1127
Public Servant ...	730
Purchase by Promoters of Company ...	916
Purchase and Sale ...	544, 1112
Quantity ...	275
Quorum of Judges ...	920, 923
Railway ...	290, 643

	PAGE
Recovery of Trespass Money ...	437
Registering Officer ...	464
Registration ...	628, 635, 911
Release from Sequestration ...	397, 878
Release by Creditor of part Security ...	990
Remote Result of Introduction ...	1043
Removal of Case to another Division ...	822
Remuneration ...	810
Representation ...	390
Repudiation ...	124
Res judicata ...	359
Reservatory Clause ...	156
Resident Magistrate's Jurisdiction ...	844
Resolution of Parliament ...	178
Responsibility ...	435
Restitution of Conjugal Rights, 70, 385, 708
Restraint against Mortgage ...	391
Retention Money ...	333
Review ...	156
Right of Access to Public Road ...	1
Right of Occupation ...	102
Rules of Court ...	131, 444, 1144
Sale and Purchase ...	124, 163, 268, 275, 896, 1085
Scab ...	209
Sea-worthiness ...	114
Seduction ...	110
Selling from Cart ...	985
Service of Summons ...	473
Servitude ...	97, 415, 628
Servitus viar ...	449
Set Off ...	650
Setting out of Foreign Words in Indictment ...	556
Shareholder ...	154
Sheriff ...	1117
Shipowner ...	338
Signature obtained by Fraud ...	631
Southern Rhodesia ...	399
Special J.P. ...	1142
Specifications ...	1057
Splitting of Charges ...	296, 470, 531
Statutory Duty ...	689
Succession ...	21
Summons ...	626
Sunday Trading ...	272
Supreme Court ...	923
Surety ...	354, 711
Survey ...	1032
Tacit Emancipation ...	867, 1114
Tacit Hypothec ...	182

	PAGE		PAGE
Tariff Book	280	Uttering	531
Taxing Master	405	Validity of Marriage	38
Time of Payment	767	Variation of Written Contract	26
Town Attorney	360	Venereal Disease	54
Trade Mark	68, 665	Via vicinalis	1
Transfer	831	Village Management Board...	373
Transfer Duty, 314, 666, 896, 916, 1139		Voters' Roll	807
Transkei	156, 461	Wages	287
Trespass	221, 426	Waiver	1016
Trust Deed	240	Water	97
Trustee	669	Wild Ostriches	854
Unauthorized Expenditure, 817, 1139		Will ... 56, 118, 166, 308, 392, 409, 430, 447, 451, 699, 724, 744, 947, 962, 966, 988, 1021, 1022, 1054
Unauthorized Registration	665	Winding Up	154
Uncertainty	392	Withdrawal of Set Down...	342
Unprofessional Conduct	371	Witnesses	947, 1021
Unsoundness of Mind	760	Writ of Execution	106
Usufructuary	447, 451

"Cape Times" Law Reports.

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT, CAPE COLONY.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ALLEN V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

1906.
May 8th.
" 9th.
" 10th.
" 11th.
Nov. 28th.
" 29th.
" 30th.
1907.
Jan. 12th.

Via vicinalis—Deflection of public road—Right of access to—Station yard.

In 1857 the Government expropriated certain land for railway purposes, and in the course of their operations deflected a certain road, which by immemorial prescription had become a public road, so as to cause it to run over a portion of the land expropriated, which had been partially fenced in for the purposes of a "goods' yard." The public continued to use without protest the road thus deflected. The original road had previously passed near to certain two lots of land, the property of the plaintiff's predecessors in title and had been generally used as a via vicinalis. In 1884 and 1902 respectively these two lots of land were transferred to the plaintiff and were described as "bounded by the railway land." This property extended up to the said fence, but some railway property interrened between it and the deflected road. Plaintiff now claimed the removal of the fence that he might have access to the public road.

Held, that as the plaintiff's property did not abut on the deflected public road, and that as the intervening fence had stood for considerably more than 20 years before he had purchased the property, he was not entitled to succeed.

Semble, where a road which lies between fences is proclaimed or dedicated as a public road, it may be presumed that the drains alongside the road and inside the fences, form part of the road. But where a road is claimed by user, only the part used becomes a road.

This was an action brought by Joseph George Silbey Allen, a hotel-keeper, of Paarl, against the Colonial Government, for a declaration of rights in regard to a road in front of his property.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is the registered owner of certain two pieces of land, situate at the Paarl, just behind the railway station, by two transfers, dated 24th October, 1884, and 25th January, 1902, which pieces of land were bought by him from Tobias Johannes Louw. The two pieces of land adjoin each other, and their frontages are upon the Paarl Station as in the same line,

2. The main road to the Paarl runs some distance from the plaintiff's land to the west of it. On the north plaintiff's land is bounded by land owned by the insolvent estate of one De Villiers. To the east of the land there is land upon which are situate the Paarl Station, certain railway buildings, and the railway itself, and the public road between the station and plaintiff's land.

3. The station, some of the buildings, and the railway were constructed by a private company in pursuance of Act 20 of 1857, and the undertaking was acquired by the Colonial Government in 1872, in pursuance of Act 15 of 1872. The land on which the station and railway were constructed was registered in the name of Adrian Jacobus Louw, sen., prior to 1857, and remained so registered till 1877, when it was transferred to Tobias Johannes Louw, in whose name it now stands registered, and there is no certificate of expropriation or any reference to expropriation in or on the transfers of the land.

4. Prior to 1857 and from time immemorial, and for a period beyond that of prescription, a public road, which the public had always used as of right for vehicular and foot traffic, ran from the Upper Paarl, past what is now the plaintiff's property, and between it and the present station, thence over the land in paragraph 3 mentioned, near where subsequently a goods shed, used in connection with the railway station, was constructed, and thence over the Berg River towards Drakenstein. When the railway was constructed after the Act No. 20 of 1857 was passed, the road so far as it crossed the land near the goods shed was deflected more to the south, and the road so deflected continued to be used by the public as of right and in manner aforesaid as a public road, and was so used by plaintiff's predecessors in title and for access to and from the pieces of land now owned by plaintiff.

5. In 1862 De Villiers constructed a road from the public road almost adjoining and to the north of plaintiff's land up to and into the main road, but he left a strip of his land between his road and plaintiff's land so as to prevent legal access from the land now owned by plaintiff and other property between it and the main road into the road so constructed by him. Thereafter the public made use of this road coming from or going to the public road, and the public road so deflected continued thereafter, up to the grievances hereinafter complained of, to be used as such by the public as of right and in the manner aforesaid up to where De Villiers' road joined it, whence the public used either De Villiers' road or the old public road.

6. In or about 1883 the plaintiff constructed an hotel on the piece of land bought by him fronting on the station, between which and plaintiff's land there was and is only the public road, and the plaintiff, his servants, and guests have until the grievances hereinafter complained of had free and uninterrupted access, as they were legally entitled to, from his hotel and land on and into the public road and vice versa.

7. Subsequently, to wit, in 1904, the plaintiff constructed another and better hotel upon the piece of land which is nearest to the land of De Villiers.

8. Prior to 1862 the only access to the station from the land now owned by plaintiff other than the said public road was by a detour of great length, which detour was shortened by De Villiers' road in 1862. From 1883, when plaintiff bought, until 1902, the only means the plaintiff had of going from his property to the main road or the Paarl was by means of the public road, and since 1902 he may do so by other roads marked on a plan, but not made up or constructed.

9. In January, 1906, the defendant by his servants and agents wrongfully and unlawfully began to construct a fence on the line between plaintiff's property and the said public road, and in front of his said hotels, so as to prevent the plaintiff from having access in and on to the said public road, and which would also prevent the plaintiff or any of the public from having access from the said public road to his hotels, and the defendant claimed, and claims the right to shut off the plaintiff from any access to the said public road, and the plaintiff has in consequence suffered damages in his business and otherwise.

10. On the 22nd January, 1906, this Honourable Court granted a rule nisi to operate as an interdict restraining the defendant from erecting a fence in front of the plaintiff's two hotels and between them and the said road, pending an action to be brought.

11. The plaintiff claims the right of access from his said property into the said road, and claims that the same is a public road, and that the defendant is not entitled by a fence or other means to prevent him from obtaining such access, all of which defendant denies.

Wherefore plaintiff claims: (a) A declaration that the said road is a public road; (b) that plaintiff is entitled to access from his property on and in to the said public road; (c) a declaration that the defendant is not entitled to erect a fence or other obstruction up against his said property or on the said road so as to prevent access from the plaintiff's property and hotels on and in to the said road; (d) an interdict restraining defendant from erecting any such fence or other obstruction; (e) damages in the sum of £500; (f) alternative relief and costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraph 1 of the declaration.

2. He admits that the main road referred to in paragraph 2 runs some distance to the west of the plaintiff's land. The land is bounded on the north by land belonging to the Paarl Municipality, and on the east by land belonging to the Colonial Government, upon which are situated the Paarl Railway station and other railways buildings and the line of railway. The defendant craves leave to refer to the title deeds and diagrams of the plaintiff's property when produced at the trial for a clearer description of the boundaries thereof. Save as aforesaid, he denies the allegations contained in the said paragraph.

3. He admits paragraph 3, but says that the Colonial Government is the successor in title to the railway company which expropriated in the year 1859, or thereabouts, the land hereinafter referred to, and independently of the said expropriation the Colonial Government has by continuous adverse occupation and user as of right by itself and its predecessors in title acquired prescriptive right to the ownership of all the land upon which the station, the station yard more specifically referred to in the succeeding paragraph, the railway line and other appurtenances are situated.

4. The portion of the land between the eastern boundary of the plaintiff's land and the railway station and line has ever since the construction of the said line in the year 1863 or thereabouts been continuously, exclusively, and as of right occupied and used by the Colonial Government, and its predecessor in title, as a station yard, and has been under the exclusive control of the Government and its predecessor during the said period. The said portion has been from the aforesaid date fenced along the whole extent of the plaintiff's boundary and protected by gates. The defendant admits that those of the public who had legitimate business at the station have for a considerable period of time had access to the said yard for the furtherance of the said business, but such access has always been by the leave and licence of the Government and its predecessor respectively, and not as of right, and the station yard has at no time become a public road or thoroughfare. Save as aforesaid, he denies paragraphs 4 and 5.

5. In or about 1884 the plaintiff constructed an hotel on the land first bought by him, which hotel was fronted towards the railway station. At the prayer of the plaintiff and as an act of grace and favour, and in order to allow him a more convenient access to the hotel from the station, the defendant conceded him the privilege of a gate in the fence referred to in the last paragraph and pending the construction of the gate made a provisional opening opposite to the hotel in the fence. A gate was erected, but the fence provisionally removed was not re-erected, and from that date until January, 1906, the defendant has permitted free access to the plaintiff, his servants and guests, to the station through the gate and opening.

6. In 1904 the plaintiff constructed a new hotel to the north of the old hotel, and upon the piece of land bought by him in 1883. Save as aforesaid, the defendant denies paragraphs 6 and 7.

7. During the construction of the hotel the plaintiff wrongfully and unlawfully pulled down the fence theretofore existing as alleged in paragraph 4 hereof along part of the boundary between the land owned by him and the station yard, but in reply to the protests of the defendant promised and undertook to re-erect the fence forthwith. Upon the plaintiff's neglect to perform his promise and undertaking the defendant and his servants began to re-construct the said fence as they lawfully might along the whole line of the boundary between the plaintiff's land and the station yard. Save as aforesaid he denies paragraphs 8 and 9 of the declaration.

8. The defendant admits that a rule nisi was granted as stated in paragraph 10, but denies that its terms were as therein stated and craves leave to refer to the record thereof when produced at the trial.

9. He admits that he denies the plaintiff's claims as set out in paragraph 11. Wherefore he prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), for plaintiff; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. H. Jones), for defendant.

Walter Murray, Registry Surveyor in the Deeds Office, produced the title deeds of A. J. Louw, and in the course of his evidence said there was no certificate of expropriation filed in the papers.

Frank Molteno, a Government surveyor, said that he visited the Paarl recently, and four old inhabitants pointed to him where the old road ran. There was a worn-out portion near De Villiers's homestead. Above the metalled road to Drakenstein the ground was very sandy and overgrown with fir trees, and the only road was that running by the station. At one time the railway had been separated from Allen's property by a wire fence, which was now in a dilapidated condition. The fence the Railway Department was interdicted from proceeding with was of iron palings, about 5 ft. in height, and, if completed, cut the plaintiff off completely.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: If diagram followed diagram, and showed no signs of a public road, it was presumptive evidence that there never had been a public road.

Johannes Stephanus Homan, retired farmer and a J.P., living at Frenchhoek, stated that in August he would be 82 years of age. The farm he lived upon he bought from his father at the age of 23. As there was no church at Frenchhoek he had occasion to make the journey frequently to the Paarl by a road that went between Allen's property and the station. He had never been stopped on that road.

Isaac Johannes Roux, who said that he was born on the farm Picardy 71 years ago, gave evidence in support of the plaintiff's contention.

Thomas Moskop, a wool washer, of the Paarl, stated that he had been carrying on his business on the farm Zoutenval since 1877, when the railway had already been constructed. The only road he used to get to the Upper Paarl was that opposite the plaintiff's property. It was only at the beginning of this year that he heard of any objection to the thoroughfare being used by the public.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: He had often travelled at night, and never found the railway gates closed. The road in front of Allen's property was not the only one to the Paarl.

Robert Freyter, a partner of the previous witness, said that he resided at the Paarl from 1877 to 1899. He had often used the road, which was the subject of so much dispute, without let or hindrance. He might have seen the gate opposite the goods shed closed on one occasion.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: He had never travelled from the homestead to the Paarl by the "sand road."

Daniel Jacobus Homan said that he had often travelled over the road in question. It was not in so good a condition as another road, but it was a short cut. At times he had ridden over it on his horse; twenty years ago he had seen ox wagons passing over it.

J. Krige said that many years ago he had taken bricks over the road which the Government had recently tried to block up.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: There were a good many roads where the station at present stands. He was never stopped on any road; the people all knew him there.

Paul Roux (69 years of age), born at Groot Drakenstein, said that up to eleven years ago he lived at Klein Drakenstein. Since then he had lived at Paarl. He remembered the iron road making its appearance at Paarl.

In the old days, when he wanted to reach the Paarl, he went via Cecilia's Drift. Before the station was built, the road running past it was not used, because the lower road was a better one for transit. In the days long ago he had complained of the action of the Railway Company in leaving the road at the level crossing in a bad condition. Meeting with no redress, he complained to the Municipality, and was told that the Municipality had no time to deal with such matters. At length he remedied the grievance by filling up the hollow. There were gates at the crossing, and also near the goods shed. He had complained about the gate at the latter place, and in response to his agitation, the gate was removed.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: He complained about the gate about 2½ years after the railway had been constructed. He complained to Mr. Marais, M.L.A.

Jacob de Villiers (61 years of age) stated he had lived at the Paarl all his life, and that the farm Zoutenval was formerly owned by his father. He corroborated the other witnesses as to the public use of the road opposite the plaintiff's property. He never found the gates at the station closed. The fence which it was proposed to erect would cut off the plaintiff completely.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: He thought there was a public interest in the matter. The public would not allow the road to be closed.

Joseph G. S. Allen, plaintiff, stated that when he bought his property there was an old dilapidated fence, and he wrote requesting the removal of the fence. The fence was taken down, and subsequently re-erected. Where the shop now stands he had carried on the business of a hotelkeeper for many years. Many passengers by rail and road visited the house, and the road in front of the shop was used by day and night. On the suggestion of a railway official, named Brady, he closed openings in his fence. This was done to prevent cattle straying on to the road or railway. As the property was fixed now, he could not reach the station except with great difficulty, and by sufferance of neighbouring landowners. The post office stands on plots that he had bought in 1884 and 1901. Early in 1904, owing to threats of withdrawal of licence witness commenced to build his new hotel, the frontage of which was on the road in dispute. When the first floor of the new building had been reached he received an intimation from Messrs. Patterson and Shannon, of the Railway Department, to the effect that certain building material lying in front of the building would have to be removed, and a fence erected. In the course of a conversation with Mr. Patterson, the latter said: "Do you know what I'll do with you?" I said, "No," said the witness. "I'll put a 6 ft. iron fence in front of your property, and box you in," said Mr. Patterson. "Will you?" said the witness; "you can't do it, because it is a public road." "Do you dare me?" queried Mr. Patterson. I said, "Yes, if you are going to talk that way. I came down to meet you as a gentleman, but I find I am mistaken." "What I'll do," said Mr. Patterson, "is to put a six foot fence in iron in front of your place, run in a few lines, and put trucks in front of your door." I then left, concluded the witness.

Shortly afterwards plaintiff received a letter threatening that if certain work were not carried out forthwith the department would do it at plaintiff's expense. Further acrimonious letters followed, the department contending that the plaintiff had no right to use the road, as it belonged to the department. The erection of the fence would mean his ruin, and the depreciation of the value of the hotel buildings by 66.16 per cent. The amount claimed for damages, £500, had been incurred in "running in and out of Paarl village and other trouble."

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: A railway official named Parker had told him that he ought to be horsewhipped for not having sufficient accommodation for the travelling public.

Did he say it seriously?—Yes; he said it in the presence of others.

Did you think he would do it?—I hardly thought that he would be able to.

Did you think he would take it in hand personally, or have it done officially?—I don't know.

In a letter of yours you say that politics are at the bottom of the action of the Railway Department; you say you have always taken a very great interest in politics in the Progressive cause, and that the trouble is due to the opposite party. What official do you think in the Railway Department was at the bottom of it?—Mr. Parker, the station-master.

Do you think that Mr. Parker is organising an attack upon you because you are a Progressive?—I don't think Mr. Parker has any love for me.

You say that Mr. Parker has attacked you, and set all manner of machinery in motion to attack you because you are a Progressive?—I think he has sent letters to the department to hamper me, before I was heard by the officials.

Do you know that you have been told over and over again that you can have access if you pay for the gates, and an annual nominal rent?—No.

Didn't you write to the Commissioner a letter at the last General Election to this effect?—I had a letter from Dr. Jameson, telling me to work my hardest for the cause we all have at heart . . . and being a member of the working committee of the newly-formed branch of the South African Imperial Union at the Paarl . . . I appeal to you to help me.

Now, that is hardly the letter of a man who had good legal grounds for coming to this court, where political considerations hold not the slightest sway?—I don't know.

You have tried to hamper a political Minister, and make him give you a consideration which you knew in law you had no title to?—I don't admit it.

And the Commissioner very properly replied through his private secretary (Mr. Berrange) that your note would receive his attention. Yet you wrote back thanking him for the letter—there was very little to thank him for—and you went on to say that although the Railway Department had altered its ideas they still hampered you, and that the Government had no exclusive right to the road. How do you explain that?—I just wrote to thank him.

Continuing, witness denied that the Railway Department had offered to let him have access if he paid for the gates and a small annual rental. He had received a telegram from Dr. Smartt to the effect that he could not see his way to depart from the offer made by Mr. Dalton, whereby plaintiff would be provided with access on paying for the gates and a moderate annual rental. In 1884, when writing to the department, he had spoken of his right as a concession. That he had done so because he did not want to quarrel with the Government. In 1904 he had pulled the fence down.

Was it because of the Imperial Union that in 1904 you thought you had grown fat enough to kick, because you had friends at Court?—I have had nothing from the Imperial Union so far.

Continuing, witness said that the late Inspector Dorman had had, at his request, a sluic constructed. Plaintiff would not swear that there had been a sluic at the spot in question before Inspector Dorman had one cut.

He never lent a penny to anyone in the Railway Department. He knew Mr. Brady as the Railway Engineer, but the acquaintance was a very slight one. Witness's idea was to come to terms with the Government without any quarrelling, and that was why he went over Mr. Brady's head to have an interview with the General Manager. By virtue of a verbal promise, he had a permanent right to a gate, although subsequently he wrote to Mr. Elliot asking for permission, provisionally, to use the gate. Mr. Patterson deliberately threatened to box him in, but he was not in a bad temper when he made the threat. He did not know that it was a political threat in view of his zeal in the cause.

Goliath, a coloured farm labourer, born at Paarl, and who said that he knew he was about sixty years of age, gave evidence to the locality of Paarl and the roads prior to and after the advent of the railway.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: He could not say if he was born in 1846, or whether he had first used the road in dispute when about fifteen years of age. He was at that time old enough to drive a pair of horses.

Sir H. Juta closed his case.

Harry Elliot, resident engineer, Western System, Cape Government Railways, and also a Government land surveyor, put in a plan prepared by himself from certain data and information received. He could produce an old iron standard, found near the road in question, bearing the inscription: "C.R., 1861, A.F. Co." The standard was of an antique pattern, and as far as he knew, the Cape Government had never used standards of that type. South of Allen's property some of the standard could be found still. Many railway stations in the country were on ground for which the Government held no title.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: In a few minute details the plans he had obtained from the Railway Department, Deeds Office, and an expropriation document did not agree with regard to a road running from De Villiers' place to the station.

James Bisset, civil engineer, who came out to the Colony in connection with the Cape Town-Wellington Railway, identified a plan of the Paarl station, dated 1859, which he certified as correct, and other plans, including the expropriation plan, which witness had also certified for the information of the Surveyor-General. The general plan agreed with the expropriation plan.

Cross-examined: He did not prepare the plan put in (the draughtsman who was responsible for it was dead), but he verified it before construction was completed. He was not in charge of the construction; he was only chief assistant at headquarters. He would not put his knowledge of roads on the half day spent on the spot against that of old inhabitants. He simply made a flying visit. He was about 23 or 24 years of age at the time. Construction could not have been carried on if roads had been left open.

James Fleming, second draughtsman, Surveyor-General's Department, put in certain plans, subject to the ruling of the Court.

William Edward Green, 44, said that when quite a lad he was a clerk at Paarl station. He was about 13 years of age when he commenced work at the station. John William Rogerson was the stationmaster in those days. Continuing, witness asserted that the station gates were always closed at night long before nine.

Cross-examined, witness admitted that it was many years ago since he was "coaching" clerk at Paarl, and his memory might be a bit hazy.

Edward Steytler, of the Surveyor-General's Department, produced the grant of the farm Picardy and subsequent documents.

Thomas Metcalfe, stationmaster at the Paarl in 1876, stated that the gates were always closed at night whilst he was in charge of the station.

John Lawrence Vivien, formerly foreman porter at the Paarl under Mr. Lewis, stated that during his time the railway gates were locked every night. During the day the gates were more or less open. When the trains were due a man was sent down to the gates as a matter of caution. The main gate was never locked during witness's time. There was no reason to close the gates on Sunday, as there were no trains, through the objection of the Stellenbosch farmers, who were far too religious.

James Forrester, formerly in the service of the old company, and stationmaster at the Paarl from 1881 to 1884, said the northern gate leading from Paarl he never closed, but the other gate at the goods station was always closed. As a matter of grace he had opened it occasionally. The wagons often occupied the alleged thoroughfare.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He often trusted it to the porter to lock the southern gate. He could not account for the evidence on the other side that the gates were left open, it must have been neglect on the part of the porter.

John Peter Powell, who entered the railway service in 1862, supported the case for the defence. Whilst he was permanent-way inspector he was never interfered with by the municipality with regard to the condition of the station yard.

Frederick Henry Kannemeyer, a coloured ganger, who entered the railway service 31 years ago, and who had been on the Paarl section of the permanent way all that period, gave evidence of a similar nature.

Jno. Johnson, a coloured ganger of 17 years standing, also testified to having seen a storm-water drain within the station fence many years ago.

Walter Masterman, who succeeded Inspector Powell as permanent-way inspector at the Paarl on December 6, 1904, said that he had measured the drain in question in order to cut out a new one when he put in a new siding.

Allan Grant Dalton, Engineer-in-Chief of the C.G.R., stated he wrote a letter to the plaintiff on the 20th December, asking him to make formal application in order that the necessary steps might be taken in accordance with the agreement come to that by a recognition of the railway right he was to have access to the station yard upon the lines indicated in the letter.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He had many such interviews as that with Allen. He remembered the arrangement distinctly, and he was not relying entirely on the letter to aid his memory. The plaintiff clearly had a different view of what took place at the meeting, as he wrote denying the agreement. There was no misunderstanding between them.

William Janisch, clerk to the General Manager of Railways, stated he remembered a meeting in Mr. Allan Grant Dalton's office. Witness took a note immediately after the meeting of what took place between the plaintiff and Mr. Dalton. The plaintiff accepted the Government's offer, and said he would formally accept the same in writing.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Mr. Allen's contention at the outset was that the road was a public one, and the public had every right to use it. When Allen shortly afterwards wrote through his solicitors that he did not accept anything, but said at the interview that he would consider the offer, no reply was sent to the plaintiff pointing out that he had already accepted. On July 11 the department wrote regretting that the offer had been declined, and re-opened it for a fortnight. The department did not in the correspondence remind the plaintiff that he had accepted the offer.

The Hon. E. Powell, who was present at the interview, recollected Mr. Dalton saying if Allen paid a nominal sum per annum and acknowledged the right of the Government, he would meet the plaintiff by allowing access on the property, and building some gates in the fence. Allen accepted the offer unreservedly and was so delighted that he invited witness to have some refreshment.

Sir P. Faure gave evidence as to how the roads were used by the public as far back as 1872.

James Patterson, Assistant Traffic Manager of the Western System of the Cape Government Railways, stated he was at Frenchhoek and the Paarl on the 27th May, 1904, and had a conversation with the plaintiff, who was busy constructing his new hotel. The fence was taken down by the plaintiff opposite the hotel for the purpose of depositing the building material. The plaintiff promised to, and did, remove the material, but he got very angry when he was asked to replace the fence, and he refused to do it. There was no political antagonism in the matter. Witness knew nothing of this, nor did he threaten to put a six-foot iron fence in front of his place.

James William Parker, stationmaster at the Paarl, stated that when he came to the Paarl in 1866 there was a storm-water drain in the piece of ground between the railway station and the plaintiff's hotel. There was no truth in the charge against witness that because he was a political opponent he tried to close Mr. Allen in.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Witness objected to the plaintiff using the wood of the fence to cart his cement over, and to his giving a dirty appearance to the railway station.

William Bishop, employed in the office of the Engineer of the C.G.R., stated that he assisted Mr. Elliot in making a plan of the ground on which he gave evidence.

James Shannon, District Engineer of District 1, extending from Cape Town to Wellington and the adjoining branches, stated that since 1904 he had to deal with the matter between the plaintiff and the Government. Between the plaintiff's old hotel and the station there was a slit. The slit was more than six inches deep, although not so deep as formerly. As far as the fence was concerned, witness had it in his power to erect another.

F. Drosslar, assistant permanent way inspector of the Wellington section of the C.G.R., stated that he had lived at Groot Drakenstein for 29 years, and he was familiar with the roads. There was very little traffic, as far as he had known, on the way through the station yard.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: It was after May last that he was asked to give evidence. There was no traffic through the yard, except of those travelling to the station.

Frederick Wilhelm Schwinker, a farmer of 75 years of age, stated that he went to Groot Drakenstein about 44 years ago, and farmed for about 15 years. When he travelled to the Paarl he never went through the railway yard. As far as he knew, apart from people going to the station, the railway yard was not used for traffic.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Witness drove a light cart, but for a heavy bullock wagon the road past the station was the best. He was not constantly there, and people might have travelled through the railway yard for all he knew.

Vincent Begley, who was stationmaster at the Paarl in 1884, said Allen's old building had just been completed when he came there. At that time, the railway fence ran from gate to gate. During his time the gate towards the Paarl and the gate on the south side were closed at night. When he found the south gate open he locked it. The north gate was closed, but not locked.

The gates were locked at night to prevent people passing through. The gates were closed on Sunday, but not locked until the evening.

David R. Ward, who lived at the Paarl from 1881 to 1890, stated that people who had business with the old distillery would pass through the station way. Before he started business he was not aware of any traffic through the station.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: In 1882 witness built up a good business. If the farmers of Klein Drakenstein and Wemmer's Hock had business direct with him, they would come through the station yard. Witness had gone through the same way early in the morning and late at night, and found the gates unlocked.

Re-examined by Mr. Schreiner: The gates might have been closed and reopened in the morning.

Charles John Pritchard, Government Land Surveyor, stated that in June, 1904, he made a survey of the Paarl Station. Mr. Elliot's plan correctly depicted the survey made by witness. The plaintiff pointed out his beacons, and witness had been more liberal to him than the beacons would show.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Sir Henry Juta, in argument, said that the owner of land adjoining a public road was entitled to access to that road. He quoted Ramus v. Sutherland Local Board (67 L.T., 169), Marshall v. Ulster Navigation Company (25 L.T., 793), Encyclopædia of the Laws of England (vol. 6, p. 186), and Daries v. Stercus (7 C. and P., 570).

If the Government claimed a prescriptive right to keep the plaintiff off the public road, it would have to show that for 30 years it had prevented the plaintiff from going on to the road as a matter of right. A fence would not be sufficient obstruction. A fence was not put up to vindicate a right; it was merely put up for convenience. Counsel further quoted Act 8 of 1843, sections 9 and 10; Peacock v. Hodges (1876, Buch., 85), and Rex v. United Kingdom Electric Telegraph Company (6 L.T., N.S., 378).

Mr. Schreiner said the plaintiff had failed to prove any registered right of way. His property was described in the title deed as bounded by railway property. A via publica did not become a public road till it was declared to be so. A via vicinalis became a public road by uninterrupted use for 30 years, and very strong evidence was required to prove that. He quoted Peacock and Hodges (1876, Buch., 85), Van Schalkwyk v. Du Plessis (17 S.C., 454), Maasdorp's Institutes (pp. 181 and 182), Voet (43, 7, 1), Ludolf v. Wegner (6 J., 193), Asman v. Rautman (12 J., 279), Error of Ayliff v. Hildebrand (7 E.D.C., 172), and Elman v. Worth (16 S.C., 173).

Ownership of the land was, he said, obtained by Act of Parliament, not by transfer. He cited Grimbeck v. Colonial Government (17 S.C., 200). The plaintiff would have to prove immemorial user of the road before the land was expropriated, in order to succeed. The road could not become a public road merely because the public in general had travelled along it.

The plaintiff's case depended upon this road being a public road. This road was never used as a public road. It might have been used by a few farmers for special purposes to reach the distillery, but that did not make it a public road. The distinction between this road and Retief's road was that Retief's road was shown on the old diagrams (e.g., on the Laborie title in 1691) as a public road, while this road was not. The mere user of this road did not prove immemorial user, adverse user as of right, which presumed a grant by the owner. There was a difference between prescription and immemorial user. Immemorial user might be inferred from the fact that the road had been used for the period of prescription, but it need not necessarily be inferred. He cited Peacock v. Hodges and Ludolf v. Wegner.

Sir H. Juta, in reply, said that the railway authorities had evidently acted in a very high-handed way. They had no right to take any of Louw's land under compulsory expropriation, whether there was a road or not. He cited Ordinance 8 of 1843, Slabbert v. Bell (4 S.C., 3), Logan v. Colonial Government (18 S.C., 125, and 20 S.C., 343), and Act 19 of 1874 (section 5). If there had been a public road before the railway was built, the railway had no right to close it up.

Curr. Adv. Vult.

Postea (January 12th, 1907).

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff in this case claims to be entitled to access to and to the use of a public road passing through the station yard of the defendant, and complains that he is prevented from using it by the conduct of the defendant in placing a fence between his property and the road. It is alleged in the declaration that before the year 1857 a public road was in existence, which passed what is now the plaintiff's property, and when, in terms of Act 20 of 1857, the railway in question was constructed, it was deflected to the spot where it now lies across the defendant's property. The plaintiff contends that whatever rights in the old road belonged to the previous owners of his land now belong to him in respect of the deviated road which has been substituted for the old road. It will be necessary in the first place to decide if the old road was a public road, next, if the new road took its place, subject to all its burdens, and then whether the plaintiff is entitled to access thereto, and use thereof, at the place and in the manner claimed by him. For many years before 1857 the Paarl was an old-established township, and the district of Drakenstein was a thickly populated locality, comprising numerous farms. The communication between Drakenstein and the Paarl, its nearest market town, was frequent, and the vehicular and other traffic was constant. It is natural to expect under the circumstances to find that a public road of some description was in existence for the use of the inhabitants. Such road might be one proclaimed by competent authority, or created by grant or reservation, or acquired as a via vicinalis by immemorial user. There is no proof that roads of the two first descriptions existed, and if, therefore, there were a public road it could only be of the last description. This proposition was freely admitted on behalf of the defendant, and it is said that the evidence no doubt proves the existence of a public road of the character of a via vicinalis from Drakenstein to Paarl, but in a very different direction from that claimed by the plaintiff. It appears from the evidence that a public road, about which there is no dispute, runs from Klein Drakenstein to where it crosses the Berg River at Cecilia's Drift, from there two roads diverge, running to different parts of the Paarl. One goes in a northerly direction past Retief's, and this is said by the defendant, upon the evidence of his witnesses, to be undoubtedly a public road connecting Drakenstein with the Paarl. About this road there is no question, and it is clear, to my mind, that it has all along been the one most frequented by the inhabitants of Drakenstein, running as it does through the busier and more densely-built part of the Paarl. But it must be remembered that the Paarl covers in its length a large extent of country, and it would be reasonable to expect that more than one road would be found necessary to serve the convenience of the residents of Drakenstein in travelling to different parts of the Paarl. The plaintiff contends that upon the evidence it was proved that such was actually the case, and that it was in that way that the old road in dispute came into existence as a public road by immemorial user. The witnesses for the defendant seemed to admit that a second public road existed leading from Drakenstein to the main road at the Paarl, but they say that such public road was the one passing by No. 84 crossing, and running direct to the main road along a sandy track. The direct evidence as to the use of these roads before the construction of the railway in 1857 seems almost wholly to be on the side of the plaintiff. The result of the evidence, as a whole, seems to be that before 1857 the old disputed road was in constant use by the public, and was then used concurrently with the more frequented road past Retief's residence, according as people found it easier than the latter road for heavy wagons, or, as was said by Paul Roux, they had business at that end of the Paarl. This evidence seems to me to be confirmed partially by the old plans put in by witnesses for the defence, upon which is shown a track corresponding with the road past the house of De Villiers. The question arises whether that road was already in existence before the year 1857, when the railway was constructed, as a public road in the nature of a via vicinalis acquired by immemorial user. If that question is answered in the affirmative, then it would follow that in 1857 the railway company had no legal power under their statutory rights to close the road and deprive the public of the use thereof without providing them with another road equally convenient for all purposes. If the road was not a public road in 1857, then it seems to me the contention on behalf of the defendant is sound, that the use by the public of a road leading into a railway yard at the invitation of the railway company, for purposes of traffic on the line, and business at the station, cannot be regarded as a user, which will ultimately, in course of time, ripen into a prescriptive right to the use of the road. But if the road was then already a public road, the question would not be one of acquiring a right, but of losing a right by acquiescence or non-user. It was provided by section 30, of Act 19 of 1861, which was passed when this railway was in the course of construction that: "If the railway crosses any public road on a level, the company shall erect and at all times maintain good and sufficient gates across such roads on each side of the railway, where the same shall communicate therewith, and shall employ proper persons to open and shut such gates." I do not think it could be in all cases demanded that the road should remain precisely in the same spot, or that the Courts would assist anyone who unreasonably objects to its being shifted to a place in the immediate neighbourhood where it is to all intents and purposes equally convenient to the public. An analogous case is given in the "Hollandre Consultation," vol. 5, Consult. 50, where a person who acquired a right-of-way was held to be entitled to fix the position of the road with reasonable regard to all the circumstances, but if thereafter the owner of the servient tenement should require the ground for building or agriculture he could shift the road to a spot equally convenient to the dominant tenement. I do not say that the rule is entirely applicable to a via vicinalis, but I think that even in the case of a via vicinalis parties might reasonably be expected to act in the spirit of the rule, and upon the evidence I am of opinion that that was done in this case. Upon the question whether this road was a public road, in the nature of a via vicinalis when the land was expropriated by the company in about the year 1857, I find the evidence of Johannes Hauman has a most important bearing. No evidence carries us back further than his. He is 82 years of age, and he knew the road from his childhood, as far as his memory carries him back, and he says when he first knew it it was a public road used by everyone as of right. This may be said to carry us back, roughly speaking, to more than twenty years before 1857, or about 25 years before the construction of the line actually obstructed the road. The road was then in constant use by the public, and considering the comparative antiquity of the inhabited localities between which it communicated, I think it may reasonably be concluded upon the evidence that this public road was in existence a considerable number of years before that time. However, as far back as the memory of man goes this was a public road, and there is no evidence that the memory of man runs to the contrary thereof. I therefore come to the conclusion that the old road in question was a via vicinalis, by immemorial use, when the railway was built. When the road was obstructed by the railway the company allowed a road across their line at No. 84 crossing, and the public instead of objecting to the obstruction, commenced to use the new road by that crossing, and came into the old road again beyond the station, in the same way as they used the new road made by De Villiers when he closed the old road running by his house. In my opinion this new road to all intents and purposes took the place of the old road, was used by the public as of right, and they were never obstructed by the railway company. Isaac Roux said in evidence: "After they built the goods shed we went alongside the goods shed. After this alteration the people used the road, that is, the new road, as before, because there was no other road to the Paarl." With regard to the conflict of evidence as to the obstruction of the road by closing the gates of the railway yard, it is enough to say that in my opinion there is no evidence that any traveller was ever hindered from going along the road by these gates, nor was anything ever done by the company to make any one believe that he was allowed to use the road merely by their sufferance, or leave, and licence. The bare fact that gates were placed across the road is in itself no denial of right, for Voet (8, 3, 4) says that a gate may be placed across a servitude road, provided it does not hinder the free passage of the dominant owner. After the land was expropriated by the company, they enclosed their yard with a fence, and through this enclosed yard the road ran. There is no proof that this road occupied the whole yard up to the fence; on the contrary, there is evidence that a strip of land along the fence, where an open drain ran, was not and could not be used as a road. Where a road is proclaimed or dedicated, which lies between fences, it may, under certain circumstances, be presumed that the drains alongside the road, and inside the fences, form part of the road. But where a road is claimed by user, only the part used becomes a road, especially where it appears that the drains remained under the management and control of the owner of the land. In the case of a via vicinalis, I think, all persons who have land abutting on the road, or who have a right of abutment, are entitled to use the road, but in this case the land of the plaintiff lies outside the fence, it does not abut on the road, and the plaintiff could not reach the road in the direction claimed by him without passing over the land of the defendant. It must be pointed out that no representation was made to the plaintiff when he purchased in 1884 and 1902, that his land adjoined the road, but it was described as being bounded on that side by railway property. Even if the road did run up to the fence, which stands on the boundary of the plaintiff's land, I do not think he would be entitled to claim the removal of a fence which was put up at the time the road was made, that is to say, more than twenty years before the plaintiff bought the land, and much more than thirty years before he demanded the removal of the fence. This is a very different case from those cited at the bar, where a Town Council was interdicted from putting up a barrier where there had been none before. I come to the conclusion that the plaintiff is not entitled to access to the road in the manner claimed by him. It may be said that in view of the case it was unnecessary to go at such length into the character of the road, but that part of my finding would be of importance in case it should be held that that view is wrong. If it is found to be an intolerable nuisance to have a public road through a railway yard that might be rectified by necessary legislation or otherwise, safeguarding at the same time the rights of the travelling public. I may also say that I find as a fact, upon a point which may in another view of the case affect the question of damages, although it has not been set up as a defence, that it has been proved that the plaintiff, with full knowledge of his position, and in order to settle a doubtful lawsuit, agreed with the defendant to give up his claim in consideration of certain modes of access to the road which were offered to him by the defendant. A road of necessity has not been claimed in this case, although a part of the declaration and a good deal of the evidence was only relevant to such an issue, but if such a claim had been made and evidence had been adduced to establish it, then, in my opinion, the terms offered by the defendant, which formed part of the agreement mentioned, were reasonable and sufficient to meet such claim. I find that the road in question is a public road, the property of the plaintiff does not abut on to the road; the fence is constructed some distance from the road on the land of defendant, and not, as alleged in the declaration, on the line between the plaintiff's property and the road; and the plaintiff is not entitled to access to the road through the defendant's fence, or across his land. Judgment is given for the defendant, with costs.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for defendants), drew his lordship's attention to the fact that costs had been incurred by reason of certain proceedings for an interdict anterior to the trial, and asked whether these costs would be included.

Maaadorp, J.: I think all those costs follow.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn. Defendant's Attorneys: Reid and Nephew.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1907.
{ Jan. 12th.

Mr. Sutton moved for the admission of Cyril Espinell Espin as an attorney. Counsel stated that applicant was an attorney of the Transvaal Court.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Registrar of the E.D. Court.

Mr. Lewis moved for the admission of Thomas E. de M. Herbert as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of Bredaadorp.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

COHEN V. DA COSTA.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

BESTALL V. DU PLESSIS.

Mr. De Waal moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

SOMERSET WEST STRAND MUNICIPALITY
V. ALLISON.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on certain judgments of the Resident Magistrate's Court, Stellenbosch, and for certain property situate in the division of Stellenbosch to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE SCHOEMAN V. NOURSE.

Mr. Louwrens was for the plaintiff; Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for defendant.

Mr. Louwrens applied for this matter to stand over until the 14th February, to enable plaintiff to file answering affidavits.

Sir H. Juta consented, subject to the interdict against the movables on the farm in question being removed. He said that the case set up by the defendant was that the money was always at the disposal of the plaintiff, arrangements had been made with the bank, the bank's guarantee had been sent to the plaintiff's agent, and for some reason or other, owing apparently to the fact that transfer could not be passed to the defendant, the money was not taken. Then, apparently, the original plaintiff (the seller) died, and his agent, not being aware of all the facts, without demanding the money, and without any intimation to the defendant, attached all the stock on the farm. His client was prepared to pay, and had tendered the money into court.

Mr. Louwrens consented to the removal of the interdict.

The matter was ordered to stand over until the 14th February, and the interdict was discharged.

LAWRENCE AND CO. V. MIGNUM.

Mr. Gutsche moved for judgment on a mortgage bond for £350, with interest at 6 per cent. from January 1, 1905, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. The bond had become due by reason of non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

ESTATE KEULDER V. ESTATE KEULDER
AND ANOTHER.

This was an application for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £300 with interest from December 23, 1897. The bond had become due by reason of non-payment of interest. Counsel also moved to have the property declared executable.

Mr. Benjamin for plaintiff; Mr. Gardiner for defendant.

Mr. Gardiner said there was an agreement of the 20th July, 1898, by which the insolvent was to pay a certain sum to the defendant estate. It seemed clear in the affidavit that the trustee recognised the agreement being a good one. The defendant took that bond over not as an investment, but in consequence of the agreement, to sell which he entered into on the previous day. The defendant handed the bond over to the estate, and if he had taken it as an investment he would have retained the bond himself. It was a bona fide case of the bond having been discharged in part payment, and therefore that portion of his liability was liquidated by the discharge of the bond when the bond was handed over by the insolvent it was clear no insolvency was contemplated. The trustees could not recover the purchase price, which had already been paid. As a matter of fact, they did adopt the sale.

Mr. Benjamin contended that the trustees were in the same position as the insolvent. They were entitled to insist upon the bond. He submitted that the bond for £300 had never been extinguished.

Maasdorp, J.: It seems in this case that the insolvent's mother, who was the executrix in her husband's estate, wished in 1898 to sell certain properties belonging to the estate of her four sons, but it was found there was a bond existing on these properties, and that that bond would hinder the sale. It was agreed that this bond should be taken up by one of the heirs. That was done by the insolvent. The contract of sale was then concluded, and under that contract a portion of the properties was sold to the insolvent for £1,000, the mother retaining a life usufruct over that property. Upon the death of the mother the purchasers were entitled to obtain transfer, and upon the death of the mother the executors accepted this bond of £300 in part payment of the £1,000. That is clearly proved by the fact that upon their liquidation account it was made out by the insolvent himself, together with his brother, who was co-executor. The necessary entries are made to show that they accepted £300 as a set-off. The £300 was accepted as paid. There was then a settlement between the parties to the extent of £300. The bond was, therefore, accepted by the executors at that time. There can be no further claim by the insolvent against the executors after that agreement, but there seems to have been a mistaken notion, which seems to have started this case, although Mr. Benjamin has properly not raised that point now, that because the bond has not been cancelled in the Registrar of Deeds Office, therefore such payment cannot be regarded as valid. As between the parties the payment was valid, and the bond became the property of the executors of the insolvent's father's estate, to whom it was delivered. It would further appear that not only did the trustees in the insolvent estate regard that transaction as a good one, but they actually adopted the sale. They set about selling the property, and when they failed to do so at a public auction there was a private sale of this property concluded. Then it appeared upon their asking for transfer from the executors that some difficulty existed as to certain conditions which existed as to the consent of the heirs being granted in this case. Now, whatever these difficulties may be the trustees now stand in the position of the insolvent, and they must assert their rights against any parties who hinder them from obtaining transfer, and who have any right to hinder that transfer, and if any parties have a right which must be considered in this case, then the trustees must deal with these parties. But I find it has been proved provisionally, a finding which may perhaps be set aside if the parties go into the principal case, but my finding is that there was a payment actually made and accepted by the executors in the insolvent's father's estate upon the death of the mother, and that the trustees are not entitled to claim provisional sentence upon the bond now. Provisional sentence will be refused, with costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinne. Defendant's Attorneys: Not on the record.]

HOLMES V. KONIG.

Mr. Toms moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £300, with interest from December 5, 1906, and that the property and rents be declared executable. The bond became due by reason of notice being given.

Order granted.

MARTIN V. INPENDER AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Swift moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £60, with interest from October 6, and costs.

Order granted.

GARLICK V. JACOBSON.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment under Rule 32nd on a balance of a first bond for £465 5s., and for provisional sentence for £856 5s. 9d., balance on the second bond, with interest, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable, with costs.

Order granted.

BLUMBERG AND SON V. VAN DER WALT.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £150, with interest and costs. The bond was due by reason of notice under terms of the agreement. Counsel also moved to have the property declared executable.

Order granted.

BAILEY V. DAVIS.

Dr. Greer moved for a degree of civil imprisonment against the defendant on an unsatisfied judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court, Wynberg, for £3, together with £1 10s., the taxed costs.

Order granted.

BAUM V. ASARO AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on an acknowledgment of debt for a balance of £456 19s. 10d. for value received.

Order granted.

JOURDAN V. COHEN.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £700, with interest, less £16 paid on account, and that the rents be attached and the property declared executable. The bond became due by reason of non-payment of interest.

The defendant said he arrived in Cape Town only on the previous day, and that negotiations were pending for a settlement.

The matter was ordered to be mentioned again.

Subsequently Mr. Roux said negotiations had fallen through, and plaintiffs pressed for judgment.

Order granted.

KRITZINGER V. KRITZINGER AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £250 for value received.

Order granted.

MARAIS V. KETS.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £500, with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. and costs.

Order granted.

COSMELLI, MEYER AND ANOTHER V. TAYLOR AND MYLES.

Mr. Payne moved for final adjudication of the defendants' private estates as insolvent.

Order granted.

GARLICK AND OTHERS V. BRAUDE.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan applied for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

PRINCE, VINTCENT AND CO. V. KAHN.

Mr. Toms moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

HERMANN AND CANARD V. AMERICAN HAT CO.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the final adjudication of the defendants' estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

VAN DER BYL AND CO. V. CHRISTIANSEN

Mr. Van der Byl moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

PITKETHLEY V. PIKETHLEY.

Mr. Lewis moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

WIENER AND CO. V. CASSIM.

Mr. Sutton moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

ZEEDERBERG AND DUNCAN V. ZWART AND CO.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the private estate of the partners and the partnership estate of R. J. Swart as insolvent.

Order granted.

FLETCHER'S WHOLESALE V. STEINBERG.

Mr. Payne moved for the final sequestration of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

ESTATE HIGGS V. BUCK.

Mr. Inchbold moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

ALLIE V. AMIN.

Mr. Lewis moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

ESTATE JONES V. WOOLFF.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for judgment for £5,000 on a mortgage bond, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable, and that the rents be attached, with costs. The bond became due by reason of non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

TREGIDGA V. VISSER AND AUSCHUTZ.

Mr. Toms, for the plaintiff, moved for provisional sentence on three mortgage bonds for £650, £2,000, and £125, balance on the third bond, and that the property and rents thereof be declared executable. The bonds became due by reason of non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

PERSHOUSE V. VISSER AND AUSCHUTZ.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond, against the first defendant, for £1,200, with interest, and that the property be declared executable. As against the second defendant, counsel moved for a postponement until March 12.

Application granted.

OHLSSON'S BREWERIES V. ANDREWS AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on two promissory notes for £11 15s. and £12, for judgment against the second defendant, Ginnes, and as against Andrews for a postponement until February 1.

Order granted.

MANS V. VAN DER BEEVER. { 1907.
Jan. 12th.

Mr. Toms moved for judgment on a promissory note for £268.

Order granted.

DOLD AND VAN BREDA V. KATZ.

Mr. Lewis moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £32 8s. 2d., balance of account for professional services, disbursements, etc.

Defendant appeared and offered to pay £2 a month. He said he was engaged to work on commission for a speculator in cattle. He had recently been in Kimberley buying cattle for his principal. He had no property; he had given his goods to Mr. Steytler.

Decree granted, execution to be suspended pending payment of £2 per month, first payment on the 1st February, with leave to plaintiff to apply for an increased order when so advised.

VALUE SUPPLY CO. (IN LIQUIDATION) V. STEWART.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for a balance of £24 13s. 7d. Defendant, he said, had, through a certain individual, offered to pay £1 a month.

Decree granted.

HOOGENDOORN V. GOODALL.

Mr. Upington moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £75, together with £48 14s. 1d. costs.

Defendant said that he was absolutely destitute of means. Witness was an undertaker and had a salary of £8 a month. He was unable to make an offer at present, but he might be able to do so if business improved. Some time ago he prepared schedules in anticipation of surrendering his estate, and brought up the furniture amongst the assets. The furniture belonged to his wife. He was now employed as manager for the United Funeral Furnishing Co. He was willing to give up the furniture provided his wife were willing to waive her claim to it.

The matter was ordered to stand over, with a view to the parties arriving at an arrangement.

SMITH AND CO. V. SASSO AND CO.

Dr. Greer moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted, subject to plaintiff filing notice of set-down.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

BAUMANN V. KAPELUS. { 1907.
Jan. 12th.

Mr. Molteno moved for judgment under rule 319, in default of plea in terms of declaration for £50 5s., less £19, plaintiff tendering delivery of certain four donkeys, and for £3.

Order granted.

BULBRING AND CO. V. JACOBSON

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £101 16s. 1d., goods sold and delivered, with interest and charges, on an unpaid draft.

Order granted.

DELPONTE V. ANDERSON.

Mr. Inchbold moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £48 16s. 9d., balance of rent due, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

Order granted.

WIENER AND CO. V. ROODE.

Mr. Palmer moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £50 0s. 6d., balance of account, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

Order granted.

VAN DER BYL AND CO. V. MILNER BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

Mr. Van der Byl moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £237 7s. 10d., balance of account for goods sold and delivered.

Order granted.

CASTLE WINE AND BRANDY CO. V.
MARSH.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £37 8s., for goods sold and delivered, and £35 8s. 3d., moneys disbursed, with interest a tempore morae, and costs. Counsel said that service had been given at the hotel where defendant formerly resided.

Order granted.

GREEFF V. PIKETHLEY.

Mr. Upington moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £100, rent due for the months August-November, under a lease of certain premises at Salt River, less an allowance of £9 10s.

Defendant said that the debt was not owing by himself but by another man, who had gone into insolvency. He was not a party to the lease. Witness signed the lease, but the other man did not sign it.

Mr. Upington said that the "other man," who was defendant's brother, had had his estate sequestrated at the instance of the present defendant.

Judgment was given for plaintiff, His Lordship informing defendant that, if so advised, he could move the Court to have the case reopened.

TANCRED V. FARMER.

Mr. Russell moved for judgment under Rule 329d for an order for transfer of certain property from defendant to plaintiff.

Order granted.

STANDARD BANK V. VAILE.

Mr. Palmer moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £3,662 18s., with interest, amount of overdraft and costs.

Order granted.

FAIRBRIDGE, ARDERNE AND LAWTON
V. BLUMBERG.

Mr. Close moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £95 18s. 3d. for professional services rendered and disbursements made in the case of Du Plessis v. Blumberg (14 C.T.R., 138), as per taxed bill of costs, and £19 10s. 11d., being costs between attorney and client in the aforementioned case, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

PATERSON AND CO. V. GERSTNER.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment under Rule 329d, for £49 1s. 3d., goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs. The defendant had been summoned as "R. Gerstner," but counsel read a letter from Heinrich Gerstner admitting liability, and applied for an amendment of the summons.

Summons amended and order granted.

PATERSON AND CO. V. GERSTNER.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £26 16s. 1d., goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

ESTATE BURROWES V. HERMAN.

Mr. Howes moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £40, rent of certain house.

Order granted.

SOLOMON V. DURING.

Mr. Lewis moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £40, less £3 paid on account, for rent.
Order granted.

WARD V. WARD.

This was an application to have the respondent declared of unsound mind, and for the appointment of a curator to his person and property.

Mr. Upington was for the plaintiff and Mr. Van der Byl was for the curator ad litem.

William John Dodds, medical superintendent of the Valkenberg Asylum, stated that in that capacity he received into his charge Arthur John Ward. He was admitted on the 20th November, 1906, by an order of the Supreme Court. Mr. Ward was of unsound mind; he was suffering from delusions of various kind, but since his detention he had improved. The form of insanity from which he suffered was a serious one, and while there might be intermissions, there might also be recurrences.

Mr. Van der Byl felt he could not oppose the application, having seen the patient.

Application granted. Mr. William Arthur Currey appointed as curator bonis, with power to sell the movable property for the maintenance of the wife and children, costs of the application to come out of the estate.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

REHABILITATIONS. { 1907.
{ Jan. 14th.

Mr. Toms moved for the rehabilitation of O. E. Puttergill.
Granted.

Mr. Sutton moved for the rehabilitation of Melt Marthinus Johannes van Schoor.

Granted.

Mr. Lewis moved for the discharge from insolvency of Joseph William Taylor.

Granted.

Mr. Greer moved for the rehabilitation of Harris Feldman.

Granted.

Ex parte CHURCHILL AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Howes moved for a certain rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.
Rule absolute.

Ex parte CORNELISSEN.

Mr. Swift moved for a certain rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.
Rule absolute.

Ex parte MASSYN.

Mr. Van der Byl moved for a certain rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.
Rule absolute.

Ex parte FERREIRA.

Mr. De Waal moved for a certain rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.
Rule absolute.

Ex parte GREENAN.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for a certain rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.
Rule absolute.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

PINTO V. PINTO. { 1907.
{ Jan. 14th.

This was the return day of a rule nisi granted on the application of the husband, calling upon his wife to show cause why she should not restore conjugal rights.

Mr. Watermeyer was for applicant; Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for respondent.

Mr. Watermeyer said that he had now wished to apply for leave to withdraw from the action.

Mr. Jones said that his client now appeared to show cause why she should not return to the applicant. She had come from Johannesburg, where she was in service, for the purpose of showing cause, and she had necessarily to appear by counsel, and she asked for costs against plaintiff, including her expenses as a necessary witness.

[Maasdorp, J.: I have read the affidavit. It is to the effect that he is living in adultery.]

Mr. Jones said that that was so.

The application was struck off, and plaintiff ordered to pay costs, and respondent declared a necessary witness and entitled to her expenses.

Ex parte JOUBERT.

HEYDENRYCH V. BEDDOES.

Mr. Van der Byl said that the subject matter in both these cases was the same. He had to apply in the latter matter for a postponement until the 1st February, in terms of consent paper. In the former matter a temporary interdict had been granted restraining the manager of the Refreshment Department, C.G.R., from paying over certain moneys. Heydenrych now applied for its discharge.

Both matters were ordered to stand over until February 1, and the interdict was extended meanwhile to that date.

ESTATE BURROWES V. HERMAN.

Mr. Howes moved for a certain rule nisi interdicting certain property to be made absolute, with costs.

Final order granted, with costs.

PLATT V. BROWN.

Mr. Roux moved for a certain rule nisi authorising the cancellation of certain bond to be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

Ex parte ESTATE GIBSON.

Mr. Gutsche moved for a certain rule nisi authorising the transfer of certain property and certain deductions from a general plan to be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

LIQUIDATOR COOPER AND CO. V. COOPER.

Mr. Pyemont moved to make absolute a certain rule nisi restraining respondent from interfering with or retaining possession of premises 20 and 22, Castle-street, Cape Town, and the goods therein, and calling upon him to show cause why he should not hand over the said goods and premises to applicant.

Rule absolute.

Ex parte GOLDSMITH.

Mr. Alexander was for applicant; Dr. Greer was for respondent.

Dr. Greer applied for a postponement to enable respondent to file answering affidavits.

Mr. Alexander opposed the application. He said that the matter was urgent, as certain criminal proceedings were pending. Applicant sought an order for the restoration of a certain horse, wagon, and harness, which he said had been wrongfully removed from his possession, and a rule nisi had been granted by the Court.

Dr. Greer said that there was a great conflict on the affidavits.

The matter was ordered to stand over till February 1st.

CASTLE WINE AND BRANDY CO V.
MARSH.

Dr. Greer moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

Ex parte MAREE.

Mr. Roux moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute authorising petitioner to sue her husband in forma pauperis for restitution of conjugal rights. Counsel said that publication of the rule had been given in the "Volkstem" in English. The "Volkstem" was a bi-lingual paper, and it was a point whether the rule should have been published in both English and Dutch.

Rule absolute. Mr. Roux to be counsel and Messrs. Van der Byl and De Villiers attorneys to the petitioner.

Leave was also granted to petitioner to sue her husband by edictal citation, personal service, failing which one publication in the "Volkstem" and the "Government Gazette," citation to be returnable on February 21, with leave to serve interdict with citation, and notice that application would be made on the return day to have the trial removed to the Circuit Court at Aliwal North.

Maasdorp, J., said that if publication were ordered in a Dutch newspaper it was expected that the rule would be published in Dutch.

Ex parte GROBBELAAR.

Mr. Howes moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute authorising petitioner to sue in forma pauperis.

Rule absolute. Mr. Howes to be counsel, and Messrs. Tredgold, McIntyre and Bisset attorneys to the petitioner.

Ex parte GROENWALD.

Mr. Louwrens moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute authorising petitioner to proceed with a certain appeal in forma pauperis from a decision of the R.M. of Bredasdorp.

Mr. Gardiner appeared for respondent to oppose.

Maasdorp, J., said that the matter was not urgent, and it must stand over until the 1st February.

Ex parte OUDTSHOORN MUNICIPALITY.

Mr. Louwrens moved for leave to petitioners to sue respondent, Booy Mooichang, by edictal citation, to recover certain arrear rates (£10 10s. 3d.) and to attach ad fundandam jurisdictionem certain funds in the hands of the Master. Defendant's whereabouts was at present unknown.

Leave to sue granted and funds attached, citation to be returnable on the 28th February, personal service, failing which one publication in the "Oudts hoorn Courant."

Ex parte LOWRY BROS.

Mr. Louwrens moved for leave to petitioners, who carry on business at Umtata, to sue one George Samuel White, by edictal citation, upon a mortgage bond for £225, and to attach a certain erf ad fundandam jurisdictionem. In 1899 respondent left Umtata in order to join Colonel Baden-Powell's regiment for service in the late war, and he had not since been heard of by the petitioners.

Ordered to stand over for further information as to the respondent's movements.

Ex parte LOURENS.

Mr. Toms moved for an order authorising the transfer of certain property in the district of Swellendam.

Maasdorp, J., said that the matter need not have come before the Court. The application had better be made to the Registrar of Deeds. A report must be obtained by petitioner from the Registrar in the ordinary way.

JOOSTE V. VAN HEERDEN.

This was an application calling upon the respondent to show cause why he should not furnish further security for costs in an action which he has instituted against applicant. Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for applicant; Mr. Close was for respondent.

Sir H. Juta said that respondent resided beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, and he had offered security amounting to £100, but this, the applicant said, was insufficient.

Maasdorp, J., asked whether the matter was urgent?

Sir H. Juta said that he was not in a position to state, inasmuch as he did not know for what date the case had been set down.

Mr. Close said that he was not aware that the application was urgent.

Maasdorp, J.: The application will stand over until the 1st February. The parties may, in the meantime, consider whether a matter of £100 or £200 will make any difference in regard to security.

In re THE COLONIAL BUILDING CORPORATION, LTD. { 1907.
(IN LIQUIDATION). { Jan. 14th.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan presented the second and final report of the official liquidator, and applied for the usual order. Counsel said that the liquidator was in a position to make a further refund of 9d. per share on the fully-paid-up shares, making a total of 14s. per share.

Usual order granted.

In re THE ROYAL HOTEL CO. LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Roux presented the third and final report of the official liquidators, and applied for the usual order.

Usual order granted.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE HAARHOFF.

Mr. Sutton moved, on behalf of the trustee in the insolvent estate, for an extension of time within which to file the liquidation account.

Extension of time granted for three months.

Ex parte HELFRICH.

Mr. Toms moved for an order releasing certain property at Newlands and in the division of Swellendam from mortgage bond. The petitioner desired to have all the specially hypothecated properties released, and the bond to operate as a general kinderbewys.

Order in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE FUTTER AND SONS.

Mr. Gutsche moved, on the petition of the sole trustee, for an order authorising the transfer of certain property at Butterworth belonging to the estate. Petitioner was a large creditor, and he had bought the property at public auction, the total purchase price being £3,399 and the Municipal valuation, £3,700. An overwhelming majority of the creditors consented.

Order granted as prayed.

BYNS V. ERASMUS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to sue the respondent, Louis H. A. Erasmus, of the Orange River Colony, by edictal citation, in an action proposed to be instituted by petitioner in respect of the ownership of a certain erf to which Byns claimed a right by prescription. Leave was also sought to attach the erf ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Respondent was the registered holder of the land.

Maasdorp, J., said that petitioner should be very careful to see that all the ingredients of prescription were present in this case.

Leave to sue granted, citation to be returnable on the 14th February, personal service to be effected, with leave to serve intendit at the same time, and the erf to be attached.

Ex parte OLIVER.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent the petitioner's husband, R. J. Oliver, in lunacy proceedings.

Order granted, Advocate Lewis to be curator ad litem, and summons to be returnable on the 1st February.

Ex parte SCHOLTZ.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent petitioner's minor children in the proposed partition of certain property in the division of Aberdeen.

Maasdorp, J., said that a partition would be allowed, but the Court could not consent to the appointment of petitioner's mother as curator ad litem. There must be some independent person appointed as curator, subject to the approval of the Master.

At a later stage Mr. Jones applied for the appointment of Charles Wm. Logie, auctioneer and general agent, of Aberdeen, as curator ad litem.

Order granted appointing Mr. Logie as curator.

FLEMING V. CORBETT.

Mr. Roux moved for leave to petitioner to sue respondent, Thomas C. E. Corbett, by edictal citation, upon a mortgage bond for £225, and to attach the hypothecated property at Sterkstroom ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Corbett was now believed to be in Johannesburg.

Leave to sue by edict granted, and property attached, citation to be returnable on the 21st February, personal service, failing which one publication in the "Star" (Johannesburg) and the "Government Gazette."

FLEMING V. BOTHA.

Mr. Roux moved for leave to petitioner to sue one Gert Johannes Botha by edictal citation on a mortgage bond for £100 and to attach certain hypothecated property at Indwe ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Respondent was now believed to be in Johannesburg.

Leave to sue by edict granted, and property attached, citation to be returnable on the 21st February, personal service, failing which one publication in the "Star" (Johannesburg) and the "Government Gazette."

Ex parte WALKER AND OTHERS.

Mr. Palmer moved for an order authorising the surrender of a certain insurance policy for £1,000 upon the life of the petitioner. Petitioner was married under an ante-nuptial contract, under which he settled the policy in favour of his wife, and in case she predeceased the policy was to revert to the petitioner. At her death petitioner ceded the policy to his children, but he was now unable to continue paying the premiums, and the children were prepared to consent to the surrender of the policy upon payment of their shares of the surrender value.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte MAARTENS.

Mr. Sutton moved for an order authorising the partition of certain erven at Maclear between petitioner and his minor brother, and appointing petitioner's mother as curator ad litem to the said minor. The Master in his report said that no necessity existed for the appointment of a curator.

Authority was given to the mother as executrix and natural guardian to effect partition and transfer, in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte DREYER.

Dr. Rainsford moved, on behalf of the petitioner, for an order confirming the sale of certain farm properties in the estate of her late husband, in which minors are interested. The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted as prayed, and leave given to the applicant to invest the shares of the minors on first mortgage, subject to the approval of the Master.

Ex parte PHILLIPS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for an order authorising payment of certain money to petitioner out of the estate of her late father. Petitioner and her husband were both in poor health, and she desired, in addition to the present payment of £3 a month from the income, a sum of £12 a month, to be paid to her for a period of 12 months out of the capital. Petitioner's share under the will was burdened with a fidei commissum.

sum in favour of her children. The executors, while saying that they did not object to paying out a sum not exceeding £12 a month, pointed out that the difficulty was where the money was to come from. Mr. De Villiers said he supposed the executors would have to mortgage the property.

Maasdorp, J., said that, inasmuch as a definite consent had not been obtained from the executors, he could not order them to pay out the money. He would, however, grant authority to them to pay out the money.

Mr. De Villiers said that the executors mentioned a sum not exceeding £12 a month. He took it that that was in addition to the present payment of £3 from the income.

Maasdorp, J., said that that must be arranged between the petitioner and the executors.

Postea (January 15th).

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers again mentioned this matter, which was an application for payment of certain funds from the estate of petitioner's father to enable her to tide over temporary difficulties. When the matter came before the Court on Monday, a point arose as to whether the executors were prepared to consent to the payment of £12 a month only to the petitioner, or whether they were prepared to consent to the payment of £12 a month from the capital, in addition to the amount of £3 which she has hitherto been receiving by way of her share of the income from her father's estate. Counsel read a letter from one of the executors consenting to the payment of £12 a month from the capital for a period of twelve months—in addition to the sum which has hitherto been paid.

Leave granted to the executors to pay to petitioner a sum of £12 a month from the capital, for a period of twelve months.

Mr. De Villiers asked the Court whether leave would be granted to the executors to mortgage the property so as to provide for this amount, thus avoiding the necessity of a possible further application.

Maasdorp, J.: The executors are not at present before the Court, and you have no power from them to make such an application. You have absolutely no right to make such an application on behalf of the executors.

Mr. De Villiers applied for authority to pay the costs of the application out of the petitioner's share of the estate.

Authority was granted accordingly.

In re THE EAST LONDON DAILY NEWS PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO. LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Dr. Greer moved for confirmation of the first report of the official liquida-tors, and for sanction to the liquidators to exercise the necessary powers under section 149 of the Companies Act, and especially to enable them to accept the offer of Messrs. Davis and Son of £3,600 for certain of the assets and the appointment of Messrs. Sauer and Standen as legal advisers under section 151.

Sanction was granted in terms of paragraphs 8 and 9 of the report.

Ex parte ESTATE SCHEEPERS. { 1907.
Jan. 14th.

Mr. Benjamin moved on behalf of the executor dative for leave to sell certain landed property in the division of Oudtshoorn, in which a minor is interested.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte JOHNSTONE.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband, John Johnstone, in forma pauperis for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Petitioner appeared in person, and stated that she was without means with which to institute an action.

Mr. De Villiers said that he was prepared to certify probabilis causa.

Rule nisi granted, returnable on the 1st February.

In re "THE OWL" LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Benjamin presented the first and final report of the liquidator and applied for the usual order.

Usual order granted.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE COOSNEK

Mr. Pyemont moved for an order authorising the transfer of a portion of the property to one of the co-trustees in the insolvency. The Registrar of Deeds refused to register the transfer without an order of Court.

Authority granted as prayed.

Ex parte SNYMAN AND ANOTHER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for an order authorising the registration of a certain ante-nuptial contract excluding community of property. The petitioners were married in Holland a few months ago, and they desired to have the gross of the contract registered in this colony.

Order granted as prayed.

In re CAPE CANNING CO., LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Benjamin presented a further report of the official liquidators, and applied for the usual order.

Usual order granted.

In re CLARKE AND CO., LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. W. Porter Buchanan) moved for confirmation of certain recommendations in the first report of the official liquidators. He said that the report had lain for inspection and no objection had been raised. Certain of the assets had been realised in this colony and in Natal. There would be nothing for distribution to the concurrent creditors. There was a sum of £9,800 available for distribution to the debenture holders and sanction was sought to distribute this amount accordingly. The authority of the Court was also asked to the payment of a sum of £220 9s. 3d., by way of remuneration to the liquidators in this colony.

The Court authorised the payment of £9,800 to debenture-holders as dividends and remuneration to the liquidators in accordance with the scale in insolvencies, as prayed by the liquidators.

Ex parte LESTER. { 1907.
{ Jan. 14th.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for fresh directions as to the return day of citation in divorce proceedings instituted by petitioner against her husband. Counsel stated that publication had been made as ordered in a New Zealand newspaper, but it was impossible within the time fixed for the return of citation to make due publication in the "Government Gazette." He therefore asked the Court to sanction short publication in the "Gazette," and cited Boisson v. Boisson (15 C.T. Reps., 33).

[Maasdorp, J.: I think the better course would be this, if respondent appears on the 1st February, you will be prepared to go on, but in case of default, another day may be fixed, but the full month must be allowed.]

Mr. Watermeyer: Would your lordship then extend the return day to the 16th February?

Maasdorp, J.: Upon default of appearance, the order will take that form, a further publication to be made of one month. In the meantime you may publish in the "Gazette." Leave will be granted, in default of appearance, to publish in the "Gazette," and the return day extended to the 16th February.

Ex parte THE INDWE MUTUAL BUILDING SOCIETY.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute, calling upon one Gert Johannes Botha to show cause why petitioners should not be authorised to sell certain property. Counsel said that respondent's whereabouts had not been discovered, and publication had been made in the "Frontier Times," but, owing to the holidays, it was impossible to publish before the 11th inst., so that the requisite 48 hours' notice had not been given.

[Maasdorp, J.: Well, then, the publication is insufficient.]

Mr. Watermeyer asked his lordship to extend the return day of the rule nisi and to allow the publication to stand.

Maasdorp, J.: The publication is futile; it is so much waste paper. You have not carried out the order, and to carry it out, there must be fresh publication. The return day will be extended to the 14th February, publication to be effected as ordered.

Ex parte NGELE.

Native custom — Succession to immovable property.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for an order for the registration of certain property in the district of Glen Gray in the name of the petitioner. Petitioner said that his father, Ngele Pato, was a native belonging to the Tembu tribe, and by birth a chief, and had seven wives, all of whom he married according to native law and custom. The said Ngele Pato had one son named Mile by Moyini, the great wife of the house. According to native law and custom the said Mile, who died while still a minor in or about the year 1885, was the sole heir of his father. Petitioner was the only son of the said Ngele Pato by Mohenti, the little wife of the house, and petitioner, according to native law and custom, was the guardian of the said late Mile, and in his capacity as such guardian he succeeded to all the property belonging to the estate of the said late Ngele Pato at the time of his (petitioner's) ward's decease. At the time of the death of Ngele Pato he was the owner of a certain piece of land measuring 1,407 morgen, situate in the division of Queen's Town, on the Bengu Stream and Indwe River, in the Tambokie Location. Petitioner prayed for a rule nisi to issue, calling upon all persons having, or pretending to have, any right or title to the aforesaid ground, to show cause why the Registrar of Deeds should not, in terms of the Titles Registration and Derelict Lands Act, be ordered to enregister the said ground as the property of petitioner. Counsel said that communications had been had with the Resident Magistrate of Lady Frere, who said that there was no native law or custom dealing with immovable property, and that native law and custom dealt only with movables. The opinion of Colonel Stanford, of the Native Affairs Department, had also been taken, and he said that no such distinction was made by native law and custom as was alluded to by the Magistrate.

Maasdorp, J., asked counsel whether the property was situate within the Colony proper or in the Transkeian Territories?

Mr. Buchanan said that the property was in the Colony.

Maasdorp, J., said that a question arose, then, as to whether the matter would be dealt with in terms of the Succession Act or by native law and custom. The matter would stand over for further information. The Court could not make an order upon Colonel Stanford, as was suggested, for a further report on the matter, inasmuch as he was not before the Court, but if a further report could be obtained from Colonel Stanford, well and good.

In re THE EQUITABLE FIRE ASSURANCE AND TRUST CO. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for confirmation of the first and final report of the liquidators. He applied for an order (a) confirming the report, (b) authorising the liquidators to pay a dividend of 14s. 3d., and to appropriate the balance of £153 4s. 7d., as remuneration, etc., in accordance with resolution, (c) authorising the destruction of the books, (d) and finally dissolving the company.

Maasdorp, J.: You cannot apply for a dissolution until the dividends have been paid. You must move again for a dissolution when everything has been settled. The Court will now make an order in terms of prayer (a) and (b).

In re THE RECREATION SYNDICATE LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Gutsche moved for confirmation of the official liquidator's second and final report. Counsel said that there was a balance of £280 12s. 6d., after payment of costs, for distribution amongst the creditors. He asked for authority to distribute the balance pro rata among the creditors, to pay £37 14s. 8d., wages to a servant (Parker), and remuneration to the liquidators on the basis of the rate allowed in insolvencies.

Maasdorp, J., said that unless counsel could give him some authority for dissolving the company at the present stage he should not order a dissolution.

Mr. Gutsche: I am not asking for a dissolution of the company.

Maasdorp, J.: You don't, but the liquidators do. An order will be granted authorising the distribution of the assets, payment of Parker's wages, and remuneration to the official liquidators on insolvency scale. The matter of destruction of the company's books and dissolution must stand over.

In re THE ORANGE RIVER IRRIGATION, LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Sutton moved for confirmation of the official liquidator's report.

Mr. Pyemont appeared for the Eastern Province Guardian, Loan, and Investment Co. (the second mortgagees), and said that he desired to bring certain facts to the notice of the Court. The liquidation was ordered on the 20th October, 1904, and the first report was not presented until the month of December, 1906. In the meantime, no steps were taken to recover the amounts due by contributories, many of whom lived in the Colony, and should have paid long ago. He did not oppose the confirmation of the report, but wished to call the Court's attention to the delay that had occurred and the non-taking of steps in fixing the list of contributories.

Mr. Sutton called the attention of the Court to certain paragraphs in the report explaining the delay in presenting the report. Counsel applied for the sanction of the Court to the sale of the landed property, and for the list of contributories to be settled. In reference to the name of Twycross and Co., the liquidator recommended that their case should stand over for further information. Messrs. Twycross said that their shares were fully paid, and, as the share register was in England, it was impossible at present to enter into that matter.

Leave granted to sell the landed property either by public auction or privately, and list of contributories settled in form attached, with the exception of the name of Twycross and Co., whose matter stands over.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

FLEMING V. CORBETT. § 1907.
FLEMING V. BOTHA. { Jan. 15th.

Mr. Roux moved for an extension of the return day of citation in these matters, in order to allow for due publication in the "Gazette."

The return day was extended until the 28th February.

In re DUSSEAU AND CO. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Douglas Buchanan again mentioned this matter, which was an application for confirmation of the final report of liquidators. Counsel said that copies of the "Cape Times" and "Government Gazette" containing the rule had now been filed. He applied for confirmation of the report and authority to the liquidator to distribute the assets in accordance with the account. The liquidator also asked for an order declaring the company dissolved and directing the books to be destroyed, or otherwise dealt with. Counsel said that on Monday his lordship said that no order would be made with regard to the dissolving of companies when their affairs had not been completely wound up. Apparently the custom had been to ask for all these directions together, and there was some doubt as to what the form of procedure ought to be hereafter. No definite rules, he was informed, had been framed on the subject.

[Maasdorp, J.: The proper course, it seems to me, is to distribute the assets and dispose of everything in your hands, and then ask for dissolution of the company.]

Mr. Buchanan: There will be no need, I take it, for the accounts to lie for inspection again.

Maasdorp, J.: No; you may ask for a dissolution when the assets have been distributed in accordance with the account. The Court will confirm the report and authorise the distribution of the assets, in accordance with the account. Whatever may have been the rule, there will be no difficulty in coming to the Court afterwards to apply for a dissolution of the company. If hereafter it is proved that the rule has been different from what I have laid down, then what I have done will not alter the practice, but until I am quite clear on the practice I shall make the same order as yesterday. It will not interfere with the practice.

Ex parte KAFFRARIAN STEAM MILL CO., LTD.

Mr. Gardiner moved on the petition of the chairman of the Kaffrarian Steam Mill Co., Ltd., carrying on business at King William's Town and Molteno, for an order directing the Registrar of Deeds to register a certain supplementary deed to enable the company to continue business.

Maasdorp, J., said he had looked into the papers, and there appeared to be a difficulty, and it was this that the powers of the company had lapsed, and the point was whether the resolution could, after that, be passed for a further extension of time.

Mr. Gardiner said that the company was in a difficult position. It was not dead; it had not been dissolved. In a certain sense it was still in existence, because, although it was under the Act of 1862, part 5, of the Act 25, 1892, applied to the company. In 1896 it was resolved that the company should be continued for a further period of ten years—i.e., until the end of June, 1906. A meeting of the company was held in March last, while the company's period was still running, at which a resolution was passed to all intents and purposes identical with the one subsequently passed in November, so that there was at any rate a signification of the company's wish to continue. The notice calling the first meeting was, however, informal, inasmuch as it did not set forth sufficiently the objects of the meeting. Counsel submitted that no harm would be done if a rule nisi issued calling upon all concerned, whether shareholders or creditors of the company, to show cause why the company should not continue, bearing in mind that while the company was in existence in March a resolution was passed to continue. Counsel added that the position of the company was most anomalous, and that he had been unable to find any authority for this application.

Maasdorp, J., said that he would take time to look into the matter. He pointed out that, in the meantime, if the company were in such a position that it was in the interests of all that it should carry on, it might be advisable to consider whether to approach the Court in some other form. In any case, the matter could not be disposed of before the February term.

Postea (February 4th).

Maasdorp, J.: It appears that the company in question was registered as a limited liability company under the Act 23, 1861, on July 1, 1886. Power was reserved to the company to extend the duration of the company for 10 years after the expiration of the first 13 years to which the duration of the company was limited by the deed of settlement. In 1896 at a meeting of the period of duration was duly extended to 1906. Again, in March, 1906, a meeting was called, and it was unanimously resolved to extend the company for an unlimited period. It afterwards transpired that there had been some irregularity in the calling of this meeting in that 14 days' notice had not been given, as required by the 65th article of the deed of settlement. Only 12 days' notice having been given, the result was that the meeting was illegal, and these proceedings were invalid. The directors then set about to rectify this mistake by calling a special general meeting, and giving the necessary notice, but when that meeting was held it was found that the 10 years to which the life of the company had been extended had already expired. Consequently, another difficulty arose. Application was made by the shareholders to register the resolution of this subsequent meeting, which amounted really to a confirmation of the resolution of the meeting in March, 1906, but in face of these irregularities the Registrar of Deeds did not feel himself competent to register this resolution as a supplementary deed. The question now arises whether the Court can grant relief to the parties by authorising the Registrar of Deeds to register this supplementary deed. It seems to me that under the Act 25, of 1861, the court has such a general supervision of companies that in certain matters where the Act does not prohibit it in terms, or indirectly, the court might grant relief. In this trust deed, in Article 65, powers are given to the shareholders at a meeting duly convened to alter and amend the deed of settlement in any respect. It was at such a meeting that the first resolution was passed extending the life of the company, and it was at that meeting that the irregularity took place. Now, upon further information that has been afforded to the court, it appears that up to date everything has been done unanimously by the shareholders that were present at any one of these meetings, and there has been no dissentient voice heard from any of the shareholders. I feel, therefore, that the court may assist this company, in allowing them, notwithstanding the irregularity in this particular case, to have their trust deed registered. The Court will have mainly to regard the interests of both shareholders and creditors, and it is quite clear it would certainly not be to the detriment of the creditors that this company, which appears to be a sound company, should continue to carry on its business. The shareholders seem to me to be very fully protected, and it seems to me that if at any time within a reasonable period any shareholder should still wish to raise objections to what has been done, nothing that the Court now does will prevent him from taking advantage of any rights he may possess. The Court will now authorise the Registrar of Deeds to register the resolution passed at the meeting as a supplementary deed of settlement.

SIMPSON AND MARWICK V. { 1907.
SWINTON. { Jan. 15th.

This was an application of the appointment of a commission de bene esse to examine plaintiffs and their witnesses in Edinburgh, Scotland.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones (for applicants) said he understood that a consent paper had been filed by the respondent, and all that remained now was to select a name.

Order granted appointing Mr. Robert Scott Brown as Commissioner, failing Mr. Scott Brown, Mr. Kenneth Sanderson to act as commissioner.

BEATTIE V. BEATTIE.

This was an application upon notice to respondent to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay £75 to enable applicant to institute proceedings against him for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, and £15 per mensem as maintenance of the child, and costs.

Dr. Greer was for applicant; Mr. Close was for respondent.

Mr. Close said that he should have to apply for a postponement to enable his client to file an answering affidavit.

Maasdorp, J., said that he would hear the application before considering the question of postponement.

Dr. Greer submitted that, although there was considerable conflict of testimony on the affidavits, applicant had clearly made out a case for relief. Applicant alleged that owing to her husband's violence she had had to hastily quit the house and go to a maternity home. Counsel traversed the allegation made by respondent that Mrs. Beattie had been addicted to drink, and that she was non compos mentis.

Maasdorp, J.: I do not think it is necessary to hear Mr. Close in this case. The applicant alleges that she has good grounds for an action for judicial separation, and the ground she has given in her petition is cruelty practised upon her by her husband. If she has such an action she can in the ordinary course proceed with it; there is nothing to prevent her from instituting her action. But she applies to the Court now for assistance to obtain from her husband pecuniary help to bring her action. In that case it is necessary for her to establish some prima facie case upon which the Court might ascertain whether she has reasonable ground for such an action. She has made her affidavit, setving forth those acts of cruelty, which consist of extreme violence. There is not a single member of the family or any other person who has corroborated her in her statements. On the other hand, every member of the family has testified to the kindly manner in which the plaintiff has treated his wife. The Court does not now decide whether the plaintiff's allegations are true, or whether the defendant's allegations are true. The Court only now has to ascertain whether, under the circumstances, there is any probability of the defendant being able to establish her case. Unless she puts something more before the Court than she has done, unless she can produce corroborative evidence, it will be impossible for her to withstand the overwhelming evidence given against her. I do not think it likely, though, as I say, I do not decide the point, that all the members of the family should have seen the mother treated in the cruel manner she alleges without coming forward to her assistance now. It is said that it is difficult to explain why she should have made these allegations. The only reason that appears on the affidavits is this; this lady is, apparently, destitute of self-control, and there are some reasons for holding that at times she is not responsible for her actions. That is alleged, and it is not found now that it is true, but for the purposes of this application it is accepted as the explanation in so far as to hold that she is not entitled to this unusual assistance of Court to bring her action. She can bring her action in the ordinary way when she is in a position to do so. The application is refused.

BURCHELL V. BURCHELL AND OTHERS.

This was an application upon notice to the respondents to show cause why applicant should not be allowed to intervene as defendant in an action brought by the first-named respondent (J. E. L. Burchell), against the estate of the late J. M. W. C. Burchell, to have a certain will set aside as null and void, and why applicant should not be allowed funds from the estate for the purpose of defending the action.

It appeared that the executor had obtained an order requiring the company administering the estate to pay over £350 to enable him to defend the suit (16 C.T.R., 1009), but that he had since withdrawn from the action. The present applicant, who benefits under the will, however, desired to defend the will, but was unable to provide the necessary funds, and she asked for funds from the estate.

Mr. Upington was for applicant; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. W. Porter Buchanan), appeared for J. E. L. Burchell (plaintiff in the suit); there was no appearance for Mrs. Watson and Ignatius T. P. Burchell, executrix and executor respectively of the estate.

Mr. Upington said that the only explanation as to the conduct of the executor in withdrawing from the suit was that the matter was injuring his wife's health. He submitted that that was not a sufficient reason for not doing justice to the estate.

Mr. Schreiner said that the executor had also stated that his wife would give evidence in favour of the plaintiff's case, and under all the circumstances he did not feel justified in opposing the claim.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J.: An action was instituted by the plaintiff in this case against the executors of his father's estate to have a certain will set aside as null and void. One of the executors entered an appearance to defend the action, and he desired to utilise the funds belonging to the estate for the purpose of costs. It appears that the management of the estate was at the time in the hands of a company at Port Elizabeth, and, upon the co-executrix refusing to give her consent to that company supplying the executor with funds, he found it necessary to come to the Court to compel the company, notwithstanding the opposition of the co-executrix, to supply him with such funds. The Court then decided that the executors in the estate, in their discretion, had a right to avail themselves of the funds of the estate for the purpose of litigation, if they were advised to do so, and that, notwithstanding the opposition of the executrix, the executor was entitled to obtain such funds and use them for the purpose of costs. The Court then ordered that the company should be authorised to let him have a sum of £350 for the purpose of the suit. After obtaining that order, the executor has reconsidered his position, and although the attitude which he now takes up is not so clear that I am in a position exactly to say what it is, he certainly is not prepared to make any active opposition to the claim of the plaintiff. The present applicant, who is interested as heir or legatee under the will of the plaintiff's father, now comes forward and alleges that she wishes to undertake the defence of the action, in default of the executor doing so. Now, there would be no difficulty in allowing her to intervene to defend the suit, but she applies for assistance in funds from the executors out of the property of the estate. Now, there is absolutely no precedent for such an application. It would be, indeed, a great deal for the Court to take upon itself to order an executor, who thinks it inadvisable to spend moneys upon an action, to provide funds for somebody else who wishes to incur the costs of such a suit. Not only is there no precedent, but, upon the information that the Court has been supplied with, it would seem that the executor, who at one time believed that he had a good ground of defence, because of the view he took of the manner in which the will had been executed, upon reconsidering the matter, has come to the conclusion that he is unable to assert distinctly what he formerly believed was the case. He seems to have taken up the position formerly that the will was in all respects properly executed, and he now is unable to state positively that one circumstance did exist which was necessary for the validity of the will, and that is, the authentication of the signature of the testator in every respect. He seems, upon reconsideration, to feel that he is unable to establish that view. Consequently, as the affidavits now stand, there is not even a strong case made out by the applicant that the executor is failing in his duty in undertaking the defence of an action, which he ought, under all the circumstances, to take up. The application will be refused.

Mr. Schreiner (in answer to the Court) said that he did not press for costs.

Mr. Uppington said he took it that the prayer for intervention would not conclude the matter, and that, possibly, later on the applicant might intervene.

[Maasdorp, J.: The set-down for the 6th February must stand. The case must go as far as it can. Of course, the Court will always be willing to consider any difficulty when it may arise. Leave will be granted to the applicant to intervene.]

Mr. Schreiner: We simply go on to the 6th February in the usual course.

[Maasdorp, J.: Oh, yes, that is taken for granted. The case will stand for the 6th February.]

BOLUS V. FARQUHARSON.

This was an application brought by Herbert Walter Bolus calling upon respondent (Robert Charles Farquharson) to show cause why bar should not be removed in an action instituted by respondent, and why applicant should not be given leave to plead.

The parties, it appeared, had carried on business in partnership at Queen's Town, and a deed of dissolution had been entered into. Disputes had arisen and a claim had been brought by Mr. Farquharson against his late partner. Defendant had failed to plead within the period fixed by the Rules of Court, and had been barred. The case had been set down for February 8.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), was for applicant; Mr. Uppington was for respondent.

Mr. Schreiner said that defendant had a sound defence to the claim, which was absolutely repudiated. There had been some delay in pleading on account of the holidays intervening.

Mr. Uppington said that a due degree of indulgence had been shown by the plaintiff before defendant was barred.

Maasdorp, J., said that leave would be granted to applicant to purge default and to plead, but he must pay costs.

Mr. Schreiner urged that applicant should only be ordered to pay wasted costs, and that costs of the application should be costs in the cause.

Maasdorp, J.: It seems to me that in a case of this kind it is not at all unusual for the applicant to pay costs, when the Court comes to the conclusion that the costs have been incurred through delay on the part of the applicant, which is not sufficiently explained on the affidavits. To my mind the delay in this case is not sufficiently explained. A casual observation that the holidays may have dislocated business a bit is not a sufficient explanation, because the delay continued for a considerable time after the immediate holidays, which do sometimes interfere with business. Not only so, but the delay has continued till now. Even now the applicant is not ready to file his plea. The costs have simply been caused in this case by the delay of the applicant, and, as such delay has not been properly accounted for, the applicant must pay costs. Leave granted to purge default and plead, plea to be filed by Monday next, the 21st inst. Applicant must pay costs of this application and costs of bar.

SUPREME COURT

(IN CHAMBERS.)

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

PHILLIPS AND CO. V. 1907.
MULLER. Jan. 24th.

Commission de bene esse—Variation of written contract.

This was an application on notice calling on respondents, J. F. Phillips and Co., of the Paarl, who are plaintiffs in an action against Carl Louis Richard Muller, for recovery of £5,925, to show cause why leave should not be granted to examine on commission in German West Africa, Captain Von Houwald, of the German forces, and other witnesses.

From the affidavits and pleadings it appeared that R. Muller was sued by Phillips and Co., of Paarl, in an action for the recovery of the prices of certain 52 ox wagons and 600 wheels made for defendant. Plaintiffs contended that the whole contract between the parties was contained in certain two letters, while defendant said that it was a condition of the contract that the wagons should be in accordance with the requirements of the German Government. Defendant admitted that he received the wagons and wheels, but said that they were to a certain extent condemned by officers in the service of the German Government, and claimed about £1,200 in reconvention. Defendant further said that it was a condition of the contract that he should pay plaintiffs when the German Government paid him. Plaintiffs denied these conditions, and said that the articles were to be delivered free on board at Cape Town, and that defendant accepted them. Plaintiffs and defendant had had other large dealings, and no such arrangement as alleged had been made in them. The case was set down for February 19.

Mr. Close for applicant; Mr. McGregor for respondents.

Mr. Close put in an answering affidavit tendering to pay, without prejudice to the defence raised in the plea, the amount of the plaintiffs' claim, less the amount of defendant's counter-claim, together with interest and costs to date.

Counsel submitted that his client was entitled to the order prayed for. There was a bona fide defence that the agreement contained conditions that the goods should be subject to the approval of the German Government, and had to be paid for on defendant receiving payment from the German Government.

Maasdorp, J., inquired whether the agreement as it appeared upon the documents was complete, and whether what defendant alleged would vary the contract.

Mr. Close said that his whole case was that the documents did not contain all the conditions of the contract. If he admitted that the documents contained the contract, then he could not vary it, but he did not admit that the documents set out all the conditions of the agreement. He referred to the case of Hall v. Kearns (10 Juta, 152), and said that in this case also did the manufacturer know for what purpose the articles were required. His client also alleged a specific warranty.

[Maasdorp, J.: Suppose the Government did not accept, then what would happen?]

Mr. Close said that he was not prepared to say, but he would say that his client alleged that payment had to be made when the Government accepted the wagons and wheels and paid for them. The documents said nothing about payment, and he would be entitled to lead evidence to say what the condition as to payment was.

[Maasdorp, J., asked whether if the documents said nothing about the payment it was not understood that it meant cash.]

Mr. Close said that was a rebuttable presumption, and his client would be entitled to lead evidence to rebut. All he had to do now was to make a prima facie case that the evidence sought to be taken on commission was material. He was in the hands of the Court, and because the Court might say that people were being kept out of their money his client offered to pay £4,725 with interest and costs to date.

Mr. McGregor said that the tender made this morning met one of the difficulties of the case. There remained the claim in reconvention. If plaintiffs were correct in their contention then it might be quite unnecessary to have this evidence sought to be taken on commission. If defendant was right then the Court could at the trial postpone the case for the evidence as to the state of the wagons. If applicant now succeeded the whole matter might be hung up, and there was the danger that the Court might afterwards find that the evidence was irrelevant. Why not let defendant first prove his contention and then decide about the commission. The witnesses defendant wished to examine on commission were not necessary to prove the conditions of the contract as alleged by defendant. He referred to the analogy of agency and to what the White Book said about letters of request to have German and Spanish subjects examined in their own country. The issue of letters of request was a most formidable proceeding requiring the intervention of Secretaries of State.

Mr. Close said that there had been repeated commissions to foreign countries, and he was instructed that evidence could be taken before district judges in German South-West Africa.

Maasdorp, J., said that this Court could give authority to examine but could not order the district judges to examine. A case came before the Court yesterday in which a request was made by the German authorities for assistance in a similar manner.

Mr. McGregor cited the case of Schlitzer v. Schlitzer (6 E.D.C., 190). It was clear law that the issue in respect of which the evidence was required was one which the Court had to try.

Maasdorp, J., said it seemed to him that if it were quite clear that the whole of the conditions of the contract were reduced to writing, and that this written contract appeared upon the pleadings, then the Court could not allow evidence to be adduced to vary such contract. But on the face of the pleadings, it was not clear that the documents attached to the declaration did constitute the complete written contract. It was quite possible to find that the letters might be supplemented by verbal agreement as alleged by the defendant. If that were so, the defendant would be entitled to place the verbal conditions before the Court; but even supposing that the contract was as written then the evidence sought to be produced by the defendant would not be at variance. The articles did not appear to be so accurately described that the fact that they had to be approved by the German authorities would be inconsistent with the description in the letter. The affidavits largely disputed the alleged facts, and almost the whole of the affidavits by the respondents contradicted the facts alleged by the applicant. The Court could not now go into the facts, and the only question was whether the evidence as far as the case had gone was relevant. It might be that the Court would decide that the documents set out all the conditions, and that the evidence now sought to be obtained was irrelevant, but that would be a point to be decided at the trial. The defendant was, in the opinion of the Court, entitled to the commission, and the Court would order that upon the payment of the sum of £4,725 4s. 2d., together with interest a tempore morae, and costs to date, leave be granted to have the witnesses in question examined upon commission, by commissioners to be appointed by the Court having competent jurisdiction in German West Africa. The question of costs would stand over.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Moore and Son; Respondent's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ADMISSIONS. { 1907.
Feb. 1st.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved for the admission of Robert Frederic Philipson Philipson Stow as an advocate.

Application granted and oath administered.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., moved for the admission of Abram Johannes Marais as an advocate.

Application granted and oath administered.

Dr. Greer moved for the admission of Benjamin Strobos as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. McGregor moved for the admission of Jacobus Johannes Scholtz as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the admission of Albert Louis Abrahamson as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Sutton moved for the admission of Robert May as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. De Waal moved for the admission of Victor Kotze as a notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

VAN NIEKERK V. LE RICHE. { 1907.
Feb. 1st.

Promissory note payable in foreign money—Rate of exchange—Tender.

The defendant, being sued for the balance of certain promissory notes for different amounts "payable in German money," tendered the amount, less the exchange which was in favour of English money. The previous part payment had been accepted in English money.

Held, that the tender was sufficient.

Mr. Pohl moved for provisional sentence for balance of three promissory notes for £318 10s., £975, and £370 10s., payable in German money at the Standard Bank, Kimberley.

From an affidavit read by Mr. Benjamin (who appeared for the defendant) it appeared that the latter bought from plaintiff certain wagons, oxen, and gear, the purchase price of which was £1,664. The notes said that payment was to be in German money, and defendant had paid £1,605 15s., which he said was the equivalent to £1,664 in English money. The transaction took place on the border of German South-West Africa. Defendant claimed that he was entitled to deduct 3s. 6d. exchange on every £5 for paying in English money. An affiavit was also read to the effect that on the 11th May, 1906, the current rate of exchange was that £4 16s. 6d. in English money was equivalent to £5 in German money.

Mr. Pohl read an answering affidavit by the plaintiff, who said that the arrangement was that he would take twenty marks as the equivalent of an English £1, if defendant paid in cash, but that if defendant gave bills he must pay 20s. in the £.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Strictly speaking, under the bills the defendant must tender the coin in marks.]

Mr. Pohl: And they must tender us marks to the value of £1,664 English money.

[De Villiers, C.J.: At the rate of a mark for every 1s.]

Mr. Pohl: A mark is less than 1s.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the plaintiff was entitled, if he accepted the money as he did, to the equivalent of English money, that equivalent being that 5s. 6d. came off each £5 of English money. The plaintiff could not come now and set up another agreement and he was not, therefore, entitled to provisional sentence.

Mr. Pohl submitted that the plaintiff was entitled to have the rate of exchange added and not subtracted, as the defendant urged.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (February 7th).

De Villiers, C.J., said that the plaintiff sued for the balance due on certain three promissory notes for £318 10s., £975, and £370 10s., payable in German money at the Standard Bank, Kimberley. The defendant would have been justified in tendering such balance in German money, in which case the plaintiff would have had to pay the current rate of exchange which was in favour of English money. The plaintiff, however, was satisfied to receive the balance, as he had received previous payments in English money, but he objected to any deduction of the rate of exchange. If this objection was valid there could have been no object in making the notes payable in German money. The intention of the parties appears to me to have been that if payment were made in English money, exchange should be deducted. Judgment will be given for the plaintiff for interest in terms of the tender, with costs to date of tender, costs subsequent to date of tender to be paid by the plaintiff.

ESTATE VAN RYN V BIFKIN.

Mr. Inehbold moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

In re SEELIGER AND SCHACH.

Mr. Russell moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be superseded. Provisional order discharged.

SMUTS AND KOCK V. DE GOEDE.

Mr. Lewis moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be discharged. Provisional order discharged.

ESTATE MILLS V. BEYER.

Mr. Toms moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

GAWRANSKY V. SPUNT.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for confirmation of a certain writ of arrest. Defendant, who was in custody, admitted the debt.

Judgment granted, and defendant discharged from arrest.

Mr. De Villiers also moved upon notice for the attachment of certain sum of £5 in the hands of the Union-Castle Steamship Company, and a certain sum due to the defendant by the said company as refund of passage ticket by the Goth from Cape Town to London. Defendant was arrested on board, after having bought his ticket and deposited £5, which the company required in case of his exclusion under the Aliens' Expulsion Act.

Order granted attaching such money as may be in the hands of the Union-Castle Company, and due to the defendant.

HORNE V. RUTHEL.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence for £750 on a mortgage bond, with interest from 1st January, 1906: counsel also applied for the property hypothecated and rent accruing to be declared executable.

Order granted.

CRAWFORD V. BARRON.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £300, with interest from the 1st January, 1906, and costs.

Order granted.

WYLLIE AND SONS V. VAN DER LINDEN.

Mr. Russell moved for provisional sentence on an acknowledgment of debt for £54 4s., with interest, acknowledgment due by reason of non-payment of first instalment.

Order granted.

STANDARD BANK V. ESTATE VAN RYN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the final adjudication of the defendant estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

JOSEPH AND CO. V. ROUX.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on a judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court, Calitzdorp, for £80 on a bond and £18 due on a promissory note, less £21 odd recovered by execution. Counsel also applied for the landed property described in the summons to be declared executable to the judgment.

Order granted.

REID AND CO. V. MCGREGOR.

Mr. Lewis moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

GRACIE V. MOUTON.

Mr. Louwrens moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £300, with interest from July 1, 1906, bond due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ONRUST RIVER CO. V. ALLEGENSKY.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on certain three conditions of sale for £90, with interest from January 9, 1904, and costs, the plaintiff company undertaking to convey the lots on payment of the money.

Order granted.

O'CALLAGHAN V. JACOBS.

Mr. Inchbold moved for provisional sentence on a judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court, Wynberg, for £20 17s. 6d., and £2 17s. 10d., taxed costs, and for certain property, registered in the name of defendant in Kimberley to be declared executable.

Provisional sentence granted, subject to a properly certified copy of the Magistrate's judgment being filed with the Registrar.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

FRASER AND SONS, LTD., v. { 1907.
COHEN. } Feb. 1st.

Mr. Swift moved, under Rule 329d, for an order requiring defendant to deliver up to plaintiff's certain goods, or, alternatively, for payment of £167 15s., with costs.

Order granted.

Mr. Swift said that his clients desired that the Court should direct defendant to give immediate delivery.

[De Villiers, C.J.: He must do it immediately, failing which he must pay the money.]

PALMER V. THE OWL SYNDICATE.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, on behalf of the defendant, in the action (Thos. Palmer), for judgment to be signed against the respondents (the Owl Syndicate) for not proceeding with their action within the time fixed by Rules of Court.

Order granted.

INSOLVENT ESTATE WOLSTENHOLME V ROUX.

Mr. Benjamin said that he was instructed to appear for the plaintiff estate as respondent in a motion which appeared in the list brought by Roux, calling upon the estate to show cause why he should not be allowed to purge default. He was not instructed to ask for judgment in the present action.

Mr. Gardiner said that he appeared for the applicant Roux in the motion.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he would hear the motion.

Mr. Gardiner moved, on behalf of defendant, for leave to purge default, and file a plea, or claim in re-convention. Counsel read an affidavit in support of the application, setting out the causes of delay in filing plea.

Mr. Benjamin said that he did not oppose the application, but his client wished to put the defendant to terms as to when he would go to trial, and as to security for costs. There was also an allegation that defendant was about to remove out of the jurisdiction, and go to German South-West Africa.

De Villiers, C.J., said that he would grant leave to applicant to purge default, and extend the time to plead to February 12, costs to be costs in the cause. Plaintiff not having taken judgment against the defendant, it was impossible at the present stage to make any order as to security for costs.

ESTATE SCHERMBRUCKER V. DUNCAN.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £28, rent due.

Order granted.

PURCELL, YALLOP AND EVERETT V.
THOMSON.

Mr. Inchbold moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £52 16s. 7d., the balance of account due for goods sold, with interest, a tempore morae, and costs.

Order granted.

OLIVER V. OLIVER.

This was the return day of a summons calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not be declared of unsound mind, and a curator appointed to take care of his person and administer his estate, with power, if necessary, to sell the immovable property for the purpose of maintaining respondent and his wife.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan appeared for the applicant.

Mr. Lewis appeared as curator ad litem.

Evidence was given that the respondent was detained in the Valkenberg Asylum, being of unsound mind, and suffering from many delusions. He was the owner of property at Observatory, which was bonded to the amount of £500. The applicant desired that the Colonial Orphan Chamber should be appointed curator of the property. Mrs. Oliver was following the nursing profession.

Mr. Lewis said that he did not oppose the application, but respondent's brother had pointed out that if the property was sold, and the proceeds were applied to the maintenance of respondent and his wife, the estate might dwindle away until there was eventually no alternative but to send the respondent to Robben Island.

Mr. Buchanan (in answer to the Court) said that respondent was detained under a Judge's order.

De Villiers, C.J., said that in that case it would not be necessary to appoint a curator to the respondent's person.

Order granted, declaring respondent of unsound mind, and appointing the Colonial Orphan Chamber as curator bonis, with power to sell the landed property, and to pay out of the proceeds such sums of money as are required for the maintenance of the lunatic, and with further power to pay over to applicant such sum as is not required for such maintenance, costs of this action to come out of the estate.

In re BUFFALO SUPPLY AND COLD STORAGE CO.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan, with leave of the Court, moved, as a matter of urgency, for authority to Messrs. Hamilton Maxwell Fleming and John Powell, as liquidators of the Buffalo Supply and Cold Storage, to accept a certain offer, the effect of which, he said, would be to shorten the liquidation by about 15 or 20 months. The petition set out that the petitioners resided at Cape Town and East London respectively. Some time ago they instituted certain proceedings in the High Court of Justice, King's Bench Division, against one Moritz Bergl. Thereafter the said Bergl made a proposal for a compromise. Subsequently petitioners obtained judgment in the King's Bench Division against the said Bergl. In terms of clause (b) Bergl was ordered to pay petitioners £7,500 in monthly instalments of £200 each. In terms of clause (c), it was ordered that the payment of the said sum of £7,500 should be secured by a covering bond to be passed in this colony by Bergl in favour of the petitioners specially hypothecating his property in Kimberley used as a butchering business, carried on under the style of Sussman and Cohen. Petitioners were only able to obtain a second mortgage, as there already existed a prior mortgage of £4,000 on the said property. Bergl had paid off £2,200 under the said judgment, leaving a sum of £5,300 still owing. The said covering bond was about to be passed, but a cablegram had been received by petitioners' attorneys from their solicitors in London in these terms: "Bergl has offered to sell the Kimberley business for £8,000." This cablegram also contained an offer to pay £3,000 to £4,000 if petitioners would allow discount of 6 per cent. Petitioners went on to say that it would appear that Bergl had received an offer of £8,000 for the business, and now proposed, in lieu of hypothecating the property for payment of the balance, that petitioners should allow him to sell the property for £8,000, against his paying them from £3,000 to £4,000 on account against the balance of his indebtedness, and that in view of the fact that the balance was only payable by monthly instalments of £200, they should allow a discount of 6 per cent. Petitioners' attorneys had, subject to the consent of the Court, accepted the offer of £3,500 at the very least, but had advised their solicitors in England to endeavour to get £4,000 if possible. Petitioners added that it would be to the advantage and benefit of the company to have immediate payment of £3,000 to £4,000. They asked for an order authorising acceptance of the proposal in terms of the cablegram sent by their Cape Town attorneys. Counsel added that Mr. Fleming's firm were creditors to the amount of about £2,500 out of total liabilities by the company of about £30,000.

De Villiers, C.J.: What amount was finally agreed upon, £3,500 or £4,000?

Mr. Buchanan said that he was not at present advised.

Order granted as prayed.

DE KLERK V. DE KLERK.

This was an action brought by Petronella Margaretta de Klerk, of Natal, against Theunis Christian de Klerk, for a decree of restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Dr. Greer was for applicant; defendant did not appear.

Mr. Birch, clerk in charge of the Marriage Register, Colonial Secretary's Office, gave formal evidence as to the marriage.

Dr. Greer read the evidence of the plaintiff, taken on commission at Melmoth, Natal, from which it appeared that the parties were married at Humansdorp in 1891, and that in 1894 defendant deserted the plaintiff and had not since returned to her or contributed to her support.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 31st March, failing which rule to issue calling upon defendant to show cause on the first day of next term why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with costs, rule to be served in the same manner as directed in regard to citation.

JERVOISE V. JERVOISE.

This was an action brought by Elizabeth Gertrude Jervoise, of Cape Town, against her husband for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Mr. Struben appeared for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

W. T. Birch, clerk in charge of the Marriage Register, Colonial Secretary's Office, gave evidence as to the registration of the marriage, which took place on the 2nd April, 1893, at Port Elizabeth.

Plaintiff (Elizabeth Gertrude Jervoise) said that her husband left Port Elizabeth about August, 1898, and proceeded up-country, and she had gone to England, with his consent. She returned to the Colony in 1901, and she heard that her husband was in Bechuanaland. She had heard that her husband was suing her for restitution of conjugal rights. She proceeded to Francistown, where the action was heard, and the case was dismissed. Defendant refused to receive witness, and she returned to Cape Town. She had had communications with him since, but he had not offered to receive her, and had contributed nothing towards her support. Defendant was at present about town.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive plaintiff on or before the 15th February, failing which rule to issue calling upon defendant to show cause on the last day of term why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with costs, and why defendant should not be declared to have forfeited the benefits under the marriage.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. Pohl applied for the discharge of John William Henson from insolvency. The estate was surrendered in 1886. There was no certificate from the Master.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the section upon which applicant relied did not dispense with the Master's certificate. The matter must stand over pending production of Master's certificate.

Mr. Roux applied for the discharge of Susanna Laesia Coetzee from insolvency.

Granted.

Mr. Toms applied for the discharge of Hendrik Jacobus du Toit from insolvency.

Granted.

Mr. Watermeyer applied for the rehabilitation of Louis Jacobus Hattingh.

Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

LE PORT V. LE PORT. { 1907.
Feb. 1st.

Mr. Sutton moved for a decree of divorce in default of defendant's compliance with an order of restitution, and with custody to plaintiff of the child of the marriage.

Decree granted as prayed.

FOORD V. FOORD.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for a decree of divorce in default of defendant's compliance with an order of restitution, plaintiff to have custody of the child of the marriage.

Decree granted as prayed.

Ex parte LAUBSCHER.

Mr. De Waal moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

JOHNSTONE V. JOHNSTONE.

Mr. Russell moved for a certain rule to be made absolute authorising petitioner to sue in forma pauperis.

Rule absolute, Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers to be counsel, and Mr. Heydenrych to be attorney of the petitioner.

GRANT V. GRANT.

Mr. Toms moved for a certain rule to be made absolute authorising petitioner to sue in forma pauperis and by edictal citation, with notice to respondent that the case would be removed to the Circuit Court, Burgersdorp.

Rule absolute. Mr. Kannemeyer to be attorney to the petitioner, with leave to serve intendit with citation, citation returnable at the next Circuit Court at Burgersdorp.

MARCUS V. MARCUS.

Mr. Lewis moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband by edictal citation for a decree of divorce. The matter had been standing over for further information on the question of jurisdiction, and counsel now read an affidavit by petitioner's brother. Defendant was last heard of at Johannesburg.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted, citation returnable on the first day of next term, citation and other processes to be served upon defendant personally, failing which one publication in Johannesburg “Star,” with leave to serve intendit with citation.

Ex parte CRAVEN.

Mr. Sutton moved for a certain rule to be made absolute authorising cancellation of a mortgage bond.

Rule absolute.

FERNWOOD SYNDICATE V. MARKS.

Dr. Rainsford moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute restraining respondent from selling any further lots of land forming part of petitioner's property, known as the Fernwood Estate, and requiring him to deliver up certain documents.

Rule absolute, with costs.

Ex parte DUNDAS.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for an order upon the respondent Beukes to execute the necessary documents, and pass transfer of a certain farm known as the Ky Ky.

D

Rule granted returnable on the last day of term, calling upon respondent to show cause why an order shall not be granted as prayed, rule to be served personally, failing which one publication in a Vryburg newspaper.

DRIESSON V. DRIESSON.

Mr. Roux moved on the petition of Cornelia Driesson, of Kuil's River, for an order upon his wife, requiring her to deliver up his child, who was detained by respondent in Cape Town. Respondent, the petitioner said, had deserted him, and had been living in adultery. The child was removed from his custody, while he was absent from home.

Rule granted, returnable this day week, restraining respondent in the meantime from parting with the child, and calling upon respondent to show cause why an order shall not be made as prayed.

Ex parte GIBBS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute, authorising cancellation of a certain mortgage bond.

Rule absolute.

Ex parte VAN STRAATEN AND OTHERS

Mr. Toms moved for an order authorising the transfer of certain landed property in the division of Cradock.

Order in terms of Master's report.

ENSLIN V. SWANEPOEL.

Mr. Toms moved for leave to petitioner to sue the respondent (Cornelia H. C. Swanepoel) by edictal citation upon a mortgage bond, and for the attachment of certain property specially mortgaged in the town of Aberdeen ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Respondent was last heard of at Vrede, Orange River Colony.

Order granted, attaching the property and authorising the petitioner to sue respondent by edictal citation, citation returnable on the 12th March, personal service, failing which one publication in the “Friend” (Bloemfontein).

Ex parte JOELSON.

Mr. Alexander moved on the petition of Johanna Joelson as co-executrix of the estate of her late husband for an order authorising transfer to her of certain landed property in the division of Hopetown, upon payment of £350 by petitioner. It was stated that the purchase would be for the benefit of the heirs.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte MULLER AND WIFE.

Dr. Greer moved for an order authorising registration of a certain antenuptial contract entered into between the petitioners in Bloemfontein, Orange River Colony, before a notary.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte PRETORIUS.

Mr. Pohl moved for the removal of petitioner's name from the roll of advocates. Petitioner had been articulated to an attorney at Steynsburg, and, owing to an inadvertence, he had failed to apply hitherto for the removal of his name from the roll of advocates.

Order granted as prayed.

GAGELA V. GANCA.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an extension of time within which applicant may prosecute an appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court held at Cala, Transkei.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the matter should be mentioned to a full Court of Appeal. The application would be set down for the 11th inst.

SMITH V. CERES MUNICIPALITY. 1907.
FEB. 1st.

Municipal regulations—Payment of Municipal funds.

A Municipal regulation provided that "where any expenditure of the Municipal funds exceeding £50 shall be brought before any meeting of Commissioners, the question shall not then be decided finally but shall be brought in review at the next meeting of the Commissioners." A loan of £1,500 was authorized at a public meeting of resident householders for the purpose of carrying out a definite scheme to supply the town with water. In carrying out the details of that scheme it became necessary for the Commissioners from time to time to authorize the payments of amounts exceeding £50.

Held, that the Municipal regulation in question did not apply to payments forming part of expenditure which had already been lawfully authorized.

This was an application to make absolute a certain rule nisi interdicting the respondent Municipality from proceeding with the laying of a certain water-pipe.

It appeared that the matter in dispute in this case was a pipe that the Council had commenced to lay in connection with the water scheme for the Municipality of Ceres. Mr. Percy Ashenden went to the Municipality in 1903 and made a report on the work which had been carried out up to that time, and he recommended the laying of a branch circulating main down Millstreet across the Dwaars River, which would have the effect of improving the supply to Ward No. 2. Some opposition was now manifested by the householders in Ward No. 1, on the ground that the pipe would reduce the pressure in that ward.

On the 23rd August, 1903, a meeting of ratepayers and householders was held, at which it was resolved "that the Municipality be authorised to approach the Government for a loan of £1,500 to cover present liabilities and cost of proposed additions to the original scheme." The Council, by the casting vote of the chairman, had resolved to take steps to have this pipe laid, and after the work had been commenced, Mr. Smith (the present applicant) obtained, on an ex parte application, an interdict temporarily restraining the Council from proceeding with the work. He based his application on the ground that the Council were not authorised under such circumstances to undertake an expenditure exceeding £50, unless the matter were brought in review or sanctioned by a meeting of the resident householders, and that no such review had taken place and the expenditure had not been authorised.

Mr. Roux was for applicant; Mr. Benjamin was for respondents.

Mr. Benjamin appeared to show cause why the rule should not be made absolute, and read affidavits in support of his clients' position.

Mr. Roux read answering affidavits, and said that the meeting in August, 1903, authorised the Council to approach the Government for a loan for certain improvements, but there was nothing said as to which improvements. Then the Government sent down their engineer (Mr. Burrowes), who advised that there was no necessity for laying this further pipe. The Council got the money, and the applicant said that the Council were never authorised by the ratepayers or by a clear majority in the Council to lay this particular pipe: (a) The applicant said that at a further meeting of the ratepayers in 1905 or 1906 it was resolved by a large majority not to lay this pipe.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The illegality you rely upon is that the chairman gave his casting vote, and that the proper course was to bring the matter in review, or, failing that, to bring it before a public meeting.]

Mr. Roux said that a public meeting was called at the request of the applicant, and that meeting was attended by all the Councillors. A large majority of those present decided against the pipe. Counsel added that the position of the Council was that there were three members belonging to one ward and three from the other, and the chairman was a representative of Ward No. 2. He it was who gave his casting vote to authorise this expenditure exceeding £50.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that this particular scheme was authorised by the meeting held in 1903.

De Villiers, C.J.: The rule is this case was granted on the supposition that the resolution arrived at at the meeting of the municipality when the chairman gave his casting vote was an illegal resolution in terms of the 5th municipal regulation. The illegality would exist if this were a case in which the subject matter involves taxation or expenditure of the municipal funds to an extent exceeding £50. It was said the fact was not brought prominently before the public before the day of the meeting of the Council, but, in point of fact on the 21st August, 1903, there had been a public meeting of resident householders, at which it was decided "that this meeting of resident householders authorise the municipality to approach the Government for an additional loan of £1,500 to cover the present liabilities, and the cost of proposed additions to the original scheme." This resolution is proposed by Mr. Baumann. Mr. Baumann has now made an affidavit to the effect that at that meeting where the resolution was passed, the report of Mr. Ashenden was submitted, and that report recommended the pipe, which was the subject of the resolution passed by the casting vote of the chairman of the municipality. There had already been a resolution of householders authorising the raising of a loan of £1,500, and the question of this pipe was a mere detail, which, in my opinion, did not require the further sanction of the resident householders. I am confirmed in this view by the terms of the 7th regulation, which provides that "in every case where any expenditure of the municipal funds exceeding £50 sterling shall be brought before any meeting, the question shall not then be decided finally, but shall be brought in review at the next meeting of the said Commissioners, and, in the event of a final decision not being arrived at, then a meeting of the resident householders shall be called at a notice of seven days, to determine the same by a majority of the resident householders then present."

This resolution, in my opinion, applies to fresh expenditure, but not to such expenditure as has already been authorised. I do not consider that in carrying out the details of that expenditure it is necessary to bring every item in review, and, if there is no final decision, to have a meeting of resident householders. If that were to be the case no public work would be carried out, it seems to me. A few ratepayers might so obstruct the work that no public work would ever be done. I am satisfied in the present case that the £1,500 originally authorised covered the amount, and that, when further details had to be decided from time to time at meetings of the municipality, the original resolution of the ratepayers would cover it, and that in the present case the resolution in regard to the pipe was not such a matter as involved any taxation or expenditure exceeding £50 in terms of either the 5th or the 7th regulation. That being so, it is clear that the rule nisi ought not to have been granted and that it ought to be discharged with costs.

Mr. Roux urged that there was such a doubt as to the legality of the Council's action that the applicant had been justified in bringing the matter into Court, and that he should not, therefore, be mulcted.

De Villiers, C.J.: I think you took the risk by trying to prevent this work. I suppose the work had already been begun; the money had been obtained and the work was stopped. The Court granted a rule to prevent any injustice. You have failed in that rule, and I think you must pay costs.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Wahl, Fuller and De Klerk. Respondent's Attorneys: Michau and De Villiers.]

Ex parte DU PLESSIS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to David Jacobus du Plessis, as executor in the estate of the late Christoffel Andries Petrus Kotze, to mortgage certain estate property in the division of Somerset East. From the petition, it appeared that Du Plessis instituted an action against one Leonard Wm. van Os, of Pearston, and obtained judgment in August, 1905, for £600, with interest (15 C.T.R., 691). Defendant paid no part of the said sum or of the costs, but surrendered his estate as insolvent, and petitioner proved against the insolvent estate for the amount of the judgment and interest, and taxed costs as between party and party. On the claim for £600, with interest, a dividend of £3 10s. had been awarded from the insolvent estate. The taxed bill of costs between party and party amounted to £448 6s. 8d., on which a dividend of £2 4s. 9d. had been awarded from the insolvent estate. The bill of costs as between attorney and client amounted to £207 9s. 3d., and petitioner was, therefore, liable for £650 0s. 4d., together with the disbursements in the matter. He sought leave from the Court to mortgage the farm Kranvogelkuil, division of Somerset East, for the purpose of paying the said costs, which, together with the disbursements, amounted to £680 3s. 8d., and for payment of which there were no funds available in the said estate.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I cannot understand such an action being brought against an insolvent estate.]

Mr. Jones said that Van Os, after judgment had been given against him, surrendered his estate. The action was for transfer of certain land, or, in the alternative, for the payment of certain money. The order of the Court was judgment for the plaintiff for £600, with interest, failing such payment, then transfer of certain ground. Defendant had not paid this sum of £600.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But has the property been transferred?]

That does not appear from the petition, but it shows that there was a dispute over some land.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It seems a pity that this executor should have wasted the assets of the estate in a futile law suit.]

Of course, as it turns out, it was futile.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Now, he wants to mortgage the land in order to pay the costs. It seems that the costs between attorney and client were £207.]

It would appear that there was a transfer of the land. The defendant tendered one half of the seven mor-gens.

[De Villiers, C.J.: On whose advice was the action brought?]

That I cannot say; I was not in the original action myself. It appears also that the erven do form part of the estate now.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I should like to refer this matter to the Master. It is not a case where minors are concerned, but I wish to be satisfied that, as executor, he had good cause to bring this action.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

APPEALS.

DU PREEZ V. BENADE. { 1907.
{ Feb. 4th.

This was an appeal from the Court of the Resident Magistrate of Worcester, in a case in which the present appellant sued for the sum of £13 15s. 8d., for goods sold and delivered. The defendant first denied the claim, but eventually admitted it, and he brought in a counter claim for £17 15s. 8d. The Magistrate found for the plaintiff on the claim for £13 15s. 8d., and for the defendant on his claim in reconvention for £17 15s. 8d. The plaintiff now appealed against the Magistrate's judgment in reconvention.

De Villiers, C.J., said he had read the evidence, and counsel need not read the record.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers appeared for the appellant (plaintiff in the Court below); Mr. Gardiner was for respondent.

Mr. De Villiers said it was a question whether the Magistrate had found correctly on the evidence, especially on the documentary evidence on the counter-claim. There were only two items which he (counsel) proposed to press. One was the item of £20 for a set of show blinds. That, plaintiff said, should be only £13. The other item was that the defendant gave plaintiff credit in his account for goods, to the amount of £7 8s. 9d. That, plaintiff said, ought to be £12 8s. 9d. The counter-claim would amount then to only £5 15s. 8d., but plaintiff did not admit this sum. That was simply a question of oral evidence; there was simply the oath of one party against the other on that point. Counsel went on to refer to points in the evidence, and submitted that the documents strongly supported the plaintiff's contention. The Magistrate stated in his reasons that in regard to the one item in dispute the balance of evidence was in support of the defendant denied this, and there was contended that the Magistrate was not justified in that conclusion.

Mr. Gardiner said that the defendant's case in regard to the show blinds was that the plaintiff (defendant in reconvention) did not supply the material, as agreed, and that the extra sum was to cover the material supplied by the dependant. The other item of £5 was stated to be in respect of cash lent, but the defendant denied this, and there was no evidence, except the plaintiff's statement in support of it.

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case there is no doubt as to the claim in convention, the amount is admitted. A dispute arises now in regard to the correctness of the decision of the Magistrate in giving judgment for the whole amount of the defendant's claim in reconvention. There are two items in dispute in this claim in reconvention. The first is in reference to a show window, whether the defendant was to supply the material himself or not. In the first account rendered by the defendant—the document marked "K"—the total amount alleged to be due in respect of the show window is £13, and there is no claim there made, at all events, for £7 for material supplied; and upon the basis of only £13 being due, a settlement is arrived at, and £10 7s. 3d. was paid to the defendant. That took place in March, 1905, and now after a settlement has been made, the defendant rakes up an old transaction and claims £7. The documentary evidence is entirely in favour of the plaintiff as to the obligation having been on the defendant to supply the materials, and, consequently, the defendant had no right afterwards when he was sued for another debt to claim this £7. To that extent the Magistrate, in my opinion, has clearly erred. Then in regard to the £5, the Magistrate seems to have taken it for granted that the books did not show this amount. Now, the entry of £5 appears at the due date, and in regular order in the books. So far as the plaintiffs' books are concerned, the amount seems to have been perfectly in order. Then, when we refer to this account "K," we find that there is an amount of £12 8s. 8d., which was deducted from the £22 16s. alleged to have been owing to the defendant, and that £12 8s. 8d. will be exactly the amount if the books were correct in stating that £5 had been advanced by the plaintiff. Upon the evidence, I am clearly of opinion that the Magistrate erred in regard to this £5 also, and the consequence is that instead of giving judgment on the claim in reconvention for £17 15s. 8d., the Magistrate ought to have given judgment on the claim in reconvention for £5 15s. 8d. The appeal will, therefore, be allowed, and judgment entered for the plaintiff in convention for £13 15s. 8d., with costs in convention in the court below, and for plaintiff in reconvention for £5 15s. 8d., with costs in reconvention in the court below; but respondent must pay the costs of the appeal.

ADAMS V. MOCKE.

[For head-note see Vol. XVI., page 652.]

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Acting Resident Magistrate of Fraserburg, in an action brought by appellant against respondent for delivery of a certain horse, or its value, £20.

From the record it appeared that a certain horse belonging to appellant had been used for post-cart work. It was sent out with a driver from Beaufort West to Loxton, and the driver returned without the horse, but a mule was occupying its place. It was explained that the horse became ill at Loxton, that it was left there to be cared for, and a mule was brought back in its place, and this mule was substituted for another mule at Slangfontein. When the driver returned to Beaufort he was sent back to get the horse. He exchanged the second mule for the first mule at Slangfontein. The man at Loxton, Mr. Esterhuizen, set up the position that he exchanged the first mule for the horse, and that he had since exchanged this horse with respondent for another one.

Mr. Louwrens was for appellant, Jacob Daniel G. Adams, contractor, Beaufort West; Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for respondent, Christian David Mocke, junior, of Fraserburg district.

Mr. Louwrens said that the matter was before His Lordship in July last, (16, C.T.R., 652) when there was only evidence given on behalf of the plaintiff in the case (the present appellant), and the Court then ordered that the case be sent back to the Magistrate to hear evidence on behalf of the defendant. The Magistrate had since gone into it, and had given judgment against the plaintiff, who had again appealed.

De Villiers, C.J., said counsel need not read the evidence, as he (the learned Judge) had already done so.

After hearing counsel for the respondent, the Court allowed the appeal.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is unnecessary to repeat the facts of this case, which have been fully stated on a previous occasion, when the matter was before the Court. (16, C.T.R., 652). The plaintiff was the owner of a postcart and horses, and employed a coloured driver to drive the postcart between Beaufort West and Loxton. On one of the journeys a horse broke down, and the driver went to a man named Esterhuizen and induced him to give him a mule. He left this broken-down horse with Esterhuizen. There is a dispute between the post-cart driver and Esterhuizen as to whether there was an exchange or not. The postcart driver denies it, and I am not satisfied there was an exchange; but, in any case, it is perfectly clear that the driver had no authority from his master to exchange his horse for a mule. Well, this mule, which he got from Esterhuizen, mule, which he got from Esterhuizen, also broke down, and then another mule is obtained, but the plaintiff took the earliest opportunity of returning Esterhuizen's mule to Esterhuizen, and of asking for his horse. Whereupon Esterhuizen says: "Oh, no; it was an exchange, and I have exchanged that horse for another horse with the present defendant." Thereupon the plaintiff says: "Very well, I am the owner of this horse. I have done nothing to lose the ownership of the horse, and therefore I am now entitled to claim it back from the man in whose possession it is." Now, these are the simple facts, and the Court has previously laid it down that the defendant can only succeed if he shows that the plaintiff had parted with this animal, and had allowed Esterhuizen to remain in possession of it under such circumstances as might reasonably lead the defendant to believe that Esterhuizen was the true owner, and not the plaintiff. Well, nothing has been elicited in the fresh evidence which in any way improves the position of the defendant. The plaintiff has done nothing whatever to lead anyone to suppose that Esterhuizen was the owner. The Magistrate suggests that Esterhuizen must be regarded as a kind of dealer in horses, but the reason why the suggestion is made is because he was a mason, and a mason often requires horses for his business, which ought to have been known to the plaintiff, but that is somewhat inconsequential reasoning. Esterhuizen cannot, in my opinion, be regarded as a dealer in horses, so as to make out the kind of negligence suggested by counsel for the respondent in the plaintiff allowing Esterhuizen to remain in possession of the horse. No evidence whatever has been given in this case, in my opinion, to justify the conclusion to which the Magistrate has come, and the result, therefore, is that the appeal must be allowed and judgment entered for the plaintiff as claimed, with costs in this Court and the Court below.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Tredgold, McIntyre, and Bisset; Respondent's: Walker and Jacobsohn.]

WOOD V. SMITH.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Kokstad in an action in which the appellant was sued for the sum of £99 on a cheque.

In the Magistrate's Court, appellant was sued for £99, being the amount of a certain cheque, dated the 31st August, 1906, and drawn by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff, the cheque having been dishonoured. The plea was that the defendant denied liability to the plaintiff in respect of the cheque, and he pleaded specially that on the 29th August plaintiff agreed to sell to the defendant 110 full mouthed ewes, delivery to be made to the defendant at his residence on or before the 1st September. These were not delivered until the 8th September, when plaintiff delivered 103 sheep, some of which were broken mouthed. In consequence of the number and condition not being according to the contract, the defendant refused to accept them, and stopped the cheque.

De Villiers, C.J., said he had read the record.

Mr. Upington was for the appellant; Mr. Gardiner for the respondent.

After hearing Mr. Upington in argument on the facts, and without calling on Mr. Gardiner, the Court dismissed the appeal.

De Villiers, C.J.: I see no reason for disturbing the judgment of the Magistrate. The best proof that this sale did take place is the fact that a cheque for the amount was given by the defendant. He afterwards seemed to have thought fit to depart from his bargain and stopped payment of the cheque, and to my mind he did so on wholly inadequate grounds. He says now that what he thought he was buying were breeding sheep, but if the evidence is correct, as to the value of breeding sheep at that time, it is wholly impossible to believe that the plaintiff would have sold these sheep for 18s. a-piece instead of for from 28s. to 29s. The defendant had an opportunity before he gave the cheque or before he concluded the bargain, of inspecting the sheep. He really did not take the trouble to inspect them. He took the plaintiff at his word, but afterwards he tried to depart from his bargain and refused to pay the money. In my opinion there was ample evidence to support the decision of the Magistrate, and there is certainly not sufficient evidence to justify this court now, upon a pure question of credibility, in altering that decision. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

WILKINSON V. MULLER. { 1907.
Feb. 4th.

Jurisdiction — Interpleader —
Ownership—Validity of marriage.

The respondent, having obtained judgment in a R.M. Court against A., who was married after antenuptial contract to the appellant, execution was levied on certain donkeys in the possession of A., which were claimed by the appellant. The respondent excepted to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate on the ground that the decision of the question of ownership involved a further question as to the validity of the marriage; and the exception was allowed.

Held on appeal, that as the question whether the donkeys were the property of the appellant could be decided without any inquiry into the validity of the marriage, the exception ought to have been disallowed.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Seymour.

It appeared that there was a dispute about the ownership of certain donkeys, a wagon, and harness, which had been attached on the suit of Muller, the present respondent. The goods were attached in the possession of one Wilkinson. Then it was claimed by Wilkinson's wife. In the middle of the hearing of the case, before the claimant had finished her case, exception was taken to the Magistrate's jurisdiction to hear the interpleader, because he would have to adjudicate on the validity of a certain ante-nuptial contract. The Magistrate upheld the exception and dismissed the case, holding that in order to decide the ownership of the property he would have to decide the validity of the ante-nuptial contract.

Mr. J. E. R. De Villiers for appellant; Respondent in default.

In argument counsel said the interpleader was not really an action at all; it was an inquiry which the Magistrate had to make in regard to a process of his own court. Counsel contended that there was nothing to limit the Magistrate's jurisdiction to decide the ownership of the property.

De Villiers, C.J.: There is a somewhat strange complication in this case, seeing that the execution creditor objected to the Magistrate deciding as to the validity of an attachment made under a writ of execution. If the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to decide the question raised in this interpleader case, then it is difficult to see how the attachment obtained by the respondent could stand. The Magistrate held that in some way or another the validity of the marriage was raised by the objection, but the question whether the donkeys belonged to Mr. or to Mrs. Wilkinson could be decided quite independently of the validity of the marriage, or even of the ante-nuptial contract. That was a question which, in my opinion, the Magistrate had ample jurisdiction to decide upon, and clearly the Magistrate ought not to have allowed the exception which is taken by the execution creditor himself to the Magistrate deciding the interpleader issue as to the validity of the particular attachment. The appeal must be allowed, with costs in this Court, and the case remitted to the Magistrate to be tried on its merits.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

REX V. JAPTHA AND { 1907.
ANOTHER. { Feb. 4th.

Act 43 of 1885—Unsigned remittal form.

Where a remittal form, unsigned by the Attorney-General, had been directed to a Magistrate, who thereupon tried and sentenced two prisoners under Act 43 of 1885, the Court set aside all the proceedings subsequent to the committal for trial.

Hopley, J.: A case came before me during the vacation, as Judge of the week, that of Rex v. Solomon Japtha and John Smith, who were charged with housebreaking and theft, which the Magistrate of Cape Town tried under Act 43 of 1885. He found the prisoners guilty—they pleaded guilty on the remittal—and sentenced them each to nine months' imprisonment, with hard labour. On looking through the proceedings, I found there was no remittal at all. There is a remittal form which (by inadvertence, no doubt in the Attorney-General's office) has not been signed by the Attorney-General, so that there never was a proper order to the Magistrate to try this case under Act 43 of 1885, or to try it at all, and although no doubt careless inadvertence, in the Attorney-General's office, it was also equally careless on the part of the Magistrate not to notice that the form was not properly signed. The result of the whole of this is, as has been held before, I think, in the case of the Queen v. Macutea (7, High Court, 242), that the proceedings are invalid after the committal for trial, and that all proceedings after the committal for trial in the first instance must be set aside. Of course, it will be open for the Crown to remit properly and have the case properly dealt with. I understand that in the present instance, no harm has been inflicted on these prisoners, because they are undergoing another sentence, either prior to the one now set aside, or to run after it, and the sentence can be so adjusted that they will not get more than they would have got if the proceedings had been in order from the start. The conviction and the proceedings, after the committal for trial, are quashed, and the case sent back to the Attorney-General's office to be further dealt with on that basis.

JIZWA V. METH.

Magistrate's Court summons - Cause of action-Sale and purchase-Agency.

This was an appeal from the Court of the Resident Magistrate, Tabankulu. The plaintiff sued in the court for the sum of £47 5s., the price of 63 bags of mealies. Judgment was given for the plaintiff with costs.

The material portion of the summons set out that in or about the end of August, 1905, at Tabankulu, the plaintiff contracted and agreed with the defendant to advance certain 63 bags of mealies, which the defendant undertook and agreed to transport to Tembuland and sell them at the best price there, and, as soon thereafter as possible, to pay to the plaintiff £47 5s., being the value of the mealies at 15s. a bag. The defendant was to retain the balance of the proceeds in consideration of his services. The defendant accepted delivery of the mealies in good order, and thereafter proceeded to Tembuland. The defendant failed and neglected to pay the plaintiff the sum of £47 5s., being the value of the mealies, or to account to the plaintiff in any way whatsoever. The defendant appeared through Mr. Attorney Berrange, who applied for a postponement on the ground that certain witnesses were not present. Mr. Pearson objected to the postponement on the ground that plenty of time had elapsed to have the witnesses present. Mr. Berrange pointed out that one of his witnesses was in gaol. A postponement was agreed to sine die, provided Mr. Berrange would accept notice of set down. Upon resuming, the defendant conducted his own case, and he stated that he never bought the mealies. People refused to buy the mealies because they were infected with weevils. He left them at a kraal, and reported this to the plaintiff. The plaintiff said he was to wait until they would see if people would buy them. Defendant returned to see the mealies, and found they had gone bad. The Magistrate in his reasons, said that the plaintiff sued the defendant for £47 5s., being the value of 63 bags of mealies at 15s. a bag. In August, 1905, the plaintiff delivered to defendant the mealies to sell on his behalf, and plaintiff's contention was that the defendant was to bring him 15s. for every bag sold. The defendant was to keep everything above that for his trouble. The defendant stated that his instructions were to sell at not less than £1 a bag. He admitted he was to keep everything he got over 20s. The Court did not believe that the plaintiff gave such instructions. It was in evidence that mealies were bought at 20s. or thereabouts at the time at Umtata. The defendant proceeded with the mealies, and, not getting 20s., he off-loaded them. He said he could not sell them at that price. Considering the length of time that would be occupied in travelling to Umtata and back, it would appear that the defendant had not taken much pains to sell. Later, the defendant took loads for other people, and endeavoured to sell the other mealies. Subsequently he took loads to East London, and stated on his way to East London he discovered that the mealies were bad. Plaintiff denied that a letter to this effect reached him. The plaintiff said he told his boys to look up the defendant, and to tell him to sell the mealies if they were good they could take them over and sell them; and if bad to leave them where they were. It seemed probable that plaintiff did receive that letter. The defendant gave another version of this, stating that the boys instructed the head of the kraal to sell them as they could not move them, and he then left with the plaintiff's boys. The plaintiff said the defendant avoided meeting him. The defendant did not exercise due diligence to dispose of the mealies, and he took the risk of the mealies going bad and becoming valueless. Had he used due diligence he would have disposed of them, and having failed otherwise to account for them he was responsible to the plaintiff for their value at the rate agreed upon.

Mr. Benjamin for appellant; Mr. W. P. Buchanan for respondent.

Mr. Benjamin pointed out that the Magistrate in his reasons said that the defendant took upon himself the risk of the mealies going bad, whereas there was not a tittle of evidence anywhere to that effect.

[Hopley, J.: On what ground, Mr. Buchanan, do you support this judgment?]

Mr. Buchanan: I submit on the facts that the judgment is the only one that could be given.

[Hopley, J.: Perhaps you will convince me. First of all, the man brings his action for mealies sold. His evidence does not seem to me to support that. He does not bring his action for negligence of an agent, which he tries to make out.]

Mr. Buchanan submitted in a matter in the Magistrate's Court, as long as the case was substantially put to the defendant that was all that was required. The plaintiff said he claimed the sum of £47 5s., but he did not say that he was claiming this as the purchase price of certain mealies, which he sold to the defendant.

[Hopley, J.: What do you say he is claiming it as?]

He says: "You are my agent and you have got to account to me for it, and you have not accounted to me for it." Counsel submitted there was clear evidence of his negligence here. The summons was not at all based on the question of a sale by the plaintiff to the defendant. The summons showed the defendant what case he had exactly to meet, and he had met it substantially. He had given as much evidence as he could if the summons had been otherwise worded, and it was clear that the defendant had the gist of the case before him.

Hopley, J.: In this case the plaintiff sued the defendant on a summons which alleged that in August, 1905, plaintiff agreed with the defendant to advance him certain set of 63 bags of mealies, which mealies the defendant undertook and agreed to transport to Tembuland, to sell the same at the best price there obtainable, and as soon thereafter as possible to pay the plaintiff the sum of £47 5s., being the value of the mealies at 15s. a bag, the defendant to retain the balance of the proceeds of the mealies in consideration of his services therein. The words in the paragraph "to advance certain mealies" are admitted to mean to entrust the defendant with certain 63 bags of mealies for sale, etc. Then the next paragraph of the summons goes on: "The defendant duly accepted the delivery of the mealies in good and sound order, and thereupon proceeded to Tembuland." Then the third paragraph of the summons: "The defendant has neglected to pay to the plaintiff the sum of £47 5s., or to account to the plaintiff in any way whatsoever for the amount of the said mealies, though often requested to do so." When I said at the beginning of the case something about no exception being taken to the summons, what I meant was that the summons does not allege that the mealies were sold, so that the time for accounting for the £47 5s. had not arisen, and the cause of action, it seems to me, is not shewn in the summons to have accrued. There is no allegation that the mealies were sold, or that the time for accounting for the £47 5s. had ever arrived. The summons goes further: "That the plaintiff failed to account for the mealies in any way whatsoever." And that seems to me, on the evidence, to be the only thing that we can go into at all in this matter, because when we come to the evidence we find that the plaintiff candidly admits that he did not sell these mealies to the defendant at any time, that he looked upon the defendant as an agent, and that the utmost that passed between them was: "You go and sell these mealies for me in Tembuland, and account to me for 15s. a bag, and you can have anything over that you sell them for." It is pretty clear something was said as to selling the mealies at or about £1, whether the defendant was limited to £1 or whether it was understood between them nothing less than 5s. would pay him. It is clear that the defendant came back and said he could not get the price of £1 a bag, and he thought he could hold on for a higher price. The plaintiff did not object to what he had done, and among the things he had done he reported that he off-loaded them at a hut near Umtata. If that were a dangerous proceeding, and likely to bring weevils into the mealies, the plaintiff, still the owner at that time, ought then to have objected. The plaintiff did not make any objection. All he said was, "I do not want to hurry you as long as I get my 15s." At that time he did not think the procedure negligent or improper. He did not say: "I have got nothing to do with the mealies, because they are yours," nor did he say, "Remember, you are taking them over at 15s. a bag, and entirely at your risk." All the owner did say was: "I do not want to hurry you as long as I get my money in the long run." It is said that I must look upon the summons, though not so worded, as in effect one that claimed for damages for improper treatment of these mealies. Though one is very apt to be not too exacting about the precise form of a summons in the Magistrate's Court, as long as the proper meaning of the summons can be discovered, yet the summons should be so drawn that a defendant must know the cause of action against him, and I must say that in the present case I cannot see anything in the summons which would cause the defendant to know that he was being summoned by the plaintiff as his agent for negligence in treatment of the property entrusted to him as agent. The summons does not certainly bear that appearance, and if it had the defendant might have defended himself in many ways as to the treatment of the mealies and weevils, and the plaintiff might have been cross-examined on such points. If an agent is negligent and loss can be traced to his negligence, then the agent is responsible, but before he can be held responsible it ought to be clearly stated in the summons that such is the case. In the present case, for instance, he would probably ask as to the history of these mealies, and the likelihood of pit mealies being affected with weevils as against other mealies, and these things would have to be considered, and also whether the mealies would more quickly have gone bad in a hut or in the plaintiff's own store. All these matters would have arisen if it had been an action properly shaped for negligence, and the Magistrate's mind would have been directed to a different state of affairs to the one on which he gave judgment. It seems to me that the plaintiff never ceased to be the owner of these mealies. They perished from weevils, and it has not been proved to my mind that the agent was responsible for the weevils getting into the mealies. In these circumstances the ordinary rule of law, res perit domino, must apply, and the loss, if there be any, must be borne by the plaintiff himself; consequently the Magistrate was wrong, and in my opinion the appeal should be allowed, with costs in both Courts.

Mr. Buchanan: Will your lordship enter absolute from the instance.

Hopley, J.: Very well. Absolute from the instance, with costs in both Courts.

BAILIE V. MUIR.

{ 1907.
Feb. 4th.
" 12th.

Medical fees—District surgeon—Public Health Act—Insolvency of patient—Promise to pay—Consideration.

M., a medical practitioner and District Surgeon of S., rendered an account to B. for medical attendance. Thereafter B.'s estate was sequestered. B.'s wife, married out of community, having promised to pay the debt, M. did not prove on the estate. She did not pay, and subsequently B., before any release from insolvency, promised to pay in full. M. thereafter sued B. in the Magistrate's Court on this promise.

Held on appeal, that M.'s remedy having been barred by

B.'s insolvency as against B., and a complete delegation of the obligation having been made whereby his wife alone was responsible to M., there was no longer any obligation on the part of B. to M., that therefore the promise by B. to pay the debt was a nudum pactum, and that M.'s action against him on that count must fail.

After his insolvency, B., who was still carrying on farming operations either for his wife or on his own behalf, asked M. to examine medically certain native servants on his farm whom he suspected of having contracted venereal disease. M. did so examine them, found that B.'s suspicions were well founded, and charged B. a certain fee for his services.

Held, that as B. had not followed the procedure prescribed by the Public Health Acts for obtaining the services of the District Surgeon, he had engaged M. in his capacity of a private practitioner and was liable to him for the fee charged.

The plaintiff, the present respondent, was a medical practitioner and the assistant district surgeon of Sterkstroom. He sued the defendant for £11 14s. 6d. for medical services rendered, incurred before the insolvency of the appellant, and for £2 after the sequestration of the estate.

The summons set out that on May 1, 1906, the plaintiff, at the special instance and request of defendant, proceeded to the farm Alexandra, and there medically examined certain servants of the defendant, by reason whereof the defendant was indebted to him in the sum of £2. That at divers times between October 28, 1904, and August 18, 1905, the defendant became indebted to the plaintiff for medical attendance, medicines, and appliances, amounting in all to £11 14s. 6d. That thereafter, in the month of October, 1905, the defendant's estate was sequestered. The plaintiff had not proved the debt of £11 14s. 6d. against the defendant's insolvent estate, but the same remained owing to him, and that thereafter on the 28th July, 1906, the defendant promised and undertook to pay the said debt of £11 14s. 6d. to the plaintiff in full, but he had not paid the same according to the accounts annexed, which the plaintiff prayed might be considered as inserted. The defendant admitted the correctness of the account, with the exception of the item of £2. The debt was contracted before the sequestration of his estate, and defendant was still an unrehabilitated insolvent.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said the defendant, an undischarged insolvent, was sued by the plaintiff, a duly licensed medical practitioner, for the sum of £13 14s. 6d., being £11 14s. 6d. for medical attendance and medicines supplied to the defendant, and the members of his family, prior to the insolvency, and £2 for one visit to defendant's farm, subsequent to the insolvency. As regards the item of £2, there was no dispute that the service was rendered. All that this Court had to decide was whether the defendant was liable. It appeared from the evidence that on the 30th April, 1906, the defendant personally asked the plaintiff to visit his farm to examine some natives, whom he suspected of having a contagious disease, and the following day his wife, acting as his agent, repeated the request. The plaintiff then went out, and examined the natives, and found them to be suffering from a contagious disease. The defence to this claim was three-fold: (1) That the natives themselves and not the defendant were liable; (2) that the plaintiff said the Government would be liable under the C.D. Act of 1885; (3) that defendant received no consideration. The first defence was disposed of by the fact that the defendant had no express mandate from the natives to secure the services of the plaintiff, as he himself admitted, and he could not be regarded as having had an implied mandate. The evidence on the second ground of defence was contradictory, and on the whole the weight of probability was with the plaintiff. The third defence was that the defendant received no consideration. The definition of "consideration" by Holland certainly showed that defendant did receive consideration. There was labour sustained by the plaintiff at the special instance and request of the defendant. For these reasons on the item (2), judgment would be for the plaintiff, as prayed. The second item raised a question of greater difficulty. The defendant's estate was sequestrated on the 30th October, 1905, and on that date he was indebted to the plaintiff in the above amount. He found that defendant on the 28th July last, nine months after his insolvency, transmuted the naturalis obligatio, under which he lay to plaintiff into a civilis obligatio by the fact of constitutum. The obligation, therefore, dated from the last-mentioned date, and having been incurred subsequent to in-solveny was binding on defendant, and he could be sued upon it. On this item there would be judgment for the plaintiff as prayed.

Mr. McGregor for appellant; Mr. Benjamin for respondent.

Mr. McGregor submitted that a man could not be sued while his estate was sequestrated for a debt contracted prior to sequestration. He quoted the cases Twentyman v. Carlis (6 H.C., 13), McFarlane v. Brunette (B.S.C., 272), and Vorden v. Magadas (1 M., 45). In all those cases the debt had been incurred after the date of insolvency. The policy of the law was against arrangements between an insolvent debtor and creditor to pay a debt in full. He cited ex parte Barrow (50 L.J. Ch., 821) and Leake on Contract (4th Ed., 434).

Mr. Benjamin contended that a subsequent promise to pay did not operate as a reviver of the debt against the insolvent estate, but against the insolvent personally. The question had been considered in the cases Dicks v. Pote (3 E.D.C., 74) and Quinn Bros. v. Van der Merwe (9 J., 217).

[Hopley, J.: What is the consideration for the new promise to pay the old debt?]

Mr. Benjamin: According to the decision in Twentyman v. Carlis the old debt would be a sufficient consideration.

Mr. McGregor, in reply, quoted sections 123 and 127 of the Insolvent Ordinance, Hill and Paddon v. Davidson (5 J., 89), and Heather and Son v. Webb (46 L.J.N.S., 89).

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (March 12th).

The appellant is a farmer living near Sterkstroom, and the respondent is a medical man practising at that place. The appeal is from a judgment of the Assistant Magistrate for Queen's Town, stationed at Sterkstroom. The claim which was made by the respondent, who was plaintiff in the Court below, was for the sum of £13 14s. 6d., made up of the sum of £11 14s. 6d. for medical attendance on the appellant and his family, and the sum of £2 for attendance on some native servants of the defendant, at his request. As to the former sum, it was for medical charges in respect of services rendered between 28th October, 1904, and 18th August, 1905, and for these an account was rendered to the defendant on 2nd October, 1905. On 30th October, 1905, however, the defendant became insolvent, and he was still an unrehabilitated insolvent at the time when the action was brought in the Court below. It appears that the plaintiff did not prove his claim on the estate at the first or second meetings of creditors, which were held before the end of 1905, and that in January, 1906, before the third meeting, the wife of the defendant, married to him without community of property, and owning property of her own, asked the plaintiff not to prove the debt on the insolvent estate of her husband, and promised to pay the account herself. The plaintiff thereupon refrained from proving his claim, and thereafter looked to Mrs. Bailie for payment, as is proved by his various letters to her, and by the fact that he after that conversation sent in the account for his amount to her, and not to the defendant. The defendant was quite aware of this arrangement, in which it is clear that all three parties concurred. The insolvency had, of course, barred the plaintiff's remedy against the defendant, but the further effect of this delegation of the obligation has also to be considered. It appears plain enough that a delegation was duly made, that Mrs. Bailie undertook the obligation of her husband, that Dr. Muir accepted her as his debtor, and that Mr. Bailie acquiesced in this arrangement. The legal effect then would be that not only was the remedy barred by insolvency, but that the obligation itself was extinguished as far as the defendant was concerned. Mrs. Bailie became liable, and the defendant was entirely freed from the debt and discharged from any obligation, whether naturalis or civilis, arising out of it. In July, 1906, however, the defendant, being then still an unrehabilitated insolvent, made a promise to the plaintiff, about which there is some conflict of evidence, but which the Magistrate believed was to the effect that he would himself pay this amount in the following month. The words used do not seem to me inconsistent with the idea suggested by the defendant that he meant no more than that he would pay out of the assets of his wife, whose farming operations he was managing; but the Magistrate has taken them to have meant that the defendant undertook to pay the amount personally. Even so, I can find no justa causa for such a promise, nor any valid ground upon which the plaintiff could sue the defendant. If such promise were made, it was nudum pactum, and it is clear that the plaintiff himself did not think that there was an end to Mrs. Bailie's liability, or that he had reverted to his original debtor, for, after waiting for a couple of months without receiving the promised payment, he once more addressed Mrs. Bailie, asking her for a settlement. I am of opinion that in this branch of the case the Magistrate's judgment was wrong, and that the appeal, pro tanto, should be allowed. With regard to the item of £2, it is claimed for a liability said to have been incurred in May, 1906, during the insolvency, by the defendant himself. He seems to have been, in spite of his insolvency, carrying on farming operations, whether for his wife or for himself does not clearly appear—and having reason to suspect the existence of a contagious disease in some of his servants, he sent for the plaintiff, who is the District Surgeon at Sterkstroom, asking him to come out to the farm and inspect the cases. Dr. Muir went out, found that there was contagious disease, and ordered the servants into the town for treatment. For this service he charged £2, an amount which is apparently the usual fee for a trip, and for services of that kind. The defendant, however, maintains that the cases fell under the class contemplated by the Public Health Acts, that the Government, and not he, is responsible for the charges, that he intended when he sent for Dr. Muir that he should come in his official capacity as District Surgeon, and that Dr. Muir must have so understood the matter. The disease discovered was certainly one of those contemplated by the Public Health Acts, and had the defendant taken the proper steps, he would, no doubt, have been able to get the authorities to move in the matter, and treat the cases at the public expense. But he neglected to do this, and elected to send for the plaintiff on his own responsibility. The Magistrate was right in holding that in so acting he had rendered himself liable to the plaintiff. As to this amount, therefore, the appeal must fail. The Magistrate gave judgment for the respondent (plaintiff in the Court below) for £13 14s. 6d., the full amount claimed. That must be changed into judgment for the plaintiff for £2, with costs in the Court below. Each party having succeeded partially in this court, there will be no order as to costs in appeal.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Michau and De Villiers. Respondent's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn.]

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ADMISSION. { 1907.
{ Feb. 4th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the admission of Rudolph Seydell as a sworn translator in English and German.

Application granted and oath administered.

GOLDSMITH V. IRWIN.

Possession—Spoliation.

This was an application upon notice to the respondent (Irwin), one Reuben

Levin and one Teperson, to show cause why a certain rule should not be made absolute directing respondent to restore to applicant certain horse, wagon, and harness.

The applicant's case was that he was a produce merchant, residing in Napier-street, Cape Town, and that he had had respondent in his employ as a driver. He bought from respondent a wagon for £4 and set of harness for £2 7s. 6d. Later on the respondent purchased a mare for £18 10s., and applicant advanced him a sum of £10 on condition that unless the money were repaid within a period of ten days the mare should remain in his (Goldsmith's) possession until the money was repaid. After applicant had dispensed with Irwin's services the latter wrongfully and unlawfully and surreptitiously gained access to Goldsmith's stables and removed therefrom the said mare as well as a horse, wagon, and double set of harness, applicant's property. When seen subsequently, respondent admitted that he had had the mare put in the stable of one Teperson, and that he had sold the horse, wagon, and harness to Reuben Levin, of Woodstock.

The respondent's case was that the property which he was alleged to have illegally deprived applicant of did not belong to the applicant but to himself (Irwin). He denied that he had been employed as a driver by applicant, and said that he had delivered forage, etc., on behalf of Goldsmith, with his own wagon, horse, and harness. He denied that he had sold the petitioner the said wagon and harness, and he said that he had purchased the horse from Teperson for £27. The mare was bought by respondent and another man for £18. He approached applicant for £18 which was due to him as salary, and which Goldsmith paid to him. He denied that Goldsmith had advanced money to him. It transpired that respondent had been arrested on a charge of theft of a horse, and that the case had been postponed pending result of the civil proceedings to be instituted.

Mr. Alexander for applicant. Dr. Greer for respondent.

Mr. Alexander submitted that the parties should be put in the position in which they were before the spoliation took place, in order that the rights of the parties could be determined. He contended that on the affidavits there was nothing inconsistent with the claim set up by applicant, and that in several respects the facts deposed to on the other side supported the story of the applicant.

Dr. Greer pointed out that there was a conflict on all the material facts of the case, and urged that the Court should accept the evidence of Teperson, who had no direct interest in the matter. He submitted that the story of the applicant was not entitled to credence. As to the criminal proceedings which had been instituted, he contended that the liability, if any existed at all, was entirely a civil one, and that the party who should bring an action to determine the rights in this property was the applicant.

Maasdorp, J.: The only question that the Court has now to decide is who is entitled lawfully to the possession of these articles? The question of property cannot now be decided upon the conflicting affidavits that have been put in, and the Court has not been asked now to decide that question. It would seem that the wagon, horse, and harness were, at the time they were taken by the respondent, in the peaceful possession of the applicant. They were found to be in the possession of the applicant after the respondent had left his service. It may be said that the respondent removed the articles on the day after he left the service of applicant, and that that might be said to have been within a reasonable time, but, still, upon the question now before the Court, the fact that he did leave these articles in possession of the applicant when he left his service, supports the case of the applicant that they were left there because they belonged to the applicant. There is a conflict of evidence, but I think a great deal of light is thrown upon the case generally by the evidence with respect to one portion of it, and that is as to the purchase of the horse from Teperson. The applicant states, and he is supported by other evidence, that he purchased the horse from Teperson, and respondent says that the horse was purchased by the applicant from Teperson for him. Now, here we have important evidence in the shape of the cheque that has been put in. This cheque was made by the applicant, and paid over to Teperson, and I think that in itself establishes a very strong probability that the money was paid by the applicant for himself, and on his own account. The relationship which existed between the parties at that time was not of such a character, that I accept at present the view that the applicant would have advanced that large amount on behalf of the respondent. I take it, then, that for the present the probabilities are that that horse was paid for by the applicant, and is his property, and if I accept the evidence of the applicant in that respect I think it establishes the further probability of his evidence upon other points as to the wagon and harness, and it certainly strongly impeaches the evidence of the respondent. I, therefore, come to the conclusion that upon the affidavits I must be satisfied for the present that the horse, wagon, and harness belonged to the applicant. I merely find that at present, for the purpose of establishing the right of possession, opportunity to be given to the parties to go into the question further, and to have it finally decided as to whom the property belongs to. As to the mare, the question seems to be rather more doubtful. There it is quite clear that the mare is the property of the respondent, and that is admitted by the applicant, but he states he holds it in pledge for a sum advanced by him on behalf of the respondent in the purchase of the mare, and he puts in an account to support his statement in that respect. All I can say as to the account is that it is certainly in a most unsatisfactory shape, and I cannot take it as a document of any importance in that respect. It appears to be a statement which the applicant may call an account of what he considers the present position of the parties. There is no evidence that there was any entry made originally in any authentic book. My finding, therefore, amounts to this, that the respondent is a spoliator, and by means of spoliation removed the property of the applicant. Levin, who has obtained possession through this spoliator, can have no right unless he establish a right in future to this property as against the applicant. The Court will order that the wagon, harness, and horse be restored by the respondent. Levin is the applicant. No order will be made as to the mare. The rule will be made absolute, with costs as to the horse, harness, and wagon.

JOOSTE V. VAN HEERDEN.

This was an application for an order calling upon respondent to furnish security for costs of an action which she has instituted against applicant in his capacity as executor in certain estate to recover a sum of £250 alleged to be due as her share of an inheritance.

Respondent had offered £100 as security. Applicant said that this was insufficient, and asked for £200.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for applicant, who resides in this colony; Mr. Close was for respondent, who resides in the Transvaal.

After hearing affidavits and counsel's argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J.: The only point to inquire into now is what, from the nature of the case and the dispute between the parties, would in all probability be a fair margin to allow for costs. The respondent states that she is prepared to give security for £100. The applicant says that that is insufficient, and that the costs are more likely to run into very nearly £200, and, judging from the facts put before the Court on the affidavits, it strikes me that £100 will certainly be rather a low figure, and that it is more likely, from the nature of the case, that the costs will approach £200. All the Court has now to decide is what the amount should be, because the rule of law is that security must be given for the probable amount of costs. The respondent will be ordered to give security for £200 costs, question of costs of this application to stand over.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

URMANN V. URMANN. } 1907.
} Feb. 4th.

This was an application to make absolute a certain rule nisi interdicting the South African Association from parting with any property or security belonging to the respondent, and interdicting the Standard Bank from parting with any money in their possession, belonging to the respondent, and directing him to pay to the applicant £20 a month as alimony, pending an action to be brought by her for a judicial separation, and £50 towards the costs of the said action.

Mr. Lewis was for applicant; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for respondent.

Mr. Buchanan submitted that there was no necessity to make the rule absolute. Respondent said that he was perfectly willing to take his wife back, and live peaceably with her if only she and her relatives would permit him. He urged that in any event the Court would not go beyond the order made in the application heard in 1905 (15 C.T.R., 212), when the respondent was ordered to pay applicant £10 a month alimony pendente lite and £30 towards costs of action. He suggested that the sums should be not more than £7 10s. and £20.

Without calling upon Mr. Lewis, Maasdorp, J.: Applicant alleges that she is about to institute an action for judicial separation by reason of cruelty and incompatibility of temper. She says that on various occasions she has been cruelly ill-treated by the respondent, and that by reason of incompatibility of temper it is impossible for them to live together. These statements are denied by the respondent, but he has admitted that in the past there has been trouble between himself and his wife, who went so far at one time that he actually left the house, and when the matter came into the hands of the legal advisers of the parties, they brought about a reconciliation. It has, therefore, to my mind, been proved that there is some ground upon which the action of the applicant can succeed. Whether she will ultimately be able to establish what she alleges is a question which cannot be now decided. It only remains for the Court now to decide whether she is entitled to assistance in the shape of funds from the respondent in this case. The parties are married in community of property, and, I think, therefore, she is entitled to a share in the estate, and she is entitled in litigation properly instituted to make use of such funds. The Court will, therefore, grant her assistance in the matter, but the order will take the shape of the order that was given in the former proceedings.

Mr. Lewis urged that the applicant should be allowed a larger amount of alimony than was granted in the previous order.

Maasdorp, J., ordered the respondent to pay the applicant £15 a month as alimony, pending the proposed action, and £30 towards the costs of the action, and interdicted the South African Association from parting with the securities, scrip, and jewellery, belonging to the respondent, costs to be costs in the cause.

HANNAY V. HANNAY.

This was an application calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not hand over to applicant's attorneys £150 to enable her to institute an action for divorce, £10 per mensem as alimony pendente lite, a certain sum towards expenses of her approaching confinement, and be directed to give her custody of the child.

From the affidavits, it appeared that the parties reside in the Vryburg district, respondent being a farmer. Applicant alleged that her husband had formed an illicit attachment to a native woman, and she proposes to sue him for divorce on the ground of adultery. Respondent intends to defend the action and claims in reconvention a divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery.

Mr. Upington was for applicant (Alice Adelaide Hannay); Mr. Russell was for respondent (Robert F. Hannay).

Mr. Upington said that the only questions outstanding at the present stage were as to the amount to be paid by respondent to enable applicant to bring her action, and as to the custody of the child. His offers under the other heads would be accepted by applicant. As to the funds for the action, he offered £25, and as to the custody of the child, he proposed to retain the boy and to give his mother right of access while he was present.

Affidavits having been read and counsel having been heard in argument,

Maasdorp, J.: In this case it would appear that the applicant, who was entitled to certain property and funds in the hands of the respondent, has a right to assistance in prosecuting this action, and the Court thinks that for purposes of commencing the action £25 would be enough to allow her. The respondent will be ordered to pay £35 towards costs, £8 for alimony, and £6 towards expenses of confinement. As to the custody of the child, it seems, from what the respondent himself says, that the child, up to the present, has really been in the care of the mother. It is still a child of very tender years, and it is of that age when the care of the mother is more required than the care of the father, unless something is shown in the character of either party which would induce the Court to alter the ordinary rule. The ordinary rule is that until the case is placed before the Court in such a form as to decide definitely as to who shall permanently have custody of the child, then a child of tender years must remain with the mother, and in this case I think the child can safely be left to the mother until the case is tried. Certain of the statements made by the father are wholly inexplicable, and I might almost say unjustifiable. Apparently he has been as much responsible for the child up to the present as the mother, and in spite of that he says that the child was badly brought up, that he uses bad language, and has been allowed to associate with Kaffirs. Then, again, he says that the mother is not fit to have the child, because the child would hardly be safe in her custody, and that she had stated that she wished the child to die. I can quite understand such a remark, considering the relations between herself and her husband were of that character, but I think it is most unjustifiable to construe that into meaning that the child would not be safe in her hands. She could not have meant anything of the kind. We have the evidence of two independent witnesses who have observed her treatment of the child, and who say that it has been proper and kind. Under the circumstances the Court will order that the custody is to be given to the mother, pending further order of Court. As to the forum which has been mentioned, the Court cannot now direct anything upon that, but I think there is no doubt that, unless there should be something which does not now appear, this case should be heard somewhere up in Griqualand West, either on circuit or Kimberley, and that the expenses will not be as heavy, and that £35 will go a great way towards covering them. Respondent must pay costs of this application.

FALCONER V. WILLIAMSON.

This was an application for the personal attachment of respondent for contempt of Court in failing to obey an order granted by the Court on the 13th December, directing him to give immediate delivery of certain furniture ordered and purchased by plaintiff from defendant or, alternatively, to refund the sum of £100 paid for same (16 C.T.R., 1127).

It was not denied that respondent had failed to obey the Court's order, but he said that the money was given to him for the purchase of furniture in England during a projected visit. Respondent was disappointed in not obtaining the money in England that he had expected to obtain, and he was unable to buy the furniture. He was now without employment or means, and had only recently recovered from a severe illness.

Applicant, in a replying affidavit, said that he did not authorise the respondent to spend any portion of the money on his projected trip to England, but to expend the funds in the purchase of furniture for applicant.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for applicant; Mr. Rowson was for respondent.

Mr. Buchanan having been heard in argument,

Maasdorp J.: This does not seem to be a matter for attachment of the person of the respondent for contempt of Court, because there has been no proof that there has been any wilful refusal or neglect to do what the Court ordered, while it was in the power of the defendant to carry out the order of the Court. He was ordered either to restore certain furniture or to deliver certain furniture, or pay the value thereof. There is no proof that he had ever had any of the furniture in his possession which he could have delivered. The ordinary mode of taking out an execution against the defendant would have been to have proceeded for the value of his furniture. Under the circumstances, the Court cannot grant an order for contempt, but at the same time, while I have to refuse this order, I refuse it without any costs, because the applicant certainly had a right to come to the Court to demand that his judgment should be carried out. It now appears to the Court that it cannot be done, and, consequently, the Court cannot impose it. On the other hand, the explanation given by the respondent as to his position with reference to the funds handed to him is certainly very unsatisfactory. The application is refused; no order as to costs.

Mr. Rowson urged that the applicant should be ordered to pay costs, seeing that he had failed to show any ground for the application.

Maasdorp J.: The applicant took rather a favourable view of the respondent's conduct, and that was that he used the money for the proper purpose, viz., to buy the furniture. The fact of the furniture being absent is the unsatisfactory part of the business. There will be no order as to costs.

KELLY V. R.M., WOODSTOCK.

This was an application, upon notice to the R.M. of Woodstock, to show cause why applicant should not be admitted and enrolled as an agent of the Resident Magistrate's Court in terms of section 36 of Act 20, 1856, and Act 43, 1885.

Applicant had applied to the R.M. for admission as an agent in his court on December 31 last, and had been refused. The Magistrate's ground for refusal was that although it might be that there were not two attorneys, each of whom had an office in that district on December 31, he was of opinion that the attorneys, a considerable number of whom had offices in Cape Town, within easy reach of the court, were regularly taking out process, and appearing to conduct cases in that court, and were in practice in terms of section 8, Act 43, 1885.

Dr. Greer appeared for applicant, James W. Kelly; Mr. Close appeared for respondent.

Dr. Greer, in order to avoid a postponement admitted that Cape Town attorneys did take out process in the Woodstock Court. He contended, however, that the magistrate was bound to admit as agents, in any district where there were less than two attorneys practising any person of good character and fame. The next point was whether the Cape Town attorneys who frequented the Woodstock Court could be said to be "in practice" at Woodstock. He cited the case of Johnson v. R.M. of Woodstock (16 C.T. 776), which went on the assumption that unless there were two attorneys having offices, no agent could be refused admission. It was in the mind of the Court that the fact of MacLeod having an office constituted his being in practice. The only test was whether the attorney had an office in the district or not.

Mr. Close said that this case involved the meaning of the words "in practice," while the test which was adopted in Johnson's case was whether there was a room taken. That was not the only test.

[Maasdorp J.: Did the Court lay down that there had to be two attorneys with offices?]

Mr. Close said no, although that was the point on which the application turned. The Chief Justice expressly left the point of practising by appearing, open. The Cape Town attorney who took out process in Woodstock could be said to be in practice at Woodstock. He cited the case of Van Wijk v. R.M. of Willowmore (13 S.C. 216), where the Court said that the section in question was intended, without affecting vested interests, gradually to substitute attorneys for agents.

After hearing Dr. Greer in reply,

Maasdorp, J.: If the 36th section of Act 20 of 1856 had remained in force in its original form, then undoubtedly the applicant in this case would now be entitled to be enrolled as an agent in the Magistrate's Court at Woodstock. The question is whether that enactment, as modified by section 8 of Act 43 of 1885, at all interferes with the right which the applicant possessed under the former law. The 8th section provides that: "From and after the taking effect of this Act no person in any district, where not less than two attorneys are in practice shall be admitted and enrolled as an agent in the Court of any Resident Magistrate." The question, therefore, arises whether there are at present two attorneys in the district of Woodstock. If that is answered in the affirmative then the present application must fail; if in the negative then the applicant will be entitled to succeed. This question as to whether any attorney is practising in any district seems to me to be a matter of fact—it has nothing to do with any legal definition; it has nothing to do with residence; but it is a question of fact whether a particular attorney is practising in any particular court. For that purpose it is necessary to ascertain whether it is his habit, or his custom, to practise in that court, whether his services are constantly available for litigants in that court; whether he is easily accessible to them, and whether he is willing to render the necessary service. If, together with all these qualifications, he appears constantly in the court, and renders service, then it seems to me that it is proved that he is practising in that court. In the case which has been cited at the bar—Johnson v. R.M., Woodstock (16 C.T.R. 776)—attention was directed chiefly to the point whether the attorney had an office in the district, whether he had an office which he bona fide conducted as an attorney, and it was there decided that if it were once accepted that an attorney had an office in which he bona fide carried on business, then there could be no doubt that he was practising in the district. There was no reason for the Court to go further in that case. The Court, therefore, held that two attorneys having offices in the district, clearly must have been practising there, showing that the office was not there merely as a matter of pretence, but that it was occupied by a clerk in favour of the attorney. Now, the question arises whether that excludes from practising an attorney who has not an office in the district. As I say, if we take this view as to what actual practise in court is, then it seems, to my mind, that it may exist without an occupation of any office in the district, and it is quite possible that a man might be at the Magistrate's Court always available for those who are about the precincts of the Court, and may not have residence or an office in such district, and it would be impossible to say when he is there all day, willing to render service, that he should not be regarded as practising, simply because he has no office. We have an affidavit put in, in which it is alleged that the attorneys mentioned there are regularly practising in the Magistrate's Court at Woodstock. Now, I take it, if that is a bona fide statement, they are regularly practising in that Court. It so happened that their offices were outside the boundaries of the district of Woodstock, but practically for the purpose of business they were as available in the district of Woodstock as certain persons who might reside in the district, and perhaps have an office in the district, and who, it might be, are further from the office of the Magistrate. Under the circumstances, if an attorney living beyond the boundary of Woodstock, and having an office in Cape Town, regularly makes his services available to any litigant in Woodstock, and is prepared at any moment to practise there, and certainly is willing to do it, as frequently and regularly happens, I think he is an attorney practising in the Resident Magistrate's Court. Under the circumstances, there would appear to be not only more than two, but a great many more than two attorneys, practising in Woodstock. The application must be refused, but there will be no order as to costs.

CAIRNCROSS AND ANOTHER V. FAGAN AND SOMERSET WEST STRAND MUNICIPALITY.

This was an application calling upon respondents to show cause why the first-named respondent's office as a Municipal Councillor should not be declared vacant.

Mr. Upington was for applicants; Dr. Greer was for respondents.

Dr. Greer applied for a postponement of the matter until the 19th February, to enable respondent, Fagan (Mayor of the Municipality), to prepare his case.

Mr. Upington said that he should not oppose a reasonable postponement, but he could not consent to such a long postponement as was asked for. He added that a most scandalous letter had been attached to the respondent's affidavit, which really had nothing to do with the postponement, or with the merits of the case. He did not know whether his learned friend proposed to read that letter, but if he did he (Mr. Upington) should ask his Lordship to rule that it should not be read.

[Maasdorp, J.: Is it a letter from Van Zyl and Buissinne?]

Mr. Upington: No, it is a letter written by Mr. Fagan on the 31st January.

Dr. Greer said that he would set his learned friend's mind at rest at once by saying that he did not intend to read the letter.

Maasdorp, J., asked what the ground of the application against the respondent was?

Mr. Upington said that he was alleged to have contravened the Municipal Act.

[Maasdorp, J.: By doing what?]

Mr. Greer: Participating in profits that have been earned from the Municipality.

Affidavits having been heard, and counsel having been heard in argument, Maasdorp, J.: It seems to me that there is really no necessity on the part of the applicants to hurry this matter through, or rather to have the matter heard at an early date, no pressing necessity to have it settled one way or another. It seems to me far safer to allow Mr. Fagan full time so that the matter may be ready by the 19th than to have the matter before the Court in an incomplete form if brought on at an earlier date. The matter will stand over until the 19th February, question of costs to stand over.

RYNHOUD V. RYNHOUD.

This was an application for alimony and funds to enable applicant to institute an action against her husband.

Mr. Alexander appeared for applicant; Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers appeared for respondent.

Mr. Alexander applied for a postponement until Friday next to enable applicant to file replying affidavits.

Mr. De Villiers said that he did not oppose the postponement, but there must be some limit to the affidavits filed by applicant.

Maasdorp, J., said that that matter could be decided when the motion came on for hearing. The matter would stand over until Friday next, costs to be costs in the cause.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

WAR DEPARTMENT V. { 1907.
DUFFUS AND CO. { Feb. 5th.

Auctioneer—Broker.

Plaintiffs had engaged defendant to sell certain property at a reserved price. His commission was to be one per cent. It was not disposed of at the price fixed, but some of it was thereafter sold out of hand by the auctioneer at the said price. For this sale he charged the ordinary brokerage fee of 2½ per cent.

Held, that he was entitled only to one per cent.

Mr. Upington was for the plaintiff; there was no appearance for the defendant.

Mr. Upington said that in this matter, owing to the absence of the defendant, it was impossible to serve notice of set down in the ordinary way, according to the rules, defendant being away from the Colony, and his attorneys having withdrawn from the case. It was necessary, therefore, to make application to the Court for an order as to service, and on November 1 an order was granted that notice of set down of the case be published once in the "Gazette" and once in the "Cape Times" (16 C.T.R., 958). This had been done.

[Maasdorp, J.: How is the defendant in default—of appearance or plea?]

Mr. Upington: He is simply in default of appearance. I will give your lordship a history of the case shortly. He filed a plea, the pleadings were closed, evidence was taken on commission, and he appeared before that Commission, de bene esse, by counsel. The action was one in which the plaintiffs claimed the sum of £334 2s. 6d., being money received in connection with the sale of certain landed property by Duffus (who was carrying on business in Cape Town as an auctioneer under the style of Duffus and Co.), in his capacity as auctioneer for the Imperial Government. The case arose out of the sale of buildings and ground formerly occupied by the Main Barracks in Cape Town. The declaration set forth that in March, 1903, the defendant agreed to perform all auctioneering services required by the Imperial Government for a year from the 1st April, 1903. The agreement was in writing, and provided that the defendant should be paid a commission of 1 per cent. The buildings were sold at auction on October 8, 1903, for £1,215, and the ground was sold for £22,275. The defendant had wrongfully claimed to deduct 2½ per cent., and had deducted as commission a sum of £556 17s. 6d., instead of £222 15s. The plea was that the allotments were not sold at the auction, not having reached the reserve prices, but subsequently they were sold out of hand at the reserve prices, and defendant claimed that, having sold them in his capacity as a licensed broker, he was entitled to charge 2½ per cent. commission. Plaintiffs, on their replication, denied that defendant was employed as a broker.

The evidence of Colonel Hosken, taken on commission, was read in support of the allegations in the declaration.

J. Hablutzel, partner in the firm of Messrs. J. J. Hofmeyr and Son, auctioneers, gave evidence to the effect that it was the practice, if property offered by auction did not reach the reserve and a purchaser came subsequently to the auctioneer and offered the reserve, to charged only 1 per cent. That was a reasonable and customary charge.

Judgment was given for plaintiffs for £334 2s. 6d., with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

VAN BLERK V. ESTATE AURET AND VAN BLERK.

This was an application in respect of interest of a share of inheritance under the will of the late Abraham Auret, who was the father of the applicant, for an order authorising the executors in the estate of her father to pay over the interest due to the petitioner upon receiving a receipt for such payment, without the assistance of her husband. The parties were married in community of property. A further order was asked for that the husband's signature was not necessary on the receipts for the payments.

The petitioner, in her affidavit stated that a similar application was made to and granted by the Court last year, in respect of the interest then due, but the Court refused then to make an order with reference to future moneys, and the present application concerned the year's interest, which had become due. The petitioner had lived away from her husband during the last 16 years in terms of mutual consent, and had since earned her own livelihood and supported the children. The defendant, owing to having suffered a stroke of paralysis was unable to support her. He now claimed to be entitled to share in the interest, but the plaintiff contended it was not the testator's intention that he should do so.

In an answering affidavit, the second respondent stated that he had offered to provide a suitable home for applicant. He was an invalid, but was quite capable of controlling the property for the benefit of his family.

Petitioner, in a replying affidavit, stated that she was unable to accept respondent's offer of a home, as she found he had lived with another woman, named Mollie Freer, at Claremont. She intended to sue for divorce.

A further affidavit was read to the effect that in 1894, the second respondent lived with the woman Freer at Claremont.

[Maasdorp, J.: We don't want to go back to 1894, Mr. McGregor. If he wants restitution, he can claim it.]

Mr. McGregor for applicant; Mr. Sutton for Johannes van Blerk (the second respondent).

Mr. Sutton submitted that respondent should share in the property in community, as he was entitled to do. The will could not, he contended, be construed, on motion, in such a way as to debar respondent from participating. It was a matter for a special case. It was the policy of the law to keep all property as far as possible in community, and there was nothing in the will, he contended, which could be held to keep the property out of community. The intention of the testator was to protect the wife not only against her own creditors, but also against the creditors of her husband, and to prevent the husband anticipating the usufruct, but the intention was not to keep the property out of community. Counsel quoted Bosman v. Richter (2 Searle 78), Tenne laar's Executors v. Blankenberg's Executors and Traaelaar (Buch. 1877, 54), Hidding's Trustee v. Colonial Orphan Chamber and another (2 Juta, 273).

Maasdorp, J.: In my opinion, the questions which have been raised by Mr. Sutton in argument do not call for decision in determining the present application. If the applicant and the respondent were now living in the ordinary way as husband and wife, he undoubtedly, under the marriage contract, in which community of property was retained, would have certain rights and interests in respect of moneys which come to her, and also, if creditors in insolvency were now interested in the property of either of these parties, the question would have to be decided in how far the will protects this money in the hands of the fiduciary heirs. But neither of these conditions have arisen here. As a matter of fact the applicant and the respondent are living apart by mutual consent, and I take it that under such general agreement for separate living, until it is proved that there are other terms contained in their agreement, the result would be that each would retain for his or her own benefit any moneys which would come to him or her. The husband is living apart from his wife. He is reserving for himself any benefits which he might obtain in any way. He has not contributed to her support in any respect, and consequently he has no claim to any moneys which she may acquire by means of bequest or otherwise. Nothing has been placed before the Court in the present application which makes me think that the former order should in any respect be varied. The applicant is entitled to receive these moneys. The respondent has in no way taken part in the management of her affairs for many, many years, and there is no reason why his receipt should now be considered necessary on the part of the executors. The executors will be authorised to pay the interest due to the applicant, and to take her receipt as an acquittance, and it is further ordered that in future, until this order is varied, the executors shall be authorised, from time to time, to treat her receipts as a sufficient acquittance.

Mr. Sutton: The applicant does not ask for that, my lord.

Maasdorp, J.: The respondent has really no locus standi at all. I would like to say this: If there is any wish on the part of the respondent to escape the consequences of the agreement for separation, he must set about effecting that in another way. That can only be by means of an action to compel his wife to grant to him restitution of conjugal rights. But when I say this, I will say at the same time that I do not suggest at all that the respondent should attempt to take up that position, because if what is contained in the affidavits put before the Court be facts, then the respondent will undoubtedly be unsuccessful in any such action. It is, therefore, advisable to give this further order as to future action at once.

Having heard counsel on the question of costs,

Maasdorp, J.: Under the circumstances and considering the condition of pauperism in which, one would say, the respondent appears to be, and considering that this now finally settles the question between them, in so far as it can be settled on motion, the Court will make no order as to costs.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ADMISSION. { 1907.
Feb. 5th.

Mr. Sutton moved for the admission of Alexander Peters Darras as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of East London.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

BUIRSKI V. PHIPPS.

Mr. Louwrens moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,750, with interest from 30th June, 1900, bond due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

VILJOEN V. SWANEPOEL.

Mr. Howes moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £140, with interest, bond due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

COHEN BROS. WHOLESALE V. LEVINI
(alias LEWIN).

Mr. Sutton moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £288 15s. 11d., together with £11 odd costs.

Defendant offered to pay 10s. a month. He said that he had property at Moorreesburg, but it was heavily bonded. He denied that he had misrepresented the state of his affairs to his creditors. He added that he was a hawker, but had been unable to obtain a licence. He had already served a term of imprisonment for debt at Malmesbury.

Decree granted, execution to be suspended pending payment of £5 per month, first payment to be made on the 1st March.

MILLS AND SONS AND ANOTHER V.
LING TONG SEN.

Mr. Pohl moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

MARTIENSSEN, GRIMM AND FRASER V. WILLIAMS.

Mr. Russell moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. Counsel said that the plaintiffs were the defendant's agents. Service had been made at the hotel, which was his last known place of residence. Defendant left there on the 6th January, but it was not known where he had gone.

Order granted, on the understanding that the hotel was defendant's last known place of residence.

STREETER V. MYERS AND PUXTY, TRADING AS MYERS, PUXTY AND CO.

Civil imprisonment—Partnership debt—Summons.

In order that a partner in a firm may be held individually liable for a partnership debt, the summons must clearly state that he is so held liable, nor can he be civilly imprisoned unless he be notified that failing satisfaction of the judgment, application for a writ of civil imprisonment will be made against him individually.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for a writ of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £20 6s. 3d., with costs.

Counsel said that the judgment of the Court was given against the defendants individually, and he applied for a writ of imprisonment against them individually. He admitted that he had no authority that he could produce at present in support of the application.

[Hopley, J.: You may mention the matter again if you can produce an authority for such a course. I will not make an order at present.]

At a later stage Mr. de Villiers mentioned, as authority, the case of Theunis v. Fleischer, reported in 3, E.D. Court, p. 291.

Hopley, J., said that the point was that these people had not been summoned individually, and it had not been brought to their notice that it was to be asked that they should be imprisoned individually.

Mr. de Villiers said that a partnership firm consisted of nothing else in the eyes of the law than the partners. That was where it differed from the case of a company. According to Van der Linden, a party could be summoned in a particular capacity, and was liable to civil imprisonment. Here the defendants were summoned in their capacities as partners.

Hopley, J., said there was nothing in the summons to show that this was an application against the two persons of the two defendants individually. There was nothing to show that the defendants had been levied against individually. Every bit of the proceedings, so far as he could see, was against the firm.

Mr. de Villiers said there was no such entity in law as "a firm." A firm had no right beyond the rights possessed by the partners separately.

Hopley, J.: In this case it appears to me, as far as I can make out from the papers, that two people were originally summoned as the firm of Myers, Puxty and Co., and judgment was obtained against them for something over £20, together with a certain amount for costs. Afterwards a writ of execution was issued out of the Supreme Court against the goods of Jacob Mars Myers, and Chas. Ivor Puxty, trading in co-partnership under the style of Myers, Puxty, and Co., proprietors of "Acum." The sheriff's officer proceeded to somewhere or other, and he states: "No goods or chattels of the defendants were pointed out, and after diligent search, found, whereof the exigencies of this writ or any part could be met." He doesn't say where he tried, whether at their place of business or at their residences. Presumably, as the writ is against the firm, he went to their place of business and tried to find something there to satisfy the exigencies of the writ, and failed. Upon that they are summoned to-day for civil imprisonment on a summons which again describes them as trading in co-partnership under the style of Myers, Puxty, and Co., proprietors of "Acum." Now, all these proceedings seem to me to be directed against these people trading as a firm. There is nothing in any of these papers calling upon them as individuals, or bringing to their notice their liability as individuals. I am asked on these papers to grant writs of civil imprisonment against each of these individuals separately, on the ground that, as each is liable for the debt of the firm, therefore each may be at once summarily civilly imprisoned, without any steps being taken other than a simple return of nulla bona on a writ against the firm, and executed, so far as I know, against the assets of the firm. I think that would be a wrong procedure, and though I think there is another way of getting at the partners and of eventually holding them liable to civil imprisonment, still all intermediate steps should be properly taken, and until some authority can convince me that the course ought to be different, I am inclined to hold that if a partner is to be held individually liable, it ought to be clearly put before him in the summons that he is being held liable for a partnership debt individually, and that this writ of imprisonment is to be issued against him individually. There is nothing in the present case to show the partners that they would be held liable to this extreme penalty of imprisonment as an expiation of the partnership debt. The order must be refused.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

HARTLEY V. ANDERSON. { 1907.
Feb. 5th.

Mr. Long moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £37 10s., rent, with interest a tempore morae and costs.
Order granted.

EVANS V. EVANS.

This was an action brought by Maria Catherina Evans, of Priceka, against her husband, Benjamin James Evans, a clerk, at present residing at Upington, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce.

Plaintiff, in her declaration, said that she was married to defendant in community of property at Prieska on the 12th September, 1902. There had been one child of the marriage. In January, 1906, defendant deserted her, and was still absent from her. She prayed for a decree of restitution, failing which, a decree of divorce, with custody of the child and maintenance at the rate of £5 a month, and costs.

Mr. Roux was for plaintiff; defendant was in default.

Wm. Thos. Birch, officer in charge of Marriage Register, Colonial Secretary's Office, having given evidence,

The plaintiff said that her married life had been very unhappy. In January, 1906, defendant deserted her, and left for German South-west Africa. Defendant called at Prieska in November last, and saw the child, but he did not visit witness. He was now residing at Upington. He had declined to receive witness.

Mr. Roux read a letter addressed by defendant to plaintiff, in which the former said: "You must try and work in our cause." He went on to say that he wanted to marry a young lady on a farm there and to take her round by Cape Town to Natal.

Witness (in answer to the Court) said that she had not entered into an arrangement with defendant to obtain a divorce from him.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive plaintiff on or before the 1st April, failing which to show cause on the 23rd April why an order should not be granted as prayed; except as to maintenance, which should be at the rate of £3 a month.

LOUBSER V. LOUBSER.

This was an action brought by Jasper Smith Loubser, of Malmesbury, against his wife, Anna Gysbert Loubser, also of Malmesbury, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, with custody of the children of the marriage.

Mr. Inchbold was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

W. T. Birch, clerk in charge of the Marriage Register, Colonial Secretary's Office, having given evidence, Plaintiff said that he was married to defendant on the 12th December, 1900. They had differences after the marriage, mostly about money matters. There were two children of the marriage. Defendant deserted him without assigning any cause, and he was unable to give any definite reason for her course of action. He had custody of the children at present.

By the Court: Defendant was a widow when witness married her, and had six children by her previous marriage.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to plaintiff on or before the 1st April, failing which to show cause on the 23rd April why a decree of divorce should not be granted and plaintiff be given custody of the child.

CURTIN V CURTIN.

Divorce — Adultery — Venereal disease.

Divorce granted on the ground of adultery, the only proofs being communication of venereal disease to plaintiff within a short time after the marriage and an admission made to plaintiff's attorney.

This was an action brought by Agnes H. Curtin, of Observatory-road, against her husband, David Daniel Curtin, whose present whereabouts are unknown, for a decree of divorce.

Plaintiff, in her declaration, alleged that in the year of her marriage with defendant the latter admitted adultery with some person or persons unknown to plaintiff. She prayed for a decree of divorce, custody of the minor child, alimony, and division of the joint estate.

Mr. Rowson was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

W. T. Birch, clerk in charge of the Marriage Register, Colonial Secretary's Office, having given evidence, Plaintiff said that she was married to defendant on the 6th July, 1903, and lived with him at Mountain-road, Woodstock. They did not live very happily together. Some time after marriage she found she was suffering from a disease, and in February, 1906, she called in Dr. McMullen. Defendant had been a policeman, and used to be at the Police Court. She did not know where he was now. He had left the police force. She did not wish defendant to contribute to the support of the child. She had received a letter from defendant in which he said he was going away.

Dr. John McMullen said that defendant had admitted to him that he was suffering from a venereal disease. The disease communicated to plaintiff was gonorrhoea, which only takes a few days to develop.

Edward I. Sydney, attorney, said that when he served the documents upon him Curtin admitted the adultery.

Decree of divorce granted as prayed, with costs, plaintiff to have custody of the child.

WHEELDON V. WHEELDON AND ANOTHER.

This was an action brought by Charles Wheelton, of Cape Town, against his wife, Carrie Wheelton, for a decree of divorce on the ground of her adultery with one Thomas Gibson, against whom £250 damages were claimed.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that the first defendant, to whom he was married on the 23rd June, 1898, deserted him on the 8th September, 1906, and had since been living in adultery with the second defendant, Gibson. Plaintiff claimed as against the first defendant a decree of divorce, and custody of the minor child, and as against the second defendant damages in the sum of £250, and costs of suit.

Mr. Alexander appeared for plaintiff; defendant and co-defendant did not appear.

Charles Wheelton (the plaintiff) said he was married to the first defendant on the 23rd June, 1898, in Sydney, New South Wales. There was one child living. In June, 1906, he went to England for the benefit of his health. He had previously been living with defendant on good terms for about four years. When he went to England he left his wife and child at a house in Buitengracht-street. He returned to this country in September. His wife had funds provided for her maintenance while he was away. On his return he found that his wife did not give him the welcome that he had expected. He found that there were two men in the house, boarding and lodging there. His wife seemed to be familiar with Gibson, and he spoke to her about her conduct. She said that if the boarders had to go she would go also. He noticed whispering between them in the morning. One night he heard her say in her sleep: "What shall we do, sweetheart, when Wheelton comes back." On Saturday, the 8th September, she left the house. On the following Monday Gibson and the other man left. Later he saw his wife and Gibson going into a house in Jordaan-street. Witness subsequently found in the house a very affectionate letter addressed to his wife, and signed "Tom."

Mr. Alexander (in answer to the Court) said that both the defendants seemed to be now employed at a tobacco factory.

A letter was read which the first defendant had addressed to the plaintiff a few days after she went away. In this the writer accused plaintiff of having brutally treated her, and declared that his disposition had always been "ferce, brutal, and cruel."

Plaintiff denied that he had treated his wife badly.

In answer to the Court, witness said that his wife had been constantly worrying him about a change. She always wanted to be moving about from one place to another.

[Hopley, J.: Then you will be rather glad to be rid of her.]

W. H. Fargher gave evidence to the effect that plaintiff's wife and Gibson had been living together as man and wife at a flat in Jordaan-street.

David Lytton, inquiry agent, spoke to having seen the defendants together at Palace Chambers and in Jordaan-street.

By the Court: Gibson was earning about £3 a week.

A coloured woman said that a few days before plaintiff returned from England, Mrs. Wheelton said that she was sorry she had married when she was so young.

Decree of divorce granted, plaintiff to have custody of the minor child, with right of access to the first defendant so long as the child remains in this colony, the second defendant to pay costs, but no order on the prayer for damages against him.

Hopley, J., observed that it seemed to him the plaintiff had got good ridance of a position that was by no means acceptable to him.

LABUSCAGNIE V. LABUSCAGNIE.

This was an action for restitution of conjugal rights brought by the husband against Martha E. Labuscagnie.

Mr. Pohl was for the plaintiff.

Hopley, J., pointed out that there was not proper proof of service.

Mr. Pohl asked that the case should be heard subject to proof being subsequently produced.

Evidence was given of the marriage of the parties in November, 1900.

Willem Peter Labuscagnie, the plaintiff, said that after the marriage he lived with his wife at Jamestown. Their relations were happy until 1904, when, during witness's absence from home, his wife left the house, leaving no message at all. She went to Aliwal North. He had since seen her in Aliwal North. He asked her why she did not come back, and she replied that she would never come back. She gave him no reason. There was one child of the marriage. Witness asked for the custody of the child. He had sent a cart to bring her back, but she refused to return. The marriage was in community. The defendant was living with another man, but he was willing to take her back.

Subject to production of proof of service an order for restitution was granted, defendant to return to plaintiff on or before the 1st April, failing which to show cause on April 23 why a decree of divorce should not be granted with custody of the child to the plaintiff, and forfeiture of the defendant's rights in community.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Louwrens moved for an order for the rehabilitation of George Ebenezer Boukon.

Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte GARLICK AND { 1907.
OTHERS. { Feb. 5th.

Mr. Louwrens moved for the appointment of a curator bonis in the insolvent estate of Thomas Jacobson, with power to carry on the business.

An order was granted authorising the Master to appoint a curator bonis until the provisional order of sequestration be set aside, or until the appointment of a trustee in the estate, with power to sell perishables and to collect debts.

LOWRY BROS. V. WHITE.

Mr. Louwrens moved for leave to sue the defendant by edictal citation. The defendant's whereabouts were unknown. He was last heard of in 1899. Property in Umtata was still in his name. He left Umtata to go to Mafeking to join the Imperial forces.

Leave granted, publication to be made once in the "Gazette" and once in the "Mafeking Mail." The return day was fixed for April 16.

Ex parte ROBINSON.

Mr. Alexander moved for a declaration of rights in regard to a certain deed. The petitioner borrowed a small amount—£7—from the Assets Realisation Company. It was alleged that the manager of the company—Home Drummond—got Robinson by fraud to sign documents to the effect that he had obtained a large sum of money as a loan. Home Drummond had written to England, apparently alleging that he had certain rights in respect to a life interest in English property held by petitioner, and in respect to a reversionary interest in property held by Robinson's mother. It was now sought to have it declared that Home Drummond had no such right. The liquidator of the company had satisfied himself there was fraud, and had released Mr. Robinson from any liability on the documents, beyond £7. Drummond had claimed a cession of the interest, and Mr. Robinson's representatives in England were unable to act in the matter.

A rule nisi was granted, to be served on Home Drummond, calling on him to show cause why an order should not be granted declaring that he had no such interest as the documents in question purported to give. The rule nisi was made returnable on February 12.

In re THE CAPE CANNING CO. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Benjamin moved that a final day be fixed for the filing of claims. There was a creditor in Paris whom the liquidator had not yet been able to get to file his claim. Counsel moved further for confirmation of the official liquidator's report.

The Court confirmed the report, and fixed the 15th May as the final date for proof of debt, the order to be published in the "Cape Times."

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

BURCHELL V. BURCHELL. { 1907.
{ Feb. 6th.

Will—Attestation—Wills' Ordinance, 15 of 1845.

A will was signed at the foot thereof by the testator's mark, but the witnesses who saw him make the mark did not attest the will until after his death.

Held, that as the Wills' Ordinance of 1845 required that the witnesses should attest and subscribe the will in the presence of the person executing the same, the will in question was invalid.

This was an action to set aside a certain will.

The declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff James Edward Llewellyn Burchell has recently attained full age and is the eldest son of the late James Mathew William Charles Burchell who died in the division of Port Elizabeth on the 14th March, 1889.

2. The first defendant, Ignatius Theodore Price Burchell is a brother of the plaintiff's said father and the second defendant, Annie Violet Sophia Watson (born Daniell) is the plaintiff's mother, who, after her first husband's death, was, and is still, married without community of goods to Thomas James Watson, by whom she is assisted so far as is necessary in this suit.

3. The said defendants, together with the plaintiff's grandfather, named James Edward Llewellyn Burchell, and another brother of the plaintiff's father, named Gilbert Farmer Price Burchell, after the death of the plaintiff's father received on the 2nd day of April, 1889, from the Master of this Honourable Court letters purporting to appoint them executors testamentary to administer the estate of his late father pursuant to the document hereinafter referred to, and the first and second defendants now alone survive of the said four persons, and are sued in their capacity as the holders of the said letters of administration.

4. The plaintiff annexes hereunto a copy of a document which was filed in the Master's Office on the 1st April, 1889, as the last will and testament of his late father, and specially begs to refer to the original of the said document when produced at the trial of this cause.

5. The said document was not and is not the true and legal last will and testament of the plaintiff's said father by reason of the matters hereinafter set forth.

6. At the time of the alleged execution by the plaintiff's father of the said document he lay dying as the result of an accidental gun-shot wound at his farm "Duine," he was not in health of body nor of sound and disposing mind, nor was he capable of making nor did he make the dispositions of his property set forth in the said document which was on that day, to wit the 14th March, 1889, drawn up on six leaves at the said farm "Duine," by one Thomas O'Brien, who purports to be one of the witnesses to the alleged will.

7. The said document, the contents whereof were not explained to the plaintiff's father, purports to bear marks representing his signature at ten places on the six leaves aforesaid, but of the said ten marks one only was made by the plaintiff's father, and he died almost immediately thereafter.

8. John George Uppley, a medical attendant, and the said Thomas O'Brien were, amongst others, present when the plaintiff's father made the said mark, and at the instance of the said O'Brien the said Uppley at the said farm and after the death of the plaintiff's said father, signed as a witness to the said mark, and thereafter at the town of Port Elizabeth some days after the said death the said John George Uppley, also at the instance of the said O'Brien and on his representation that the document must be signed and witnessed on every page did, in ignorance of the law, sign as a witness to the other marks then purporting to have been made by the plaintiff's said father as his signature.

9. The plaintiff says that the said document was not drawn up upon instructions given by his father, nor was it explained to him, nor had he capacity to execute the same, nor did he execute it in due and proper form of law as his last will and testament, in accordance with the provisions of Ordinance No. 15 of 1845.

10. The estate of his late father remains in the hands or under the control of the defendants, and in part is represented by funds in the hands of the Master of this Honourable Court, who is joined as a party to this suit.

Wherefore the plaintiff prays for

(a) An order declaring that the said document is not the last will and testament of the late James Mathew William Charles Burchell;

(b) An order setting aside the appointment of the first and second defendants under the letters of administration aforesaid;

(c) An order compelling the first and second defendants duly to account to an executor or executors dative to be duly appointed for their administration under the said letters of the assets of the estate of the late James Mathew William Charles Burchell;

(d) Other relief;

(e) Costs of suit out of the said estate.

To this declaration, the second defendant pleaded as follows:

Sophia Watson says that in so far as the allegations in the declaration relate to her, she acted bona fide in the belief that the will under which the Master of this Hon. Court issued Letters of Confirmation to her, inter alia as executrix was valid and of full legal force and effect; otherwise she submits to such judgment as to this Hon. Court may seem fit and prays that she may be indemnified in her costs out of the estate.

The fourth defendant pleaded:

1. The fourth defendant is the widow of the late James Edward Llewellyn Burchell, senr., and is the mother of the late James Matthew William Charles Burchell. She intervenes by leave of this Hon. Court granted 15th January, 1907.

2. Paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 are admitted save that the fourth defendant says that the first and second defendants were and are the duly appointed executors testamentary of the said estate.

3. Paragraph 4 is admitted, save that the fourth defendant craves leave to refer for greater certainty to the original of the said document when produced at the trial.

4. Paragraph 10 is admitted.

5. The said document so filed in the Master's office is the last will and testament of the said late James Matthew William Charles Burchell, and was by him on the 14th March, 1889, duly executed according to law as his last will and testament in the presence of the said Uppleby and O'Brien, who duly witnessed the same, at a time when the said Burchell lay dying of a gun-shot wound, accidentally inflicted, and when the said Burchell was of sound and disposing mind. The said document was drawn up by the said O'Brien on the said date.

6. Save as above, the fourth defendant denies the allegations in paragraphs 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 as specifically as if set out herein!

The replication to the plea of the fourth defendant was general.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. W. P. Buchanan) for plaintiff. Mr. Benjamin for the second defendant (Mrs. Watson). The fourth defendant was not represented.

Dr. Uppleby gave evidence to the effect that he was called to see Burchell. A document was produced by O'Brien, which witness signed. He had made an autopsy before he signed. He signed the document at the bottom of the page without knowing it was a will. Later on O'Brien brought the will to witness, and he was told that he must sign it on each of the six pages. He accordingly did so. With the exception of one signature none was made at the farm. All the others were made at his consulting room. When witness was asked to sign the will the testator was not in a fit state to make a series of elaborate dispositions.

By the Court: Witness was 27 or 28 years of age when he signed the will; he had been in practice about three years at the time. He did not put his signature on the will before the man died.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It does seem strange that a man at your age should have thought a signature made to a will after the man had died was valid.]

All I can say is that it does seem somewhat foolish, but I had no reason to suppose there was anything wrong. I suppose it was a negligent sort of thing to do.

James E. Daniel (brother of Mrs. Watson, the second-named defendant) said that he was a member of the hunting party on the day of the accident. Witness helped to carry deceased to the house. When O'Brien came he went up to the dying man, put a pen in his hand and helped the testator to make his mark. The testator then died. Dr. Uppleby signed the will some time after death had taken place. The will was not read over to deceased. No instructions were taken by O'Brien from deceased.

By the Court: Witness was about 22 years of age when the accident took place. He was aware that his sister had a suit afterwards in regard to the will.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did it never strike you all that time that that will might be invalid owing to the manner in which it was made?]

Witness: No, my lord; I was quite ignorant about wills.

In further reply to the Court, witness said that he did not tell anybody until about eight months ago about the suspicious circumstances under which the will was made.

Mr. Benjamin said that he would like to call Mrs. Watson to explain her position in regard to the will.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Are you defending?]

Mr. Benjamin: No, we are submitting to the judgment of the Court.

Mr. Schreiner: There is no defence to the action.

Mrs. Annie Violet S. Watson said that her former husband was Mr. Burchell, who met with an accident in March, 1889. When he was brought home he was very ill. Witness was only in the room where he was placed towards the last. Mr. O'Brien was not in the room when she went in. O'Brien went in just before her husband died. He went to the bedside and guided her husband's hand, and made a cross on a paper. She did not know that it was a will. She thought the document had something to do with the accident. Later on O'Brien called and asked about the will. Witness said that she did not know there was a will; O'Brien said that he had fixed it up, and a search resulted in the discovery of the document.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did you look upon this as a valid will?]

Witness: I did not know; I was very ignorant. My husband told me he had no will.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You had a law suit about this will; did you never tell anybody about the circumstances under which the supposed will was made?]

I explained everything to my attorneys, and, in face of the signatures, they laughed at the idea of Dr. Uppleby and Mr. O'Brien having done such a thing. They advised me to fight for my half share.

Mr. Schreiner said that he would like to call the plaintiff.

James Edward Llewellyn Burchell (the plaintiff) said that he came of age in June last. Just before he came of age he asked his mother what his inheritance would be. His mother said that he would get less, because everything was left to the brothers and sisters. This led him to make an investigation.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What would be the result if the will is set aside?]

Mr. Schreiner said that the brothers and sisters would drop out. No money had been paid out pending the death of the grandmother. The brothers and sisters had up to the present received nothing.

Witness (in further evidence) said that he had two brothers and sisters, who were both minors. Witness knew that the law agent O'Brien had been working in the present case.

[De Villiers, C.J., asked Mr. Schreiner whether there was any limit of time within which a will may be set aside?]

Mr. Schreiner said that there was not. Counsel went on to severely comment upon the conduct of O'Brien.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is quite clear that the alleged will in suit was wholly invalid. The Wills Ordinance requires not only that the testator shall sign the will in the presence of the witnesses present at the time, but also that such witnesses shall attest and subscribe or shall have attested and subscribed the will in the presence of the person executing the same. The two alleged witnesses to this will were Dr. Uppleby and Mr. O'Brien. Mr. O'Brien has not come to state what took place, but we have the clear evidence of Dr. Uppleby, one of the witnesses, that he did not attest this will until after he had performed autopsy on the deceased man, and then he only signed at the foot of it, and such will, such alleged will, was afterwards brought to him by Mr. O'Brien at his consulting room, where he signed the will in other portions where his signature was required.

ed. It is quite clear from his evidence that the other witness, O'Brien, had no opportunity of signing the will in the presence of the deceased. Mr. Daniels's evidence is also clear on the point. He was in the room as well as the doctor until the man died, and there would be no opportunity for Mr. O'Brien to attest the will, before the man's death without these witnesses seeing it. They are satisfied that nothing of the kind could have taken place. I am satisfied, therefore, that not only the signature of Dr. Uppleby, but also the signature of Mr. O'Brien was attached to the will after the death of deceased, and that would be quite sufficient to invalidate the will. But then there are other points in the case which would tend to invalidate the will. The concluding portion of the 3rd section of Ordinance 15, 1845, says that "where the instrument shall be or shall have been written upon more leaves than one, the party executing the same and the witnesses shall have signed their names upon at least one side of every leaf upon which the instrument shall be or shall have been written." This instrument is written upon several leaves, and the mark of the testator, according to the witnesses, was only made at one place, that is at the foot of the will. All the remaining marks, which purport to be duly attested, must, therefore, have been made upon the will after the death of the testator, and, consequently, the will was wholly invalid. The only possible question that might be raised in this case is whether, after the lapse of eighteen years from the making of the alleged will, after it had been acted upon by all persons interested in it, the Court should now take upon itself to set aside the will. Well, I confess in every case of this kind I should require the very strongest evidence of invalidity before I took upon myself to set aside a will of this kind. But, if the invalidity is clearly proved, and the persons interested in this will do not come forward to disprove the facts relied upon on behalf of the plaintiff, I think that the Court has no option in the matter, especially as there is no proof in the present case that there has been any acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff in an illegal or invalid will being acted upon for so many years. The plaintiff has only recently come of age, and the invalidity of the will was discovered only shortly before he came of age, and he has done nothing, in my opinion, to prevent him now from asserting the rights which he would have as the son of the deceased, as one of the heirs of the testator, to claim that the will so invalidly executed should be set aside. The judgment of the Court, therefore, is that the will be set aside. As to the costs, I think they should come out of the estate.

Mr. Schreiner mentioned the costs of Ignatius Burchell, one of the executors, to whom the Ægis Insurance Co., who administered the estate, had been directed to pay over a sum of £350 from the funds, to enable him to defend the action. Counsel submitted that Ignatius Burchell should be ordered to repay the sum of £350 intact, and that he should pay the costs of the application which he had made.

His Lordship said that Ignatius Burchell might have no means, and then it would be upon his attorneys, Messrs. Walker and Jacobsohn, to pay back this money if he made such an order. He did not think that, without notice, he could make such an order.

Mr. Benjamin mentioned the matter of the costs incurred by Mrs. Watson, and said he took it that those costs would come out of the estate.

His Lordship said he did not suppose counsel for plaintiff would object.

Mr. Schreiner: Between mother and children, I take it, costs may come out of the estate.

His Lordship gave judgment in terms of prayers (a) and (b) of the declaration, costs of the action to be paid by the estate, excepting costs of the application by Ignatius Burchell, for leave to purge his default of plea, which must be paid by the said Ignatius Burchell. The costs of Mrs. Watson would be included as part of the costs of the action.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Findlay and Tait. Defendants' Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton; Syfret, Goddington and Low; Walker and Jacobsohn.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

MCKINNON V. MCKINNON. { 1907.
Feb. 6th.

This matter came on for argument upon an exception taken by the defendant in the action to the plaintiff's plea in reconvention. The parties reside next door to each other at Woodstock.

McKinnon said that he was too poor to employ counsel to argue his exception.

The matrimonial affairs of plaintiff and her husband had previously been before the Court. She had instituted an action against him for judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty and threats, and applies for custody of the minor child and alimony. Defendant, in his plea, denied the allegations of violence and threats, and in recon-vention, he claimed an order for restitution of conjugal rights, or, in the alternative, a decree of divorce. Plaintiff, in her replication, joined issue, and for a plea in reconvention, craved leave to refer to the allegations in the claim in reconvention, and prayed that the claim in reconvention be dismissed. The defendant filed an exception to the replication, on the ground that it was bad in law, and was not sufficient answer to the defendant (now plaintiff in reconvention).

Excipient appeared in person; Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers appeared for respondent (plaintiff in the action).

Mr. De Villiers said he took it that the defendant excepted to the plea in reconvention.

Excipient said that his wife had not pleaded to the claim in reconvention, as required by law.

His Lordship said that the points now raised by the excipient should be raised at the trial. Instead of saving costs, he was simply wasting costs. The exception would be dismissed, question of costs to stand over.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPILEY.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

SOMERSET WEST STRAND { 1907.
MUNICIPALITY V. KYRAN. { Feb. 6th.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on an unsatisfied judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court of Somerset Strand for £5 for Municipal rates, and £2 2s. 7d., £8 14s. 5d., and £2 5s. 4d. costs in obtaining the judgment. A decree of civil imprisonment had been granted against the defendant for a period of one month, but that time had lapsed. Counsel also applied to have the property declared executable.

Order granted.

CORDES V. WORTREICH.

Mr. Palmer moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,700, with interest, and that the property be declared executable and the rents attached.

Order granted.

ORKTEL V. JACOBS.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £475, with interest, less £12 paid on account, and that the property be declared executable. The bond became due by reason of non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

ESTATE MACGREGOR V. PATTISON AND MORRIS.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £12,000, with interest, less £300 paid off. The bond became due through non-payment of interest. Counsel also moved to have the property specially hypothecated declared executable, and for judgment against the defendant firm and the members individually.
Order granted.

NORWICH UNION LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY V. BARSDORF.

Dr. Rainsford was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Alexander was for the defendant.

Dr. Rainsford moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, with interest, together with £17 13s. 3d. and £14, premiums due on the bond, and £2, fire insurance, paid by the plaintiff. Counsel also moved to have the property declared executable. The bond was called up by reason of the terms.

Mr. Alexander read an affidavit by the defendant, which set out that he did not remember receiving notice calling up the bond. He contended that the company did not adhere to a subsequent agreement, and that the bond was not legally due.

A replying affidavit set out that the notice had been delivered personally at the office of the defendant. The policy on the insurance of the defendant's life had lapsed, by reason of non-payment thereon.

Hopley, J., said he thought there should be provisional sentence in this case for £500 and for the premium paid on the fire insurance over the property. As to the rest, he could not say that the bond had clearly shown what the premiums of the insurance referred to. It might refer to the premium of the fire insurance. Provisional sentence would be granted for £500 and £2, with costs, and the property be declared executable.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

TEUBES V. KALTWASSER. { 1907.
Feb. 6th.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £45, house rent, with interest and costs.

Judgment as prayed.

STEER V. ROBERTSON.

Mr. Russell moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £113 16s. 6d., balance of account for money lent, and professional services rendered to the defendant.

Judgment as prayed.

WIENER AND CO. V. DE VRIES AND ANOTHER.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment under Rule 329 in default of plea for £342 3s. 3d. with interest and costs.

Judgment as prayed.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte GROENEWALD.

Mr. Louwrens was for the applicant and Mr. Gardiner was for respondent. Mr. Louwrens moved to have a rule nisi made absolute calling on the respondent to show cause why the applicant should not be allowed to appeal against a decree of civil imprisonment granted against him by the Resident Magistrate of Bredasdorp on an unsatisfied judgment for £103 3s. 10d.

The affidavit of the petitioner set out that on November 26 last the plaintiff obtained a decree of civil imprisonment against him, notwithstanding the fact that the petitioner had no property to satisfy the judgment. He submitted he was entitled to have leave to appeal. He was not possessed of property to the value of £10. Counsel moved for leave to prosecute the appeal in forma pauperis, and that the decree should be stayed pending the decision of the appeal.

The affidavit of the respondent set out that the applicant, before the action was instituted, was in possession of property of considerable value. The agent of the applicant had actually paid the first instalment, which had been fixed at 7s. 6d. a month. Mr. Gardiner contended that the defendant had to prove to the satisfaction of the Court that he had no means. The onus was not upon the plaintiff. The applicant had not satisfied the Magistrate that he had no means. He was able to find money for his divorce, and after his insolvency he had given away a cart and horse to his son to pay a debt. Mr. Louwrens said that it was nowhere stated in the evidence that this man was capable of earning any money at all. The only evidence which the Magistrate admitted was the evidence of the defendant himself, in which he said he had no means. How was it possible for this man, who was earning nothing and living on other people, within four days to raise sufficient money to avoid arrest for civil imprisonment. It was always open to the plaintiff to come to Court if the applicant came into any property or was earning any money, and the granting of the appeal was no injustice to the respondent.

Hopley, J.: All the evidence in this particular case seems to be one way. There is no evidence that the man has even £5 in the world. It seems to me that there is good ground for appeal. The evidence is that he is not possessed of £10, and so the rule will be made absolute and leave granted to appeal in forma pauperis. Mr. Louwrens to act as counsel and Messrs. Herold and Gie as attorneys.

Ex parte ESTATE HANEKOM.

Mr. De Waal moved for leave to the executor in the estate to mortgage certain property for the sum of £700. The money was required to make improvements on the farm. The Master's report was favourable, and all the interested parties were agreeable.

Application granted.

In re "THE OWL," LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Dr. Greer, on behalf of the official liquidator, moved for the confirmation of the first and final report, for the distribution of the assets in terms of the account annexed, and for the dissolution of the company.

Application granted.

OTTESTROM V. ESTATE STEPHAN BROS.

Dr. Greer, for the applicant, said the defendants were not appearing. Leave was granted to the plaintiff to sue in forma pauperis for compensation for certain injuries which he alleged he received in the service of the defendants. Counsel moved for leave to take evidence of certain witnesses on commission at Port Nolloth. Counsel suggested the Resident Magistrate of Port Nolloth as commissioner.

Commission granted as prayed, the Resident Magistrate of Port Nolloth to act as commissioner.

SCOTT V. CALDER.

This matter came before the Court on a notice of motion calling on the respondent to show cause why the taxation by the taxing officer of the plaintiff's bill of costs should not be reviewed in respect of the preparation of plaintiff's declaration, and why the cost of preparing that and incidental to the declaration should not be disallowed.

From the affidavits it appeared that the present respondent on January 21 took out a summons against applicant for a lump sum of money. The summons was served on defendant at Paarl on January 22, and on January 23 applicant's (defendant's) attorney wrote to plaintiff's attorney asking for a detailed account. On January 25 defendant's attorney received this detailed account, and was informed that if the account was not settled within two days plaintiff's declaration would be filed. January 27 was a Sunday, and on Monday, 29th, defendant came in, and after consultation with his attorney, tendered £27 5s. 6d. in full settlement, with taxed costs. In the meantime, however, on the 29th counsel had been instructed to draft plaintiff's declaration. On January 31 the parties attended before the taxing master, who in spite of defendant's objection that the expenses incurred with regard to the declaration were unnecessary, allowed the cost of preparing the declaration. The taxing officer reported that he considered that defendant had had ample time to settle, and he overruled the objection against allowing the costs in respect of the declaration.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers appeared for the applicant; Mr. De Waal appeared for the respondent.

Mr. De Villiers submitted that the taxing master was wrong. Costs in order to be allowed between party and party had to be necessary costs; Alexander v. Armstrong (Buch. 1879, p. 233). He referred to the White Book (Annual Practice), under the heading "Lump Sums," where it was laid down that a plaintiff claiming a "lump sum" must give particulars of how the lump sum has been made up. The taxing officer erred in not applying the principle that the costs incurred had to be necessary costs. Defendant got a detailed account on January 26, and he paid it on January 29. Of the intervening days one was a Saturday and one a Sunday.

Hopley, J., said that it was not necessary to hear Mr. De Waal. The principle that costs should not be unnecessarily incurred was well known and applied by all taxing masters, but in this case the costs objected to were not unnecessarily or unreasonably incurred. On January 22 the applicant was served with a summons claiming something like £40. On the 23rd he came in from Paarl and saw his attorney, and there was nothing to have prevented him from giving all necessary information to his attorney, as he must have known what kind of debts he had incurred. He must have known that some of the amounts claimed were for drinks and others for gambling debts. On January 24th applicant's attorney wrote for a specified account, and on the 25th an account was sent with the distinct warning that it had to be settled within two days, or counsel would be instructed to draft the declaration. At this stage applicant's attorney did not say that the time was too short, and that he wanted a longer period, as his client was at the Paarl. He took no such steps but preferred to communicate with his client through the post. If any necessary costs had been incurred they would seem to have been caused by the conduct of applicant's attorney. The taxing master allowed the costs, and his taxation was reasonable. The application would be refused, with costs.

Ex parte SOLGREEN.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved on behalf of petitioner for an order authorising the Master to pay her a certain sum of money standing to her credit. The Master had refused to pay out this sum of money, unless there was a receipt by petitioner's husband, who had not been heard of for a long time, and who had been reported to have been killed in the late Anglo-Boer war.

The Court authorised the Master to pay petitioner half of the sum of money in question on her sole receipt, and granted a rule nisi returnable May 2, calling on the husband, Olif Solgreen, to be published once in the "Gazette," to show cause why the death of the said Solgreen should not be presumed, and why the Master should not be authorised to pay out the balance.

SOUTH AFRICAN NEWSPAPER CO. AND OTHERS V. S.A. GENERAL WORKERS' UNION LOCK-OUT CIGARETTE WORKERS' CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD.

Dr. Greer, on behalf of petitioners, moved for an order placing the respondent company under compulsory sequestration. The company was unable to pay its debts, and creditors had resolved to apply for a sequestration order.

The Court granted a rule nisi calling on respondents to show cause on April 18 why an order should not be granted as prayed, and why Mr. Ise Levy should not be appointed official liquidator, rule to be published once in the "Cape Times," and once in the "South African News." Mr. Ise Levy was appointed provisional liquidator of the company, with the power to sell perishables.

Ex parte HOOK.

Mr. Gardiner, on behalf of petitioner, applied for an order authorising him to sell and pass transfer of certain two properties at King William's Town, belonging to the estate of the late Jane Elizabeth Hook. The properties were not bringing in any revenue, and the addresses of some of the heirs were unknown.

Ordered as prayed.

Ex parte ARDERNE.

Mr. D. M. Buchanan obtained leave on behalf of Henry Mathew Arderne to pass transfer to himself of certain property at Claremont, bought at a public auction, from an estate of which petitioner was executor.

WITTHUHN V. SMIT.

On the motion of Mr. Van der Byl this case was removed to the ensuing Circuit Court at Dordrecht for trial. There was a consent paper.

Ex parte GREYLING.

Mr. Inghold, on behalf of the petitioner, obtained an order authorising the transfer of a certain farm, Spits Punt, part of the farm Honingneestkloof, district Barkly East, to the petitioner, this being one-fourth share of the farm Honingneestkloof, bequeathed undivided to petitioner subject to a fidei commissum in favour of applicant's children.

MARSH V. SCHWARTZ AND THE MESSENGER OF THE RESIDENT MAGISTRATE'S COURT OF CAPE TOWN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones, on behalf of the applicant, obtained a rule nisi to operate as a temporary interdict, calling on the respondents to show cause on Tuesday, February 12, why they should not be restrained from attaching or dealing with certain fixtures and other articles belonging to a property bonded to the applicant, and why they should not be ordered to pay the costs of these proceedings.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and a Jury.]

ROLLS V. TABLE BAY { 1907.
HARBOUR BOARD. { Feb. 7th.

Personal injury—Negligence.

This was an action brought by Walter Rolls, partner in the furnishing business of Hills and Rolls, to recover from the Table Bay Harbour Board £1,000 for damages sustained during the progress of the regatta in Table Bay on Saturday, February 28 last. Mr. Russell appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Sutton) was for the defendants.

The plaintiff in course of his evidence said that on the Saturday in question he was invited with Mr. Fairbourne to accompany Mr. Weller in a ship's life-boat to witness a regatta in Table Bay. Weller and Fairbourne handled the oars, and plaintiff sat in the stern. He took very little part in the management and control of the boat beyond moving the tiller according to instructions. When they arrived at a barge which was moored in the bay, they tied the bow of the boat to the stern of the barge, and then proceeded to watch a race that was in progress. He did not know that the Harbour Board tug was near them until he heard Weller shout: "Look out; where are you going?" On turning round, he saw that the tug was very close, and appeared as if it was going to crash into the boat. He did not think the tug was 20 feet away at the time. Thinking his life was in danger he prepared to cling on to the tug when she struck the boat. The tug did not slacken speed, and plaintiff put his hand on the gunwale of the boat to save himself, when his right hand was jammed between the tug and the boat. He was lifted to the tug and subsequently sent to the New Somerset Hospital. The two fingers of the right hand and the lower part of the hand were crushed, and Dr. Johnson and Dr. Coats amputated the fingers. On the day of the accident and for many days afterwards he suffered pain. For three or four weeks he had to attend the hospital, and during that time he could not attend to his business. After the first week he did not suffer so much pain. At present he was unable to attend to his business as he did before. After his partner left, witness could not attend to the business. He had to engage another man to help him, and of course he had to pay his assistant—the salary was £10 a month. Witness could write with his hand, but not so well as before. The hand seemed to swell up after a little work. Witness was not an expert boatman, but he looked upon Mr. Weller as an expert boatman. Witness could not have done anything to avoid the accident.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He did not know that the barge was there as a starting point or a finishing point. There was nothing else to tie a boat to, and they thought it was a good place to witness the finish of the race. About the centre of the square part they moored to the barge. He would swear positively that the tug never whistled or that anyone on the barge called out to him to look out. He was a witness in a Magistrate's Court case in which Mr. Weller sued for the value of the boat, and the evidence that there was a warning was untrue. Witness could not say that the boat was pulled three feet before the accident occurred. The tug was going at the rate of four to five miles an hour. At that time the race was not already over. Immediately after two pistol shots Weller shouted out: "Look out; where are you coming to?" Witness did not know that he had no business there to tie up to the barge. He heard no shouting whatever from the tug or the barge. There had been a falling-off in his business since the accident.

James William Hartman, senior dresser at the Somerset Hospital, said that in April last year he received the plaintiff, who was very weak. Witness prepared the plaintiff for the operation which was necessary.

Arthur James Weller, electrician, stated he had had experience of boats all his life. The boat in question he had for about two months. The tug was running at the rate of about three or four miles an hour. Witness shouted to those on the tug to look out, but they did not alter its course. Witness did not see exactly what happened to the plaintiff, but saw blood on the side of the tug and on the side of the boat. Witness pulled on the rope to get out of the way, as he had no time to do anything else. On the tug were policemen and several ladies.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: When the tug was about 30 yards off, he did not hear a whistle. Witness was sitting in the bow of the boat watching the race, when the tug was about 30 yards away. There was about 6 feet of a pull on the painter, and he only had time to pull about 3 feet when the accident occurred. If he had had a few seconds more, he could have pulled the boat out of danger. If he had not pulled the boat, the tug would have struck it amidships. If anyone had called from the barge he would willingly have gone out of the way. The tug first struck the boat, and then the barge. Witness knew that the barge was there as a starting and finishing place for the regatta. Some of the officials were aboard the barge. He did not know that the starter was conveyed from the barge by the tug.

John Henry Fairbourn gave corroborative evidence.

Mr. Russell closed his case.

Mr. Upington called Alexander Watermeyer, a clerk in the Harbour Board, who stated that he heard the whistle of the tug when she was quite 20 yards away. The tug was coming along dead slow. He saw the plaintiff's head out at the end of the barge. Witness warned the plaintiff to get away several times, including the time when the tug was approaching. There was plenty of time to pull the boat out of danger. He would swear that the tug whistled loud enough for those on the boat to hear. At the time of the accident his impression was that it was caused through sheer ignorance and want of watermanship on the part of the three men in the boat. The slightest shove would have got them clear of the tug.

Cross-examined by Mr. Russell: He did not see the actual striking of the boat. Witness could certainly have got the boat out of the way. If the tug had only been 10 feet away, there was ample time to get out of danger. At the time of the whistle blowing he warned this particular boat to get out of the way, but he could not say that he did so previously. Boats were not supposed to be alongside the barge. Witness did not know of any other boats being alongside at the time.

Another witness who was on the tug said he shouted to the three men in the boat, and with the warning given them they ought to have known which course the tug was going to take. He was absolutely sure the small rowing boat could have got out of the way. When they came alongside the tug was simply drifting; she was hardly going at the rate of a mile an hour. The tug did not collide with any other boat that afternoon.

George Bellowes, a farmer, who was also on the tug at the time of the accident, stated that he was sitting at the bow, and there was nothing to interrupt his view. He remembered the tug changing her course, and the whistle sounding when about twenty-five or thirty yards off the barge. The rowing boat was lying at the back of the barge. Witness shouted loudly when about twelve or fifteen yards off the boat. "Look out." He did not remember anything been done to get the rowing boat out of the way. After witness shouted there was time for the boat to get clear. He did not think those in the rowing boat knew what they were doing, and he attributed the accident to mismanagement.

F

David Thomas Phillips, sergeant in the Dock Police, said he was on board the tug when the accident took place. He remembered the tug altering her course to approach the barge, and the whistle sounding. Witness was standing amidships, and had a clear view of the rowing boat. Boats were not allowed to moor up to the barge. Witness heard shouts from the barge and the tug, and between the time of the warnings and the accident there was time for the occupants of the boat to get out of danger. One pull would have got them out of the way.

The jury, after an absence of an hour and ten minutes, returned with a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount of £307.

Judgment was accordingly entered for the plaintiff for that amount, with costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné. Defendants' Attorneys: Reid and Nephew.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

SCHALKWYK V. FRASERBURG 1907.
DIVISIONAL COUNCIL. (Feb. 7th.

Declaration of rights—Infringement of rights—Exception.

A declaration alleged that the plaintiff fenced his farm, as he lawfully might, by means of a fence crossing a certain track, that the defendant Council thereupon gave him notice to open the road or to place proper swing gates thereon, failing which, the Council would take legal proceedings against him, and that the plaintiff apprehended that he might therefore be disturbed in his quiet possession. The declaration therefore prayed for a declaration of rights to the effect that the Council is not entitled to make the claim as to the said track.

Held, on exception taken by the defendant Council, that the declaration disclosed no ground of action, inasmuch as the notice constituted no infringement of the plaintiff's legal rights.

This was an argument on exceptions. The declaration stated that the plaintiff was the owner of a certain farm called "Hoplan" or "De Bakken," in the district of Fraserburg, and that he was lawfully entitled to fence his property. In April last the defendant Council sent him a letter requiring him to open certain roads or provide proper swing gates therefor, failing which legal proceedings would be instituted. The plaintiff admitted that he had closed one track, and claimed in respect of it a declaration of rights. To this declaration the defendants excepted as disclosing no cause of action against them.

Mr. McGregor appeared for the ex-cipients (defendants in the action); Mr. Close appeared for the plaintiff.

Mr. McGregor, in argument, stated that a public body was free to act in the public interest if it did so bona-fide (Smith v. South African Newspaper Company, 16 C.T.R., 440). An action might possibly have been brought against actual trespassers, but not against the Divisional Council which had been guilty of no obstruction. If the Council had asserted a right of action and delayed in bringing it then the plaintiff could have proceeded against them for perpetual silence (Van der Linden, p. 425, Henry's Translation). By way of analogy, counsel referred to Slander of Title in English Law, and quoted Brooke v. Rowle (19 L.J. Ex., p. 13). A mere denial of rights was not such an interference as afforded a right of action. He quoted Colonial Government v. Stephan Bros. (17 S.C.R., p. 59).

Mr. Close quoted Ball on Torts (p. 100), and said that Slander of Title was a purely English form of action, and that in this case there was no ground for an action for perpetual silence. The threat of legal proceedings by the Council was an act upon which an action for declaration of rights could be grounded, because it infringed the plaintiff's right of quiet use and enjoyment.

Mr. McGregor having been heard in reply,

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff, in his declaration, states that he is the owner of a certain farm and that he is lawfully entitled to fence in his farm, and that in so doing he had lawfully, by a fence, closed a certain track where it crossed the common boundary of his farm and the adjoining property. He further alleges that the defendant Council had written to him giving him notice that the Divisional Council of Fraserburg had received certain complaints to the effect that he had closed certain roads, and in terms of sections 153 and 154 of Act 40, 1889, and section 1 of Act 31, 1896, he must open the said road or provide proper swing gates therefor, failing which the Council would be compelled to institute legal proceedings against him. The declaration further alleges that the plaintiff apprehends that he may hereafter be disturbed in his lawful and quiet possession and use and enjoyment of the farm by reason of the claims made and not withdrawn in respect of the said track by the Council, and the prayer is for a declaration of rights in respect of the said track and the use thereof, and more particularly, a declaration that the Council is not entitled to make the claims as to the said track in annexure contained. The defendant Council has excepted to this declaration on the ground that it discloses no ground of action. On behalf of the plaintiff, no case has been cited to support an action in the present form, while counsel in support of the exception has cited the case of Colonial Government v. Stephan Bros., which seems to me to be entirely in point. The head note of that case is: "Plaintiff is not entitled to claim a declaration of rights, merely because such rights have been disputed by the defendant, but he must prove an infringement of one or more of such rights." In giving judgment, the Court referred to the law as to perpetual silence, and pointed out that under certain circumstances a person who makes a claim to certain rights may be put to silence and prevented from asserting those claims, but the mere fact that a dispute had arisen between the parties does not give either party a right to a declaration of rights unless the opposing party has done some overt act which amounts to an infringement of such rights. Counsel for the plaintiff in the present case contends that there has been an infringement of rights inasmuch as under the 153rd section "any gate placed across any public road, path, or track which is not a swing gate substantially constructed and properly hung, shall be deemed to be unlawfully so placed, and the owner or occupier of such property whereon such gate is placed shall in every case be liable to such penalties and obligations as would be incurred by any person wilfully obstructing such public road, path, or track." But it would lie on the prosecutor to prove that the road, or track, is a public one, and the mere fact that the notice was given to the plaintiff would not render him liable to conviction. The Council in the letter which they wrote said that if the plaintiff did not place a proper swing gate across the track then the Council would be compelled to institute legal proceedings against him. Well, he had only to wait for such legal proceedings, and if those proceedings were delayed he might, under certain circumstances, have a good claim to a decree of perpetual silence, but he cannot say that there has been any infringement of a right. The Council did not say they were going to take immediate drastic measures to remove the fence or to institute any other criminal proceedings against a man, but they said, "If you don't place such swing gate there we will be compelled to institute legal proceedings against you." The exception, therefore, must be allowed, with costs.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

CLAREMONT MUNICIPALITY { 1907.
V. MOHAMET (ALIAS MO- { Feb. 7th.
HAMED).

Dr. Rainsford moved for provisional sentence on an unsatisfied judgment of the R.M. Wynberg, for £12 12s. 8d., with interest from the 5th May, 1905, and for £4 9s. 6d., taxed costs, and also for the property described in the summons to be declared executable; counsel also moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £4 17s. 3d., with interest, and for £22 16s. 8d., with interest, being owner's and tenant's rates for 1906, with costs.

Order granted as prayed.

At a later stage, Dr. Rainsford applied for leave to withdraw the case, as a settlement had been arrived at.

[Hopley, J.: I have given judgment now; you need not execute upon it.]

CLAREMONT MUNICIPALITY V. GAMAT (ALIAS AMARDIEN).

Dr. Rainsford moved for provisional sentence on an unsatisfied judgment of the Resident Magistrate, Wynberg, for £5 14s. 3d., and £1 19s. 7d., taxed costs, and for the property described in the summons, to be declared executable; counsel also moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for 14s. 3d., with interest, and £3 11s. 3d., with interest and costs.

Order granted.

MACLEOD V. DA GRANGE.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £40 10s., with interest.

Order granted.

CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY V. EDWARDS
(TRADING AS R. A. GREEN AND CO.).

Mr. Inchbold moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. Service (counsel stated) was effected at the defendant's last known place of residence in Main-road, Sea Point.

Order granted.

CRAWFORD V. MOLLER AND ANOTHER.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £53 17s. 4d., with interest from the 1st February, 1907, and costs.

The first defendant confessed judgment, and offered to pay £4 a month. He added that he had made an assignment of his estate, and was only receiving £20 a month from his earnings in order to provide for his domestic needs.

The matter was ordered to stand over to enable plaintiff's counsel to consult his attorneys with reference to defendant's offer.

Dr. Greer subsequently stated that he had been instructed to accept the offer of Mr. Moller.

An order was granted as prayed, execution to be suspended on payment of £4 a month, the first payment to be made on February 15.

PITTER V. D'ABREU.

Dr. Greer moved for the discharge of a provisional order of sequestration. Provisional order discharged.

ST. LEGER V. BEELDERS.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on two promissory notes for £23 10s. and £50 respectively, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

CLAREMONT MUNICIPALITY { 1907.
V. JACOBS. { Feb. 7th.

Dr. Rainsford moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £33 11s. 11d., owner's rates for the year 1903, with interest, and for further sums of £47 7s. 11d., £25 7s. 1d., and £50 18s. 11d., with interest and costs.

Order granted.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. De Waal moved for the rehabilitation of Ernest Frederick Greybe.
Granted.

Mr. Pohl moved for the rehabilitation of John William Henson. Counsel now produced the necessary certificate from the Master.

Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte PRETORIOUS AND OTHERS. 1907.
Feb. 7th.

Mr. Gutsche moved for an order authorising partition of a certain farm.
Order granted as prayed.

WOOD V. WOOD.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved to make absolute a certain rule nisi directing Mr. A. T. Hennessy to pay over to applicant a sum of £50 for the support of herself and children, and interdicting the respondent, Alfred Wood, from mortgaging or alienating certain property pending an action to be instituted by applicant against respondent for desertion. The applicant said that she had been living apart from her husband (the respondent), and she had acquired a certain property, which, owing to the fact that she was married in community, was registered in respondent's name. The respondent had taken possession of the transfer deeds and had raised a loan of £100 on the property through Mr. A. T. Hennessy, who had paid £50 over to the said Alfred Wood. Wood had gone to England and had arranged for the balance of £50 to be sent to him. The balance, however, had not been sent to him. Counsel said that a rule nisi had been granted, but owing to the short return day which had been fixed it had been impossible to effect service upon the respondent Wood.

Hopley, J., ordered that the respondent Hennessy to pay over the balance of the moneys in his hands to the applicant for maintenance of herself and children, and that the rule nisi be extended to the 15th April, to operate as an interim interdict, service to be effected on the respondent Wood by registered letter to be addressed to Post Office, Alton, Hants., England.

BAYER AND CO. V. STRAUSS, ADLER AND CO.

Trade mark—Expunging.

S. & Co. had registered a certain trade mark as "C. B. Corsets," but C. B. & Co. had sold these under this mark for some 13 years. C. B. & Co. now called upon respondents to show cause why "C. B." should not be expunged from the afore-said trade-mark registry.

Held, that although corsets bearing this mark had been sold in America since 1877, as there was no evidence that they had been sold in S. Africa, the said trade mark had been unlawfully registered and must be expunged from the register.

This was the return day of a rule nisi calling on the respondents to show cause why the alleged trade mark "C.B." in respect of corsets in class 38, should not be expunged from the Register of Trademarks.

From the affidavits, it appeared that applicants claimed to be the first originators of the "C.B." corsets, but that respondents had given notice in the Cape "Government Gazette" that they would apply to have the mark "C.B." registered. Applicants, who had sold "C.B." corsets for over £150,000 in this Colony, were resident in England, and could not object in time to prevent the registration.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan appeared for the applicants; Mr. Gardiner for the respondents.

Mr. Buchanan now moved that "C.B." be expunged, and read affidavits by applicants and by Cape Town drapers to the effect that applicants' "C.B." corsets had been sold in Cape Town as far back as 13 years ago, and probably before 1877.

Respondents said that they had since January, 1877, adopted the trade mark "C.B." although they could not swear that their corsets had been sold in this Colony prior to the registration of their mark.

Hopley, J., inquired if this was the proper procedure and if this Court had jurisdiction.

Mr. Buchanan referred to the case of Wright, Crossley and Co. v. Royal Baking Powder Co. (14 S.C., 366), where the practice was laid down.

Mr. Gardiner, in argument, said, inter alia, that section 7 of Act 22 of 1877 provided for the framing of rules with regard to trade marks; these rules had to be laid before Parliament, and they were therefore to be treated as if they had been enacted by statute. Rule 6 provided for advertisement of the intention to apply for the registration of any mark, and that section had been complied with. Under Rule 13 any person objecting to the registration had to give notice, and no objection had come in within the period allowed by the rule. His contention was that the rule was imperative on the Court, and that no extension of the time for objecting could be granted. In England the Controller of Trade Marks could extend the time (Kerley, 2 ed., p. 701), but this could not be done here. Applicants, not having objected in time, could not do so now. Section 1 of the Act of 1877 provided that no person who was not the registered owner could institute proceedings to have a trade mark expunged. He referred to Lewis v. Lazurus (13 S.C., 420). He admitted that if the public were defrauded there might be a "passing-off" action, but here there was nothing from which the Court could conclude that his clients were perpetrating a fraud, and in case of fraud, it would be necessary to proceed by way of action. Applicants gave no clear proof of user prior to 1877, or of very old user. They were registered in England in 1886, and respondents said they adopted the trade mark "C.B." in 1877. His clients were on the register, and there they were entitled to remain until applicants could prove that they had committed a fraud.

[Hopley, J.: Do you say that your registration would not prevent their selling "C.B." corsets?]

Mr. Gardiner said that he did not like to say. His clients might have to bring an action to prevent them. In England two similar marks had been registered (Monson v. Boehm, 26, Ch. D. 398, and Paine and Duniella, 1893, 2 Ch. 567).

Mr. Buchanan said that applicants were not asking the Court to order the Registrar to register their mark; they asked that respondents' mark be expunged. Under section 5 of Act 22 of 1877, any person aggrieved might apply for a rectification of the Registrar. The letters "C.B." could not be registered at all, unless the party wishing them to be registered could prove that they were used before August 8, 1877, in this Colony. He referred to Sebastian on Trade Marks (4 ed., p. 45). In the cases of re Riviere's Trade Mark (26 Ch. D. 48) and re Munch's application (50 L.T.N.S., 12) it had been decided that user of a trade mark had to be user in the United Kingdom, and therefore in order to register here user in this Colony was necessary. Respondents were registered, because they had declared that their trade mark was used since January 1, 1877; although it might have been used in America it certainly was not used here. With regard to the registration of initials, he cited Sebastian (pp. 33 and 35, also p. 76). Distinctiveness was required. Each mark had to be such that if a question of infringement arose it would be quite clear what it was that was infringed.

[Hopley, J.: Supposing the Registrar has wrongly registered, is this a competent way to rectify?]

Mr. Buchanan said that it was, and referred to section 5 of the Act of 1877; and to Kerly (2 ed., p. 265). Their mark was not a registrable mark at all (Kerly, pp. 171 and 173). In England the controller's decision was no bar to a rectification. (Kerly, p. 275.) On the purity of the register he referred to Thompson v. Montgomery (45 Ch. D., 35); Powell's Trade Mark (1893, 2 Ch., 388); Kerly (pp. 227, 228, 229). He also referred to section 6 of Act 22 of 1877. In this case the Registrar had palpably been deceived; he took user in the United States as being user in this Colony. Even assuming that the mark was registrable, respondents could not come and have it registered here where applicants had been using that mark. He quoted Hudson's case (32 Ch. D., 320) and Roger's case (12 R.P.C., 149).

[Hopley, J. (to Mr. Gardiner): Can you say that "CB" or "C.B." are registrable? The Premier of England might object.]

Mr. Gardiner: But he is "C.B." with a hyphen. Bayer's "C.B." has been protected in England. He quoted 16 R.P.C. and 15 R.P.C.; and, continuing, said that the onus was on the applicant, who wished to get respondent off the register, to show that respondent's mark was not in use here before 1877. Applicants could not complain that they had no notice. He referred to Stockham v. Colonial Building Society (19 S.C.).

Hopley, J., reviewed the circumstances of the application, and said that the point to consider was whether, had the facts been before the Registrar that were now before the Court, the Registrar would not have refused the registration on the respondent's application. His Lordship did not think the Registrar would have gone to the extent of giving a possible monopoly of that particular mark to the applicants, to the exclusion of the people who for so many years had been selling corsets marked C.B. in this country. Furthermore, there was ambiguity about the declaration made by the respondents' firm on the point of the use of the mark prior to the 8th August, 1877. He (the learned judge) thought the declaration meant that the corsets bearing that mark were sold in America prior to 1877; but there was no evidence at all that they were sold in this country before that time. If that were so, was the Registrar right in allowing the registration of such a trade mark—merely two letters of the alphabet? The requirements of the Trade Marks Registration Act (12 of 1895) were not fulfilled by two letters of the alphabet so as to make them registrable as a trade mark. But if such a pair of letters had been in use by any tradesman in this Colony before August 8th, 1877, in combination as a trade mark, then they could be so registered on the application of the person who had so used that particular mark. In the present case the Registrar may have been deceived by the ambiguity of the respondent's declaration, which in reality went no further than to assert a user of the letters C.B. as a trade mark for corsets in the United States of America before 1877. Now the applicants had made out the use in this Colony by them, before 1877, of the letters C.B. as a trade mark for their corsets; and they, being naturally aggrieved at the registration of the same letters by the respondents, and the possible exclusion from the markets of this country of their wares, were within their rights in appealing to the Court for a rectification of the Register. I am of opinion that the registration was wrongful, and that the relief asked for should be granted. The rule will be made absolute, with costs.

VAN ROOYEN AND OTHERS V. MACKAY.

Mr. Molteno moved for the extension of a certain rule nisi for a fortnight, and for an amendment in the rule. The rule called upon respondent to show cause why he should not be ordered to transfer a certain farm to the applicants it was now desired to add the names of other applicants to the order.

Application granted, the rule being made returnable on February 21.

Ex parte FERREIRA.

Dr. Rainsford, on behalf of the petitioner, applied for an order declaring one J. W. Ferreira, of the district of Willowmore, who was upwards of 74 years of age, and who had leased certain properties to different people, to be incapable of managing his affairs, and for the appointment of P. M. van Noorden as curator bonis.

Counsel referred to the case of Van der Vyver (15 C.T., 1,007).

The Court intimated that it could not appoint a curator in such a summary manner, and asked counsel to consult with his attorneys and mention the matter again to-morrow.

Ex parte STAYN.

Divorce—Adultery—Restitution of conjugal rights.

S. had sued his wife for divorce on the ground of her adultery. He did not succeed, as the Court found it proved that he was himself guilty. He there-after offered to take his wife back but she refused to return and deserted him. Applicant now applied for an order to sue his wife by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights.

The Court refused the order.

Heathershaw v. Heathershaw (1 Roac. 186) not followed.

Mr. Rowson, on behalf of the petitioner, moved for leave to sue petitioner's wife, Elizabeth Stayn, by edictal citation for a decree of restitution of conjugal rights, failing which for divorce.

Counsel said that in or about 1889 Mrs. Stayn deserted her husband, and in 1902, on finding her living with another man, he sued her for divorce. Petitioner failed to obtain a decree, as the Court found that he himself had been guilty of adultery; he now wished to sue his wife for restitution of conjugal rights. In 1902, after the divorce proceedings, he had asked his wife to let by-gones be by-gones, and to come back to him, but she had refused. Counsel relied on Voet (24, 2, 6), and on Heathershaw v. Heathershaw (5 S., 35, and 1 Rose, 186).

Hopley, J.: In this case the applicant endeavoured to obtain a decree of divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery, but unsuccessfully, because his wife at the trial proved, that though she was living in a state of adultery, the plaintiff was equally guilty.

After that trial it is now stated that the plaintiff made overtures to his wife to the effect that there should be mutual condonation of their respective conjugal misconduct and that they should once more live together, but that the defendant refused this offer. It is now alleged that the defendant then deserted her husband maliciously, that she departed from the jurisdiction of this Court for some place or country not known to the applicant, and he now asks to be allowed to sue her by edictal citation with a view to obtaining a decree of divorce.

In such circumstances, I do not feel disposed to assist the applicant in gaining a divorce on the ground of desertion. There are no doubt cases, like the one quoted by Mr. Rowson, in which the Court might, in somewhat similar circumstances, assist a man who was genuinely anxious to get his wife back, but in the present case such is not the applicant's intention. If he really wishes to get his wife back, let him trace her and sue her in her present domicile for a restitution of his rights. There will be no order.

[Applicant's Attorney: E. I. Sydney. Respondents in default.]

In re THE ROYAL HOTEL CO. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Roux moved for confirmation of the liquidators' report, and for an order that the company be dissolved, and the books destroyed, and for payment of remuneration to the liquidators. Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte STREETER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for leave to attach certain money in satisfaction of a judgment obtained against the firm of Myers and Purty. Applicant stated in an affidavit that he had reason to believe that a sum of £100 had been cabled to be paid to respondents upon shipment of certain goods, and that this sum was in the hands of Reuter's Telegram Co.

A rule nisi was granted, returnable on Tuesday next, calling on respondents to show cause why a sum of £60 should not be attached to satisfy the writ.

KOCH V. COHEN.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for an interdict restraining respondent from removing certain goods from his shop at Wynberg for the purposes of sale, pending action to be brought.

A rule nisi was granted, calling on respondent to show cause why he should not be interdicted from removing any of the goods in the tailor's shop, pending action for rent, returnable on Tuesday next, the rule to act as an interim interdict.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

HOVEN V. CAPE TOWN STEVE- { 1907.
DORING CO., LTD. { Feb 8th.

Breach of warranty—Actio redhibitoria—Recission of sale.

The vendor of a launch warranted her to be in good working order. The purchaser, after giving her a fair trial, found that she was not in good working order and that she really required a new boiler.

Held, that the purchaser was entitled to have the sale rescinded and to recover back the price which, under the terms of sale, he had paid on delivery.

This was an action to recover the sum of £100, being an instalment of purchase price alleged to be due in respect of the purchase from the plaintiff by the defendant company, of a certain steam launch.

The declaration set forth that the defendant company was an incorporated limited liability company, duly registered, carrying on business in Cape Town. On the 7th June the plaintiff sold a steam launch known as the Nellie to the defendant company, for the sum of £338. The sum of £38 was to be paid on delivery, and was so paid, and the balance was to be paid in three instalments each of £100, of which the first instalment became due on the 1st December last. The defendant company refused to pay that instalment, and the plaintiff claimed judgment for that sum, with costs.

The plea stated that the plaintiff sold on a guarantee, contained in the deed of sale, that the launch was watertight, and was in sound condition, and that the engine, boiler, machinery, etc. were in proper working order. The launch was not in sound condition and the boiler was not in proper working order, being wholly defective and unfit for use. The defendant company had therefore repudiated the sale, demanded the return of the £38, and tendered the return of the launch. The defendants claimed, in reconvention, damages in the sum of £50, including seven guineas spent on an examination of the launch.

Mr. Close (with him Mr. Swift) was for the plaintiff; Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. Watermeyer) was for the defendant company.

Mr. Close submitted that the onus was on the defendant company.

Mr. Gardiner said he admitted that was so. He called

William G. Mathie, master mariner, and a director of the defendant company. He stated that he remembered the wreck of the Oakburn some time in July. Some cargo—oil cakes—floated in the Bay, and the launch in question was sent out to do some salvage. It went out the first day, and returned with some casks, but on the second day the engineer of the launch raised objection to going out. Previously to this the launch had been giving trouble. The launch was delivered in June.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why was she sent out if there had been trouble with her previously?]

Witness: The trouble did not appear to be so serious at that time. The witness, proceeding, said that the tanks were found to be leaking. The launch was sent out twice, and in consequence of a report made by the engineer, the boiler was taken out and examined. The boiler had been inspected with a view to repairing, but it was decided to have nothing done. Witness was not an expert, but he could see that the shell was corroded. The boiler was now lying on one of the company's boats.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: The company was formed of conflicting firms of stevedores. The partners were: (1) Witness, (2) Van Hoven and Jacobson, and (3) Watson and Williams. The company were not anxious to buy the launch. One of the prime reasons the boat was bought was that it was thought the plaintiff was minding his own business and not the company's. The company had previously hired Hoven's launch. On occasions previous to the purchase, the launch had broken down once or twice, and the company knew it, but the breakdowns were not serious. He was not aware that there had been a breakdown for a fortnight. Before and after the sale he was told the boiler had broken down. Witness was told that the tubes in the boiler had to be replaced. The company did not repudiate the sale at once, but gave plaintiff an opportunity of making the boiler good.

Joseph Watson, master mariner, and director of the defendant company, said that a few days after the sale he spoke to the plaintiff about the condition of the boat, and plaintiff attributed it to defective tubes. If the defect had only been with the tubes, the sale would not have been repudiated, because that could easily have been remedied. There were many complaints, and ultimately the boiler was taken out and vital defects were discovered. Hoven had told him there was nothing vitally wrong with the boat, nothing that could not easily be repaired. Plaintiff had refused to submit the matter to arbitration. Mr. Hoven was a director, but he resigned his position about a week ago.

Mr. Close: Mr. Hoven made an offer to cancel the sale, if you were dissatisfied, did he not?

Witness: Yes, and I accepted it, but Mr. Hoven went back on his word.

How long before the final breakdown—about the 27th July—did Mr. Hoven offer to cancel the sale?—I cannot definitely say, but I think it would be a week or ten days.

And when did you accept the offer?—

On the spot, but it was withdrawn in two minutes.

In further cross-examination, the witness said that Mr. Hoven offered to take off £50 for repairs to the boiler.

Re-examined: The company would not have bought the launch had they been aware of the condition in which the launch actually was.

Wm. Frederick Bonsey, secretary of the company, also gave evidence. Mr. Hoven instructed him to write to a Home firm with regard to a new boiler.

Other witnesses gave evidence as to the defective condition of the boiler.

The defendant, in the course of his evidence, stated that before buying the boat he put the matter of its purchase before the company, but the company would not buy the launch. Witness purchased it, and ran it for about a year, making a profit of about 50 per cent. Outside the Harbour Board tug, there was no boat available for the work of the company but the Nellie, and witness did considerable work for the company. It was complained by the company that witness was devoting too much of his time to the launch, and the question of its purchase by the company arose. When witness got his licence at the beginning of the year, there was a special clause written in the licence to the effect that the licence was granted subject to re-examination of the engines and boiler on the 1st July. The boiler had continually broken down, and witness said at the time of purchase that he would give no guarantee as to the boiler, except that it was then in working order. The members of the company knew as much as witness did in connection with the condition of the boiler. A few days after the sale there was a conversation about the breakdown of the boat. They said it was not giving satisfaction. Witness was upset about it, and offered to take the boat back and return the £38, but Mr. Jackson and Mr. Watson both pooh-poohed it. They wanted to get the boat to keep witness out of competition. Witness continually offered to cancel the sale up to the time the boiler was taken out. During the whole time the boat was running, witness's offer stood.

Mr. Gardiner said he would point out to the Court that it was not pleaded that there was an offer to cancel the sale.

Mr. Close said he would apply for an amendment of the replication accordingly.

De Villiers, C.J., said that if a prima facie case was made out, he would grant the amendment, but in the present state of the case he could not do so.

The witness (continuing) said he dictated the letter Home about a new boiler at the request of Mr. Jackson.

He usually attended to matters concerning the machinery. The directors wanted further inquiries made with regard to a new boiler. The company did not up to that time repudiate the sale. It was only then—on the 21st August—that Mr. Jackson said: "Now, you have been so keen about taking back the boat, you can take it."

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: Witness believed that if £50 was spent in repairs to the boat, the Harbour Board would license it. Witness paid for the cable which was sent Home regarding the boiler. The company refused to pay.

Mr. Gardiner submitted that the defendant could not press the claim for damages in reconvention.

Mr. Close having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: At the time when the launch was sold the plaintiff gave a warranty that the launch was watertight, in sound condition, and its engine, boiler, machinery, etc., in proper working order. Now, the main question to be decided is: Was this warranty broken? It has been attempted to show on behalf of the plaintiff himself that before the sale took place the launch had been in such bad working order that she had continually to be repaired, to the knowledge of the defendant; but if this view is perfectly sound, then it is quite clear that the launch was not in proper working order at the time of the sale. Within a week after the sale the trouble began, and the defendant company did not at once rescind the sale, apparently because they wished to give the launch a fair and a proper trial. It would be impossible to say that the boiler and machinery were not in proper working order unless a full opportunity was given of testing them, and that was what the defendant company did; and it was only afterwards, upon discovery that it was hopeless to make anything out of this launch, that they finally decided to reject it, and to claim back their money. But in the meantime the plaintiff was not ignorant of the fact that the defendant company was not contented with the launch. They raised objections, and they say they did not at once repudiate it, because in terms of the warranty, it could only be ascertained whether it was in proper working order by actual working, and in this respect the case differs from all the other cases relating to warranty, which have been cited by Mr. Close. The warranty is a peculiar one. It would be impossible really from an inspection of the machinery to say whether it was or was not in proper working order. Now, I am quite satisfied from the evidence that in point of fact the launch was not in proper working order when this sale took place, and that in consequence the warranty was not complied with. Then comes a further question, which really has not been raised upon the pleadings, but which I shall proceed to consider, and that is whether there was such acceptance by the defendants of this launch as to deprive them now of the right to rescind this sale. As I have said before, the defendants were quite justified in taking some reasonable time for ascertaining whether the machinery was in proper working order, and I consider in all the circumstances of the case the time was not unreasonably long. A great deal has been made about the letter which was sent, apparently written by the secretary of the defendant company, to manufacturers in Scotland, inquiring at what price a boiler could be supplied for this launch, but it now appears that that letter was really written at the dictation of the plaintiff himself, who was one of the directors of the defendant company, and I do not think that that letter could be held to have been written in such circumstances as to prove that there was actual acceptance by the defendant company of the launch. It is certainly a significant fact that when, on another occasion, the plaintiff made inquiries by cable as to the price at which a boiler could be obtained from England, he did so at his own expense, and he was not likely to do so if at that time he considered there had been such acceptance by the defendant company as to make them liable. Well, this being my view of the case, it is not necessary to consider all the different authorities which have been cited. The facts satisfy me that the warranty has not been complied with, and that, moreover, there has not been at any time such acceptance by the defendant company as to deprive them of the right to raise the defence that the launch did not come up to the warranty. The defendant has withdrawn his claim for damages, and has done so very properly, because, under the circumstances of the case, no Court would have granted damages, but the defendant is certainly now entitled to be put in the position as if no sale had taken place. The judgment of the Court will be for the defendant on the claim in convention, and the Court will order that the sale be rescinded, and that the plaintiff repay to the defendant company the sum of £38 on the defendant returning the launch, but the plaintiff must pay the costs of the action.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Reid and Nephew; Defendants' Attorneys: Dold and Van Breda.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

PROVISIONAL CASE.

BUX V. ABRAMS AND CO. { 1907.
Feb. 8th.

This was an application in which the plaintiff claimed provisional sentence for £110 on an I.O.U., alleged to be signed by the defendant firm, or rather by one of the partners on behalf of the firm. On the day when the matter originally came on for provisional sentence, the defendant by affidavit denied the signature, the alleged signature on the I.O.U., and the Court ordered evidence to be taken to show that this was a genuine signature.

Mr. Alexander (with him Mr. Pohl) was for the plaintiff; and Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Struben) was for the defendants.

Evidence having been led, and Mr. Benjamin heard for the defence,

Maasdorp, J.: When the plaintiff in this case claimed provisional sentence, the defence was set up that the promissory note did not bear the signature of the defendants in this case, and consequently they were not liable. Thereupon, to-day was fixed as the day upon which the Court should go into the question whether the document was actually signed by the defendants. The first question that arises in the case is whether Cassim placed the signatures at the foot of this promissory note on behalf of the firm of Abrams and Co., Apparently, when the case was before the Court on a former occasion he denied that he had placed his signature on this paper at all. But that is not the defence which is raised in the present case. He now takes up the position that the signature which appears on the paper is actually his, but that it was not placed there at the foot of the promissory note, but on a blank piece of paper, and that this promissory note was subsequently filled in, and consequently it was not a valid note bearing his signature. I will take it now that that was the defence he would have set up if he had seen the document bearing his signature. But the extraordinary part is that a general denial was made of the validity of the note, without the parties taking the trouble to examine the document. There was no doubt now that the name of the firm, Abrams and Co., was written upon this paper by Cassim, because he admits it, but he states at the time he signed it there was no promissory note. I have called it a promissory note, but it is rather in the shape of an I.O.U., and I shall proceed to call it an I.O.U. I have now to decide whether this I.O.U. was upon the document when the signature was placed there, and that may easily be disposed of by the evidence of Kerbel and Manoor, I shall not go into close scrutiny of all the evidence. I accept the evidence of Kerbel and Manoor as being truthful, consequently we have an I.O.U. purporting to have the signature of the firm of Abrams and Co., and we have the document that was actually signed by Cassim. The other question is whether, when that signature was placed there, Cassim was authorised by Abrams to place the name of the firm upon it in such a form as to bind Abrams. His Lordship, after reviewing the evidence on the point, held that the document bore the signature of the firm placed there by Cassim, with full power to act on behalf of the firm. Provisional sentence would be given, with costs, and the costs of the plaintiff as a necessary witness.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ADMISSION. { 1907.
Feb. 8th.

Mr. Toms moved for the admission of Hendrik E. B. Wahl as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

HANAU V. PAPERT AND ANOTHER.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a certain lease for £160, four months' arrear rent. Counsel applied for judgment against the first defendant and for an extension of time, sine die, against the second defendant.

Order granted against the first defendant and extension of time until the 5th March granted against the second defendant.

FREEMAN AND CO. V. HANSON.

Dr. Greer moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final. Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

IMMELMAN AND CO. V. KING BROTHERS.

Mr. Lewis moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £138 18s. for goods sold and delivered, with interest from October 10, 1906, and for £7 la. 5d., collection fees.

Order granted.

"EAST LONDON DAILY NEWS" V. CRAGG.

Mr. Roux moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £25, being the final call on unpaid balance of 5s. per share due by defendant on 100 shares, which defendant had neglected to pay, with interest from June 6, 1906, and costs.

Order granted.

FRYER V. EXECUTOR ESTATE HOBKIRK AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Struben moved under Rule 329d for an order upon one of the defendants to join with her co-executor in lodging with the Master a true and proper account of the administration of the estate of Adam Hopkirk, and a similar order upon the other defendant in his capacity as executor dative in the estate of the late Janet M. Hopkirk.

Hopley, J., said that two people who were interested in different estates seemed to have been joined together in one summons. He did not think there was any precedent for such a course.

Mr. Struben submitted that the administration was practically the same in both estates.

Hopley, J., directed the matter to stand over pending authority being cited for two defendants being joined together in this way.

Postea (February 14th).

Mr. Struben again moved for judgment in the following terms: (1) That the defendants in their capacities may be ordered forthwith to join applicant in framing and lodging with the Master of the Supreme Court a full and true account supported by proper vouchers of the whole administration and distribution of the estate of the late Adam Hopkirk, the said Mary Jane Fryer hereby again offering, as she repeatedly has done, to do everything on her part to get the said estate finally liquidated; (2) that a like order may be made against the first-named defendant in his capacity as executor dative in the estate of the late Janet Margaret Hopkirk; (3) that the first-named defendant be specially ordered to render a full account, and to debate same before the Court, of all moneys received and disbursed by him, and in particular of (a) sum of £1,500, being the purchase price of certain erf No. 4 in Church-street, Colesberg; (b) the proceeds of sale of part of erven 5 and 7, Colesberg; (c) the cash and bank balance in the estate of Adam Hopkirk; (d) the settlement of certain outstandings due to the first-mentioned estate by W. Jaffray; (e) the compensation claim of £504 due to the said estate, the said sums having been wrongfully and unlawfully detained by him for his own use and benefit, and that the said A. N. Hobkirk be ordered to pay over to the plaintiff all such sums as may be found to be due to her as heiress in the said estate, and in her individual capacity. (4) That the said A. N. Hobkirk, in his individual capacity, be further ordered to render a full account, and to debate the same, of all bonds and other securities handed to him for the purpose of protecting and securing the plaintiff's interest therein, to pay over to her all such sums of capital and interest as may be due thereon. (5) Interest a tempore morae on all amounts found to be due by the defendants or any of them. (6) Costs of suit. Mr. Struben said that the matter had been standing over for further information. A summons was taken out in the foregoing terms, and a declaration was about to be filed, but apparently there was an intimation that there would be no appearance, and the instructions for a declaration were withdrawn.

[Hopley, J.: What information did the Court want?]

Mr. Struben: As to whether there would be any prejudice by joining the two executors in one estate and the other executor in the other estate on the same summons. There has been no fresh question raised by the executors.

Order granted as prayed.

WARD V. WARD.

This was an action brought by Joseph William Ward, of Middelburg, against his wife, Adele Maria Ward, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Mr. De Waal was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the Marriage Register, Colonial Secretary's Office, having given formal evidence as to the registration of the marriage,

The plaintiff said that he was a chemist and resided at Middelburg. He married the defendant in July last year, under ante-nuptial contract. Their married life was not happy. In the first month he found that his wife did not care for him at all. She said she desired to leave him, and she went to Capo Town in the following month. He asked her to return to him, but she had refused.

By the Court: The defendant, who was 36 years of age, had previously been divorced. She was now at Uitenhage. Defendant deserted him five and a half weeks after the marriage.

Mr. De Waal read a letter from defendant to plaintiff in the course of which she said that a kinder husband she could never wish for. She hoped he would get a wife worthy of his goodness and kindness. She was not and never could be his wife.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to the plaintiff on or before the 1st May, failing which, to show cause on the 10th May why a decree of divorce should not be granted, and why she should not be adjudged to have forfeited the benefits under the ante-nuptial contract.

ABRAHAMS V. ABRAHAMS.

This was an action brought by Rosina Abrahams, of Worcester, against her husband, Manuel Abrahams, of Cape Town, for a decree of divorce, or, alternately, for restitution of conjugal rights.

Dr. Greer was for plaintiff; defendant was in default.

Formal evidence having been given as to the registration of the marriage,

Rosina Abrahams (the plaintiff) said that she was married to defendant at St. Paul's, Cape Town, on the 26th November, 1894. In 1905 she had a boarder named Mary Paulson, with regard to whom she had heard certain reports. Early one morning she awoke and on making a search she found defendant in the same room as Paulson. She spoke to the woman Paulson, who admitted that witness's husband had had improper relations with her. Witness continued to live with defendant, but their life was unhappy, as defendant ill-treated her and came home drunk very often. She went to Worcester in April, 1906, in order to take a situation. Defendant consented to her going. While away she became ill, and applied to her husband for assistance, but her letter was never answered. Defendant had been in German South-West Africa, but he had now returned to Cape Town. In 1904 she was paid £100 by the Cape Government Railways as compensation for an injury that she had received. Part of this money was expended in a property at Klipheuwel.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to receive plaintiff on or before 1st April, failing which, to show cause on 23rd April why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with forfeiture of the benefits and costs.

HOWES V. HOWES.

This was an action brought by Esther Maria Howes, of Cape Town, against her husband, George Percival Howes, said to be living in Johannesburg, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Mr. Pohl was for plaintiff; defendant was in default.

Formal evidence of the registration of the marriage having been given,

Esther Maria Howes (the plaintiff) said that she was married to defendant in October, 1903. They lived in Cape Town for about a year, and afterwards resided for a little while at Observatory-road. Witness then came to reside with her mother, and defendant went to live with his brother. While she was living with her mother the defendant deserted her in February, 1903. She had seen him once since that date, and on that occasion he did not speak to her. Defendant was now in Johannesburg. There was one child of the marriage, born a few months after defendant had deserted her.

By the Court: Witness was certain that defendant was aware of the proceedings that she was taking against him.

Decree granted, defendant to restore conjugal rights by the 1st May, failing which to show cause on the 14th day why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with custody of the child, and costs.

Mr. Pohl asked his lordship if he would make an order against defendant as to maintenance of the child.

Hopley, J., said that it was useless for the Court to make such an order, seeing that it could not enforce it. If defendant returned to the jurisdiction then an application could be made to the Court.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ESTATE JARVIS. { 1907.
Feb. 8th.

Mr. Swift moved for certain rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

DRIESSEN V. DRIESSEN.

Mr. Roux moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute directing the respondent to deliver a certain child to the applicant, its father. It was alleged that the respondent had deserted the applicant, and had been living in adultery with one Easton in Cape Town. While applicant was away from his home at Kuil's River, respondent came and surreptitiously removed the child.

Respondent appeared, and said that she left her husband because he ill-treated her. She left the child in the custody of her mother, and applicant took it away. She (respondent) had supported it. When she took the child from applicant's house it was in a neglected state.

Applicant gave evidence. He denied that he had ill-treated the respondent. He desired to hand the little girl over to his sister, Mrs. Joliffe, who lived at Salt River. When he had come to see his child at respondent's house in Commercial-street, Cape Town, he had been driven away with sticks and stones.

Respondent said that she left applicant in 1903, because he assaulted and ill-treated her. She did not join Easton until about a year ago. She had had a child, of which Easton was the father. She removed the child of the marriage from a midwife's at Kuil's River, where it had been placed by applicant.

Applicant (in answer to the Court) said he would see that the child was properly looked after by his sister.

Hopley, J., said that the Court would order the respondent to deliver up custody of the child to the applicant, with right of access to the respondent. If the child were not properly treated, the respondent could make representations to the Court.

Ex parte LOURENS.

Mr. Toms moved for an order authorising transfer of remaining portion of a certain farm in the division of Swellendam.

Order granted as prayed.

In re COLONIAL BUILDING CORPORATION, LTD.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the confirmation of the second and final report of the official liquidator (Mr. Steytler). No objection had been taken while the report had lain for inspection. The liquidator asked for authority to destroy the various documents and papers of the company now in his custody, to deposit with the Master, one month after confirmation of the report, all unclaimed dividends, and to dissolve the company.

Report confirmed and the several prayers granted.

Ex parte RUSHTON AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Toms moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to register a certain ante-nuptial contract entered into between the petitioners. It appeared that the contract had been registered in the registry at King William's Town, but that it had been accidentally omitted by the petitioners' attorney to be sent to the Deeds Registry in Cape Town within the period prescribed by the Act.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte GREYLING.

Mr. Payne moved for an order authorising the partition of certain property in the Division of Barkly East, so as to give the parties interested defined shares instead of undefined.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte FERREIRA.

Dr. Rainsford again mentioned this matter, which was an application for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent Ignatius Wilhelm Ferreira in proceedings to have him declared of unsound mind. Counsel now suggested that the Resident Magistrate of Willowmore should be appointed curator ad litem, and that the matter should be heard on motion and similar directions should be given as in the case of Van der Vyver (15 Cape Times Reps., 1,007).

Order granted appointing the Resident Magistrate of Willowmore curator ad litem of Ignatius W. Ferreira in proceedings to be instituted to have it determined whether he is of unsound mind and incapable of managing his own affairs, proceedings to be taken on notice of motion, all necessary affidavits to be served, as in the case of Van der Vyver (15 C.T.R., 1007).

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Mr. Justice LAWRENCE and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

GAGELA V. GANCA. } 1907.
Feb. 11th.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave to the applicant to prosecute an appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court at Cala, in which he had been ordered to pay damages for an alleged assault upon respondent. The case was heard on the 30th October last, and the time within which applicant could have proceeded with an appeal without a special order of Court, expired on the 30th January. He explained, however, that judgment was given against him in the Circuit Court for £22, and after paying the costs and expenses in connection therewith he was left almost penniless. He had at that time noted an appeal. He had now obtained funds with which to proceed, but the time allowed had expired. Notice of the present application was given on the 1st February.

De Villiers, C.J.: I see that notice has been given to the respondent, and that no objection is raised, and seeing that a very short time expired beyond the period allowed, the Court will make an order. Leave granted to prosecute appeal next term, costs of this application to be costs in the cause.

HOTZ V. STANDARD BANK. { 1907.
Feb. 11th.
" 25th.

Promissory note—Illegal consideration—Stifling prosecution—Forgery.

The plaintiff Bank, having discovered that certain promissory notes in favour of I., and by him indorsed to, and discounted with the Bank, had been forged by I., caused him to be ostentatiously watched, night and day, by the police and conveyed an intimation to the defendant, a brother-in-law of I., that the Bank would be willing to return the forged promissory notes to I. upon the defendant's substituting for them his own promissory note for the total amount of the forged notes. The defendant gave his note accordingly and the Bank returned the forged notes to I., but upon the other creditors of I. subsequently taking proceedings against him for forgery, the defendant refused to pay the amount of the note. I. was convicted of forgery. The Court of appeal having found, on all the facts disclosed in the case, that the object of the plaintiff and of defendant in substituting the defendant's note for the forged notes, was to stifle a prosecution for forgery:

Held, that the consideration for the note was illegal and that consequently the plaintiff was not entitled to recover thereon.

This was an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Maasdorp, sitting as a Divisional Court of the Supreme Court in an action in which the respondent bank sued the appellant (Marcus Hotz, of Oudtshoorn) for judgment on certain promissory notes and a guarantee.

[For full report of the case in the Court below, see Standard Bank v. Hotz (16 C.T.R., 708).]

The reasons for the judgment in the Court below were as follows:

Maasdorp, J., said that the plaintiff sought to recover £3,378, balance due upon a promissory note made by the defendant in favour of Israelsohn Brothers, and endorsed by them, of which the plaintiff bank was the legal holder, and the plaintiff also claimed on a guarantee given by the defendant for the balance due on accounts between Israelsohn Brothers and the bank, which was subsequently discovered to amount to £890. The defendant admitted execution of the note, but alleged that it was the result of an illegal agreement between the plaintiff and himself. He alleged that it was known at the time the note was given that certain notes forged by Meyer Israelsohn were in the possession of the bank, and it was agreed that on the defendant taking up the forged notes, with his own note, the plaintiff would take no criminal proceedings against Meyer Israelsohn. It was not necessary, for such a defence to succeed, to establish by evidence that any express verbal promise was made by the person who undertook not to prosecute, because such a promise might be tacitly understood between the parties.

The Court had now to decide the question, whether the consideration for the note was such an express or tacit undertaking not to prosecute. The plea alleged that such an undertaking was given by De Kok, the manager, and Foster, the attorney acting for the bank.

Mr. Searle had approached the case from the point of view of the difficulties in which De Kok was at the time with regard to the forged documents, but he preferred to approach it, keeping in view the difficulties surrounding the defendant and the other relatives of Meyer Israelsohn in respect of the alleged forgeries. The promissory note and the guarantee were made on August 18th, and the question which now arose was, what was the state of affairs immediately before that date? It had come to the knowledge of Hotz that suspicious notes were in existence, relating to fraudulent transactions on the part of Meyer Israelsohn. How it had come to his knowledge was not quite clear from the evidence. Foster admitted that it was possible that he might have received the information from him (Foster). What was likely to have occurred when such information first reached Hotz and the other members of the family? Naturally, they were greatly distressed, and it was clear that they anticipated then that if promissory notes forged by Meyer Israelsohn were in existence prosecution would follow; they were intelligent enough to anticipate that, and naturally desired to do their best to rescue him from that trouble. The first thing which would suggest itself to their mind would be to obtain possession of the forged documents. They would naturally suppose that if the parties who had a right to complain were at once satisfied, they would not go out of their way to put the law in motion, and they would also suppose that if once they could get possession of the forged documents there would be little likelihood of a prosecution; and they would come to that conclusion irrespective of any promise from interested parties not to prosecute. And they also knew that Meyer Israelsohn was in financial difficulties, and that if his estate were sequestrated everything would come to light at once; and it was that fact that made it important that sequestration should be prevented. That point was not so abstruse as to require any great wit to appreciate its importance, and their first wish would be to avoid sequestration, because its results would be disastrous. But their main object would still be to get possession of the notes. So the question arose.—Was anything else held out as an inducement to sign the promissory note? Was a promise held out by De Kok or Foster that, if the promissory notes were taken up and a guarantee signed, no prosecution would take place? The Court had to consider the question, whether, in spite of the circumstances pointed out, such an undertaking was given or not. What was Foster's position? A serious charge, that of compounding a felony, was made against him upon the pleadings, but now counsel seems to feel that the charge is not substantiated, and has urged very little upon that part of the case, but the Court had to look further into the evidence. It was suggested that Foster, as attorney for the bank, made promises for De Kok, but there was no evidence that Foster acted as attorney for the bank, and it was denied by both Foster and De Kok. Foster had said that he had previously done business for Hotz and the Israelsohns, and took an interest in the family, and that he brought certain suspicious documents to the notice of Hotz, that Hotz at different interviews had obtained from him information as to the position of the parties, but whatever advice he gave to Hotz was carefully guarded, and that he made no direct promise, and gave no distinct advice to Hotz as to what he should do.

He believed that what Foster had said was true. Foster was a lawyer, and knew his position, and he would not baldly give advice as was stated by the witnesses for the defence. The charge against Foster was that he, on behalf of the bank, had attempted to compound the felony by informing Hotz that the prosecution against all three Israelsohns would be withdrawn if the promissory notes were taken up. The furthest the evidence went against him was that he said, "The bank is going to prosecute, I advise you to settle the matter." He was not then acting on behalf of the bank, and it was not unlikely that he might have informed Hotz that criminal proceedings would be taken, knowing that the bank was in possession of forged documents, without his being told so by the manager.

The charge against De Kok had reference to the interview on August 17th. When the case first came into Court the charge against De Kok was evidently not very strong on the evidence, and so when it was found that Foster had had some conversation with the witnesses he was brought into the matter. Foster, at any rate, was not acting for the bank, nor threatening prosecution, so whatever he said could not affect the subsequent agreement between the bank and Hotz, and the charge in the plea against Foster was not proved. De Kok was undoubtedly interested in escaping from certain financial difficulties with Israelsohn and Co., which threatened loss to the bank. He had disregarded advice from the head office in Cape Town, and would have been glad to escape from his difficulties.

But was he guilty of compounding a felony? Hotz knew what to do to get Israelsohn out of trouble. He went to look at the notes, and arranged a meeting to discuss the settlement of the notes. On the day of that meeting it was admitted that not a word was said about withdrawing the prosecution. It was said that that matter had been settled between Hotz, Isidore Israelsohn, and De Kok on the day before. From Foster's statement it would appear that he (Foster) had sent a notice to the bank the day before that Hotz had decided to give a promissory note, and so the matter had been settled without any reference to a prosecution. I find as a fact that no threats or promises were made by De Kok on the 17th August.

Mr. Searle had cited a case similar to this one, where parties were held to have compounded a felony without any express agreement, but in that case the guilt of the forger was admitted on all hands at the interview when the note was given. That circumstance was absent in this case. The suspicious documents were referred to Meyer, who gave explanations, with which De Kok was not satisfied; but was De Kok at that time prepared to lay a charge of crime against Meyer? It would have been a very rash thing to do to threaten an apparently well-to-do customer with criminal prosecution upon the bare allegation of the makers of the notes, which were emphatically denied by him. At the criminal trial very forcible and weighty arguments had been used by counsel to convince the jury that no crime had been committed, and these arguments had required careful consideration. In spite of that was the Court now to say that De Kok would at once have taken proceedings for forgery? De Kok certainly had suspicions, but he said he had not yet made up his mind, and he (Mr. Justice Maasdorp) believed him. Israelsohn was at that time considered a well-to-do customer, and De Kok had no intention of prosecuting him. The family had decided to obtain possession of the notes without reference to De Kok.

It was pointed out that De Kok had an idea of prosecuting, because he had employed the assistance of the police, but De Kok said that there was a charge in reference to a false balance-sheet, and it was in connection with that that the police came into the case, but that when the promissory notes were taken up and balance arranged for it was not necessary to consider that matter further. It was impossible now to import an undertaking he may tacitly have made with reference to the false balance-sheet into this case, but he was satisfied that De Kok never gave any undertaking not to proceed on the false balance-sheet. If it had been clearly proved that he had given such an undertaking then a judgment of absolution from the instance would have been given, and Hotz would have been allowed to set that up as a good defence; but no such undertaking was proved, and De Kok might have prosecuted even after those transactions.

Judgment would be for the plaintiff as prayed, with costs.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Searle, K.C., and Mr. Upington), for the appellant; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. McGregor), for respondents.

No legal points were raised in argument.

Sir H. Juta, after briefly reciting the points raised upon the pleadings, said that the question was whether the defendant Hotz signed the promissory notes which were given in order to retire the promissory notes which had been forged, and when he did sign those notes, whether at that time there was a threat and a promise held out by Mr. De Kok, or by Mr. De Kok and Mr. Forster, that there would be no criminal proceedings taken. He thought that upon the law there would be no question, and, indeed, Mr. Justice Maasdorp took the view of the law which he (Sir H. Juta) would submit was correct, that it was not necessary for such a defence to succeed to establish by evidence that any express verbal promise was made by the person who undertook not to prosecute, because such a promise might be tacitly understood between the parties. He felt that it was of no use approaching this case, where the evidence of the defendant's witnesses had been contradicted by that of the real plaintiff, De Kok. There was a considerable amount of evidence given for the defence, practically to the effect that this promise had been given by De Kok, but he quite felt that, in order to bring the case properly before the Court of Appeal, it would be far better for him simply to take the evidence of De Kok, and he thought, when one had taken the evidence of De Kok, there could not be any doubt in the mind of anybody that this transaction took place under circumstances from which both parties understood that if Hotz signed this promissory note, so that the forged bills should be withdrawn and the case withdrawn, nothing more would be heard about a prosecution. He would also point out on De Kok's evidence that in three material instances the learned judge drew what he would respectfully submit were very wrong inferences. He thought, with all due respect to his lordship, he did not attach due weight to the letters which De Kok wrote, and attached some weight to the evidence that De Kok gave, whereas they had also in evidence the letters which he wrote at the same time to the head office in Cape Town, and he did not think his lordship attached sufficient weight to those statements, because those letters, written by De Kok, he submitted, clinched the whole matter from the point of view of the defendant. Counsel proceeded to examine the evidence of Mr. De Kok in the light of the letters which he addressed to the head office, and submitted that it was clear that this idea of a false balance-sheet was an afterthought on the part of De Kok, and that there was a tacit understanding between De Kok and Hotz when the latter gave his promissory note and the former handed up the forged promissory notes, that there should be no prosecution. De Kok, it was said, wished to avoid the sequestration of the estate; it was the last thing in the world he wanted, because then the bank would lose everything. Clearly, the object of Hotz was to avoid a prosecution, this he was led to believe would result from his taking the liability. He submitted that that was the real transaction, and that all the parties understood perfectly well, even though there was no direct language used, that if Hotz came forward the forged bills would be given up and destroyed, and there would be an end to the prosecution.

Mr. Schreiner said that in the Court below, he had not argued the case, as his lordship only heard Mr. Searle and then gave judgment for the plaintiff. The question for their lordships now to consider was whether the account of the conversation spoken to by De Kok and Foster was a true one, and if so, whether or not the law followed in favour of the plaintiffs. Counsel drew the Court's attention to a letter addressed by Hotz to the general managers of the bank, under date the 3rd February, 1905, and asked whether that letter was conceivably the letter of a man who believed such threats had been used and such promise held out as were working up the points afterwards brought before the Court at the trial? Not one word was said in that letter which would suggest that there was anything proceeding from the bank as a threat or as an inducement to Hotz to come forward in the way he did. He submitted that this story of Hotz's in regard to what the attitude of the bank was absolutely fell to the ground if they analysed it in the face of his own earlier and more to be believed statements to be found in his own letter. The evidence was perfectly clear that from the time the affidavit was made in the provisional case onwards De Kok never denied that he threatened Meyer with sequestration and that he would have him arrested if he absconded. His learned friend had glided away from the consequences of sequestration and the arrest upon absconding as if there had been no Insolvency Ordinance at all and as if there had been no serious and grave consequences to be anticipated from the discovery, if the sequestration had taken place, of the false balance sheet and of the fraudulent contracting of the debt.

Sir H. Juta having replied,

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (February 25th).

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an appeal by the defendant against a judgment of a Divisional Court in an action to recover: (1) The sum of £3,378, being the balance alleged to be due to the plaintiff bank on a promissory note made by the defendant in favour of the firm of Israelson Brothers and by them indorsed to the plaintiff; and (2) the sum of £890 on a written guarantee given by the defendant to the bank for the payment of overdrafts of the firm. The plea to the declaration was in substance that the consideration for the note and guarantee was the bank's promise not to take criminal proceedings against the firm or any member thereof for the forgery of certain other promissory notes made in favour of the firm and by them discounted with the bank and that, as such a consideration is illegal, the bank is not entitled to recover. The Court below held that no promise not to prosecute the Israelsons was ever given by the bank, and that as the plea had failed the bank was entitled to recover the full amount claimed.

There can be no doubt that Meyer Israelson, a member of the firm, had forged the notes, for which the note now in question was substituted, by fraudulently adding to the amounts payable thereunder, and that the consideration appearing on the face of the transaction was the return by the bank to the firm of the forged notes. That in itself would not necessarily be an illegal consideration, but, if it is clear that the object of the defendant was to the bank's knowledge, to stifle a prosecution of the Israelsons for forgery and that the bank assisted in the attainment of that object by first leading the defendant into the belief that there would be a prosecution unless he came to the rescue of the firm and then, upon receipt of the defendant's note, withdrawing preliminary proceedings which the bank had previously ostentatiously taken with the view to such prosecution, the transaction would undoubtedly be against public policy and wholly illegal. It is not to be expected, in such a transaction, that the maker of the note would candidly avow his object or that the indorsee would compromise himself by making a definite promise not to prosecute, but if the conduct of the parties is inconsistent with the existence of any other object or promise, then the unspoken words become as eloquent and convincing as the most persuasive speech.

The question whether a promise not to prosecute any member of the firm for forgery may or may not be fairly inferred from the admitted conduct of the parties, is one upon which this Court is in as good a position to decide as the Court of first instance. The chief witness for the bank was De Kok, the ex-manager of the Oudtshoorn branch, and, as his evidence seems to have been believed by the learned judge, this Court should, where there is a direct conflict with the evidence of the defendant's witnesses, accept his statements as correct, except, of course, in so far as they are in conflict with confidential reports made by him to the head office, contemporaneously with the transactions to which they relate. At the time of the making of the note now in question, the firm had considerably overdrawn their account with the bank, and the head office had apparently found fault with De Kok for the manner in which this had been done. De Kok was anxious to reduce the overdraft, and arranged with Meyer Israelson, the senior member of the firm, that the defendant would sign for £1,000 as part security. The defendant, upon being applied to, refused to sign until he knew more about the firm, whereupon De Kok said: "If that is the case, I will have to sue the Israelsons for the overdraft in their books." After that De Kok again saw Meyer, who said that he was going to Port Elizabeth, where financial support had been offered him. The next De Kok heard of Meyer was that he had gone to Cape Town, from which place the head office telegraphed that Meyer was offering a compromise of 7s. 6d. in the £ to his creditors. In the meantime De Kok had sent notices to the makers of about twenty promissory notes in favour of the firm, and by the firm discounted with the bank, and had been informed that fraudulent alterations had been made in the notes. This information was confirmed as to some of the notes, at all events, by a close examination which De Kok made of the writing. On receipt of the telegram from the head office, De Kok telegraphed to the general manager: "Have his movements shadowed. Extreme measures not desirable at this stage." The general manager answered that he could not move without further particulars, to which De Kok replied by telegraph: "Prompt action must be taken to watch party's movements. Suspicious circumstances have arisen with firm's discount account, some makers repudiating amounts, and allege grave defalcations, which, unless satisfactorily explained by him, will lead to his arrest on criminal charge. Matter urgent." De Kok was informed by wire that Meyer had left for Oudtshoorn, whereupon De Kok requested the Chief Constable there to have Meyer watched, as the latter might be arrested for having committed some crime. What that crime was, clearly appeared from the telegrams to the head office. The Chief Constable accordingly detailed two men to keep Meyer under constant observation. The first watch started on the evening of the 15th August, and from that time a continuous watch was kept night and day, the men relieving each other every four hours, until the evening of the 18th, when De Kok requested the Chief Constable to discontinue the watch, "as it was not necessary to continue further." The Chief Constable stated in his evidence that it was common talk about the place that there had been forgeries, and certainly no pains were taken to conceal the fact of Meyer being watched from the defendant, or even from Meyer himself. The defendant, in his evidence, said: "I knew the police were watching Meyer. I could see the special constable watching the place. I know that as soon as I signed the bill the watch was stopped." However untrustworthy the rest of the defendant's evidence may be, no attempt has been made to discredit these statements of his. I do not find that De Kok ever expressly informed the defendant of the watching, but in his affidavit, he said: "Shortly before the 18th August, 1904, the defendant and Isidore Israelson called on me, and urged on me to be lenient to the firm. Ultimately the defendant asked what form his assistance should take, and begged of me to be lenient." The form of assistance agreed upon, after a subsequent long interview, was that the defendant should give the bill in question, and De Kok showed his leniency by withdrawing the police and returning the forged notes as soon as the defendant's note had been given. As to Meyer, De Kok admitted in his evidence that he informed the former on the 18th of August that he was having him watched. Two days after the defendant's note had been given and the police withdrawn, De Kok, in his report to the head office, after reciting the telegrams already mentioned, said that he had obtained further cover for the unsecured overdraft, and added that he would "conclude this subject, which is lengthy, by next mail." Accordingly on the 24th of August De Kok transmitted a full account of the transaction, which is so important for the full understanding of its real nature that it cannot possibly be abridged. "With regard," he said, "to the defalcations hinted at in our wire 'brain' of 13th inst., we have to report that, towards the end of last month we sent notices of the firm's bill to the makers. This course had never been previously adopted by the branch, but, with a view of getting their liabilities reduced, it was resorted to. To our surprise, several of the makers of the larger bills, upon receipt of the notice, called on us to repudiate the amounts. While admitting the signatures, it was alleged that the amounts had been raised or written in after the bills had been signed. A close examination of the writing certainly, in some cases, confirmed the suspicion. However, we thus found ourselves in possession of a large amount of suspicious bills, amounting to over £3,500 (actually disputed by the makers), with the suspected culprit absent in Cape Town, and an overdraft of £2,900 only partly secured, which had also been obtained under false pretences. The partner of the firm, who was here at the time, could not explain, and referred us to his brother, Mr. Meyer Israelson, who had conducted the firm's finances. In the circumstances we felt that prompt action was necessary, and forthwith wired to you to have his movements shadowed in Cape Town in order to prevent his absconding. Upon his return to Oudtshoorn we had him watched by the police, pending a satisfactory explanation, and it is doubtless due to this action that we are in a position to report a satisfactory solution of this unpleasant business. Upon being faced with the alleged defalcations, Mr. Israelson stated that though the farmers (makers) did not owe the amount, they had signed for his accommodation. This, in itself, was a confession of misrepresentation, as the notes had been presented to us as trade paper, and we insisted upon their immediate removal from our books. The firm was, of course, not in a position to retire them, but the partners' brother-in-law, Mr. M. Hotz, who is a customer of the Bank of Africa, and favourably reported on, came to their assistance by offering his own bill in place of those we suspected. The latter, amounting to £3,578, were, therefore, rebated, and Mr. Hotz's bill for the amount in favour of the firm discounted instead. We trust that you will confirm this action, which, in our opinion, presented the only way, without serious loss and troublesome litigation, out of the decidedly dangerous position we had been forced into. In conclusion, we may add that we are, of course, refusing all first transactions for the firm, for though we believe that two of the partners are honest men, we prefer to see the account liquidated and ultimately closed."

In the course of the argument it was contended on behalf of the bank that De Kok's main objection to the so-called "farmers' bills" was that they were not ordinary trade bills, but the report shows that this was but a secondary objection. The real reason why he wished to have them replaced was because he no longer believed in the honesty of Meyer Israelson, and had the strongest possible reasons for believing that Meyer had fraudulently tampered with the farmers' notes. De Kok, in his evidence said that he wrote this report, and that it explains his state of mind at that time. In another part of his evidence he said that the shadowing of Meyer had only to do with the false balance-sheet, which he had rendered to the bank, and the learned Judge seems to have accepted this statement as correct. It is, however, quite impossible to reconcile this statement with De Kok's telegrams and his own report, which admittedly explained the state of his mind, and was written at a time when the whole transaction was fresh in his memory. These documents make it perfectly clear that the "defalcations," in respect of which Meyer was being watched, related to the notes which had been repudiated by the makers, and to them only, and the statements of De Kok that the "defalcations" referred to the balance-sheet, and that the shadowing was in connection with that false balance-sheet are, to say the least of them, whole disingenuous. Unless Meyer could satisfactorily explain these grave defalcations, he was to be arrested on a criminal charge. The only "satisfactory explanation" which induced De Kok not to proceed with the criminal charge was the substitution of the defendant's note for the "suspicious bills." After the substitution had taken place, De Kok ascribed this "satisfactory solution" to the action he had taken in having Meyer Israelson watched by the police. There surely could not be a stronger admission, short of making it in so many words, that he had obtained the defendant's note by working on the fears of Meyer and the defendant, and by leading them to believe that there would be no prosecution if the forged notes were replaced by the defendant's note. As to these forged notes, the learned Judge remarked that "it would have been a very rash thing to do to threaten an apparently well-to-do customer with a criminal prosecution upon the bare allegation of the makers of the notes, which were emphatically denied by him." In so far as the learned Judge found that such a threat was not made in express words, I feel bound to accept his finding, although I must point out that by the 18th August De Kok could hardly have supposed the Israelsons to be well-to-do customers, and that the notes themselves (one of which was exhibited to this Court) showed that alterations had been made in them. But a threat may be made by deeds as well as words, and I cannot conceive of a more forcible mode of conveying such a threat than by an ostentatious shadowing of the offender and by expressing a willingness to a near relative of the offender to accept his note in substitution for the notes which had been fraudulently altered. The shadowing was withdrawn as soon as the substituted note was obtained, the forged notes were returned to be dealt with by the Israelsons as they chose, and although criminal proceedings were subsequently taken—and successfully taken—against Meyer Israelson, it does not appear that those proceedings were in any way encouraged by the bank. The defendant, however, who never raised the question of the illegality of the note so long as no prosecution was taken, immediately raised the question when the consideration for which he had intended to give his note failed by reason of the prosecution being commenced. In regard to the promissory note, I am satisfied that the only consideration for which it was given was the return of the forged notes, and that there was a tacit understanding between De Kok, the defendant, and Meyer Israelson that, upon receipt of the note, De Kok would stay his hand and would not take the further criminal proceedings which, by his conduct, he had led them to believe he would take.

In regard to the guarantee of £890 given by the defendant, the connection between it and the forged notes is by no means equally clear. The note given by the defendant completely covered the amount of the forged notes, and the guarantee was given to partly cover an overdraft, as to the validity of which there is no question. No doubt the giving of the guarantee formed a part of the same transaction as the giving of the note, but unless this Court is perfectly satisfied that the consideration for which it was given was the stifling of a prosecution, the Court should not, in my opinion, disturb the finding of the Court below. Before the forgeries were discovered there had been communications between the parties as to the signing of a guarantee by the defendant for the firm's overdraft. The defendant at that time refused to sign, but Foster, his attorney, seems to have understood that a promise to do so was given by him. Foster, in his evidence, said: "When the defendant signed the bill and guarantee, it is possible that I said, 'You are signing this guarantee because you have promised to do so.'" De Kok also, in his evidence, says: "When defendant took up his pen to sign the guarantee form, Mr. Foster said, he having first read it over: 'You are signing that guarantee form because you have promised to do so, Mr. Hotz?' and he replied, 'Yes.'" It is just possible, of course, that all this may have been said to give a show of legality to the transaction, but the charge against Foster that he acted in collusion with De Kok was not pressed on appeal. It is quite reasonable to believe that such a promise was given by the defendant quite independently of the staying of criminal proceedings. According to the declaration, the consideration for the guarantee was the allowing by the bank to the firm of certain banking facilities, and this statement is not denied in the plea, nor was it suggested in the course of the argument that such banking facilities were refused before the 23rd of the following month, when the estate of the firm was sequestrated. In the absence, therefore, of clear proof that the consideration for the guarantee was other than that expressed on the face of the document, I am of opinion that, upon the insolvency of the firm, the bank became entitled to recover the amount of the guarantee.

As to the defendant's note, the consideration was, for the reasons already stated, wholly illegal. In the case of Harris v. Executrix of Krige (2 Juta, 399), the plaintiff had obtained from one Marais a note made by the defendant in favour of and for the accommodation of Marais, and by him indorsed to the plaintiff. It was proved to the satisfaction of this Court that the note had been so given by Marais, with the object, known to the plaintiff, of avoiding a disclosure of the forgery by Marais of certain other notes in the plaintiff's possession, and it was held by a full bench that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. "Marais' sole object," it was said in the judgment, "to the knowledge of the plaintiff, was to avoid a disclosure of his crimes, and any undertaking, express or implied, to promote that object cannot be regarded as a legal consideration." The learned Judge in the Court below said, in regard to that case, that the guilt of the forger was admitted on all hands at the interview when the note was given, whereas in the present case that circumstance is absent. I do not, however, conceive that the learned Judge intended to convey the view that an arrangement to stifle a prosecution for forgery would be legal if the forger does not admit his guilt. In the present case Meyer Israelson denied his guilt, but the conduct of the defendant, as well as of De Kok, showed that they did not believe his denial, and the result of the subsequent criminal proceedings against Meyer, at the suit of some of his creditors, was to establish his guilt. Under such circumstances, the transaction entered into between De Kok, Meyer, and the defendant would be as much against public feeling as if Meyer's guilt had been admitted on all hands. As to the law of England, it is by no means clear that it would permit the bank to enforce its claim on the promissory note against the defendant. It is true that in the case of Wallace v. Hardacre (1 Camp, 45), Lord Ellenborough held that the indorsee may maintain an action against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, which the plaintiff had received from the indorser in lieu of another bill, also delivered to him, and indorsed by such indorser, who had forged the acceptance of a third person thereon, but Lord Ellenborough added that, if any bargaining could have been shown to stifle a prosecution for a criminal act, the action could certainly not be maintained. In the subsequent case of Williams v. Bayley (L.R., 1 E. and I.A., 20), it appeared that a son carried to bankers of whom he, as well as his father, was a customer, certain promissory notes, with his father's name upon them as indorser. These indorsements were forgeries. The fact of the forgery was afterwards discovered, the son did not deny it; the bankers insisted (though without any direct threat of prosecution) on a settlement, to which the father was to be a party; he consented, and executed an agreement to make an equitable mortgage of his property. The notes, with the forged indorsements, were then delivered up to him. It was held by the House of Lords, affirming the decree of the Vice-Chancellor, that the agreement was invalid. Lord Cranworth (L.C.), in delivering his opinion, said: "The parties were not standing in any fiduciary relation to one another, and if this had been a legal transaction, I do not know that we should have thought that there was any pressure that would have warranted the decree made by the Vice-Chancellor. But here was a pressure of this nature. We have the means of prosecuting, and so transporting your son. Do you choose to come to his help and take on yourself the amount of his debts—the amount of these forgeries? If you do, we will not prosecute; if you do not, we will. That is the plain interpretation of what passed. Is that, or is it not, legal? In my opinion, my lords, I am bound to go the length of saying that I do not think it is legal. I do not think that a transaction of that sort would have been legal even if, instead of being forced on the father, it had been proposed by him and adopted by the bankers." There are points of difference between that case and the present, but the object of the parties in entering into the arrangements, to stifle a prosecution, was equally clear in both cases. In one respect the difference between the two cases is against the present plaintiff, for, in the case before the House of Lords, the bankers had not taken any active steps which might lead the father to believe that they seriously contemplated taking criminal proceedings against the son. In the present case the pressure took the form of an ostentatious shadowing of the forger by the police, and, although the defendant was not forced into giving the note in question, it was intimated to him by unmistakable signs, that if the note, or something equivalent thereto, were not given, a prosecution would follow. The result is that, in my opinion, the appeal must be dismissed in regard to the bank's claim on the guarantee, and allowed in regard to the claim on the promissory note. There will, consequently, be judgment for the plaintiff on the guarantee of £890 as prayed, and for the defendant on the promissory note of £3,578 10s. 8d. The order as to costs in the Court below will remain, but the plaintiff bank will pay the costs of appeal.

Laurence, J., passed under review the salient facts of the case. Dealing with the action of De Kok in placing Meyer Israelsohn under police surveillance on his return to Oudtshoorn, he said that De Kok explained that this was owing to the erroneous balance-sheet signed by the firm, and certified by a local accountant, exhibited to him several months previously, and also owing to the alleged misrepresentations as to the character of the bills. He (the learned Judge), after full consideration, felt quite unable to accept De Kok's explanation of the motive of his action. His Lordship continued: If we believe the evidence of Sydney, the representative of Kenner Brothers, who appears to be a disinterested witness now in the employ of Prince, Vintoent and Co., De Kok at this time had told him the bills were forgeries. When asked by the witness whether it was a case of fraudulent bankruptcy, he said, "It is worse: it is a case of forgery." I pressed for an explanation, and he said that several bills discounted at the bank by Israelsohn Brothers had been forged. It was before Meyer returned." The Chief Constable, to whom De Kok had applied for the assistance of the police, says that "it was common talk about the place that there had been forgeries." Moreover, just before this, when Meyer was at Cape Town, we find De Kok telegraphing to the head office that "suspicious circumstances have arisen with firm's discount account, some makers repudiating amounts, and alleged grave defalcations, which, unless satisfactorily explained by him, will lead to his arrest on criminal charge. He subsequently explained that he was enabled "to do the needful at this end." What was the needful which he was enabled to effect? Clearly his idea when he sent that telegram was that, unless the alleged "grave defalcations" on the discounted bills were satisfactorily explained, Meyer should be arrested on that account, or, in other words, that he should be arrested for forgery. Clearly, too, it was from the same standpoint that he invoked the assistance of the local police, and his subsequent explanation about the balance-sheet, and other alleged misrepresentations, can only be characterised as a far from plausible afterthought. The learned Judge says in his judgment that "it would have been a very rash thing to do to threaten an apparently well-to-do customer with criminal prosecution upon the bare allegation of the makers of the notes, which were emphatically denied by him." But, with all respect, it must be observed that, whether or no Israelsohn, who seems at the time to have been hopelessly insolvent, could be described as a "well-to-do customer"; in any case, De Kok had very much more to go on than the "bare allegation" of the makers, strong as, even from that point of view, the cumulative effect of the consensus of allegations undoubtedly was. It was a case in which one might almost say, res ipsa loquitur, and its strength is shown by the significant fact that the Crown was afterwards able to obtain a conviction without producing the pièces de conviction, namely the forged documents themselves. It is not surprising to learn that, in such circumstances, there was a vigorous defence. "In spite of that," his Lordship continues, "was the Court now to say that De Kok would at once have taken proceedings for forgery?" The real question, however, seems to be not whether he would actually have taken such proceedings, but whether, by his language or his conduct, he threatened to do so. In my opinion, it is proved beyond a reasonable doubt that it was on account of the alleged forgeries, or, as he puts it, "the grave delinquencies which, unless satisfactorily explained, will lead to his arrest on a criminal charge," that De Kok had the man watched by the police. He admits having threatened to arrest him if he absconded, and that Meyer then asked him to stay his hand in order to enable him to get help from Hotz (affidavit, paragraph 16). He also admits having after this had three interviews with Hotz, at which the position seems to have been very fully discussed (affidavit, paragraphs 20-24). As a result of these interviews, Hotz agreed to give the bill, and, after further pressure (paragraph 22), to sign the guarantee. As soon as Hotz had signed the documents, De Kok went to the Chief Constable and told him to take off the police. In his report to the bank he states that "upon his (Meyer's) return to Oudtshoorn, we had him watched by the police, pending a satisfactory explanation, and it is doubtless due to this action that we are in a position to report a satisfactory solution of this unpleasant business." I cannot find that there had been any "satisfactory explanation," but the "solution" was doubtless "satisfactory" to the writer. He had acted in connection with this account in more than one respect, in a manner which was evidently regarded by his principals as irregular and reprehensible. If the conduct of an official in such a position merits censure, the best way in which he can hope to mitigate its rigour is by showing that he had succeeded in averting any resulting prejudice or actual loss. This, he thought, he had done, and the only conclusion at which, after much anxious consideration, I can arrive, is that he did, whether directly or indirectly, put pressure upon Hotz, that the engine which he employed was the menace of a criminal prosecution for forgery, that it was owing to such pressure that the bill and guarantee were signed, and that, such being the case, it would be contrary to public policy, and to the settled law on the subject, to hold that these documents were given for good and valid consideration, or that the appellant was liable thereon to the respondent bank. Owing to the exceptional features of the case, I have thought it my duty to review the facts in such detail and at a length which in most cases would be superfluous. I do not propose to say anything more with regard to the legal aspects. The law in point is clearly explained in the Supreme Court case of Harris v. Krige, and in the case in the House of Lords of Williams v. Bayley. As I remarked during the argument, it is certainly a curious coincidence that the passage in that case, then cited by my lord, was also quoted by myself on the last previous occasion on which I happened to be sitting in this Court, to deliver a reserved judgment in the Circuit Court appeal of Van der Poel and Another v. Du Preez, in which I had occasion to discuss the authorities at some length. The question now before us is: What is the proper inference to be drawn from the whole history of this transaction, giving due weight to all the antecedent circumstances and to the inherent probabilities of the case? On the whole, I have come to the conclusion, though I confess not without some reluctance, that the proper inference is that the plea has been substantiated, and that the appeal must therefore be allowed. I only wish to add that I have felt, and still feel, great difficulty in drawing any valid distinction between the question of the appellant's liability on the guarantee, and that of his liability on the bill. They appear to have been treated as one issue throughout both in the pleadings and in argument. Both documents were given at the same time. Hotz very shortly before had refused to give a similar document, and I can find no sufficient reason for his changing his mind on the subject except the intervening discovery of the forgeries. In these circumstances, had I been sitting alone, I think I should have allowed the appeal without discrimination, but in view of the strong opinion on the subject entertained by the Chief Justice, and admitting as I cannot but admit that there is considerable force in his reasons, I am not prepared to dissent on this comparatively minor point, on which the case for the appellants is undoubtedly somewhat less strong than on the main subject of contention. As to costs, his lordship said he thought the order as to costs proposed by the Chief Justice was in all the circumstances one which might be properly made.

Hopley, J.: I agree with the judgments just delivered, and with the results. I only wish to say that, as regards the guarantee, I take the view expressed in his judgment by his lordship the Chief Justice.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Syfret, Godlonton and Low; Respondents' Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ABRAM AND CO. V. VAN DYK. 1907.
Feb. 11th.

The declaration set forth that the plaintiff was Barend Abram, a merchant, carrying on business at Calvinia under the style of Abram and Co. The defendant was a carrier. On the 12th October, 1905, the parties entered into an agreement whereby the defendant agreed to sell and the plaintiff to purchase certain property at Calvinia for the sum of £800, upon certain terms and conditions contained in a deed of sale. The deed stipulated that the defendant agreed to take a mortgage bond for the full amount of the purchase price, on condition that the plaintiff improved the buildings on the property to the extent of £300, or erected buildings of that value thereon. Plaintiff had erected a new building of the value of £1,000. Plaintiff had always been ready and willing to perform his obligation under the contract, but the defendant had refused to pass transfer. Plaintiff claimed an order on the defendant to pass transfer, or for £1,000, the value of the improvements effected, and for £100 damages.

In his plea, the defendant said that he had always been ready and willing to perform his obligation in terms of the deed of sale, and the delay in passing transfer was solely due to the plaintiff's continued failure to pay the transfer duty, or to make the necessary deposit for costs of the transfer and of passing the bond. In reconvention, he claimed £100 damages.

In his replication, the plaintiff said he had always been ready and willing to pay the costs of the transfer and the bond, and now tendered to pay them.

Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Struben) was for the plaintiff; Mr. Burton (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers), was for the defendant.

Mr. Burton said the issue seemed now to be a question of costs. The defendant withdrew his claim in reconvention.

Mr. Benjamin: It appears to be narrowed down now, my lord, to a question of whether we were ready to perform our obligation to pay the costs of the bond and transfer.

[Maasdorp, J.: The costs will depend upon who was in default.]

Mr. Benjamin: Yes.

Mr. Burton said it was not purely a question of costs. The matter of the payment of interest was involved.

Evidence was then led.

Maasdorp, J., said that in this case the plaintiff sued the defendant for specific performance of an agreement under which defendant had sold plaintiff a portion of an erf, or in the alternative for damages for breach of contract. The agreement was for the sale of one-quarter share of the erf No. 4, Stiglingh-street, Calvinia, "as bought by the said Van Dyk from Loubser" for £900. The purchase price was not to be paid in cash, but it was agreed that, upon plaintiff improving the property to the extent of £300, defendant would accept a bond for the whole amount of the purchase price. He erected a building, and he was entitled to receive transfer upon his performing his part of the agreement. The question arose whether he was prepared and able to carry out this agreement. A great deal of the delay after April, 1906, was accounted for by the fact that plaintiff wished the contract to be varied. He offered to pay a certain portion of the purchase price in cash if the defendant would take a second bond for the balance, and defendant was willing to agree to this if the plaintiff could arrange the matter. The negotiations that followed did not affect the case, as they did not culminate in a novation of the contract. The question was: Was the plaintiff able to perform his part of the agreement, i.e., to take transfer and to pass a bond for the full purchase amount. It was absolutely necessary for plaintiff to do that to obtain the assistance of conveyancers; it was not enough to declare his preparedness, but the assistance of a professional man was necessary, and he had to show that he had engaged such a man. Now, either he had engaged no conveyancer or agent, or he had engaged Mr. Marais. If he had engaged no one, then he was not entitled to succeed, and if he employed Marais, then Marais was his agent, and Marais said that the only difficulty was that plaintiff was not prepared to pay the transfer duty and costs of passing the deed and bond. The plaintiff could have removed the work out of Marais' hands, but he did not do that, and referred Marais to his partner or representative Cassim Vaelly, who, however, did not furnish any money either, and Marais was not prepared to proceed. Consequently plaintiff's agent was not prepared, even up to date, to carry out plaintiff's part of the agreement. The plaintiff was now entitled to have transfer of the undivided quarter of the erf that was bought by Van Dyk from Loubser. The words were so plain that they required no explanation, but the plaintiff was not prepared to carry out the contract as it was interpreted by the Court, as he said that he was only prepared to take transfer of a divided portion. That was not, however, his agreement, which was to take transfer of an undivided share, and he was, therefore, not at all times able and willing to fulfil the contract, and he was not entitled to claim transfer. There was, on the other hand, a claim on the part of the defendant for interest from November 1, 1905. Interest was generally considered as an equivalent for the possession and enjoyment of property, and as plaintiff had his possession and enjoyment, he was liable to pay interest. It was, however, a yearly interest, and could not be given up to date. In order to make it quite clear that judgment was refused because the plaintiff had not been prepared to carry out his part of the agreement, the shape of the judgment would be absolution from the instance on the claim in convention, with costs, and judgment on the claim in reconvention for the interest from November 1, 1905, to November 1, 1906, with costs. Defendant certified a necessary witness.

[Plaintiffs' Attorneys: Syfret, Godlonton and Low. Defendant's Attorneys: Le Roux and Wege.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY and a Jury.]

BIGGS V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { 1907.
MENT. { Feb. 12th.

This was an action brought by George James Biggs, of Mowbray, against the Colonial Government to recover three months' salary in lieu of notice and arrear allowances for food and quarters.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that on or about the 11th June, 1903, the parties entered into certain articles of agreement whereby plaintiff engaged himself in the service of the defendants as a stocktaker in the refreshment department of the C.G.R. for two years from the date of his departure from England, which period the defendant was at liberty to extend by giving notice to the plaintiff. The salary was to be £23 per month, and it was also provided that the defendant should supply the plaintiff with quarters and food, or make him an allowance in lieu thereof. It was also provided that defendant should be at liberty to terminate the agreement by giving plaintiff three months' notice, or paying him one month's salary and providing him with a second-class passage to England. Plaintiff entered upon his duties on or about the 7th July, 1903, and was paid his salary at the end of every month until the 5th May, 1906, the said period of two years specified in the agreement having been indefinitely extended by the defendant on or about the 2nd May, 1905. On or about the 5th May, 1906, defendant notified the plaintiff that his services were no longer required, and terminated the plaintiff's said engagement as and from that date. Plaintiff said that up to the 1st January, 1905, defendant had, in accordance with the said agreement, supplied the plaintiff with quarters and food, or made an allowance in lieu thereof, but from that date he had been obliged to find himself with both quarters and food, and had received no allowance therefor. He claimed £130 6s. 8d., being 17 months' allowance for food and quarters at the rate of £7 13s. 4d. per month and £92 salary in lieu of three months' notice.

Defendant, in his plea, denied the alleged agreement as to the allowance, and craved leave to refer to the agreement when produced at the trial. He said that from and after the expiration of the period of the contract plaintiff was re-engaged by the defendant to serve the Colonial Government at a monthly salary of £23. The said service was not included in the said agreement of the 29th May, 1903. At the date of the plaintiff's discharge he was paid one month's salary, £23, in lieu of notice. Defendant admitted that plaintiff was entitled to three months' notice as from the 5th May, 1906, and said that he had tendered such salary to plaintiff, together with taxed costs to date of tender, but plaintiff had refused the said tender. Defendant repeated the tender, and offered to pay the balance on the said salary, viz., £46, with taxed costs to date of tender. As to the allowance claimed by plaintiff, defendant said that the allowance was a temporary privilege while plaintiff's duties carried him into the country districts. On his transfer to the headquarters in Cape Town the said privilege was withdrawn.

Mr. Russell was for plaintiff; Mr. Howel Jones (with him Mr. Nightingale) was for defendants.

Mr. Jones submitted that the real question to be determined in this case was as to the construction of the contract, and that there was no question to go to the jury.

George James Biggs (the plaintiff) gave evidence.

Mr. Russell was about to lead evidence as to an arrangement which he said had come to between Mr. Simmons, the manager of the refreshment department, and the plaintiff in regard to an allowance for food and quarters, when

Mr. Jones objected that the Government had had no notice of any contract beyond that which was to be produced at the trial, and it was not competent for his learned friend to seek by parole evidence to vary that contract. He took the further point that Mr. Simmons had no power to bind the Government.

Hopley, J., held that evidence could not be led under the circumstances for the purpose of varying the written contract.

In further evidence, witness said that he did not see anyone else in connection with the contract except Mr. Simmons. Upon his arrival in Cape Town he was allowed subsistence, and he subsequently went to Matjestfontein, where he was again allowed subsistence in place of food and quarters.

Mr. Russell read a circular issued by the Government in July, 1903, stating that employees not resident in Cape Town, and engaged under two years' agreement, were to receive 10s. a day for board and lodging, in addition to salary.

Witness (in answer to the Court) said that as long as he was not resident in Cape Town he received the subsistence allowance. In further evidence, witness said that he came back to Cape Town in October, 1903, at the request of the head manager, and assisted for a month at the head office, receiving the subsistence allowance. Later he was provided with quarters at Matjestfontein, and then at De Aar. He obtained his food at the refreshment rooms. When he had his quarters and food provided he only received actual out of pocket expenses. In December, 1904, witness came back to Cape Town, in answer to a letter, stating that it had been decided to abolish the district stock-taking staff, and directing him to return to Cape Town to join the head office stock-taking staff. He came to Cape Town about the 20th January, 1905. From that point he was away up-country for about sixteen days each month. He was not provided with quarters in Cape Town. While he was away travelling up-country, he took his meals at the refreshment rooms, and was provided with quarters. He put in a claim against the Government for subsistence in February, 1905, while in Cape Town. This was not entertained. In May, 1905, witness agreed to remain in the Government's service beyond the period of the contract. On the 5th May, 1906, witness received a letter from Mr. Simmons dispensing with his services, and enclosing a pay-sheet for £23, one month's salary in lieu of notice. Witness accepted the notice under protest. He took the £23 as salary for the month of May. He received a certificate from

Mr. Simmons as a "very competent stock-taker."

By the Court: Witness was now fighting the case on the question of subsistence allowance.

Cross-examined: Witness regarded clause 4 of the agreement as entitling him to expenses, whether he was travelling or not. Where there was no accommodation up-country he had to put up at hotels, and was reimbursed his expenses. He maintained that he had not been overpaid by the Government. He had taken the expenses allowed to stationmasters as the basis of his claim of £7 13s. 4d. He found that stationmasters were allowed expenses at the rate of one-third of their salary. While he was away the expenses of his room in Cape Town continued. It was usual in the trade to make a drink allowance of 3s. 6d. a day. He considered that he had been shamefully treated by the Government. He had made a statement to an official of the Government, named Mr. Hoale, in regard to an allegation against an attendant at a coffee-stall. The matter arose from a communication made to him by a commercial traveller, and the subsequently wrote saying that he withdrew the statement.

Mr. Russell closed his case.

Mr. Jones submitted that there was no case to go to the jury, and that the sole question was as to the construction of the contract.

Mr. Russell admitted that, as the case stood now, there seemed to be no question to go to the jury. They had, however, come into court to meet a case in which there were originally certain points to be determined by a jury.

Mr. Russell, in argument, submitted that the notice could not have been given by the defendant to the plaintiff on the 5th of the month. He contended that plaintiff was entitled to one month's salary over and above the tender.

Mr. Jones said that they had come into Court really to fight the question as to the large amount of subsistence allowance claimed by the plaintiff. It now appeared that his learned friend had abandoned that part of the claim. He contended that the Government were entitled to give plaintiff three months' notice, to run from the day on which the Government determined to give him notice.

By consent of counsel, the jury were discharged, His Lordship saying that there was no question of fact to be left to their decision.

Hopley, J.: In this case the plaintiff engaged himself to the Government on the 30th June, 1903, for a period of two years at a salary of £23 a month, with certain arrangements as to travelling expenses, and, though an attempt was made in the course of the trial to import further evidence as to the meaning of that. objection was very properly taken, and one must keep to the agreement itself. The sixth clause, therefore, becomes the important one to adjust the rights of the parties, because just before the termination of the original agreement the plaintiff was asked by his immediate chief whether he wished to continue his services under the agreement. His answer was briefly that he did wish to remain in the service of the Government at the expiration of the original agreement. Thereupon it seems to me that the agreement was for an indefinite time, governed by the general clauses of the old agreement entered into, and it has been argued that that was an agreement for two years, but even if it were, clause six of the old agreement would still hold as to the termination of the agreement if it were wished to do so, by the Government at all events. Now, about a year after he had agreed to go on this service, some little friction seems to have arisen between plaintiff, Mr. Hoale, and Mr. Simmons, who is the chief of the refreshment department, with the result that on the 5th May, 1906, plaintiff's services were dispensed with and he was given a month's wages in lieu of notice. He accepted this amount under protest at the time, and he brought his action claiming not only the allowance of quarters, but also three months' wages in lieu of notice, as he was entitled to under the sixth clause of the agreement. The Government originally took up the position that he need not have three months' notice, but in their plea they seem to have abandoned that position, and they tendered two further months' salary. Their plea is that at the date of the plaintiff's discharge he was paid one month's salary in lieu of notice. In the 5th paragraph they say: "The defendant denies paragraph 7, he denies that the plaintiff was entitled to three months' salary in lieu of notice as from the 5th May, 1906, and on the 2nd July, 1906, he tendered such salary to the plaintiff, together with taxed costs to date of tender, but the plaintiff refused the said tender. Defendant now repeats the said tender, and is ready and willing and offers to pay the balance of the said salary, viz., £46, together with taxed costs to the 7th July, 1906." It therefore becomes necessary to settle whether the notice which was given terminated on the 5th August, as Mr. Russell contends, that such notice terminated on the 31st August, and he should be paid not only the sum of £23 which he received for the month of May, but £69 in addition to it, and we must, in order to arrive at a decision on that point, look at the terms of the agreement between the parties. Now, if this were an ordinary month to month hiring beginning on the 1st of the month and ending on the 31st, as in the case quoted by Mr. Russell—Pemberton v. Kessel (1905, Transvaal Supreme Court, 174)—that case, it seems to me, has laid down a principle which will be followed by everybody in South Africa, because there is a great wish to have uniformity of decision, and as far as I am able to see, it lays down a reasonable rule, which I think one should follow. But in no part of this agreement, which is a written agreement, is it laid down that the appointment shall be from the beginning or any part of the month. As a matter of practice and convenience, plaintiff when he arrived in this country was paid at the end of the month, like every other Civil Servant and Government employee. But there is nothing in the agreement which makes it compulsory upon them to pay him on that day. On the contrary, if they had wanted, they could have paid him on the monthly return of the day he left England, that is, the 20th June. So that the argument founded on the construction of the agreement as being the end of every month seems to me under the agreement itself not to be well founded. But, as a matter of practice, he was paid at the end of every month, and it is now argued, because of that, his notice must terminate at the end of the month. The 6th clause of the agreement says: "In the event of the Government becoming desirous to terminate the engagement of the employee at any time during the currency of the same, it shall be at liberty to do so, on giving three months' notice, terminable at any period of the year, or on the Government paying him one month's salary, and providing him with a free second-class passage by ship or steamer to England." Now, what do the words "terminable at any period of the year" mean? Mr. Russell asserts that it must terminate at some known astronomical or other period of the year, something fixed by the calendar, as the end of the month. But it does not seem to me to necessarily mean that when it was put in the agreement, as it was not in the case of Pemberton v. Kessel. To my mind, it means that the three months may determine at any time during the year from the date on which the notice is given. If so, then there is only due to the plaintiff the sum of £69, but even so, the Government tender does not come up to the mark, and, in addition to the sum of £69, they ought to have tendered about £3 15s. or £3 16s. for the five days up to the 5th May. Therefore, in my opinion, there ought to be judgment in this case for the plaintiff for the sum of £46, with costs, as tendered up to the 2nd July, and for a further sum of £3 16s. Now, as to this amount of £3 16s., it would be a hardship on the Government if I were to make the whole of the costs subsequent to the 2nd July tell against them. I think the equitable judgment would be for a further sum of £3 16s., and no order as to costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buiesinné; Defendants' Attorneys: Reid and Nephew.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

JOYCE V. ALOSOROFF. { 1907.
{ Feb. 12th.

Horse—Negligence—Damages.

The defendant's horse, which had previously been seen running wildly and recklessly on certain war department property, run over and injured the plaintiff's minor child.

Held, that there was negligence on the defendant's part in allowing the horse to run unmattended on property which he knew to be frequented by children.

The child had not been permanently injured, but the plaintiff, as father, had incurred some expenses in the treatment of the child after the accident.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of such expenses, at all events, as damages from the defendant.

This was an action to recover £100 damages, brought by the father as natural guardian of a child named Maria Joyce, who was alleged to have been knocked down and trampled upon by a horse belonging to the defendant.

The declaration set forth that the plaintiff was a plumber, employed by the Table Bay Harbour Board, and was the father of Maria Joyce, a child of three years. On the 20th April, while the child was playing on a certain piece of ground on the foreshore at the bottom of Coal Point-road, Simon's Town, where she was lawfully entitled to be, a certain horse which the defendant had negligently and unlawfully allowed to stray about at random trampled on her, and caused her certain injuries. Plaintiff claimed £100 damages.

The defendant in his plea denied that he had unlawfully and negligently allowed the horse to stray. It was lawful for the horse to be there, and if any injury was done to the child, it was due to the plaintiff's own negligence in allowing the child to wander about alone on a piece of ground on which horses were in the habit of grazing.

Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff; Mr. Alexander was for the defendant.

Kalis Laman, a coloured labourer, said that Coal Point-road went over a piece of veld on to the foreshore. He saw the accident on the 20th April from his house. The horse galloped over the child.

Dr. Greer: Have you known that horse before?

Witness: Yes, it was a very wild horse. The witness added that people spoke of it as a wild horse. Witness, proceeding, said he called for assistance. He was afraid to go down himself, because the horse was so wild. Children often played on the ground. No one was with the horse. The piece of ground belonged to the military.

(Cross-examined: Farmers' wagons went on to the ground.)

Mr. Alexander: Horses are continually grazing there?

Witness: Horses never go alone there.

Would you allow a child of three to play on that ground?—The child ran away that morning.

How do you know that?—The mother told me.

Annie Lisbon said the child who was injured was staying with her at the time of the accident. She was told by the last witness of the accident. Witness went and picked the child up, and afterwards sent for Dr. Clarke. The child remained for three months in bed. The father paid witness 15s. a week for nourishment for the child during that time.

Dr. Greer questioned the witness as to her circumstances. He asked: Is your husband quite all right in body?

Witness: Yes.

Dr. Greer: Is he all right in body?

Witness: Yes; only his hand is off.

The witness said the horse was a wild one. She had herself run away from it in the street.

(Cross-examined: Witness tried to prevent the child going on that ground. She could not keep the child from going there.)

P.C. McKenzie said that Coal Point-road belonged to the War Department. On the top of the road there were stones, on which were the letters "W.D." The road was closed one day a year. Children usually played on this land. Sometimes a cart went down the road, but there was no regular traffic. There was no grazing there; there were a few rough bushes. Witness did not consider it a dangerous place for a child to play in. Defendant's horse was a spirited one. Witness had spoken to the defendant about the horse about three months previously. The horse then broke away and galloped through the street.

Cross-examined: Witness would not have allowed a child of three to play on that ground unattended. Witness lived near this place; he had not seen any horses on the ground. He had seen the farmers' wagons in Coal Point-road.

In the course of further cross-examination, the witness said there was a poundmaster, but there was no pound at Simon's Town. For the last twelve months nothing had been done to stop children playing on that ground.

Re-examined: It was customary for children to play on the ground.

John J. Hines deposed to having witnessed the accident.

Dr. Greer: Supposing it had been an older child, could it have got out of the way?

Witness: No, I don't think so, not even if it had been a Springbok. Proceeding, the witness said he had complained to the police on two or three occasions about the horse careering about on the ground. It was usual for children to play on the ground. He considered the horse a dangerous one. He said the horse made a snap at his master one day. That was some months before the accident. Witness had one child of ten years who played on that ground. It was a common playground.

Dr. Clarke gave evidence as to the child's injuries. Two ribs were fractured. He attended the child for three months. Witness's fees were £4 10s. He had not yet been paid. The child now had a slight deformity in the ribs, which witness believed would be permanent. It would not, however, affect the child's health.

William Joyce, father of the child, said he had paid Mrs. Lisbon 15s. a week for three months. Witness's solicitor first sent a demand for £19 10s. for expenses.

Cross-examined: The only expenses he had incurred amounted to £13 10s. The child was two years and four months old at the time of the accident.

Mr. Alexander submitted that there was no evidence of negligence.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There is evidence that the horse had shown signs of viciousness before.]

Dr. Greer closed his case.

B. Arlosoroff, the defendant, was called. He said he had never had any trouble with this horse before. The stable was not far from the ground in question, and there was a little grazing there. The horse had never snapped at witness. On the occasion Mr. Hines spoke of, witness called the horse, and when the horse came witness slipped and fell. The horse was like a dog. It took sugar from the neighbours' hands. Witness paid extra for it because it was a quiet horse.

Cross-examined: Witness never told the Magistrate at Simon's Town, in the course of a certain case, that he had sold this horse because it was vicious. Witness allowed his horse to go down from the stable to this ground. Mr. Albertyn allowed his horses to do so. The horse was not a terror to the neighbourhood, and was not known as Arlosoroff's wild horse. The girl Laman was spiteful. This was all made up to ruin him.

Samuel Hodson, a former employee of the defendant, said the horse was a quiet one. The children used to play in the same yard as the horse. Other animals were allowed to be on the ground.

Three other witnesses gave evidence to the same effect.

Dr. Greer, in argument, submitted that there was clear proof of negligence on the part of the defendant. There was nothing wrong in the child being on this piece of ground. It was a place so safe in its nature that it could not be held to be contributory negligence to allow a child to go there. Counsel contended that in this case there was more negligence than in the case of a horse left unattended on a public street, and which got into mischief in consequence. He cited authorities in support of the contention that in the circumstances there was negligence on the defendant's part.

Mr. Alexander contended that the plaintiff had not discharged the onus upon him of proving negligence. Plaintiff's own evidence did not lead to the conclusion that the horse was a vicious one. The negligence that gave rise to the accident was the negligence of leaving a child of tender years unattended in a place to which horses had access.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If a parent allows his child to play where horses are grazing, is it contributory negligence? He cannot suppose a horse would take it into its head to trample on the child. It is not the habit of horses to do so; a horse would give way to children.]

Mr. Alexander said that the nature of the injuries suggested that the child got under the horse's feet rather than that the horse deliberately kicked the child. Unfortunately, there was no evidence as to exactly how the accident happened.

The witness, Mr. Hines, recalled, said, in answer to the Court, he had seen the horse running along the road at full speed. The people had to run for their lives. They had to give way for the horse. That happened sometimes twice a week. The horse became notorious in the locality. All the neighbours could prove that it was a dangerous horse.

P.C. McKenzie (recalled) said that on the occasion he had spoken to the horse was galloping along the main street. People had to get out of its way.

Mr. Alexander, in further argument, submitted there was not a tittle of evidence to show that this horse was a vicious animal.

De Villiers, C.J.: I quite agree with counsel for the defendant that the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed in the present case without proving negligence on the part of the defendant. The evidence of negligence consists in this: That this horse had been repeatedly seen upon the plot of ground in question tearing away at a furious rate, and scaring away from the place men, women, and children who were there lawfully on that place so far as the defendant was concerned. The police constable also stated that in the streets of Simon's Town he had seen this horse tearing away and driving people away from the street on to the pavement or even on to the stoeps. But the more important evidence is, of course, as to the conduct of the horse when he was upon the plot of ground in question. That plot of ground belongs to the War Department, but so far as the defendant is concerned, the plaintiff's child was lawfully there, and so far as the plaintiff is concerned, the defendant's horse was lawfully on that ground. The War Department could object, but no one else could object either to the horse being there or to the child being there. But, if the horse, to the knowledge of the defendant, was in the habit of running wildly so as to be a danger, more especially to the children, who, as he knew, frequented the place, then it was the duty of the defendant either not to have sent the horse there or else to have sent it there under proper care and supervision, so as to prevent it being a danger to the people who were upon that plot of ground. On the day in question this very small child, not much over two years, was there unattended, and this horse seems to have taken it into its head again to rush wildly about, and in the course of its wild career it ran over this child and hurt it. Fortunately, the child was not killed, but it was injured to the extent that some of its ribs were broken and some medical expenses had to be incurred. The most important evidence given in this case, to my mind, is that of Mr. Hines. I do not attach so much weight to the evidence of the first female witness, but Mr. Hines gave his evidence very fairly. There is nothing to show that he had any grudge or spite against the defendant, and he states he has not only on previous occasions seen this horse rushing wildly over the place, but that he also witnessed this very accident, and according to him the horse's conduct was such that even if the child had been considerably older, or even if she was under supervision, she would probably have still been hurt. Well, if that is so, it is impossible for any Court to acquit the defendant of some degree of negligence, and the next question is whether there was any contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. Well, it is not a patent danger to the parents or guardians of this child that the horse might go rushing about and hurt the child. On the question of damages, His Lordship reviewed the evidence, and said he did not think any more damages were proved than £13 10s. With regard to the question of costs, all the witnesses were at Simon's Town, and it was a case which might well have been heard by the Magistrate there. Judgment would be for the plaintiff for £13 10s., with Resident Magistrate's Court costs.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ADMISSIONS.

{ 1907.
Feb. 12th.

Mr. Toms moved for the admission of Frederick Bernhard van Schanel as an attorney and notary, the oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of Maclear.

Application granted.

Mr. Lewis moved for the admission of Jacob Frank as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the admission of Rudolf Seydell as a translator of the Supreme Court in the English and Dutch languages.

Application granted and oaths administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

ADLER AND FRANK V. SCHOLTZ.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £384, with interest and costs. The bond became due and payable on demand. Counsel also asked to have the property declared executable, and for judgment for £65 11s. 10d., under Rule 329d, for goods sold and delivered, less 12s. paid on account.

Granted.

VAN REENEN V. WEINBERG.

Mr. Inchbold moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £59. Granted.

MOGFORD V. BARLOW.

Mr. Toms moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,540, with interest and costs, and that the property be declared executable. The bond became due through non-payment of interest. Granted.

REHABILITATION.

{ 1907.
{ Feb. 12th.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the discharge of Clifford Henry Dean Penny and Robert Dampier, formerly trading as Penny and Dampier, from insolvency. There was a consent by the creditors. Application granted.

SUMMERFIELD V. SUMMERFIELD.

This was an action in which the wife Rachel Summerfield sued her husband Joseph John Shury Summerfield in forma pauperis for a decree of divorce, on the ground of the defendant's adultery.

The plaintiff resided at Somerset West. The parties were married in Bloemfontein, 1903, and there were two children of the marriage. On the 2nd December, 1904, defendant was sentenced to six months' imprisonment for fraud, and on the 31st October, 1905, the defendant went to live with one Mrs. Stegmann at Somerset Strand.

Mr. Palmer appeared for the plaintiff, and the defendant had been barred.

Rachel Summerfield, plaintiff, stated she was married in the Orange River Colony to the defendant in 1903. After her marriage the defendant and herself came to Cape Town, and subsequently went to Rhodesia. They never lived happily together. In December, 1904, her husband was sentenced to six months' imprisonment for fraud, and had not returned to her since. In October last year she heard for the first time of her husband living with a Mrs. M. Stegmann, of Somerset Strand. Subsequently she went to Mrs. Stegmann to have some clothes made for the children, and saw her husband there in the bedroom. Since then she had never been to Mrs. Stegmann's house. She asked for a decree of divorce, division of the common property, and custody of the minor children. She had no property, neither had defendant.

Robert John Heuter, of Salt River, who was living at Mrs. Stegmann's house at the Strand, in October, 1905, said he gave up his room in that month at the request of Mrs. Stegmann, and the defendant and Mrs. Stegmann occupied his room.

Decree of divorce granted, the plaintiff to have custody of the children, and defendant to pay costs of suit and the costs incurred by the plaintiff in suing in forma pauperis.

Ex parte ROBINSON. { 1907.
{ Feb. 12th.
{ „ 28th.

Charge upon property—Fraud—Liquidator.

This was the return day of a rule nisi calling upon Hillyard Home Drummond to show cause why an order should not be granted declaring a certain deed of charge and powers of attorney set aside.

Mr. Watermeyer for applicant.

Counsel said the allegation was that these documents were obtained by Drummond from the petitioner by fraud.

The respondent appeared in person.

Mr. Watermeyer said the allegation was that the petitioner, who came out here, was entitled to a certain reversionary interest under his father's will of property in England. He went to Home Drummond, who said he would advance the petitioner some money. Drummond advanced him £4. Then Drummond suggested that the petitioner should advance to the Assets Realisation Company the sum of £100. The petitioner said he would obtain £100 from England, and advance it in order to obtain a high rate of interest. Drummond induced him to sign certain documents to carry out the agreement. He now discovered that the first document he was induced to sign was a deed of charge on the reversionary interest, and the other document was a general power of attorney which was not annexed, but Drummond now seemed to claim to act under this general power, and sell and dispose of the reversionary interest in England. Later the petitioner endeavoured to obtain this money in England. Drummond said he would advance, or the Assets Realisation Association would advance, £100 to the petitioner. Then another document was put before applicant by one MacDowell, then Drummond's clerk, and the petitioner signed this, and now it turned out to be a power of attorney. Drummond claimed to act under the first or second power, and sell the reversionary interest. Petitioner wanted to sell his interest, but Drummond was trying to stop the sale.

[Maasdorp, J.: I suppose a man who gives a document to another knows what he is giving. Mr. Robinson must know what he signed?]

Mr. Watermeyer: The company has been wound up, and the official liquidator, Mr. Wyndham Bishop, has agreed to accept £7 in full settlement of any claim which the company may have.

[Maasdorp, J.: Where are the documents?]

Mr. Watermeyer: I think in the possession of Drummoud.

[Maasdorp, J. to respondent): What position do you take up?]

Respondent: Permit me to say that the facts put forth by counsel for the applicant are nothing more or less than pure fiction. But I will make an application to your Lordship. If any fraud exists in this matter, the fraud is on the part of the present applicant. The man accepted valuable consideration, and he is being assisted or aided with the object of having this power declared null and void, for the simple reason that the person to whom the power of attorney was granted is in gaol. I submit if that sort of thing is going to occur, if people are going to get rid of their liabilities simply because the mortgagee is in gaol, it will be an extraordinary thing. I was served with these papers on the 7th of this month, when I was at Tulbagh. I applied to the Magistrate for permission to peruse these papers in order to prepare my affidavit in reply, but the Magistrate informed me he would have to submit the application to the Colonial Office. Meantime I made application to appear in court to-day. I only arrived from Tulbagh yesterday, and have had no time to peruse the affidavits served on me, and I have had no opportunity to file my replying affidavit. I will ask your lordship for a postponement in this matter until such time as I have an opportunity.

[Maasdorp, J.: Where are the papers?]

The powers of attorney were sent to my solicitor in London.

[Maasdorp, J.: Meanwhile no action must be taken.]

I am quite willing not to take any action.

[Maasdorp, J.: What are your agents doing in England?]

Matters seem to be at a standstill in England, as well as here, because representations have been sent to England that I have been arrested on an attempt to get £2,000 by false pretences. This man Robinson was induced to make a criminal charge in the first instance, but the Attorney-General declined to prosecute.

[Maasdorp, J.: Do these papers belong to the company or you?]

They belong to me. The man gave me a power of attorney in my own name as far back as May last year. Where counsel for the applicant is confusing the issue is this: At the time this man gave me the general power of attorney which by oversight retained the words, "In Cape Colony," the man received his due consideration for the mortgage, and he knew perfectly well it existed, because he wrote to his solicitors in England asking for an advance. They said he could not have any advance so long as this mortgage existed. When the man came for another £100 I was arrested. I shall be able to put the copies before the Court, that is if I have time to peruse the documents.

[Maasdorp, J.: I can understand if you only received notice on the 7th, and in the position you were in you could not be ready now. What time will you require?]

If your lordship would give instructions that I should have further facilities—I am now confined to the Breakwater Convict Station—if your lordship adjourned the matter until the last day of term I shall be ready.

[Maasdorp, J.: What is the property?]

Mr. Watermeyer: Some £2,000 or more.

[Maasdorp, J. The matter may stand over to the last day of term; in the meantime, the respondents' affidavits must be served in a week.]

Mr. Drummoud: I am entirely in the hands of the Superintendent of the station. The only papers I have got here are the papers served on me. My other papers are in the hands of Mr. Brady.

[Maasdorp, J.: You will be entitled to this, that Mr. Brady shall have access to you, and there is no doubt the authorities will allow him to see you at reasonable and proper times. There must not be much delay on the ground of any future excuse. You must do your best and get proper information before the Court in a week's time, and then they can answer your affidavits and the matter will be heard on the last day of term.]

Mr. Watermeyer: The applicant is at present without money, and I would ask whether your lordship will not make it a little earlier.

[Maasdorp, J.: It is only about a fortnight's time. On Thursday, 28th, the Court will hear the motion. (To Drummoud): Your affidavits must be in by a week's time, and then they will have an opportunity of answering your affidavits. The two points that you have to answer are: Whether you are entitled to the documents personally, or whether the company is entitled to them.]

Mr. Drummoud: I would remind your lordship of the remarks you made in my criminal case, that it was an extraordinary thing that the liquidator never applied to me for any information about the winding-up of the company. Since then I have never heard anything from the liquidator at all. He is willing to hand over a mortgage for the sum of £100 for the sum of £7 without consulting me.

[Maasdorp, J.: He takes the responsibility. You have your affidavits in the hands of the other side in a week's time, meanwhile you are interdicted from dealing with the documents in question.]

Postea (February 28th).

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

Mr. Alexander (with him Mr. Watermeyer) was for applicant; respondent, who was under the charge of a prison warden, appeared in person.

Respondent, in an answering affidavit, declared that he had been wary, but perfectly straightforward in his dealings with Robinson, while the latter had conducted the proceedings throughout with fraudulent intent, and had been aided by "the irrepressible Stanley Jones." He had a cession from the Assets Realisation Association of the mortgage.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Where does the cession appear?]

Respondent: On the original mortgage, which has been sent Home.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There is no minute in the minute-books of the Assets Realisation Association to that effect.]

Respondent: No, my lord, that is a point which will arise. In the first instance, the applicant says there was no money advanced to him, yet in the minute-book of that company, which was kept by the secretary, it appears that it was resolved that the money should be advanced. There has been a conspiracy from beginning to end. First of all, the secretary disappeared. Now, the gentleman who made application to this Court upon a perjured affidavit has disappeared.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Who is that?]

Respondent: Seccombe.

De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Alexander): Was there an endorsement of the cession on the original mortgage?

I am instructed that there was not. The original is in London.

Respondent proceeded to wander into side issues concerning his relationships with the Assets Realisation Association, when De Villiers, C.J. (interposing) said that was not the question the Court had now to determine. There were two questions to be dealt with: (1) Whether this was a valid mortgage; and (2) whether there was a cession upon that mortgage.

Mr. Alexander read a replying affidavit by the applicant, in which he denied that he had received money from the respondent as alleged, and declared that he had been cruelly victimised by respondent. Counsel also read an affidavit by Mr. Bishop, liquidator of the Assets Realisation Association.

Respondent submitted that the matter could not be dealt with on motion, and that the applicant should be ordered to proceed by action. He repeated that £107 had been advanced to Robinson in order to enable him to go into a moneylending business. It was absurd for Robinson to say that he had only received a loan of about £4. He claimed that he should be allowed an opportunity of cross-examining the applicant.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How much do you say you advanced to Robinson?]

Respondent: £107.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Alexander): How much do you say the applicant received from the association?]

The liquidator is satisfied that Robinson only got £4, but he signed an acknowledgment to pay back £7. He actually received £4 12s. 6d.

Having heard Mr. Alexander further, De Villiers, C.J.: In this case the important question to be decided is whether a certain charge upon his property made by the applicant in favour of the company was a valid charge or not. It is really, in the first instance, a question between the company and the applicant. I am satisfied upon the evidence that the charge was not such as any Court of law would maintain, and that the liquidator of the company was quite justified when he discovered the true nature of the transaction in entering into an arrangement with the applicant by which the charge was released, upon payment by the applicant of the full sum of money which he had received from the company, viz., the sum of £7. In point of fact, he said he had only received £4, but £3 was added by way of commission, etc. The agreement entered into between the liquidators and the applicant under date 12th December, 1906, is one which, in my opinion, should at once be sanctioned by the Court. I think the applicant would have been better advised if, in the first instance, he had applied for that sanction, because, if that were granted, the rest of the present application would follow as a matter of course. Although not exactly in the form in which the application is made, the liquidator, I understand, wishes for the sanction of that deed, and the Court will now, as a preliminary to the further order, sanction the deed executed on the 12th December, 1906, between the liquidator and the applicant for the release of certain charge given by applicant in favour of the company. Well, then, coming to the specific relief which is sought in the present case, it follows that, if the original charge was fraudulently given, any cession would confer no rights whatever upon the cessionary, and, therefore, the Court will declare any cession made by the company of the said charge, or any powers of attorney given by the applicant, to be of no effect on such charge, and null and void. In that view it would perhaps not be necessary to express any opinion on the question whether a cession ever was made of that charge, but I would indicate my opinion to this extent that, seeing that the respondent in his correspondence with the agents in London, after the date at which he said he had obtained this cession—I say, seeing that in that correspondence he speaks of the company as being still entitled to that charge and does not refer to himself personally as having obtained the cession of that charge, it seems to me extremely unlikely that if the case should ever come into Court he would be able to prove that a valid cession had been made to him. But that seems to me now a matter of minor importance, seeing that, upon the evidence, it is quite clear that the original charge was fraudulently obtained, and that, consequently, any cession, whether valid or not, would fall to the ground because the cessionary cannot have any greater rights than the cedent of the document. No order as to costs.

VAN EYSSEN V. HEROLD.

Mr. J. E. K. de Villiers, for the applicant, moved for the discharge of an interdict in this case.
Application granted.

KOCK V. COHEN.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved to have a rule nisi made final. The rule restrained the respondent from parting with any goods in a tailor's shop, pending an action.

The interdict was extended, pending further order of court, the respondent to pay costs.

Ex parte VAN WYK.

Mr. Burton moved for an order authorizing the sale and transfer of certain property to the petitioner's minor sons.

A rule nisi was granted, returnable on the 28th inst., calling upon the children of the petitioner to show cause why the application should not be granted.

HUTCHINSON V. VILLIERS-
DORP MUNICIPALITY. { 1907.
Feb. 12th.
" 28th.
Mar. 6th.

Water — Distribution — Municipality — Act 45 of 1882 — Servitude.

More than 60 years ago the owner of a certain farm sold certain erven, with the view to establishing a village on a portion of the farm. One of the conditions of sale was that the purchasers of these erven were to allow the C. river, which flows through the village, to continue freely to flow, but that they should have the right to take water therefrom, each in proportion to the extent of his land. About 44 years ago it was agreed that certain of the erf-holders might take water from the M. river, which borders the village on one side. At the time when these erf-holders found it necessary to enforce these latter rights, a Municipality had been constituted, and this Municipality made all necessary arrangements with the owners of the land. The said Municipality thereafter became defunct and was not reconstituted till 1881. At that time water was conveyed to a portion of the village from the C. river by means of an open furrow, and subsequently was delivered in a very impure condition. The reconstructed Municipality recently proceeded to construct a dam in the C. river and to arrange for the conveyance of water therefrom by pipes. Applicant, an erf-holder, now applied for an interdict to restrain the Municipality from prosecuting this scheme.

Held, that as respondents had not shewn any prescriptive right varying the original conditions of sale, and as the erf-holders could not by allowing the Municipality to distribute the water enlarge their powers under Act 45 of 1882 as against the servitude to water enjoyed by the successors in title to the original erf-holders, the latter were entitled to insist on the observance of the original conditions of sale and to an interdict as prayed.

This was an application made by William Tell Paschond Hutchinson for an order calling on the respondent to show cause why an interdict should not be granted in terms of the petition. The petition set out that the applicant was the largest ratepayer in the Municipality of Villiersdorp, and one of the largest landed proprietors. The erven at Villiersdorp were laid out about 1844 by the late P. H. de Villiers, who granted the erven a right of water from the Commissie Kraal River, with a further right that should the same prove insufficient, occupiers would have the right to claim one-quarter of the water from the Molen River, on the farm Raydn, of which latter river one-quarter was also granted to a certain Jacobus Petrus Pretorius and Wessel Pretorius, occupiers of one-quarter share of the farm Zeekoekraal, with a further right should the water prove at any time inadequate they should have the right of the night water from the Commissie Kraal River. About 44 years ago, owing to the inadequacy of the water supply of the Commissie Kraal River, and the consequent disagreement of the owners as to the division thereof, the then existing Municipality, at the request of the erf-holders, at a public meeting, resolved to claim, and did claim, a quarter share of the Molen River water, in terms of the agreement with the late P. H. de Villiers, and divided the said water, and the water from the Commissie Kraal River among the erf holders, giving those to the west the water from the Commissie Kraal River, and those to the east the quarter share of the water from the Molen River, which quarter share here exceeds in volume the water from the Commissie Kraal River. In pursuance of such arrangement, the water has been used ever since up to the present time, a period of over thirty years, without hindrance. The then existing municipality subsequently fell through, and for eight or ten years there was no governing body, but the use of the water continued. In 1881 the municipality was reconstituted, at the instance of petitioner, who was Mayor for fifteen years, when the right was given to the Council to arrange the order of water leading according to the rights of erf-holders. The water from the two streams was utilised also as drinking water. On more than one occasion there had been insufficient water to properly irrigate the ground entitled thereto from the Commissie Kraal River. A majority of the erven-holders depended for a living on the produce of their gardens, and they would be seriously prejudiced by any decrease in the supply from the Commissie Kraal River. Early this year the Municipal Council evolved a scheme further providing a system of water supply for domestic purposes and for the whole village, by means of pipes laid from the Commissie Kraal River. They called a meeting of ratepayers to sanction the petition of the scheme. Petitioner was not aware of the meeting at which some twenty-four ratepayers gave their assent, but no names were mentioned, and with the exception of two or three, they were all ratepayers drawing water from the Molen River. Later petitioner and several others, at a meeting, voted against the scheme, but the Council continued the work. The scheme would mean that the ratepayers would now draw from the Commissie Kraal River its domestic supply at the expense of the petitioner and other ratepayers. Petitioner claimed a prescriptive right, jointly with several other erf-holders, of the water from the Commissie Kraal River. If the Council was permitted to go on, petitioner's property would be seriously diminished in value. He claimed an order restraining the Municipal Council from prosecuting such a scheme, and using the water of the Commissie Kraal River as stated.

The Municipality claimed that the water was vested in them, and they had the right to deal with it. By this scheme a certain portion of the water which ran to waste during the night-time would be retained in a reservoir which they proposed to construct.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the applicant, and Mr. Burton was for the respondent Municipality.

Sir H. Juta said it would appear that De Villiers, who was the owner of land, in which the applicant as an erf-holder entered into a contract with certain erf-holders, which appeared to be in the transfer. The Municipality, he contended, had no right to touch a drop of this water, and the fact that a municipality was situated within a certain area did not give the municipality the right to deal with water which a number of erf-holders had got the right to. He would like to see the legal authority for the proposition that if a man laid out certain erven, and having water in the land, made a contract with certain persons who bought portions of his land that they should be entitled to have the use of portion of the water, and thereafter a municipality was constituted, that it could interfere in water rights which was created by contract between the parties. It could make regulations as to water under its management, but the initial point was, who gave it the control and management of this water? He failed to find any late regulations that professed to deal with the distribution of such water. If the Court required more information should be obtained in regard to the erven, and as to the way this village had grown up he would be quite willing to let the matter stand over for that, but as the matter stood now there was no authority that the Municipality as a municipality could interfere with this water.

Mr. Burton said it would be extremely inconvenient to the Municipality if there were to be a further postponement in the matter, but if his lordship desired further information he would not detain the Court.

Maasdorp, J., ordered the matter to stand over until the last day of term, each side to endeavour to procure further information.

Postea (February 28).

Sir H. Juta said this matter came before his lordship a little while ago as an application by Mr. Hutchinson, restraining the Municipality from diverting certain water in the river called the Commissie Kraal River. It appeared that the village was laid out some years ago by Mr. De Villiers, and after the village had been laid out, the erfholders were to have water from the Molen River if there was not sufficient from the Commissie River. Lately the Municipality placed a dam in the Commissie Kraal River, and made a reservoir, and by means of pipes brought the water to the village, and they were supplying water to places which had no right to water. The matter then stood over for further information in regard to how the village was laid out. There had been affidavits filed, but they did not carry the case much further. Counsel said it was clear from the affidavit with the conditions of sale attached that these erven were sold with a right to the water. The municipality had no right to interfere with the registered servitude. He could not find anything which showed that a municipality had the right to deprive the owner of an erf of water who had got a registered servitude in his favour. In the Municipal Act 45 of 1882, which was the Municipal Act under which this Council was now regulated, provision was made for the vesting of certain property in the Council, namely section 159, but it did not vest in them water. There was no principle upon which the municipality could interfere with a man's private servitude registered on his title-deed. There was nothing in the present regulations by which the professed to deal with the water, but under the old regulations there was one, No. 17, which was as follows: "That the Commissioners shall, whenever necessary, cause the owners of erven to exhibit their transfers and conditions of sale in order that the Commissioners may be in a position to fix the hour of water leading to each erf, and for the purpose of obtaining the knowledge as to who is entitled to water. There they acted quite properly. They did not profess under that regulation to take away people's right.

Mr. Burton pointed out when the municipality in 1844, the predecessors of the respondents, at the request of the erf-holders, claimed one-quarter share of the water from the Molen River there was no question of rights there by title deeds. The applicant did not suggest that people on the west were allowed the Commissie Kraal water because it was on their title deeds. Counsel submitted that the applicant must show some prejudice before which the Court would hesitate to stop the whole of this supply. The plaintiff had had ample opportunity of objecting in good time. Unless the action of the municipality was going to deprive the applicant of his share, how could he complain; and the evidence went to show that the action of the municipality would not so deprive him.

Sir H. Juta having replied.

Cur. Adr. Vall.

Postea (March 6th).

Maasdorp, J.: Some time prior to the year 1844 one P. H. de Villiers, the owner of the farm Radyn, laid out a plan for a village upon the farm, and proceeded to sell the erven so laid out. A stream called Commissie River flows through the village, which is skirted on the east by another stream called Molen River. The following were amongst the conditions under which the sale of the village lots took place: The buyers were to allow the flow of the Commissie River through their land as it appears upon the plan, and each erf shall have a proportionate right to the river running from the mountain to the village. The river here referred to is the Commissie River. By a further agreement certain rights were conferred on the erfholders by the owner to water from the Molen River. At the time when it was found necessary by the erfholders to make use of their rights to the water of the Molen River the requisite arrangements were made through the instrumentality of the municipality. And again when erven, which were laid out in the original plan, were sold later, the required redistribution of water was effected by the municipality through their secretary. Under the latest arrangement for the distribution of the water the erven lying to the west of the Commissie River were irrigated by means of a furrow taken from that river, and those to the east were irrigated by water from the Molen River. For some time the inhabitants of the village have experienced much inconvenience and discomfort from the impure state of the water running in open furrows, and the necessity of carrying water from a distance according as irrigation goes on in different parts of the village. To rectify these evils the municipality set about constructing a dam in the Commissie River, and bringing pure water in pipes from the mountain to De Villiersdorp. To this the applicant and some other owners of erven object. There is some dispute as to the manner in which and the time when their objections were raised, but it is enough to say that nothing has happened to debar them from now setting up any legal rights they may possess to object to the action of the municipality. In my opinion, no prescriptive right has been proved by the respondents which would have the effect of varying the rights he held under the original conditions of sale, nor has the conduct of the erfholders in allowing the municipality to make arrangements from time to time in respect of the water supply enlarged the powers conferred upon that Corporation by the Municipal Act of 1882. The applicant is entitled to use the water of the Commissie River proportionately with the other erfholders, and when they availed themselves of the services of the municipality to have a distribution made in proportion to the extent of the erven, they made use of a very convenient expedient, but the powers of the Municipality continued the same. Under the Act the Council may make regulations for the supply and distribution of water under their control and management, but it is quite clear that the water of the Commissie River is subject to rights of servitude in individual erfholders, and is not under the control of the Municipality for the purposes of distribution. Even if the Council had in some way the power to see that the rights enjoyed by the erfholders in general were exercised for their mutual benefit, it could certainly not interfere with any vested rights. The erfholders are entitled to prevent anything which will interfere with their proportionate use of the Commissie River, and there is certainly a large body of evidence to prove that the diversion of the water in pipes will materially affect the flow available in the erven during part of the year. It is easy to understand of what vital importance it is to the village to obtain a supply of pure water, and a more convenient supply for domestic purposes, but this must be brought about without infringing any person's legal rights. It may still be possible, by mutual concession, to attain that object. In the meanwhile, the applicant is entitled to an interdict. An order is granted interdicting the Municipality from diverting water from the Commissie River by means of pipes, but leave will be reserved to respondents to bring an action if so advised to set aside the interdict, costs to be paid by the respondents.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissonné; Respondents' Attorneys: Dempers and Van Ryneveld.]

CORDER V. UPTON.

Mr. Upton was for the applicant, and Mr. Burton was for the respondent.

This was an application calling upon the respondent to show cause why he should not be required to furnish security for costs. An affidavit had been filed on behalf of the respondent applying for a postponement of the case on the ground that his affidavit in reply to the applicant's affidavit had been posted, and would not reach here until the 15th or 16th inst. In case he did move for a postponement counsel was not instructed to oppose it, but he would submit that the time should not be long.

Mr. Burton said that the respondents wanted a postponement.

The matter was ordered to stand over until Wednesday next, the question of costs to stand over.

LEVY V. NASH.

This was an application on notice of motion, calling on the respondent to show cause why he should not be removed from his position as trustee in the insolvent estate of Eugene Dapino, or why he should not be ordered to sign a power with the applicant to enable the latter to take proceedings against the Automatic Pit Company in the interests of the estate. At a meeting of creditors petitioner and respondent were appointed joint trustees in the estate. Petitioner found a cession to the insolvent, and a certain patent which had been duly registered in the Patent Office of this colony. The patent was claimed by the Automatic Pit Company, a firm in which the respondent was directly interested. Petitioner considered this patent an asset in the estate, but was prohibited by the respondent from taking counsel's opinion. The Master subsequently advised him to take counsel's opinion, and Mr. W. P. Schreiner, K.C., gave it as his opinion that the patent was an asset in the estate.

Mr. Burton was for the applicant, and Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the respondent.

Sir H. Juta read a replying affidavit, which set out that the respondent had no objection to the proceedings if the creditors he represented were protected.

The case submitted by deponent to Sir H. Juta, K.C., said that the patent was not part of the assets. In view of the creditors being averse to his risking a law suit, and as he was not able to obtain an important annexeure from Messrs. Sauerlander and Kruger, he was not justified in joining in the proceedings. He denied that he prohibited the applicant from taking counsel's opinion.

Maasdorp, J.: It appears that there are two trustees in the case, Mr. Levy and Mr. Nash. Mr. Levy is under the impression that the trustees have a good cause of action in respect of certain patent, which he claims to be the property of the insolvent. Mr. Nash, on the other hand, does not take such a favourable view of the prospects of such an action. Mr. Levy is, however, desirous of instituting a suit to recover the benefits of this patent, and he suggested to Mr. Nash that proceedings should be taken. Mr. Nash refused to join him in his suit, upon the ground that he should require an indemnity from the creditors represented by Mr. Levy to the creditors represented by himself, because he was not very hopeful as to the result. That is the objection raised by him in the first instance, and he also questioned the right to the creditors who had elected Mr. Levy as having no claims upon the estate at all. Upon these two grounds he refused to join Mr. Levy in this action. Now, it is quite open to the trustees to bring an action without obtaining the sanction of the creditors, but where they have any doubt in the matter the question is generally referred to the creditors. It being in the discretion of Mr. Nash to proceed without receiving the approval of the creditors, Mr. Levy was quite justified in supposing that that was not what was required by him, but that it was merely the indemnity. If Mr. Nash has suggested that it was not only the question of the indemnity and the doubts as to the claim of Sauerlander and Kruger, but also the fact that he had not yet the sanction of the creditors, that stood in the way then, that difficulty could have been removed. He could have removed that by referring the matter to a meeting of the creditors, and Mr. Levy was quite justified in supposing that he would have done so if the other difficulties were removed. Now, Mr. Nash raises the other point, which was not anticipated at the time by Mr. Levy. He now sets up the position that the matter ought, considering the difference of opinion on the subject, be referred to a meeting of creditors. If he had raised that point before it could have been rectified by Mr. Levy, then requesting him to join him in having such a meeting called. The position taken up by Mr. Nash was quite unjustifiable. On the other hand, when Mr. Levy found that Mr. Nash differed from him as to the management of the estate upon this particular point, he should have requested him to have a meeting called to decide the question between them. He knew that it might be advisable to refer this matter to a meeting, and he himself set about calling a meeting, the resolutions of which in the result were illegal, because the meeting was not called by the two trustees jointly. On the other hand, therefore, Mr. Levy is wrong in coming to this Court to force Mr. Nash to take up proceedings. The proper resort should have been to have a meeting of creditors. The Court will grant no order, each party to pay his own costs.

SOMERSET EAST MUNICIPALITY V. BROWN.

Mr. Benjamin was for the applicant; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. W. P. Buchanan), was for the respondent, and Mr. Howel Jones was for the Government, who put in an appearance at the invitation of the applicant.

This was an application on notice of motion calling on the respondent to show cause why the applicants should not be allowed to enter on the respondents' farm, Glen Avon, through their engineers or other persons, for the purpose of getting information as to the leading of water to the town of Somerset East.

It was the intention of the municipality to introduce a Bill into Parliament asking for power to utilise certain reserved water and bring it into the town for the use of the inhabitants, and it was necessary that the engineers should take certain gaugings and measurements. Applicants applied to the respondent, and permission was granted, but afterwards countermanded.

The respondent, in his answering affidavit, denied there was a servitude in favour of the Colonial Government in existence, same having lapsed by non-user. The applicants therefore had no locus standi.

Unless the applicants complied with reasonable stipulations, deponent would be placed at a disadvantage in meeting the claim of the applicants.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J.: The application in this case is founded upon an alleged right derived by the applicants through the Government. The right is said to allow the Government to go upon the farm of the respondent and to take water over the land when it is considered expedient to the lands of the township of Somerset East. That right is disputed by the respondent, and it is impossible upon the affidavits now before the Court to decide that question. It will be necessary first to take proper procedure, to have a declaration of rights in respect of the claim that is set up by the applicants, and until that right has been established it is impossible to base upon it another right to go upon the lands of the plaintiff for the purpose of exercising a doubtful and disputed right. The Government has not taken any steps to establish such a right, and so far from appearing here to support the applicant in his claim the Government has been brought before the Court as a respondent by the applicant for the purpose of compelling the Government to take steps to allow him to establish his claim. The Government has taken no steps to support his position, and consequently no right is established that he is now entitled to go on to the farm of the respondent to exercise this right. Though this right is not claimed through the Government, but as one inherent in the municipality itself, it is necessary for the municipality to take steps to have the right declared. There is no proof before the Court that such right exists in the municipality or the Crown, consequently the application must be refused with costs of both respondents.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

MILLER V. CYSTER. { 1907.
Feb. 13th.
" 14 h.
" 15th.

Mission lands—Right of occupation—Cession by occupier.

This was an action for ejectment, for an interdict restraining defendant from trespassing upon certain property, and for £50 damages for trespass and assault.

The declaration set forth that the parties reside at the Paarl, and plaintiff was the occupier of certain ground at the Paarl Mission Station. About May, 1903, the defendant hired from the plaintiff a certain lot of ground and erected thereon a carpenter's shop. He continued in occupation, and in 1903 and 1904 paid rent to the plaintiff. In August, 1905, defendant broke open a gate and took possession of other land belonging to the same erf. He claimed it as his own and refused to pay rent. A fence was also broken down, and while plaintiff was removing a tree, defendant assaulted him, knocking him down.

The defendant, in his plea, said that the plaintiff had no right or title to the erf in question. He claimed that it was acquired by one Gabriel van Wyk from his deceased parents, and that he (defendant) purchased it from Van Wyk. The payment that had been made was for work done and not for rent.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) was for the plaintiff; Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. W. P. Buchanan) was for the defendant.

Johan Frederick Stegman said he was a missionary of the Apostolic Union. He was administrator of the Pniel Institution, which was a religious institution to teach children and to bring them up to agricultural pursuits. Witness came there in 1843, and was the first administrator. Witness stated that his age was 82. He was intimately acquainted with everything connected with the institution. There were 700 inhabitants, but only 80 members of the church. If a farmer came to the institution to ask a plot they gave a portion for a garden and a house. The house, lands, and garden were separate. He had to pay 3s. monthly. The ground was not sold, but let. The regulations were read to him, and the ground was to be held subject to these regulations. They had to go on paying 3s. a month till they paid £18. Afterwards each plot-holder had to pay 1s. 10d. per month for the support of the missionary. The missionary received £108 a year. If the man died his widow came into occupation. If the father and mother both died, then the children succeeded, subject to the consent of the administrator. No written transfer was ever given, only the right to occupy. He had a book in which he kept the names of the occupants, and in which he kept a record of the various payments. A man A. in possession could transfer his rights to B. only with the consent of the administrator. The rules of the institution were printed about three years ago, which gave in detail the obligations witness had set forth. In the manuscript copy of the rules which he had written out himself there was no mention of the rule relating to transfer, but it was absolutely understood.

In reply to his lordship, witness further stated that no one could erect any cottage or building of any sort unless he first had the consent of the administrator. Proceeding, the witness said that Gabriel van Wyk, senior, the grandfather, had the ground in 1845. Gabriel van Wyk, his son, succeeded him, and rented another erf, which was the one in dispute. To this there was attached a piece of garden ground in another part of the institution. On the death of the old man, there was a substantial sum owing in respect of the ls. 10d. a month. He was about thirty years in arrear and owed about £77. Some years back, before the old man died, the plaintiff and his wife came to live there. After the death of Gabriel, these two erven belonged to his wife. Mulder and his wife took possession of both erven with the consent of the mother and, of course, with witness's consent. That was before the old man's death. Gabriel made over the erven to plaintiff and his wife about two years before his death. Young Gabriel, therefore, had no rights. The latter said he did not wish to have anything to do with it; that he did not want to live at Pniel. For years previously he had lived at Wellington. Young Gabriel gave his consent to the rights being made over to Muller. The mother (Mrs. Van Wyk) and her sister came to ask witness's consent to the property being made over to Muller. The latter and his wife had for some time been making payments off these arrears. Muller supported the old couple after the transfer up to their death. Muller paid off the arrears until August, 1905, when the whole £77 had been paid, and witness gave a receipt for the whole amount. He had in the meantime given Muller receipts as he paid from time to time. Witness remembered the defendant coming to ask his permission to hire part of the erf. Witness saw Muller, who agreed to let it, and witness consented, leaving the conditions to Muller. Witness made the general condition that, as the church was near, there must be quiet during divine service. He consented to a carpenter's shop being put there. About two years ago, defendant made a claim to the property. He came to witness with young Gabriel, Van Wyk and a man called Kynoch. They wanted one of the erven for Gabriel van Wyk. Witness told Van Wyk to call Muller and his wife. Cyster said Van Wyk was a son of old Gabriel, and had a claim to the ground. Witness told them the ground was made over to Muller. Subsequently witness heard they had gone to the Paarl, and later on the gate was broken. Witness went to see defendant, who was digging on the ground. He asked defendant how he could do such a thing, and Cyster pushed witness away, and said he had a claim to the ground. He (witness) was never asked to consent to the hiring of the ground by Cyster from the old widow. Witness considered that the value of the building erected on the erf was about £45.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: The plaintiff was not a member of the church. There was many erf-holders who were not members. Cyster was not a member. Muller had paid the support money in full, that was, the ls. 10d. a month. Witness had heard a rumour that young Gabriel had sold to Cyster. It was common talk. When witness gave the receipt for £77 to Muller, Cyster had already told him that he claimed the property. The names of the new erf-holders were read out at the meetings for the first few years, but this had not been done since 1846. Only the names of those in arrear were read. Muller's name was not read out, as he paid regularly. Old Gabriel's name was read, because he was in arrear. People had transferred their erven to other erf-holders without witness's consent. The witness was further cross-examined at some length with regard to entries in the books, and with regard to the circumstances surrounding his consenting to the transfer to Muller.

Susannah Muller, wife of the plaintiff, said she was the daughter of the late Gabriel van Wyk, who died in 1903. Her mother died in the following year. Witness and her husband went to live at Pniel in 1896, and had lived there ever since. Witness's brother Gabriel left Pniel twenty years ago. Witness and her husband went and lived with the old people, and witness took care of her father and mother, her husband providing for them. Witness's father possessed property at Wellington, which she understood he made over to Gabriel. At any rate, Gabriel was in possession of it. Witness and her husband paid off the arrears to the missionary. Her father said if they did so he would make over the two erven to them. On February 16, 1903, witness's father sent her mother and her mother's sister to Mr. Stegmann. Her mother, on returning, said it was all right. The witness, in the course of further evidence, deposed to defendant having come to her husband and hired part of the erf from him. He paid witness £1 16s. in advance for the first year. That was on May 15, 1903. Witness gave Cyster a receipt. The next year Cyster asked for a little more ground. He was allowed more, and that year he paid £2. Defendant did not pay in 1905. In August of that year, Cyster broke open the gate and took another part of the erf without permission. Cyster, when spoken to about it, said it was his ground. There had previously been a conversation between witness, Mr. Stegmann, Cyster, Kynoch, and Gabriel, at which Cyster said he would take Gabriel's part.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: Witness let the place to Cyster, and not her mother. The property had been previously made over to witness and her husband.

James Allan Muller, the plaintiff, said he went to live at Pniel in 1896. He heard the evidence given by his wife on the previous day, and so far as he was personally aware of the circumstances of the matter, he confirmed her evidence. Witness was not present when old Van Wyk asked his wife and sister to go and see Mr. Stegman about the erven, but he knew of what occurred, and thereafter he and his wife regarded themselves as the holders of the erven. Witness remembered Cyster coming to ask for a piece of ground. Witness obtained Mr. Stegman's consent to letting a piece of ground to Cyster, and the thing was fixed up. Old Mrs. Van Wyk had nothing to do with that matter; witness and his wife arranged it all. Cyster made the first payment to witness's wife. In 1904 witness let part of the same erf to a man named Luckie, who paid witness rent.

[Hopley, J.: Is Luckie still there?]

Mr. Burton: No, the defendant took possession of the whole property, and turned Luckie off.

Witness (proceeding) deposed as to the incidents of the breaking of the gate by Cyster and the interview Mr. Stegman had with defendant. Subsequently Cyster cut a hole in witness's wire-netting on the property, in order to carry a fence through. He put up a fence between witness's other property and the erf in question. Witness reported the matter to the police. In December, 1905, witness wrote to Cyster, and the latter, when witness delivered the letter, said: "You won't frighten me with this letter." Next day witness went down to the erf, and Cyster said: "You won't put your foot on the property, or blood will flow." Subsequently witness brought an action in the Magistrate's Court. In March, 1906, while witness was cutting down some trees, Cyster came and told him he must get off the property. Witness said it was his land, whereupon Cyster caught hold of him and threw him to the ground. Witness had been prosecuted for assault, and he was found guilty and reprimanded. Cyster had remained in possession of the property up to the present time. The building Cyster had put up would not cost much to take down and re-erect elsewhere. Witness considered the building to be worth £30 or £40.

In cross-examination, the witness said Cyster was his son-in-law, having married witness's daughter by his first wife. Kynoch married witness's wife's sister.

Evidence was given by a number of other persons, bearing out the statements made by previous witnesses. A son of the plaintiff said that in 1903 Cyster asked him if his father would sell the ground. Upon his father refusing, Cyster asked if Muller would let the ground. Muller agreed to do so.

Among the witnesses called for the plaintiff was an aged coloured man named David Hontong, who, questioned as to his age, said he was not certain what his age was, but he thought he was about 80 years old. He spoke as to the practice at Pniel in regard to transferring erven. In every case of transfer the superintendent's consent had to be obtained. That rule was well known to everybody at the station.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Jacobus Cyster, the defendant, said he was a carpenter. His first wife was a daughter of the first Mrs. Muller. She died in 1903, and witness married again in 1904. She hired the land in question from old Mrs. Van Wyk, not from the plaintiff or Mrs. Muller. The old man used this ground for fruit growing. Witness first of all tried to get an adjoining piece of ground whereon to erect a carpenter's shop and furnish him with additional ground, but was unsuccessful. He saw plaintiff's son, who said he had seen his father and grandmother about letting him have a piece of the erf, and that they would see him about it. Afterwards witness saw Mr. and Mrs. Muller, and the plaintiff said he had seen his mother-in-law about the matter, and he thought that she would let witness have a piece of the erf. Subsequently the old woman, together with Muller and his wife, came to the shop. Witness asked the old woman if she would let him have a piece of the erf. There was some conversation, and eventually the old woman said witness could have a piece of the erf for 3s. a month. Witness said he contemplated building, and that he could not take it by the month. She said, thereupon, he could have the land for five years or ten years, as witness wished. Witness asked for a document, but the old woman said he could take her word as her bond. Witness put up a building. The first year's rent was paid for by work which witness did to the Van Wyks' house. The following year—1904—witness paid Mrs. Van Wyk's son Gabriel the rent, and got a receipt from him. That was after the old woman died. Later on young Gabriel asked witness if he would not take over the erf. Witness asked him what he would take for it, and he said he would take £25. After considering the matter for some days, witness went to see Gabriel at Wellington and told him that he would buy the erf. He gave Gabriel £5 and gave him a promissory note for the balance. Witness went and told Mr. Stegman of the transfer. Gabriel went with witness and told Mr. Stegman that he had sold his right to witness. Mr. Stegman said it would be all right. There was a conversation afterwards regarding the ownership of the house in which the Mullers were living. Mr. Stegman sent for the Mullers, and when they came he told Gabriel that he did not think he had any right to the house in which the Mullers were living. Witness understood then that he had bought the erf in question. The building originally cost £161, and £25 had been since spent in additions. Witness denied that he had broken the lock of a gate. The gate was not locked. Witness simply opened the gate. On the occasion of the alleged assault, witness saw Muller chopping down trees on his (witness's) erf. Witness objected and spoke to Muller, who refused to desist. Witness caught hold of him and pulled him away from the tree. He fell against one of the branches of a tree. Thereupon Muller and another old man who was with him went away.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The superintendent's consent was not required to the transfer of an erf from one resident in the station to another resident. It was necessary only in the case of strangers. Mr. Stegman never told witness that old Van Wyk had parted with his rights to Muller.

Counsel were then heard in argument on the facts.

Hopley, J., reviewed the evidence, and said it seemed to him that the defendant had never any right upon this place save as to the piece leased to him by the Mullers, of which fact he appeared to have tried to take advantage to turn his lease into possession of the whole, using the weak-minded Gabriel as a tool in the matter. It was quite possible he may have thought Gabriel had a right to the erf. It was a very significant thing that the defendant had not called young Gabriel van Wyk. Gabriel had been in court, and could have been called, but the defendant had not called him. Of course, it was obvious that Gabriel had taken money from both sides, but at the same time one would have expected that he would have been put in the box to enable one to determine whether this was a transaction in regard to which he could bear the ordeal of cross-examination. Plaintiff had clearly established the case that he and his wife had acquired the rights to these erven from old Van Wyk, and that the transfer was sanctioned by the missionary, and it seemed to him that the plaintiff's case was a perfectly good one on every ground. That being so, he must give an order against the defendant, and the Court would order that the defendant give up peaceable possession of this erf to the plaintiff within two months. With regard to the buildings, defendant had erected on the erf, his lordship did not regard them as being in the nature of immovables, and it would be ordered in reference to this that defendant remove them from the ground, or that, if he allowed them to remain, he be paid the sum of £50 as compensation by the plaintiff. For the assault and trespass, defendant would be ordered to pay £10 damages, and he would also have to pay the costs. Plaintiff was certified a necessary witness.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn: Defendant's Attorneys: Buchanan and Boyes.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

REX V. PAPALLANASOPULO. 1907.
{ Feb. 13th.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court, Wynberg. The appellant had been charged with contravening section 6 of Act 13 of 1870, by carrying on a trade without the requisite licence. The summons set out that on the 17th January, at Wynberg, George Papallanasopulo wrongfully and unlawfully, in the Main-road, Wynberg, exercised and carried on the trade of a general dealer, as defined by section 3 of Act 38 of 1887, by exposing for sale sweets, chocolates, biscuits, and nuts, not being the growth and produce of South Africa, without having taken out a licence. He was found guilty, and fined in £3. When the policeman told the appellant that he would be summoned, the reply was that he did not intend taking out a licence. He added that he had taken advice, and meant to test the case.

The Magistrate, in his reasons, said the defence was that the defendant was absolved from the necessity of taking out a general dealers' licence by Ordinance 11 of 1846. But it appeared to him this was inconsistent with section 3 of Act 38 of 1887, and it should be considered repealed by section 1 of the last-named Act.

Mr. Lewis was for the appellant, and the Crown did not oppose.

Counsel said section 8 of Ordinance 11 of 1846, which set out that it shall be lawful to sell fruit, vegetables, milk, eggs, firewood, cakes, or confectionery without taking out a licence for the privilege of so doing, was the only unrepealed section, the rest of the Ordinance was repealed by Act 3 of 1864.

[De Villiers, C.J.: These articles, you say, are confectionery?]

Mr. Lewis: Yes, I say they all fall under confectionery and fruit. The Ordinance provides that you can sell confectionery and fruit without taking out any licence. Act 38 of 1887, section 3, defines a general dealer as follows: "A general dealer means any person who carries on the trade or business of selling, or offering or exposing for sale, barter, or exchange, any goods, wares, or merchandise, not being the growth, produce, or manufacture of South Africa." The Magistrate reading that and section 1 of the Act, which provides that inconsistent and repugnant laws are repealed, concluded that Ordinance 11 of 1846 was repealed. But he omitted to look at section 4 of the Act of 1887, which provides: "nor shall anything in this Act contained be taken to affect the provisions of any of the following laws," etc. It specially mentions section 8 of the Ordinance 11 of 1846, and we say that section 8 of the Ordinance of 1846 is still in force, and therefore the conviction was wrong.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is clear in this case a mistake was made by the Magistrate through his overlooking the provisions of the 4th section of the Act 38 of 1887. The section contains the proviso: "Nor shall anything in this Act contained be taken to affect the provisions of any of the following laws," and amongst these laws is the 8th section of the Ordinance 11 of 1846, which is still in force. That section reads as follows: "From and after such and such a day it shall be lawful to sell in Cape Town, and from and after the taking effect of this Ordinance it shall be lawful to sell in all places in this colony fruit, vegetables, milk, eggs, firewood, cakes, or confectionery." The appellant in the present case sold fruit, cakes, and confectionery, and consequently he was not liable to take out any licence for the privilege of so doing. The appeal must be allowed, and the conviction quashed.

KADONGA V. NONDIVI. { 1907.
{ Feb. 13th.

Writ of execution—Attachment—Interpleader.

The respondent brought an action in a Magistrate's Court for the return of certain cattle alleged to belong to the plaintiff or payment of their value. Judgment was given for the plaintiff, and a writ of execution issued ordering the attachment of the defendant's property. In execution of the writ the cattle in dispute were attached, but were claimed by the appellant as being his property. It was proved on the trial of an interpleader issue that the appellant had bona fide purchased the cattle from the defendant without any knowledge of the dispute between the plaintiff and defendant.

Held, that as the appellant had been no party to the action for the recovery of the cattle, and that as the cattle had been attached as belonging to the defendant, the appellant was entitled to succeed on the interpleader issue.

This was an appeal from a decision of the A.R.M. for the district of Stockenström in a certain interpleader suit in which Tom Kadonga was plaintiff, and Sannah Nondivi was defendant.

The plaintiff claimed certain movable property, to wit, one cow and calf, attached on the 24th January, 1906, by the Messenger of the Court. The Court of the A.R.M. declared the cattle executable, and ordered the plaintiff to pay the costs, and stayed execution pending appeal.

It appeared that an action was brought in the Magistrate's Court for the return of these cattle, or their value, and they were attached in the possession of Kadonga by the Sheriff. Kadonga bought the cow and calf from one Peacock, and at the time he bought the cattle he did not know of the civil case coming on for the recovery from Peacock. The Magistrate's reasons for judgment were as follows: Two cows and a calf were given by one Jantje Jacob to Sannah Nondivi, as dowry for her daughter, whom he carried away. This daughter subsequently returned to her mother, and Jantje Jacob accompanied by his brother, Peacock, went to Sannah Nondivi's kraal, and took away the cattle without her consent. On the 11th June last a summons was served on Jantje Jacob, calling upon him to return the cattle or pay their value, £20. This summons was at the instance of Jonas Nondivi, son of Sannah Nondivi, and the case fell to the ground, because it was admitted that the mother and not the son was the owner of the cattle. She therefore instituted proceedings for the recovery of the cattle or their value, £20, and judgment was given in her favour as prayed. Upon attachment being made by the Messenger, two of the cattle—a cow and a calf, the subject of the present action—were claimed by Tom Kadonga as having been sold to him on the 12th June last, but the evidence shows that Peacock had no right or title to the property in question. It would appear that originally he purchased the cow from the witness, George Winkworth, but he forfeited his right of ownership by permitting his brother Jantje Jacob to deliver the stock to Sannah Nondivi. This was done with his knowledge and consent, in fact, he was present, and took an active part in the transaction. Now the Court came to the conclusion that this cow and calf were liable to execution, as they belonged to Sannah Nondivi, from whom they had been spoliated, and if Peacock had no right to sell them he could not, therefore, give Tom Kadonga a valid title. This appears very much like an attempt on the part of Jantje and Peacock to defeat the claim of the judgment creditor.

Mr. Buchanan (for appellant) submitted that the Magistrate had no authority to issue a judgment in that form. He cited Meitje v. Matsile (13 J., 392). The cattle were not removed by force or stealth. Peacock sold them bona fide to the appellant. The transfer of the cattle to Sannah was bad on the ground of want of consideration. A marriage contracted in this colony by native custom was illegal. He quoted Ngquobela v. Schele (10 J., 346).

[De Villiers, C.J.: But that man took the law into his own hands.]

Mr. Buchanan: The cattle were his. The Magistrate seems to have assumed that they belonged to Sannah. He cited Voet (43, 16, 5).

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case it appears that Sannah brought an action against Jantje for the recovery of certain cattle or payment of £20 as the value. Judgment was given for the plaintiff as prayed, whereupon a writ of execution was issued ordering the Messenger to attach the property of the defendant Jantje for the purpose. I presume, of paying £20. Thereupon the present appellant, Kadonga, set up a claim that he was the owner of the cattle, that Jantje was not the owner, that Jantje had sold the cattle to him after he had taken them from Sannah's Kraal, and the sale was clearly proved. If there had been evidence in the present case that Kadonga was a party to any attempt to defraud Sannah Nondivi, no doubt Kadonga would not be entitled to succeed, but there seems to be nothing against Kadonga. As far as one can judge, he bought the cattle and paid the money to Jantje. If Jantje is to be treated as the owner, as he was in the warrant of execution, he being the owner could make a lawful sale to a bona fide purchaser, and he could effect a bona fide transfer. The Magistrate does not find that Kadonga was not a bona fide purchaser. He finds that Peacock, a man who first of all assisted the defendant, and the defendant Jantje were in league, but the Magistrate found nothing against Kadonga. I see nothing on the record to show that Kadonga was anything but a bona fide purchaser. If so, the defendant, whose cattle these were, would not, according to the record, have lost his ownership of the cattle, but he could give a valid transfer to Kadonga, and Kadonga was not obliged to allow these cattle to be attached in a suit against Jantje. It is not necessary to consider the question whether the Magistrate was right in giving the judgment in the first instance at the suit of Sannah. It seems that the cattle had been delivered to her as dowry cattle, but upon Jantje's wife deserting him, Jantje had gone to Sannah's kraal and taken away the cattle. It is not quite clear, so far as I can judge, not having read the whole of the record in the previous case, whether the cattle were taken away under circumstances which would amount to spoliation, but Kadonga was no party to that action. According to the record the cattle belonged to Jantje, and if Jantje was the owner Jantje could sell to a bona fide purchaser, and as Kadonga was a bona fide purchaser he was entitled to retain the cattle, and the Magistrate could not have ordered the execution against these cattle after Kadonga had honestly bought them. For these reasons the appeal must be allowed, with costs in this Court, and the Court below, and the cattle declared not to be executable.

[Appellant's Attorney: C. Friedlander. Respondents in default.]

BLOEM V. AURET.

Magistrate's Court—Promise to pay—Liquid debt.

The plaintiff sued the defendant in a Magistrate's Court on the following document addressed by the defendant to the plaintiff: "Dear Sir,—I undertake to pay you the amount of £38 on the 3rd December next for 8 tollies at £4 15s., bought from you by Mr. Priest."

Held on appeal, that the document was a liquid one and that the case fell within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate.

This was an appeal from the Resident Magistrate's Court for Graaff-Reinet. An exception had been taken to the summons, which called upon the defendant to show cause why he should not pay to the plaintiff the sum of £28 10s., which the plaintiff claimed was due to him by virtue of a written undertaking made and signed by the defendant, for the sum of £38, being the price of eight tollies bought from plaintiff by one Thomas Priest. The difference in the amount now sued for was due to the fact that only six tollies were sold and delivered. An exception was taken to the jurisdiction of the Court on the ground that the document sued upon was not a liquid document. The exception was upheld, and absolution from the instance was granted, with costs. The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said the plaintiff sued the defendant for £28 10s., which he complained the defendant owed him by virtue of a certain written undertaking signed by the defendant. From the face of the document and the reading of the summons, it was impossible to give a provisional judgment without outside evidence as to the sale of the tollies, the amount for which they were purchased, and the number delivered. He founded his judgment principally on the doctrine laid down in the cases of Wallace v. Wood (3 E.D. Reports) and The Colonial Government v. Whítear (3 Juta, 242). If, on the other hand, the document was looked upon as a guarantee, then his jurisdiction was also ousted.

Mr. Benjamin was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Bisset was for the respondent.

Mr. Benjamin said that Auret had made himself personally liable upon the document. He cited "Anson on Contract" (p. 62), and Birkmyer v. Dennell (1 Sm. L.C., 310). Further, the document was really a promissory note, or, at any rate, it was a liquid document. The cases quoted by the Magistrate did not apply.

Mr. Bisset said that the document could not be a promissory note, as it was not stamped. From the summons it appeared that there had not been a complete delivery. The onus was therefore thrown upon the seller to show that the purchaser accepted a partial delivery, and extensive evidence would be required to show that the plaintiff had not performed his contract. In any event, the undertaking was in the nature of a guarantee; otherwise the words "bought from you by Mr. Priest" could have no meaning. He cited Holtz v. Supiero (20 S.C., 426). If the document was an out-and-out undertaking to pay more, there was no consideration for the promise.

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff sued the defendant in the Magistrate's Court of Graaff-Reinet upon the following acknowledgment: "To Mr. D. Blom.—Dear Sir,—I undertake to pay you the amount of £38 sterling on the 3rd December next for eight tollies, at £4 15s., bought from you by Mr. T. Priest.—Yours truly, T. Auret." I am quite satisfied that this is not in the nature of a guarantee or suretyship. It is an out-and-out undertaking on the part of Auret to pay to Blom the sum of £38, the consideration stated being eight tollies bought from Blom by Priest. The consideration, no doubt, was given by Blom to Priest, but that is sufficient consideration for the purpose of entitling Blom to sue upon the note. The only other question is whether this is such a liquid document as to entitle the plaintiff to provisional sentence. If there had been a statement in the summons that £10 had been paid in part payment, and the defendant Auret had been sued for only £28, that would not have disentitled the plaintiff to sue. But although there has been no part payment the plaintiff gives credit to the defendant for part of the debt, and claims only the balance. The defendant is sued here for less than the amount of the document, and the fact that the defendant is sued for less than upon the face of the document cannot give him a right of exception. In my opinion, there is no ground for the exception that this is not a liquid document. The consideration is a certain number of tollies bought from the plaintiff by Priest. If it had said for value received, the defendant would have been liable, and the fact that the consideration is more particularly specified here does not entitle defendant to raise the objection he has raised. It is a written acknowledgment of debt without any conditions. The plaintiff gives credit for a certain amount and he claims only the balance. The appeal must be allowed with costs in this Court, and the case remitted to the Court below to be decided on its merits.

[Appellant's Attorney: G. Trollip;
Respondent's Attorney: Not on record.]

KRUGER V. HYMAN. { 1907.
{ Feb. 13th.

Magistrate's Court—Summons—
Copy of document on account—10th Rule of Magistrates' Court.

The plaintiff having sued the defendant in a Magistrate's Court for the price of goods sold and delivered, annexed to the summons an account, one item of which was a certain sum on "an account rendered;" the exception was taken by the defendant on the ground that there had not been a compliance with the 10th Rule of Magistrates' Courts, whereupon the Magistrate gave absolution from the instance with costs.

Held, that if particulars of the first item had really been rendered, there could have been no prejudice to the defendant in those particulars not being repeated in the account annexed to the summons; and that the summons ought not to have been dismissed without giving the plaintiff the opportunity of giving such particulars.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Prieska. The plaintiff (applicant) sued the defendant on an account for goods sold and delivered. There were three items mentioned in the summons, and the first was for £2 9s. 8d., the second for £9 12s., and the third £24 16s. The last two items were fully explained, but the first item was for account rendered.

The defendant's agent took exception on the first item that the defendant was prejudiced in his defence, and the Magistrate, without hearing rebutting evidence, upheld the exception and gave absolution from the instance. In his reasons the Magistrate said the agent for the defence took exception in that his client for a number of years had had business transactions with the plaintiff. He thought the defendant would be prejudiced unless it was specified what the first item was.

Mr. Gutsche was for the appellant, and Mr. Benjamin was for the respondent.

Mr. Gutsche said that the appeal was brought on three grounds: (1) That the Magistrate was wrong in his interpretation of rule 10, schedule (b) of the R.M. Court Act; (2) that the wrong procedure was adopted; and (3) that the Resident Magistrate ought to have gone into the other items of the account. He said that it had been frequently laid down that a defendant should not take technical exceptions when there was no chance of his being prejudiced, and quoted Yates v. Elliot (10 E.D.C.).

Mr. Gutsche having been stopped in his argument, Mr. Benjamin said that he could only resist the appeal on the ground that no particulars had been tendered.

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff sued the defendant in the Magistrate's Court at Prieska, for £63 17s. 9d., being the price of goods sold and delivered, as will appear more fully from the account annexed, and annexed to the summons is a fairly long account giving all the details of purchases made by the defendant from the plaintiff. But in regard to the first item of the account, simply states, to account rendered £29 9s. 6d. On the face of it, therefore, there is a statement here that an account for that amount has been rendered. If the defendant had asked the plaintiff before the summons to give full particulars of the £29 9s. 6d., then it would have been the duty of the plaintiff to have given them. But this is not the course pursued, and when the case comes to the Magistrate an exception is taken under Rule 10 of Act 20 of 1856, and the exception is sustained. This is all that appears on the record: "Judgment, absolution from the instance, with costs." It does not appear that the plaintiff had any opportunity given him of giving the full details of the account rendered, and the case is dismissed. The Magistrate apparently proceeded under the 10th Rule of the Magistrate's Court Act, but that rule only provides that "no case shall be dismissed for or on account of the omission to deliver a copy of any such document, account, or bill as aforesaid in case it shall appear to the Court that such omission has not, in fact and in truth, prejudiced the defendant in respect of his defence." But there is no inquiry whether the defendant was prejudiced. The mere fact that the item simply states account rendered is taken as proof of prejudice. But it is not proof of prejudice, because if it be true that a full previous account was rendered the defendant would not be prejudiced by this portion of this account being omitted. It is clear that the Magistrate erred in this case, and the appeal must be allowed, with costs in this Court, and the case remitted to the Magistrate to be tried on its merits.

[Appellant's Attorney: G. Trollip.
Respondent's Attorney: Not on record.]

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

MOGFORD V. ROSENBLATT. { 1907.
Feb. 13th.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

TRIAL CAUSES.

TOWNSEND V. TOWNSEND.

This was an action for divorce.

Dr. Rainsford (for plaintiff) said that he did not see either his attorney or his client in the precincts of the Court, and he had to apply for a postponement of the case until later in the day.

Maasdorp, J., said that his attention had been drawn to the fact that there had been no publication in the "Government Gazette" in this matter, as required by the Rules of Court.

Dr. Rainsford: I think the order was one publication in a Transvaal paper.

Maasdorp, J., said that the point had better be inquired into by counsel.

Later on Dr. Rainsford applied for an extension of the return day to enable publication to be made in the "Gazette."

Return day extended until the 15th April, personal service to be effected, if possible, failing which publication to be made in the "Gazette" in the meantime.

COLLINET V. LESLIE.

Seduction by minor.

C., a minor, had seduced L. on a promise of marriage, without having obtained the consent of his natural guardian to the making of that promise.

Held, that C. was nevertheless liable in damages.

This was an action in which the plaintiff claimed £500 damages for seduction.

Mr. Pyemont was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

Mary W. Collinet (the plaintiff) said that she was 19 years of age in June last. She had known defendant for the past two years. Defendant promised to marry her before any intercourse took place between them. He was 20 years of age. Witness had given birth to a child on the 7th January, of which the defendant was the father. The affair had caused a split in the family, and in consequence her brother had decided to go to Australia. She asked for maintenance of the child at the rate of £3 a month.

Mary Helena Collinet (mother of the plaintiff) also gave evidence. She said that after she discovered her daughter's condition she went to the gaol at Wynberg and saw the defendant, who was then a convict guard. She taxed him with the matter, and he admitted it, and said that he would marry the plaintiff. Arrangements were afterwards made for the marriage, but the defendant would not marry the plaintiff. Witness also had an interview with the defendant's father, who, however, said that he washed his hands of the affair. For about 25 years witness had been living in Wynberg. Her late husband had held a good position in Wynberg. The position of the family had been seriously affected by this affair.

By the Court: Witness did not know anything as to the means of defendant or his father.

Wm. J. Roberts, of Cape Town (uncle of the plaintiff), said that in November last he went with Mrs. Collinet to the house of defendant's father. Witness spoke to defendant's father, and explained the position of affairs. Defendant said that he was prepared to do what witness suggested. Witness told him that he ought to marry the plaintiff. Defendant's father said that the son had brought this trouble upon himself. Defendant admitted that he was solely to blame for the girl's condition. Later on defendant called at Mrs. Collinet's house, and said that he would marry the girl by special licence in Cape Town. It was necessary that the consent of defendant's father should be obtained. Witness spoke to a subsequent interview which he had with the Chief Justice, and to preparations which were made to frame a petition. He also went to the defendant with a view of getting his signature to the petition. The latter said that he had thought the matter over, and he had decided not to marry the girl, and would rather take the consequences. Defendant added that it would always be a slur upon him that he had half-caste children about him. A letter was received subsequently from the defendant's father in which he said that under the circumstances he should not, as natural guardian of his son, withhold his consent to the marriage. Mrs. Collinet's son went to Australia yesterday solely on account of this occurrence.

This concluded the evidence.

Maasdorp, J., asked counsel if he had any authority as to the responsibility of a minor in case of seduction.

Mr. Pyemont said that he had no authority with regard to a minor not being responsible.

Maasdorp, J., said that there did not appear to have been any lawful promise of marriage before the seduction, because defendant was a minor, and the consent of his guardian had not been obtained.

Mr. Pyemont said that that was so.

Maasdorp, J.: Nothing has been clearly proved as to the means of the defendant. He is described as being a railway porter, and, as to his financial position, no evidence has been given, but I take it that the result is that he is not a man who is likely to be able to pay any very heavy damages. That will be taken into consideration with the other circumstances. In awarding the amount of £400, I take into consideration that that would cover, so far as the claim of the mother is concerned maintenance of the child. The Court will allow her £350 for the maintenance of the child, and £50 for further damages. Judgment will be for plaintiff for £400, with costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Fairbridge, Ardenne and Lawton; Defendant: In default.]

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Louwrens applied for the rehabilitation of Charles Buttrum.
Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte GABRIEL. } 1907.
} Feb. 13th.

Mr. Palmer moved on behalf of petitioner, who resides at Diep River, for leave to sue her husband, Stephanus Gabriel, in forma pauperis, for divorce by reason of his alleged adultery with a Malay woman. It was stated that petitioner had been unable to obtain an affidavit by two householders, residing in the district, as she did not know two householders. She, however, presented affidavits by two labourers.

Maasdorp, J., ordered the matter to stand over until applicant should appear personally before the Court.

Ex parte SPRONG.

Presumption of death—Absence.

The Court will not presume the death of any person merely because he has not been heard of for 7 years. It must be shown on affidavit that all possible efforts had been made to trace him, and the application must be made to the Court by some person directly interested in the inheritance.

Mr. Lewis moved for an order authorising the Master to assume the death of Carel Christian Frederick Sprong, petitioner's nephew. Petitioner said that Sprong had certain moneys deposited with a company at Malmesbury. In 1899 he left Malmesbury to join the Boers in the late war, and all efforts to trace him had failed.

Maasdorp, J., said that the petitioner was not the heir of the missing man.

Mr. Lewis said that the heir was the man's brother in Germany.

Maasdorp, J., said that there should be some proof of more active steps being taken by those immediately interested in the estate of Sprong. He also asked for authority for assuming the death of a person who had not been heard of for seven years. Almost the whole of the affidavit on which the application was made was hearsay as to the efforts which were alleged to have been made to trace the missing man.

Mr. Lewis having been heard further,

Maasdorp, J.: It is a very serious presumption that the Court is expected to make in this matter as to the death of Carel Sprong. The Court will want the very fullest information of facts before any inference can be drawn. If the necessary facts which clearly point to that inference were sworn to, then the Court would be in a position to say whether under the circumstances it ought to be presumed that Carel Sprong is dead. The affidavit before the Court contains nothing but hearsay evidence. The first step necessary is to make the fullest inquiries for the purpose of tracing Sprong from the time when he was last seen, and the strongest efforts must be made to follow him up to the place whither he was about to proceed. A very bald statement is made that, that place being the Transvaal, a police officer has made every effort to trace him. That is wholly insufficient. The Court will want the strongest evidence as to the efforts that were made, and that evidence must be on oath, and given by the people who make those efforts. That is a very important defect in this application. But another very serious matter is this, that the lady who applies now is not herself directly interested in the inheritance. It appears that there are others more closely related to the deceased who could take up the matter if circumstances of a more convincing character can be placed before the Court. It will still be open to them to make the necessary inquiries to get facts put before the Court on oath, and get such facts proved as would irresistibly lead to the conclusion that Carel Sprong is dead. The application must be refused. If at any future period the parties directly interested wish to bring the matter before the Court, they can do so again. No order will be made.

Ex parte ETTMAN.

Mr. Roux moved for an order directing that a certain period during which petitioner had been absent from service of his articles of clerkship should count as service. Petitioner was articled to a Cape Town attorney, and he had been absent from the office from August 22, 1906, until January 14, 1907, a period of 145 days. The reason of his absence was that he was advised to go up-country by a doctor. He asked that a period of 90 days should be included in his service.

Maasdorp, J., pointed out that the doctor's certificate as to the petitioner's condition should be on oath.

Mr. Roux relied on the case of ex parte Fraser (21 Supreme Court Reports, 272).

Order granted directing that 90 days of the period of absence count as portion of continuous service.

Ex parte ESTATE SLABBERT.

Mr. Howes moved, on behalf of the executrix testamentary in the estate of the late J. J. Slabbert, for leave to mortgage certain property to pay estate debts.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte FOURIE.

Mr. Upington moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent petitioner's youngest brother, Petrus Jacobus Fourie, of Calitzdorp, in proceedings to have him declared incapable of managing his own affairs. Counsel suggested the appointment of Mr. Johan S. F. Brink, attorney, Calitzdorp, as curator.

Order granted appointing Mr. Brink as curator ad litem for the purpose of the inquiry, citation to be returnable in the Circuit Court, Oudtshoorn, at its next sitting, and to be served on Mr. Brink and the respondent, and Mr. Brink appointed provisional curator bonis meanwhile.

MEHAFFEY V. BRADY.

Co-executors — Distribution account — Executors' commission.

This was an application upon notice calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not, in his capacity as co-executor in the estate of the late Henry Watson, forthwith file and lodge with the Master the second and final liquidation and distribution account in the estate, and take all the necessary steps to finally wind up the said estate, applicant tendering a sum of £18 14s. 8d. due to respondent as his half-share of executors' commission.

It appeared that the parties were co-executors under the will of the late Henry Watson, hotelkeeper, Salt River. Mrs. Mehaffey is sole heiress under the will. The first account had been lodged by respondent in October last, but he refused to lodge the second and final account, claiming that he was entitled to payment of the whole of the executors' commission, and not to the one-half share tendered to him by applicant. Respondent said that practically the whole of the administration had been carried out by him under a power of attorney given by applicant, and that it was agreed by applicant that he should receive the whole of the commission. The final account had been prepared, and had been signed by both applicant and respondent as correct. The whole of the moneys in the estate had remained in the applicant's hands.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for applicant, Margaret J. Mehaffey; Dr. Greer was for respondent, Christopher Brady, attorney, Cape Town.

Affidavits having been read and counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J.: In this case it was the duty of the applicant and respondent, who are executors in the estate of Henry Watson, to lodge with the Master of the Supreme Court a final liquidation and distribution account. It appears that the account is practically completed, except as to an item in reference to which there is a dispute between the parties, and the account cannot be wholly completed until that dispute is adjusted. The applicant now asks for an order of the Court upon the respondent to complete and file the account. He raises the objection that the account is not completed until he receives the commission as executor. He claims to be entitled to all the fees due to executors as his commission, and he claims it by virtue of a power of attorney, which was granted to him by the respondent on the 17th April, 1906. She, on the other hand, alleges that after the power of attorney was granted she changed her intentions with reference to the administration of the estate, and that the power was subsequently withdrawn. Now, it appears that Henry Watson died on the 14th April, and that there was a subsequent agreement between the applicant and the respondent that the whole of the administration of the estate should be left in the hands of the respondent, and after that agreement was made this power that is now put in was given by applicant to respondent. It is also quite clear, upon the affidavit of the respondent himself, that in certain respects the applicant changed her mind. Having resolved at first to refrain from taking out letters of administration, she subsequently informed him that she intended to withdraw her renunciation in that respect, and to take out letters of administration, and the position therefore was wholly changed, and the effect was this: There is a power put in by Margaret J. Mehaffey, otherwise Margaret J. Watson. This is a power given by her in her private capacity, and not in her capacity as executrix. What the legal effect of such a power may be it is not now necessary to decide. When she took out letters of administration, this power, in my opinion, ceased to have any force. After she took out letters of administration, the only authority of hers that would have had any legal force would have been an authority given by her as executrix. Having become executrix, she was bound to carry out her duties as executrix, and in case she wished to place those powers in the hands of respondent she must do so as executrix. She has not done so, consequently the respondent never had any power at all without her consent to administer the estate after she took out letters of administration. She says that when she discovered, upon its being pointed out to her by a friend, that she had given powers that were altogether too large, she intended to curtail those powers, and informed the respondent of it. Respondent was aware that she was going to give this power to some one else. A power was granted by her to Mr. Powis and Messrs. Michau and De Villiers, and they notified to the respondent that they were prepared to take her part in the administration of the estate. She took her part as far as she was called upon in the administration of the estate, and afterwards Messrs. Michau and De Villiers took over her duties in that respect. It appears from the affidavits they did their duties as far as it was necessary for them to perform them, and they took part in the framing of the account. The conclusion I come to is that this power was not an authority after the applicant accepted letters of administration, and that the respondent is not entitled to commission for any work done by him after that date. The Court will therefore order the respondent to take the necessary steps to complete and lodge the second and final liquidation and distribution account with the Master, upon applicant paying to him £18 14s. 8d., respondent to pay costs.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Michau and De Villiers; Respondent's Attorney: C. Brady.]

Ex parte KOCH.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, as a matter of urgency, for an order of arrest against one Aaron Cohen, of Wynberg, pending his providing security for a claim which petitioner had against him. Petitioner had obtained an interdict against respondent restraining him from removing his goods in a tailor's shop, pending an action to be brought for £41 6s. 6d., rent. Petitioner also had a further claim against Cohen for purchase price of certain land. Information had come to petitioner that it was the intention of respondent to leave the Colony this (Wednesday) afternoon, and that he did not intend to return.

Order granted for the personal attachment of respondent.

KITLEY V. COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Mr. Struben moved for an order authorising amendment of an entry in the Marriage Register describing petitioner's wife as a "spinster" by substituting the word "widow." Counsel said that Mr. Birch, from the Colonial Secretary's Office, appeared to consent. The parties were married in 1897, and the error had been discovered as a consequence of an application by petitioner to be placed on the fixed establishment of the C.G.R.

Order granted authorising amendment of the entry as prayed.

LESTER V. LESTER.

Mr. Palmer moved for an order with regard to the hearing of this case, in which applicant had obtained leave to sue her husband by edictal citation and in forma pauperis for restitution of conjugal rights. It appeared that publication had been given in a New Zealand newspaper, and that owing to an error the respondent had been summoned to appear on a dies non, viz., Saturday, February 16. It had been impossible within the return day to publish in the "Government Gazette," and a fresh publication had therefore been made, but in that notice respondent was called upon to appear on the 26th February. In view of the confusion which had arisen as to the return day, counsel sought relief on behalf of the petitioner.

Maasdorp, J., said that he would sit on Saturday next, and if the respondent did not then appear, an application might be made for a further postponement until the 26th February.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.) and a Jury.]

EVANS V. BUCKNALL STEAM-SHIP LINES, LTD. { 1907.
Feb. 14th.
" 23rd.

Personal injury — Negligence —
Accident — Sea-worthiness —
Responsibility of shipowners —
Latent defect — Costs.

This was an action brought by William Cook Evans, an engineer, to recover £2,000 damages from the defendants by reason of injuries sustained while in their service on board the S.S. Ready.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was a first-class engineer, duly certified as such by the Board of Trade, and that he resided at Cape Town. The defendant company was the owner of the S.S. Ready. In 1905 the plaintiff and defendant executed a certain written contract of service, whereby the defendant employed the plaintiff for remuneration to perform the duties of first-class engineer, and on February 11 he was appointed engineer of the Ready, and proceeded on a voyage from Cape Town to Angra Pequena and elsewhere on the West Coast of Africa. It was the duty of the defendant, under the provisions of sections 457 and 458 of the Merchants' Shipping Act of 1894 to use all reasonable means to ensure that the ship was in a seaworthy condition, and to keep her in a seaworthy condition during the voyage. The ship was sent to sea in an unseaworthy condition, the machinery being in a defective and dangerous condition, to the knowledge of the defendant and the master of the steamship. On the 12th February the machinery was in such an unseaworthy state as to endanger the life of the plaintiff. On the 12th March the bottom and bolts of the low-pressure engine and the connecting rods broke, and struck the plaintiff on the head and on the leg. The plaintiff sustained serious injuries to the head, and a fracture of the leg. He had suffered great pain, and had been put to great expense for medical attendance, and had suffered permanent injury to his bodily health. He had sustained damages in £2,000.

The defendants in their plea said they used all reasonable means to ensure that the ship was sent to sea in a seaworthy condition, and to keep her in a seaworthy condition. Defendants admitted that on the 12th March the crank pin bolts of the low-pressure engine broke, and in consequence plaintiff was injured. The accident, for which they were in no way responsible, was not due to any failure on their part to use such reasonable means as were by law required to ensure the ship being in a seaworthy condition. The injuries were admitted, and that the plaintiff was unable to serve further under the contract. He was left in the hospital at Port Nolloth, and thereafter he was taken to the hospital in Cape Town. It was denied that the plaintiff was put to great expense for medical treatment, the defendant having voluntarily paid the sum of £162 6s. in settlement of medical expenses incurred by the plaintiff, although they were not legally liable to pay the same. The injuries were caused to the plaintiff through a pure accident.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Sutton) was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Watermeyer) was for the defendant company.

William Cook Evans, plaintiff, stated he was a duly qualified marine engineer of considerable experience. When he first visited the ship Ready he found the engine-room in a filthy condition. There was a fitter at work removing a pipe. The ship went to sea next morning, and she had not gone far when he found the engine in a faulty condition. He had the ship stopped and removed a defect. The ship proceeded to Angra Pequena, but the engine continued to "knock." He examined the engine on arrival at Angra Pequena, and found there was no lead and other faults. He adjusted the valve at Angra Pequena, and the ship ran much better. They then proceeded to Ichaboe Island, and left the island on the 12th March. About six o'clock in the morning, as he was passing the high-pressure engine, he was knocked unconscious. He lay on deck for a couple of days and suffered great pain. On the 15th he was removed to the engine-room skylight, from where he directed what should be done. The steamer went into Port Nolloth, and he was in the hospital from March to August. Then he was sent to the New Somerset Hospital, Cape Town, where Dr. Fuller opened his leg and extracted an old bone on the 20th September. Up to this time the defendants had paid his medical expenses. Subsequently he had an interview with Captain Clunie and another gentleman, and witness was advised to see a specialist at Home. Witness saw a doctor in Cape Town, and as a result declined to go Home. Then the defendants refused to do anything further. As a consequence of the accident, witness's one leg was shorter than the other, and he could not follow his occupation.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Besides what the defendants had paid, witness was out of pocket for medical expenses. When his attorneys sent a letter of demand a year after the accident he was aware that the defendants were considering his case from a sympathetic point of view.

Dr. Fuller gave evidence as to the injuries the plaintiff was suffering from when he was brought to the New Somerset Hospital. In his opinion, plaintiff would never again be able to perform the duties of a marine engineer with any degree of safety.

Corroborative evidence was given by Dr. Bonenberg and Dr. France.

Thomas Perkins mate of the Ready stated he heard a peculiar noise made by the engine on a previous voyage to Port Elizabeth, when a Mr. Caye was engineer. The noise continued when they made the voyage to Angra Pequena until Evans, who was then engineer, did something to the machinery that modified it. Witness described the accident and the condition in which the plaintiff was afterwards found.

John Smith, fireman, who joined the Ready shortly after the plaintiff, stated when he first went to the engine-room he found it in a dirty condition. Witness started to clean the engine, and noticed the "knocking" when the ship got out to sea. There was no medicine chest aboard the ship.

Robert John Stewart, who holds a first-class certificate from the Board of Trade, stated he had considerable experience of marine engines. Witness gave evidence on a diagram as to the working of the engine in question.

Mr. Schreiner said that all that was cast upon the defendants under the Act was to take reasonable means to ensure that the vessel was seaworthy. There was no guarantee of seaworthiness, and he did not see by the evidence that there was a failure to take steps. It was a question for the Court to consider whether there was from time to time a case of non-using of reasonable means by the owners of the ship.

De Villiers, C.J., said he was not prepared to say there was no evidence to that effect.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Captain Thirst, master of the Ready, stated that he had been in the employ of the defendant company since 1899. Witness proceeded on the voyage round to Port Elizabeth, and the subsequent trip round the West Coast. A correct log was kept on the voyage. On the way to Port Elizabeth, the then engineer complained of the engine "thumping." The engine had since been overhauled, but she continued to "thump." Any serious report he would put in his log. He did not consider the "thumping" of sufficient importance to enter it in the log. The engineer on the trip to Algoa Bay took his discharge at Port Elizabeth. When the plaintiff arrived at the ship small repairs were being done to the engine by Messrs. Cunningham and Gearing. Before the accident the plaintiff said that the engine had been carelessly looked after, but the plaintiff never warned witness that the engine was in a dangerous condition. As far as witness knew the ship was seaworthy.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The Ready broke down again after the repairs by Messrs. Cunningham and Gearing, and the accident was in the same place as before. The former engineer was very careless about his room. The plaintiff told witness the engineer did not satisfy him. The ship went much better after the plaintiff's repairs at Angra Pequena. On the passage from Angra Pequena to Ichaboe the Ready ran so well that witness complimented him. The plaintiff was a most careful and competent engineer. The plaintiff might have told witness that the engine was a "bag of tricks." There was no medicine chest aboard the ship.

George R. Berman, superintending engineer for the Union-Castle Co., stated that in September, 1903, the Assistant Port Captain, Captain Price, approached him with regard to the Ready. The vessel had received damages on her way from Port Elizabeth, and was on the slips. Witness and Captain Price made an examination of the vessel. Witness thoroughly overhauled the engines. The repairs were done by Messrs. Cunningham and Gearing, and witness then gave a Lloyds' certificate.

Thomas Smith Price, Assistant Port Captain, stated he acted in 1903 as Lloyds' agent, when Captain Stevens was away. In 1904 the vessel was overhauled, and a Lloyds' "L.C.M." certificate was given.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: When she left on this voyage another examination was about due.

Re-examined by Mr. Schreiner: The vessel was not overdue for survey.

Captain Joseph Walter Cook Martar, superintendent of the Canadian and South African Line, stated that the special machinery survey of the Ready became due towards the end of 1905. The practice with owners to maintain seaworthiness was to have vessels surveyed according to Lloyds' requirements, and in a great measure they looked to their engineers to report anything that went wrong.

Sydney Gearing, of Messrs. Cunningham and Gearing, Cape Town, stated he had worked on the S.S. Ready in 1903. A new propeller was put in, and the cranks and bolts would be surveyed in the course of that work. Just before the ship went on the voyage in 1905, witness's firm was doing some repairs on her. After the accident the broken bolts were sent to witness, and a man was sent up to Port Nolloth to provisionally repair the damage. The material in the bolts was good: the breakage might have been caused by the screwing of the nuts too tight, or the bearings becoming hot.

After further evidence had been led for the defendants,

Mr. Upington, in argument, dwelt upon the considerations that led the Legislature to pass the Merchant Shipping Act of 1894, which, he said, made an express stipulation that all reasonable means must be used for ensuring that a ship should be sent to sea in a seaworthy condition. Prior to that Act, it had always been possible for the owner of a vessel to escape his liability by what they might call a technical legal point, that he did not warrant the seaworthiness of his ship by his contract with the seaman, and that the seaman went on board the ship and he must take the risk. The idea of the Legislature was to protect a very large working-class and a class exposed to many perils in the service of other people. The two issues of fact which the jury had to consider were these: (1) Was the Ready in a seaworthy condition on the 12th February when she put to sea; and (2) were all reasonable means used by the defendant company to ensure her being sent to sea in a seaworthy condition, and kept in a seaworthy condition during the remainder of the voyage. Now, "seaworthy condition" had been defined in Headley v. Pinkney S.S. Co. (Appeal Cases, 1894, p. 222), to mean that the ship must be "in a fit state as to repairs, equipment, and crew, and in all other respects to encounter the ordinary perils of the voyage." On the first point, they had the clearest possible evidence as to the unfitness of the engines. The Ready had not proceeded beyond Saldanha Bay when it became apparent that the engines were in a defective condition. Plaintiff managed to get the boat to Angra Pequena, and then he effected repairs which made the engines go better than before, but eventually the inevitable happened, the engines smashed, and the plaintiff was injured. Mr. Upington characterised the defence as "impudent." The defendants pleaded that they had used reasonable endeavours to see that the ship went to sea in an seaworthy condition, and that whole thing was a pure accident. After sundry smashes, the engine broke down, and was brought back to Cape Town for repairs. After the repairs recommended by Mr. Clifford Jones had been carried out the engines had not broken down since. He submitted that it was clear that the defendants had not discharged the duty imposed upon them by the Act to see that the ship was sent out in a seaworthy condition. Counsel dwelt upon the serious character of the injuries plaintiff had sustained, injuries which would deprive him of again earning his livelihood by his profession as a marine engineer, and he submitted that the damages claimed—£2,000—were not excessive.

Mr. Schreiner said that this was a mixed question of law and fact. He would like first to refer to the law of the case. The law did not, by any means, cast upon shipowners, as the jury had been led to believe, the extraordinary and impossible duty of warranting the seaworthiness of the ship. The Merchant Shipping Act of 1894 did not put such a duty upon the owners. Parliament recognised that the seaman followed a risky avocation. The seaman took his risks in different ways, and the engineer took his risks particularly in the engine room, and there was nothing more required by the Act from the owners than that all reasonable means should be taken to ensure the seaworthiness of the ship for the voyage at the time when the voyage commenced, and to keep her in a seaworthy condition during the continuance of the voyage. The question was: Did the owners of the Ready send her to sea, having taken all reasonable means to secure that she was in a seaworthy condition?

Counsel drew attention to the fact that the ship was built in 1896; the engines were made in 1896, and the ship stood well in her class at Lloyd's. Her engines had to be subjected to a special survey every four years. The last special survey was made in 1901, and the next special survey was due in 1905, a little while before the incident or accident, whatever they liked to call it, occurred in February, 1905.

Mr. Upington (interposing) said that he understood the defendant's attorney had Mr. Clifford Jones's report in his possession, and he applied for its production.

The report was handed in, and was found to contain a theory that the accident to the engines had occurred through there being too much or too little cushion on the upward stroke of the engine.

Mr. Schreiner said that this report had no bearing upon the present case. It dealt with an accident which occurred some considerable time after February, 1905. It was miraculous how the theory advanced by plaintiff as to the cause of the accident in February corresponded with that given by Mr. Jones as to the later accident.

De Villiers, C.J., said he did not think there was anything miraculous about the fact that two engineers were agreed as to the cause of an accident.

Mr. Schreiner said it was very significant that defendants heard nothing of an action against them for damages until after the second accident had happened in December. The subsequent accident had just made it strong enough apparently to found an action against the defendants. Counsel suggested that the present action would not have been heard of but for Mr. Jones's report on the second accident in 1905. Great stress had been laid on the fact that the Ready's engines thumped, but the thumping of the engines was no indication of unseaworthiness. Unseaworthiness was one thing; the thumping of the engines was another. What the jury had to decide was whether the company had failed to take reasonable means to ensure the seaworthiness of the ship. It was difficult to see what more they could have done to ensure the seaworthiness of the Ready. There was nothing to show that the responsible officers of the Ready saw anything more that was reasonably necessary to be done to ensure seaworthiness. Had the ship-owners taken reasonable means? He submitted that they had. It was not cast upon the owners to warrant or guarantee the seaworthiness of the ship. Touching on the question of damages, counsel characterised the claim for £2,000 as somewhat extortionate. Again referring to the case of Headley v. Pinkney S.S. Co., he said that case went to show that, where a ship started apparently quite seaworthy, some non-use of equipment on the voyage by a fellow-employee would not give rise to an action. In that case the whole of the law under the Act of 1876 was discussed. The section in the Act of 1876 was embodied in the Act of 1894. He urged that plaintiff could not have any greater rights against the company than another hand could have, seeing that he was the engineer in charge. There was no indication that the company or the master in any way overlooked doing what was reasonably required to be done to secure the safety of the ship during the voyage. There was nothing to indicate that there was a defect in the adjustment of the sliding valve. On the point of latent defect, counsel cited Redhead v. Midland Railway (20 Law Times, 628). He also quoted Kay on the Law of Shipmasters and Seamen (2nd edition, pp. 466-7).

De Villiers, C.J., said that a wide issue had been raised by Mr. Clifford Jones's report. That report could not have been put in as evidence. The report related to a subsequent accident, which might have been caused from totally different causes. The question of whether Evans might have seen the report was quite irrelevant. His Lordship warned the jury that they should not be guided in their judgment by sympathy with the plaintiff in an unfortunate accident. What they had to do was to find whether defendants were liable in law. Plaintiff's case was that the Ready was sent to sea in an unseaworthy condition. It was said that there was thumping in the engines before the boat left Cape Town, but thumping was not proof of unseaworthiness. If there were a latent defect the owners could not be held responsible.

Plaintiff had an opportunity of inspecting the engines, he was a competent engineer, and if he attached any importance to it one would have thought he would have made some entry in the log. It was surprising that no examination was made at Angra Pequena of the parts of the engine which were alleged to have caused the mischief. The theory as to the cause now brought forward was not in any of the correspondence. His Lordship thought the log ought to have great weight with the jury.

After an absence of an hour, the Foreman of the jury stated that, by a majority of seven to two, they had found for plaintiff for £500, each party to pay their own costs.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to the jury): You need not find anything as to costs. The Court decides the question of costs.]

Mr. Schreiner: That appears to be a verdict that could be accepted. I was going to put it to your lordship that the jury had better retire to consider the question of the costs, because in the view that each side should pay their own costs, it would not be just to my clients.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to the jury): You see, gentlemen, the question of costs is entirely in the hands of the Court. The Judge will consider the question of costs. If you think that £500 is too much to award, and that the costs should be deducted, then you can reconsider your verdict. You see, if the Court gives judgment for £500, with costs, the result would be that the plaintiff would pay no costs whatever. If each party paid their own costs, then the plaintiff would get less than £500 no doubt.]

The Foreman: That is what the jury intended.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then, on the other hand, the defendants would pay more than £500. They would have to pay £500 and half the costs.]

The Foreman: Exactly, that is what the jury intended.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The court could treat the finding of the jury in the matter of costs as a recommendation, but it could not be bound by it.]

The foreman said the jury felt that, under the circumstances, they would like to retire again to consider their verdict.

The jury again retired, and after a brief absence, returned with a verdict for the plaintiff for £400.

Mr. Schreiner: May I ask if this also is a majority verdict?

The Foreman: By a majority of seven to two.

Mr. Upington moved for judgment for plaintiff for £400, with costs.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think the costs should follow the result. Judgment will be for plaintiff for £400, with costs.]

Costs of preparing the diagram of the machinery were also allowed by the Court.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Dold and Van Breda; Defendants' Attorney: G. Trolip.]

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

GUTHRIE AND THERON V. { 1907.
ESTERHUYSEN. { Feb. 14th.

Mr. Louwrens moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £250, with interest from 1st January, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

GRAAFF V. SCHOLTZ, AS EXECUTOR OF ESTATE SCHOLTZ.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the final adjudication of the defendant estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

MILITARY EQUIPMENT CO., LTD. V. BATHURST.

Mr. Alexander moved for a decree of civil imprisonment, with costs, to be suspended upon payment of £1 per month, first payment on March 1, with leave to plaintiff to apply again. The proceedings were brought upon a judgment for £40, for goods sold and delivered, less £18 paid on account, and for £8 16s. 6d. taxed costs.

Order granted.

ROSENBLATT V. MCFARLANE.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on three promissory notes for £70 15s. 8d., £54, and £128 16s., with interest from due dates of notes and costs.

Order granted.

GOTZE V. ZIEHL.

Mr. Payne moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. from the 1st January, 1907, and £7 odd, premiums of insurance paid; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Sutton moved for the rehabilitation of Tom Walters under the 17th section of the Insolvent Ordinance. Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte CROZIER. { 1907.
{ Feb. 14th.

Dr. Greer moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband, James Crozier, by edictal citation, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Petitioner, who resides at Salt River, said that respondent deserted her about February last, saying that he intended to go away, and would do no more for herself and the family. He had been heard of in Scotland last year.

Rule nisi granted, returnable on the 15th April, personal service, if possible, failing which publication in the "Government Gazette" and the "Scotsman."

Ex parte WOUTERSEN. { 1907.
{ Feb. 14th.
{ Mar. 8th.

Will—Fidei commissum—Failure of fidei-commissory heirs.

L. had instituted as her heirs inter alios the children of P. W. and S. W. with fidei commissum to their children per stirpes upon whom the inheritance was to devolve free and unencumbered. All the issue of the said fiduciaries had died without issue. P. W. was now 65 years of age, and it was proved to the satisfaction of the Court that he was now impotent.

Held, that he was entitled to receive his share of the inheritance free and unencumbered.

Dr. Greer moved for an order declaring that petitioner, who resides at Caledon, is entitled to receive his share in certain estate free and unencumbered by a fidei commissum. Petitioner said that by her last will and testament, dated February 13, 1902, Maria Magdalena Johanna Loedolf instituted as the heirs to one-half of the residue of the estate the children of Pieter Hendrik Woutersen and his wife Sophia Woutersen (born Cloete), but burdened the said inheritance with a fidei commisum, so that the interest only should be paid to such children, the capital devolving free and unencumbered upon the descendants of the children of Pieter Hendrik Woutersen by representation and per stirpes. Petitioner was a son of the late P. H. Woutersen and his spouse. He was married, and was now 65 years of age. There had been five children of the marriage, but all had died in their childhood, the last having been born 17 years ago. An affidavit was also sworn by a medical man in support of the application. Dr. Greer submitted that petitioner under the will had taken a fiduciary interest in the estate, and it had vested in him, and there had been a failure of the fidei commissary heirs. According to the evidence before the Court, there appeared to be no possibility of future issue to the petitioner. Counsel quoted Voet 36, 1, 26 (McGregor's Translation, pp. 64 and 65), but said that he had been unable to find any direct precedent for the present application.

[Maasdorp, J.: I should like to look further into the matter, and if you can find further authority you may mention it. At present the application will stand over for further consideration. If the Court wishes to hear further argument, you will be notified.]

Pontea (March 8th.)

Maasdorp, J.: Maria Ludloff, by her last will, appointed the children of Pieter Woutersen and Sophia Woutersen heirs to one-half of the residue of her estate, "with the proviso that these inheritances shall severally be burdened with fidei commissum, as I do hereby burden them, so that the interest only shall be paid to such children, the capital devolving free and unencumbered upon their descendants by representation and per stirpes." The applicant, Pieter Woutersen, is one of the heirs above mentioned. He was married in 1875, and had five children, all of whom died in their childhood. He is now 65 years of age, and says that for the last 17 years he has suffered from acute attacks of rheumatism and gout, which have rendered him sexually impotent, and incapable of procreating any more children. Upon the ground that there is a total failure of fidei commissary heirs, he now claims to be entitled as fiduciary heir, to his share of the residuary estate, free and unencumbered. The statement made by the applicant concerning his physical condition was supported by medical testimony, but in view of the fact that the Court always requires very clear evidence of such physical incapacity, I directed that further evidence on that point should be adduced. Such evidence has been furnished, and I am satisfied that the permanent impotency of the applicant has been proved. The question now arises whether he is entitled to receive from the executors his share of the inheritance free and unencumbered. The executors do not oppose the application, but are prepared to submit to the judgment of the Court. The only passage in the text-books dealing with a similar question, that I have been able to discover is the following (Voet, 36, 1, 15): "But it is agreed that the mere fact that the male and female fiduciary are not in the nature of things capable of procreating children, whether by reason of age in the female, or a physical impediment in the male, does not make it obligatory on the fiduciary to restore the trust property left subject to the condition, 'if he die without children,' for it is not merely the absence of children which is involved in the condition and ought to be an existent fact, but also the death of the fiduciary." From this passage it may be inferred that if only the absence of children formed the condition, then the fact that a man has no children, together with satisfactory proof that he cannot possibly have any because of physical defect, would establish that condition. In the case mentioned by Voet the children stood between fidei commissary heirs and the fiduciary, in the present case the children stood between their father, the applicant, and his full and free enjoyment of the property. The death of the children that were born and the impossibility of the procreation of any more children by the applicant amounts to a total failure of fidei commissary heirs. This is not a case like the one cited above where upon the presumed absence of children there arose a conflict of rights between the fiduciary and others. The only person interested in this case upon the failure of children is the applicant, and I am of opinion that he is entitled to receive his share of the inheritance free and unencumbered. The cases of In the Estate of Meyer (13 Supreme Court, 2) and Van Reenen v. Estate of Vink (15 Cape Times Reports, 324) cited at the bar have some bearing upon this case, but are not directly in point. In terms of the prayer of the petition, the Court will declare that the petitioner is entitled to receive from the executors his share of the estate of Maria Ludloff, free and unencumbered with the burthen of fidei commissum.

[Applicant's Attorney: J. C. de Korté.]

Ex parte INDWE MUTUAL S. 1907.
BUILDING SOCIETY. } Feb. 14th.

Mr. Louwrens moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute calling upon the respondent (Gert Johannes Botha) to show cause why transfer of the property mentioned in the rule should not be granted in favour of the applicants. Substituted service of the rule had been given, efforts to communicate with respondent in Johannesburg having failed. Rule absolute.

Ex parte ESTATE VAN DER WALT.

Mr. Pohl moved on the petition of the trustees in the insolvent estate Van der Walt, of Philip's Town, for a commission to issue to examine the insolvent and others as to his transactions since his marriage.

Order granted appointing the Resident Magistrate of Hopetown as commissioner to examine the witnesses named in the petition.

RYNHOUD V. RYNHOUD.

This was an application brought by Mary A. Rynhoud against her husband, George William Rynhoud for payment of £50 to enable applicant to institute proceedings against him for divorce on the grounds of his adultery, or, alternatively, for judicial separation on the ground of his cruelty, neglect, and abusive language.

The affidavits were to the effect that applicant is a nurse at Robben Island, and respondent is employed as a car conductor by the Tramways Co. The parties were married in community. The applicant alleged that respondent had been guilty of misconduct with servants and others. She said that respondent had endeavoured to induce her to become a prostitute. Applicant said that she was without means with which to institute her action. Respondent denied that he had been guilty of improper behaviour, and made counter allegations against his wife's conduct. He said that he was not in a position to pay £50 or any sum whatever to enable applicant to bring her action. In her replying affidavit, applicant said that the allegations made by respondent in regard to her conduct were false.

Mr. Alexander was for applicant; Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for respondent.

Mr. Alexander argued that the Court should order respondent to pay over to the applicant a sum of at least £10.

Maasdorp, J.: The point the Court has to consider in this case is whether an order granted for the relief of the applicant in this case would be of any use to her. The respondent says that he is not in a position to contribute anything whatever towards the cost of the action contemplated by his wife. His bare statement to that effect would not have been sufficient, but it appears that it is corroborated by the fact that there are now two writs of civil imprisonment against him, the execution of which have been suspended pending the payment by him of certain instalments. If anything is now done by the Court to prevent the payment of these instalments to these creditors, the result will be that the writs of civil imprisonment would be executed against the respondent, and then he would be in a wholly hopeless position. He seems to earn something like £3 a week, but out of that he is supporting three children, and if he were now ordered to pay any substantial amount to the applicant it would be to the injury of the children, and he would be unable to support them. The only reason why the application is refused now is that it appears clear that the respondent could not obey any order made by the Court for contribution towards his wife's costs of the action. There is a reference made to an estate that he might be entitled to in the near future. There is no information before the Court as to its value, and he himself says that it is likely to be of very little value, if not entirely worthless. There is not sufficient information before the Court now that the respondent has sufficient means to do anything for the applicant in the matter. If at any future time it should appear that the estate is of any great value, then further application may be made, if at that time a further application would be the proper course to take. If the applicant has no means to carry on her action, there are other provisions of the law which she might take advantage of, if the Court considers that she is entitled to do so. Application refused, no order as to costs.

JAMIE V. ADAMS.

This was an application brought by a Malay widow against one Abas Adams, to have him removed from office as executor testamentary in the estate of the late Machomet Jamie, after filing an account of his administration, and also to have him interdicted from disposing of the harness factory at Mowbray, belonging to the said estate.

Several affidavits were read, in which it was alleged that respondent was totally unfit for the duties of his office, and that he was not properly looking after the interests of the widow, who enjoys the usufruct, and after the interests of the heirs. Respondent denies these allegations.

Mr. Alexander was for applicant; Mr. Pohl was for respondent.

After hearing Mr. Alexander in argument on the facts,

Maasdorp, J.: One portion of the application is with reference to the removal of the respondent as executor. It is therefore, necessary for the applicant to put forward sufficient grounds for such removal, and I am not satisfied that the grounds upon which the Court would consider it proper to remove the executor have been placed before the Court. Amongst these it might be proved that the respondent has been guilty of misconduct. Well, there is a good deal of conflict upon the evidence on that point. He is certainly charged with misconduct by the applicant, but the question is, whether, upon the affidavits, the Court will accept it that misconduct has actually been proved. One thing is perfectly clear, at one stage of the proceedings, when he found he was not quite capable of administering the estate without advice, he consulted Messrs. Herold and Gie, and actually gave them a general power of attorney to act for him in the matter. He, therefore, took what he considered to be a step to secure good advice for the administration of the estate, and from the affidavit of Mr. Herold, it would appear that the attorneys were perfectly willing at all times to aid him in administering the estate properly. A question has been raised as to whether the respondent is not really incapacitated from carrying on the administration of the estate, and the contention of counsel, based on the affidavits, amount to this, that he does not appear to be a very good man of business, but he has not the incapacity that is referred to in law, or in the cases that have been cited. If a man is capable of managing his own affairs, and he is selected by the testator as a fit and proper person to manage his affairs, then such a person is not incapacitated from doing the business, although it may be proved that he is not a good business man, and although it may be proved that he is not quite capable of carrying on some complicated matter in which the estate may be interested, in a very business-like manner. Executors are always expected to take advice in matters in which they find they cannot safely use their own judgment, and if an executor is removed simply because it is alleged that he cannot manage the whole of the administration of the estate, there are many executors that are appointed daily in this country who would have to be removed under the circumstances; therefore, the application for the removal of the executor will be refused. Then there is a further application that this executor be prevented from disposing of a certain business which belonged to the testator. In a case of this kind the executor must do his duty and deal with the assets of the estate in a proper manner, using his own judgment. It is quite true that there may be property of such a character belonging to the estate that in law the executor may not be at liberty to dispose of it, and there may even be property which the Court may prevent him from disposing of when it appears that there is nothing to be gained, and that it may be to the loss of the heirs, but here there is a business, and the question arises whether that business shall be continued. It is impossible for the Court to become a party to conducting a business which the executor may consider it better to dispose of in the interests of the estate. If the Court were now to grant an order that that business should be carried on it would be taking upon itself the responsibility of seeing that the business was properly carried on in the future, and it is impossible for the Court to do that. The executor thinks it will be advisable to cease carrying on that particular business, and he has taken advice, and the advice seems to agree with his opinion. The only question now is whether the applicant is likely to suffer any detriment by the conduct of the respondent in selling this property. The applicant can protect herself by securing the business if she wishes it carried on. If the applicant were the only party interested, then she would have the right to claim that she should be allowed to carry it on in her own interests, but she is only the usufructuary, and the executor has to protect the fidei commissary heirs. It is stated now that before the sale takes place, if it is still thought advisable on the tenders that come in not to carry on the business, the applicant will be communicated with, and she will be in a position to protect her own interests by taking over the business or making any other arrangement which she and the executor may then think fit to be made. The application must be refused, and, under the circumstances, it must be refused with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

BURGER V. COLYN. } 1907.
 } Feb. 15th.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff to have the defendant ordered to remove a certain kraal erected on the plaintiff's land, and for an interdict restraining the defendant from erecting a kraal on any portion of the land other than on that appointed by the plaintiff, and for £50 damages, with costs.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was a farmer of De Doorns, in the division of Worcester, and the defendant was a butcher residing on the same property. In May, 1902, the plaintiff sold to the defendant a certain portion of the farm, and it was agreed between the parties, in consideration of the sale the defendant should have certain privileges over a certain portion of the farm of the plaintiff, one being a kraal for his cattle. Transfer was passed in October, 1902. About November, 1905, the defendant began to construct a kraal on the plaintiff's land at the point marked "XX" on the sketch. There were two suggested positions for the kraal; the plaintiff said it should be at "X," and the defendant said it should be at "XX." The plaintiff objected to the construction of the kraal at that point, whereupon the defendant requested the plaintiff to point to another spot for the purpose of his kraal. The defendant did not demur to the point "X" pointed out by the plaintiff. Shortly afterwards he broke down the kraal and proceeded to erect one in spite of plaintiff's protest at "XX." Plaintiff contended that the defendant was bound according to the agreement to accept the point for the kraal at "X," and that he was not entitled to insist upon a passage to the main road over plaintiff's land.

The defendant in his plea said that at the time of the conclusion of the agreement there was in existence a kraal at the point marked "XX" on the plan. The plaintiff about the same day pointed out the stand or kraal to be used by the defendant in terms of the agreement. In 1902 the defendant let this kraal to T. D. Colyn, who used it until 1904, when he (Colyn), with the defendant's knowledge, partially destroyed the said kraal. In 1904 the defendant took possession of the kraal, and in 1905 he was compelled to accommodate certain live-stock, and thereafter he proceeded to complete the kraal at "XX." Defendant consented to the erection at "X" on condition that he had access to the road, and plaintiff agreed. In March, 1906, the defendant proceeded to erect a kraal at "X," and while there engaged the plaintiff repudiated the agreement, notwithstanding several demands made by the defendant. The defendant thereupon reconstructed the kraal at the point "XX." He denied the plaintiff had any right to point out a kraal at "X."

Mr. Russell appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers appeared for the defendant.

Evidence having been heard, and counsel heard in argument on the facts, Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff takes up the position that the defendant is a trespasser on a portion of his land, shown on the plan annexed to the declaration, and prays that he should be removed from that land. The defendant states that he entered into an agreement of sale whereby, amongst other things, the plaintiff granted him the right of a stand for his cattle on plaintiff's property, and he says that after that agreement was made the spot "XX" shown on the plan was assigned to him as the place where he was to erect his stand. Now the main question is whether that spot was actually agreed upon by both parties as the one upon which the servitude with reference to the stand should be exercised. This assignment is alleged to have taken place some little while before the surveyor came to survey the farm, which was towards the end of the year 1902. The defendant says on that occasion he asked the plaintiff what spot he would assign to him so as to settle that part of the agreement, and in answer he states that the plaintiff said he could use that spot then occupied by his brother. This is denied by plaintiff. The decision will depend upon the conclusion which the Court arrives at on the evidence as to what occurred at the interview, and that will settle the whole matter. There is a conflict here between the plaintiff and defendant on the question as to whose evidence should be accepted. In cases of this kind, the Court will always inquire upon whom the burden of proof lies, and then, if that question has been decided and the question of the facts remains doubtful, then the person upon whom the burden of proof lies must necessarily fail. In this case it is the desire of the defendant to establish a servitude over the property of the plaintiff, and, in my opinion, the burden of proof lies upon him to establish it as against the ownership of the plaintiff. If, as a result, the question remains doubtful whether the defendant or plaintiff has given the correct version of what took place a little while before the survey took place, then the defendant, in my opinion, must fail. It was stated in evidence that the kraal now in dispute is one that was constructed by defendant's brother and constructed in circumstances having no reference to the defendant himself. The defendant's brother states that he made a separate agreement with the plaintiff whereby he acquired special rights for himself, and at the time when he made the agreement he asked the plaintiff for a place to erect a kraal, and that it was in consequence of that agreement that the kraal came into existence. One thing is perfectly clear, that the defendant himself had nothing to do with the construction of the kraal, whether it was constructed in May, 1902, or before that. The defendant himself never took part in that construction. When the spot was selected, he had no interview with the plaintiff, and when the spot was taken possession of by his brother, it was not assigned to him as a spot to be used under the servitude. For some little while his brother occupied this spot after purchase, and he never troubled himself to inquire where he could make his kraal. The brother continued to use that kraal, and the defendant himself seems to have thought, notwithstanding that when he had an interview with Mr. Burger, that Mr. Burger would assign him another kraal. So up to that time that particular spot had not been settled in either plaintiff's, defendant's, or his brother's mind as the spot to be set aside for a kraal. Upon that point there is some corroboration of defendant's evidence, in the fact that the surveyor's attention was called to this kraal, and the surveyor actually, at the request of the plaintiff, gave some indication of the position thereof upon the plan. There may be something in that, but it is not conclusive. His Lordship (continuing) said he was not prepared to accept the evidence of the defendant and reject that of Mr. Burger and of the defendant's brother. The Court at present had not to decide what spot would satisfy the defendant. He (his lordship) might express the view that that spot which is sufficient to serve the purposes of the servitude, and one that was the least inconvenient to Mr. Burger, would comply with the agreement. That spot must be on plaintiff's land, and even if it abuts upon defendant's ground, it may satisfy the condition of the agreement.

Judgment was given for the plaintiff, with costs, under "A" of the declaration. Plaintiff was also allowed his personal expenses as a necessary witness.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice LAURENCE.]

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE of 1907.
VAN DER WALT. (Feb. 15th.

Mr. Pohl moved for an amendment of an order granted yesterday in the matter of the application of the trustee in the insolvent estate of Van der Walt for a commission to examine certain witnesses. Mr. Justice Maasdorp had appointed the Resident Magistrate of Hope Town as commissioner, and counsel now said that it would be more convenient for the witnesses generally if the Magistrate of Philip's Town were appointed commissioner, and he asked that the latter be substituted.

Laurence, J., said that the Registrar would mention the matter to Mr. Justice Maasdorp, and if he acquiesced the order would be amended as desired.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

WICHT V. HARRIS

Dr. Greer moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be superseded. Provisional order superseded.

CLARKE AND BORNE V. LEVI.

Mr. Lewis moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be discharged. Provisional order discharged.

HOFFMAN V. TRUSTEES GOOD HOPE FUNERAL ASSOCIATION.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds for £400 each, £27 3s. insurance premiums, bonds due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Mr. Close (for defendants) said that he did not oppose provisional sentence, but he had to apply for execution to be suspended, the association having petitioned the Court for a winding-up order.

Dr. Greer said that he should appear on behalf of one of the largest creditors and contributories to oppose the winding-up, and he should have to ask the Court to allow a postponement.

Provisional sentence granted, and property executable, execution to be suspended until the application for the winding-up of the respondent company is disposed of.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

PRINCE, VINCENT AND CO. of 1907.
V. DE BRUYN (Feb. 15th.

Mr. Howes moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £259 19s. 11d., balance of account for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae, and costs. Order granted.

BAWOO V. SHAMSODIEN.

Mr. Close moved for confirmation of a writ of arrest granted under Rule 8 on the 13th instant. Plaintiff said that defendant was indebted to him in two sums of £8 and £16, moneys lent and advanced on the 12th June, 1905, and the 27th September, 1905, respectively, for which no security had been given. The defendant was arrested when he was about to leave the Colony, and he had been released on a bail bond, but had not entered appearance. Counsel submitted that he was now entitled to formally apply for confirmation of the writ, defendant having entered into a bail bond.

Laurence, J., however, ruled that the merits of the case must be gone into.

Dr. Greer (for defendant) read an affidavit, in which his client admitted that he had intended to leave the Colony, but said that he was only going away for a holiday, and that he had arranged for his business in Woodstock to be continued in his absence. He denied that he was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £24 or any other amount.

Mr. Close having been heard in argument.

The case was ordered to stand over until Thursday next, plaintiff to file replying affidavits not later than Tuesday next, question of costs to stand over.

Subsequently the case was withdrawn by consent, each party to pay his own costs.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

ALIE V. MAKWENA.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute calling upon respondent to show cause why an order of ejectment should not be granted against him in respect of certain land at Uitenhage.

Rule absolute as prayed.

Ex parte LIQUIDATOR, SOUTH AFRICAN GENERAL WORKERS' UNION.

Dr. Greer moved, on the petition of the liquidator, for leave to sell certain articles on the premises occupied by the company. The sole assets of the company were cigarette machines, a motor, a quantity of cigarettes, and tables and benches, and, by reason of their remaining on the premises, further rent was accruing. The rent now owing was £119. Petitioner asked for power to sell the articles or deal with them in such manner as may seem to him meet. The return day of the rule placing the company under winding-up order has been fixed for a date in April.

Laurence, J., said that he could not grant such large powers on the present application, but he reserved leave to petitioner to apply to Mr. Justice Hopley, before whom the original application was heard. No order at present.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice LAURENCE.]

NOLTE BROS. V. KRAMER. { 1907.
Feb. 18th.
" 27th.

Sale and delivery—Repudiation—Acceptance.

The defendant sent an order to the plaintiffs for chaff to be delivered immediately on a railway truck at R. siding for conveyance to Pretoria. The plaintiffs agreed to execute the order, but delayed for five days in delivering the chaff in the truck and then informed the defendant that the chaff was being so delivered. The defendant in reply complained about the delay, and intimated that there would be unpleasantness between him and the real purchasers at Pretoria, but he did not repudiate the sale. The plaintiffs accordingly took no steps to stop the conveyance of the chaff to Pretoria. Seven days after the delivery the purchasers at Pretoria informed the defendant that they refused to accept the chaff, whereupon he also repudiated.

Held, that although the defendant might, on being informed of the delivery five days after the sale, have refused to accept the chaff, yet that, having allowed the chaff to be delivered on the truck and conveyed to Pretoria without definitely repudiating the sale, it was too late for him, after hearing from the purchasers at Pretoria, to repudiate, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover from him the price of the chaff.

This was an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Buchanan, sitting as a Divisional Court, in an action brought by appellants against defendants to recover a certain sum upon an order for the supply of chaff.

[For a full report of the case in the Court below, see 16 C.T.R., 819.]

Mr. Justice Buchanan's reasons for his judgment were as follows:

The plaintiffs and the defendant carry on different businesses as produce dealers, and in so doing take orders for the despatch of produce to persons in the Transvaal and elsewhere. The plaintiffs and defendant had had many dealings together before the one involved in this action, all of which seem to have been satisfactory, and which at the time of this dispute left a balance of £3 13s. 3d. in favour of plaintiffs. This amount forms the first item of the account sued upon. There is no dispute on this item, as defendant before action tendered payment, and now pleads the tender, and for this amount judgment was given for plaintiffs.

The dispute between the parties is as to the second item of the account, for £24 16s. 10d. for 330 bales of chaff, alleged to have been sold and delivered by plaintiffs to defendant on the 31st October last.

The circumstances attending the transaction between the parties is to be found recorded in the telegrams and letters put in. On the morning of the 26th October defendant in Cape Town telegraphed to plaintiffs at Somerset West respecting a truck-load of chaff ordered to be sent to Prieska: "Has chaff been despatched," and then added: "Can you forward another bogie immediately? Reply sharp. Will instruct." To which plaintiffs replied: "Forwarding chaff now. Can forward another bogie. Instruct to-day."

On the same morning defendant replied. "Forward bogie chaff Hirschowitz and Co., Pretoria. Very urgent." (This is the load of chaff in question in this suit.)

And in a letter written at once confirming the telegram he wrote: "Hoping to have advices of despatch at latest by Monday next."

These communications passed between defendant at Cape Town and plaintiffs at Somerset West.

Plaintiffs had a produce store at Rust Siding on the branch line to Moorreesburg, and on the same day one of the plaintiffs at Somerset West, who had received defendant's order, forwarded the same to another of the plaintiffs at Rust Siding. On the 27th October plaintiffs wrote to defendant: "Your order for a further bogie chaff will be attended to at once. We have already given our representative at Rust Siding instructions to forward on same sharp."

On the 28th defendant replied: "I trust that the order I gave you yesterday" [should have been day before]

"to Pretoria has been despatched." No answer was given by plaintiffs. On the 30th, in a letter to plaintiffs, defendant wrote: "I hope that you have forwarded the chaff to Hirschowitz and Co., Pretoria, as I have no further information from you in regard to its despatch." At the foot of this letter appears a pencil memo., stated to have been written by defendant's clerk, as follows: "If you cannot do the chaff please wire at once."

Up to this date the plaintiffs had no chaff on hand to fulfil the order, but on that day, which was Monday, one of the plaintiffs went to Moorreesburg to try and buy chaff, and on 31st October he bought a load from Stark and Co., which he loaded on a truck the same day. There was telegraphic communication with Moorreesburg, though not with Rust Siding. On the 31st October plaintiffs wrote from Somerset West: "We have just received telegraphic advice that Hirschowitz and Co.'s chaff is being loaded." This letter reached defendant on the 1st November, when he at once wrote: "I am very much disappointed to learn that the truck of chaff for Hirschowitz has not yet been despatched, as when I gave you the order I wished it to be sent off at once, seeing that the conditions were from Hirschowitz and Co. that the chaff was only to be forwarded if it would have immediate despatch. It is now several days since I gave the order and I am afraid that it will cause some unpleasantness between Hirschowitz and Co. and myself." The railway consignment note states that the chaff was loaded on the 31st, and was consigned by plaintiffs direct to Hirschowitz and Co., Pretoria. The consignment note is signed as received by plaintiffs on the 4th November, and was sent on to defendant. On the 7th November defendant telegraphed to plaintiffs: "Hirschowitz wires refuses acceptance chaff owing delay forwarding wire instructions sharp." Thereupon further correspondence ensued. It was not disputed that Hirschowitz and Co. were justified in refusing to accept the chaff, and the question was whether, under the circumstances, defendant should be compelled to pay for the same.

I held that defendant was justified in coming to the conclusion that his order had been executed at once, especially as no answer was sent to his repeated letters in which he assumed that the chaff had been despatched. There was nothing in the nature of an acceptance of delivery by defendant though I have little doubt that both plaintiffs and defendant had hopes that the chaff might be accepted by Hirschowitz and Co.

The plaintiffs' first telegram might be read as an intimation that they were in a position to despatch the chaff on the 26th, the day of order, and it was their duty, when they discovered they had no chaff to deliver, and had received the repeated communications from defendant, to have let defendant know the true state of affairs.

They did not do so, and it was only after they had loaded the chaff and consigned it to Pretoria that they informed defendant, who at once intimated that unpleasantness might result. I accordingly on this item of the account gave judgment for defendant with costs.

Mr. Burton was for appellants (Nolte Bros.); Dr. Greer was for respondent (R. Kramer).

Mr. Burton said that the plaintiffs, who were produce dealers at Somerset West and Moorreesburg, claimed £28 10s. on an account for goods sold and delivered. There was a tender of £3 odd, representing certain admitted items, and the dispute was narrowed down to a question of £24, which was the price of certain chaff that had been ordered by the defendant, who was a produce broker carrying on business in Cape Town. Defendant pleaded that on October 26, 1905, he instructed plaintiffs to forward immediately, as a very urgent order, certain chaff, as per item of the account to Messrs. Hirschovitz and Co., at Pretoria, in the Transvaal Colony. It was of the essence of the contract that the chaff should be forwarded forthwith, and plaintiffs so accepted the order. The chaff was not despatched from Rust Siding until November 2, 1905, and did not arrive at Pretoria till November 7, 1905. Hirschovitz and Co. thereupon refused to accept delivery of the chaff, by reason of the delay in despatching, and as a result, defendant likewise refused to accept delivery, and forthwith notified the same to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs, in their replication, said that the order was executed with all reasonable despatch. Counsel submitted that the despatch on the Tuesday was a reasonable despatch under the circumstances. The plaintiffs missed one possible train. Defendant did not cancel the order when it was brought to his notice that the chaff was being loaded on the Tuesday. It was only after Hirschovitz had declined to accept the chaff that the defendant cancelled the order. Plaintiffs had got nothing to do with Hirschovitz, the order was from defendant, and if he wanted to cancel the contract it was his clear duty to do so at once, and thus they might have stopped all this expense of the chaff going to Pretoria.

[Maasodorp, J.: When do you say there was acceptance of the chaff by the defendant?]

Mr. Burton: The acceptance was by defendant here in Cape Town, when he received word that they were loading the chaff. Defendant, in his evidence, said he would not have complained if Hirschovitz had not complained.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Does not the letter that defendant sent mean that he accepted conditionally?]

Mr. Burton submitted that it was a tacit acceptance. It would be straining language to say that the defendant's letter was an intimation to the plaintiff that he would only accept, knowing that they were loading up at Rust Siding, if Hirschovitz and Co. accepted. Although there was some delay, after the attitude defendant had adopted on the 1st November, he was not, in law, entitled to say that he did not accept the goods.

De Villiers, C.J., informed Dr. Greer that the only part of the case to which he need address himself was as to the construction of the defendant's letter of November 1, 1905, whether that was not a waiver on the part of the defendant of his right to insist upon immediate delivery?

Dr. Greer submitted that appellants knew that the order was to be despatched to Hirschovitz and Co., of Pretoria, and, therefore, the acceptance must be at Pretoria. He made it clear in his letter that the delay had been unduly great, it was not an acceptance on the part of the respondent of the late despatch made by the appellants in sending on the chaff, but it was an intimation to them that they knew this chaff was for Hirschovitz and Co., and the probability was that they would make trouble about it, and if they did make trouble it was their (appellants') risk.

Mr. Burton having been heard in reply,

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (February 27th).

De Villiers, C.J.: I quite agree with the learned Judge in the Court below, that the defendant was not bound to accept the 330 bales of chaff on the 31st October, 1905, which was the day on which the bales were loaded on to a truck of the Government Railways. It was only five days after the order for the chaff had been sent by the defendant to the plaintiffs, but the order made it perfectly clear that time was of the essence of the bargain. On the 26th October the defendant inquired from the plaintiffs by telegraph whether certain chaff ordered for Prieska had been despatched, adding the following: "Can you forward another bogie immediately; reply sharp; will instruct." The answer was: "Forwarding chaff now; can forward another bogie; instruct." Thereupon, on the 26th, the defendant telegraphed: "Forward bogie chaff Hirschowitz, Pretoria; very urgent," and on the same day confirmed this telegram by letter, adding that the order was very urgent, and pressing the hope "to have advices of despatch at the latest by Monday next." Although the defendant's telegrams were sent to Somerset West, the head office of the plaintiffs, he knew that the chaff would be despatched from De Rust Siding, from where trains ran on three days a week, namely, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays. The 26th of October was a Thursday, and if the plaintiffs had, immediately on receiving the order, telegraphed for a truck to Malmesbury, it would have been quite possible to load the bales of chaff on the truck in time for the train leaving on Saturday, the 28th. They had, on the 26th, undertaken to forward a bogie immediately, and if they could not despatch the chaff on the 28th, they ought at once to have informed the defendant to that effect. In fact, they loaded the chaff on Tuesday, the 31st, and on that day they wrote to the defendant as follows: "We have just received telegraphic advice that Hirschowitz and Co.'s chaff is being loaded." In my opinion, the defendant would have been justified, on receipt of this letter, in forthwith repudiating the sale, on the ground that there had been no immediate delivery of the chaff as agreed upon. Instead, however, of repudiating, the defendant, on the 1st of November, wrote to the plaintiffs as follows: "I am very much disappointed to learn that the truck of chaff for Hirschowitz has not yet been despatched, as when I gave you the order I wished it to be sent off at once, seeing that the conditions were from Hirschowitz and Co. that the chaff was only to be forwarded if it would have immediate despatch; it is now several days since I gave you the order, and I am afraid that it will cause some unpleasantness between Hirschowitz and Co. and myself." This letter does not amount to a repudiation, nor does it even amount to an intimation that, in case Hirschowitz and Co. should refuse acceptance, the defendant would also have to refuse. The delivery to the defendant took place as soon as the chaff had been loaded on the truck, and when he was informed that such delivery had taken place, it was his duty, if he wished to repudiate, to do so immediately in unequivocal terms. In stead of that, he grumbled about the delay, and expressed the fear that there would be some unpleasantness between himself and Hirschowitz and Co., but he left the plaintiffs under the impression that he accepted the chaff, notwithstanding the delay. The consequence was that the plaintiffs could take no steps to stop the chaff en route to the Transvaal. On the 7th of November the defendant telegraphed to the plaintiffs: "Hirschowitz wires refuses acceptance chaff, owing delay forwarding—wire instructions sharp." The plaintiffs replied by letter that Hirschowitz was bound to take delivery, and it was only on the 8th of November that the defendant repudiated the delivery on his own behalf, saying: "The chaff is now lying at Pretoria at your risk and expense." In my opinion there was a sale and delivery of the chaff to the defendant, and, although the defendant might have refused to accept delivery on the 31st, he waived any objection he might have had to the late delivery by his letter of the 1st of November. The defendant did not purchase the chaff as the agent of Hirschowitz, but on his own behalf, and when he failed to inform the plaintiffs by his letter of 1st November that he repudiated the sale on the ground of late delivery, the plaintiffs were justified in regarding his letter as a grumbling acceptance of the chaff. The learned judge seems to have considered that the intimation by the defendant to the plaintiffs that unpleasantness between him and Hirschowitz and Co. might result amounted to a refusal to accept the chaff, but I regret that I cannot so construe the letter. After the receipt of that letter the plaintiffs would not have been justified in treating the sale as cancelled or in stopping the chaff on its way to Pretoria. I am of opinion, therefore, that the appeal must be allowed and judgment entered for the plaintiffs, with costs in this Court and in the Court below.

On the applications of Mr. Burton (for appellant), the plaintiffs (the Noltes) were also declared necessary witnesses.

Laurence and Maasdorp, J.J., concurred.

[Appellants' Attorneys: Dempers and Van Ryneveld; Respondent's Attorneys: C. and A. Friedlander.]

ESTATE LANSBERG V. ESTATE { 1907.
SMIT AND ANOTHER. { Feb. 18th.
" 27th.

Land Beacons Act—Appointment of Commission to settle dispute—Informality—Waiver.

The appellant applied to have the proceedings of a Commission appointed by a Divisional Council to settle a boundary dispute between himself and the respondent set aside, on the ground that the Council had not, before making such appointment, appointed a surveyor required to do the preliminary work under the Land Beacons Act.

Held, that as the appellant had, with knowledge of the informality, taken part in the selection of the members of the Commission and had there only raised the single objection that the case ought to be tried in the Supreme Court, he had waived his right to take advantage of the informality.

This was an application to make absolute a certain rule nisi calling upon Pieter Gideon Smit, the estate of the late Alwyn Johannes Smit, the commission appointed by the Provisional Council of Clanwilliam, and the Divisional Council, through their secretary, to show cause why the proceedings of a certain commission appointed under the Land Beacons Act (No. 7, 1865) should not be set aside.

Applicants are Célius Leonardus E. Lansberg, Joseph Marco B. Lansberg, and Sophia J. Lansberg, the two former being sons of the late Jean Louis Lansberg, and executors testamentary in his estate, and the last-named being the surviving spouse of the late Mr. Lansberg. Four-sevenths undivided shares in the farm Ratelrug were registered in the name of the late Mr. Lansberg. During 1905 the owners of the farm Bovenberg Vallei, situate to the east of the farm Ratelrug, caused the said farm to be surveyed, and in the course of such survey a dispute arose as to the correctness of one of the beacons common to the two farms. The registered owners of Bovenberg Vallei were the present respondents, P. G. Smit, and the estate of the late Alwyn Johannes Smit. Surveyor Murray made the survey on behalf of the owners of Bovenberg Vallei. Surveyor H. M. Shaw was called in on behalf of the applicants. The two surveyors differed in their results. The owners of Bovenberg Vallei then proceeded under section 108 of Act 7, 1865, and petitioned the Divisional Council of Clanwilliam to appoint a commission to go into the question of the disputed boundary. At the outset Célius Lansberg took up the position that he would prefer to have the matter decided by the Supreme Court, but when the commission proceeded to work he took a certain part, though he had again protested against the commission. The applicants submitted that the requirements of section 94 of the Act were not complied with by the Divisional Council, inasmuch as no surveyor was sent to the farms to make the necessary re-survey and determine the true position of the beacon in dispute. They said that if the decision of the commission were to remain undisturbed the estate of the late J. L. Lansberg would suffer great and irreparable harm.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., for applicants; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Burton), for respondents.

Sir H. Juta said that applicants' case was that 26 years ago this farm was partitioned, that this piece was deducted, that there had been orange trees planted there for 26 years, that the line now decided upon cut off nearly all their water. All these things were not gone into before the commission because the unfortunate man (Célius Lansberg) had no witnesses, but the commission, as he said, put some questions, and he gave some evidence. The applicants' case had never been put before the commission. The policy of the Act was that an independent surveyor should be appointed to report before the commission was appointed.

Mr. Schreiner said that this objection about the appointment of an independent surveyor was not raised in the petition, or the supporting affidavit, filed in June, 1906, within the requisite three months. It was not until November, when Mr. Célius Lansberg made his affidavit that a word was said about the Commission not having appointed a surveyor, and any complaint was made that there had been an irregularity. Counsel contended that there had been an absolute waiver by the applicants in regard to the appointment of a third surveyor. The question between the two surveyors was as to the superposition of the diagram to indicate the one beacon or the other. The two surveyors were not in difference as to the data. One surveyor preferred one superposition, and the other preferred the other superposition, one saying that the beacon should be at "c," and the other that it should be at "d." The Commission and the surveyors did not consider it necessary to call in a third surveyor. Counsel called the Court's attention to the terms of the rule, which called upon respondents to show cause why the proceedings of the Commission, after the petition to the Council to appoint the Commission, should not be set aside. Respondents now appeared to meet an attempt to set aside the whole of the proceedings after a perfectly legitimate application, under section 108; and the only ground why applicants said those proceedings were to be set aside was the purely technical ground that there was nothing apparently on the face of the record to show why a third surveyor was not appointed. It was therefore, impossible, upon this application, to go into the merits. In further argument, counsel said that it was agreed between the surveyors that it was unnecessary to appoint a third surveyor. In regard to the partition, he pointed out that the respondents were not parties to that partition, and that the applicants might have been under a bona fide mistake as to their boundaries.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is it not imperative that the Divisional Council should send a surveyor?]

Mr. Schreiner submitted that it was not.

Sir H. Juta said that the finding of the Commission was that the beacon marked "b" on the chart, put in with the records was a well-ascertained one, and had for an uninterrupted period of 30 years been recognised by the parties to the dispute as the true and proper beacon. Counsel submitted that that finding was absolutely contrary to the facts.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Are you going into the merits?]

Sir H. Juta said that he was.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Had we not better decide the question of the irregularity first?]

Sir H. Juta said that he took objection to the proceedings of the Commission, both on the ground of the irregularity and of the merits. Dealing with the question of the irregularity, counsel submitted that his clients had not acquiesced in the proceedings of the Commission. It was significant that three of the Commissioners thought it was unnecessary to have a third surveyor. The point must, therefore, have been before them. He contended that it was obligatory that the Divisional Council should have sent a surveyor before the Commission was appointed. The Commissioners could not have appointed a surveyor. It would have been quite futile for the applicants to have objected before the Commission, because the Commission could not have remedied the defect. The appointment of a surveyor did not even rest with the Divisional Council. They could recommend a surveyor, but the actual appointment must be made by the Surveyor-General. Sir H. Juta proceeded to read from an affidavit by Surveyor Shaw to show that the reason why he had said he did not think it was necessary to have a third surveyor was because he thought the parties would come to an amicable settlement in view of a conversation which he had had with Mr. Smit.

De Villiers, C.J., raised the question as to whether the applicants when they took part in the appointment of the Commission knew that a certain preliminary requirement of the law had not been complied with, viz., that a third surveyor had not been appointed.

Sir H. Juta submitted that there was nothing on the record to show that the applicants were aware of the defect.

Mr. Schreiner submitted that the applicants must have had knowledge that a third surveyor had not been appointed, and that there had been a waiver.

De Villiers, C.J.: There can be no doubt that the Legislature contemplated, preliminary to the appointment of a commission for the purpose of a land beacon dispute, that a surveyor should be appointed by the Divisional Council. The duties of the surveyor seem to have been two-fold—first to endeavour to see whether he could bring the parties themselves to agree in regard to the boundaries, and, secondly, if he failed in this object, then to report to the Council the full nature of the dispute, very important functions which would greatly assist the commission subsequently in the performance of its duties. Then the Act provides that, after such a report by the surveyor to the Council, proceedings may be taken under the 36th, and subsequent sections of the Act. In the present case, it would appear that no such surveyor was appointed by the Divisional Council. In point of fact, surveyors appointed by the parties themselves had done the work which that surveyor would have had to do. When the Divisional Council was requested to take proceedings for the appointment of a commission, the appellant was present at the proceedings, and, not only was present, but took an active part in the selection of the commission, who were to be the judges of the case. If the appellant were aware at the time that the preliminary requirements of the Act had not been complied with, I am clearly of opinion that it is too late for him now, after having taken part in the selection of the commission, to turn round and say that he objects to be bound by their decision. Well, then, the next question is, was the appellant aware of the defect in the previous formalities? There was not much evidence on this point, but all the circumstances of the case lead me to conclude that the appellant had such knowledge. With that knowledge he ought to have objected to the appointment of the commission until the surveyor had been appointed by the Council; but the only objection raised by him was that the case ought to be tried in the Supreme Court. That is the sole objection raised. In my opinion, it is too late now to take this objection, especially when it is borne in mind that in the petition which has been filed in this very case this informality was not relied upon as one of the grounds for applying to set aside the proceedings. I am of opinion, therefore, that the preliminary objection cannot be sustained. The Court will now hear argument on the other question.

Maasdorp and Laurence, J.J., concurred.

Mr. Schreiner at once took objection that the Court could not now go into the merits of the case, and that there was not upon the rule any duty cast upon the respondent to show cause any further.

Sir H. Juta submitted that it was competent for the Court now to go into the merits. The Commission had gone entirely wrong. The line shown by Surveyor Murray went right through the applicants' orange grove, and yet the ground of the Commission's decision was that there had been occupation by respondents for an uninterrupted period of 30 years. For 26 years at least the applicants had been occupying the land that they claimed up to the beacon. Surveyor Murray's line would cut off six morgen out of a farm of 154 morgen, but those six morgen would mean that the water and the arable land would go.

De Villiers, C.J., said that their lordships would like to read the evidence very carefully before deciding to hear Mr. Schreiner. An intimation would be made to the parties if the Court desired to hear further argument.

Postea (February 27th).

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case the Court has already decided that the preliminary objection raised by the appellant could not be upheld. The preliminary objection was that the provisions of the Land Beacons Act had not been properly complied with, and that consequently the proceedings of the commission were null and void. The Court held that the objection to the alleged illegality, which consisted in a surveyor not having been appointed by the Divisional Council prior to the appointment of the commission, could not be entertained, seeing that the appellant had himself taken part in the appointment of the commission and had entirely waived his right to take the exception. The Court however, took time to consider whether upon the merits of the case the appellant has made out any claim why the proceedings should be set aside. In strictness, the only question that arises upon this appeal under ordinary circumstances would be whether the proceedings should be set aside on the ground of some informality or illegality, but the parties on both sides seem to have taken it that the rule nisi should include the right on the part of the appellant to enter into the merits of the dispute and to have the right of showing that the decision of the Commissioners was entirely against law and justice. Well, the Judges have carefully considered this evidence, and for myself I have read the whole of the evidence, and I am wholly unable to come to the conclusion that any injustice has been done to the applicant. He has himself to blame if all the evidence he could have brought forward has not been brought forward. He raised a preliminary objection to the Commission on the ground that the matter should be decided in the Supreme Court, and, having raised that objection, he thought he was justified in not taking part in any further proceedings. It appears, however, that the present respondents did bring forward their evidence, and the evidence of Surveyor Murray was taken. Surveyor Shaw's evidence was not taken, but his report was before the Commission. The Commission had a full opportunity of reading his report and comparing that report with the report of Murray. Moreover, the Commission had before them several witnesses of standing, and these witnesses gave very strong evidence as to the beacon "b," which was in dispute. They allege that for many years that beacon had been recognised as the beacon between the two farms. It is true that the appellant now states—and the Commission admitted that—the line does run through some cultivated lands of the appellant, but the appellant has not had these lands in cultivation for the full period of prescription. Without the full period of prescription, he could not claim title to that land, and, seeing that the Commission found upon good and substantial evidence that the beacon "b," which was the beacon claimed by the present respondents, had been for many years—certainly for the period of prescription—the recognised beacon between the two farms, I think that this Court would not be justified now in interfering with the decision. There is no doubt some hardship to the appellant, and it is because of that hardship that the Judges thought they should enter fully into the case, in order to see whether some relief could be given, but, after reading the evidence, I am satisfied that the Court would not now be doing any good to the applicant himself by ordering any fresh proceedings, because, if such further proceedings are taken, they would have only one result, and that would be to show that the respondents and not the applicant are in the right as to the boundaries of the farm. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the application should be refused, with costs.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for respondents), said (in answer to the Court) that Surveyor Shaw was called, and gave evidence before the Commission.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That makes it still stronger, because if Shaw had been before the Commission, then the most important witness for the applicant was heard.]

Laurence, J., in concurring, said he had thought that it would be well if the Court were to appoint a surveyor to go to the farm and report to the Commission, but he quite recognised what had been said by the Chief Justice as to the Commission having gone on very strong evidence, and it seemed to him, after very careful consideration of the evidence, there was no strong probability of the Commission arriving at any modified decision.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

Rule nisi discharged, with costs.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn; Respondents' Attorney: G. Trollip.]

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

VAN ZYL AND ANOTHER V. { 1907.
GRAAFF. { Feb. 18th.

Private prosecution—Gross irregularity—Review—190th Rule of Court—Ordinance 40 of 1828, Secs. 10 and 11—Act 15 of 1864, Sec. 5.

Applicants having been arrested on a certain criminal charge, the Magistrate took a preliminary examination and sent the papers to the Solicitor-General, who refused to prosecute and certified to that effect. The complainant thereupon caused criminal summons to be issued out of the Magistrate's Court: the Magistrate proceeded to try the case summarily and convicted and sentenced the accused. The private prosecutor had not obtained leave to prosecute from a judge of either a Superior Court or a Circuit Court in terms of Sec. 5 of Act 15 of 1864 and Secs. 10 and 11 of Ordinance 40 of 1828.

Held, that the trial in the R.M. Court was irregular, the prosecutor not having obtained the necessary leave to prosecute, and that the proceedings must be set aside.

This was an application for review on a summons from the Resident Magistrate for the division of Wodehouse, sitting at Dordrecht. The applicants, Jacobus Francois P. van Zyl and Matches Quanda, were charged with assault with intent on one Nathan Graaff, of Dordrecht. A preparatory examination was held on November 6, 1906. After the preparatory examination had been concluded the papers were sent in the ordinary way to the Solicitor-General, and on November 27 he stated that he declined to prosecute, and the accused were both discharged. On December 3 the applicants were again summoned on a private prosecution instituted by Nathan Graaff before the Magistrate. To these proceedings the applicants took an exception, and upon that and upon the whole proceedings they contended that they were null and void, ab initio. Both were convicted and fined in £5 ls., or, in the alternative, 30 days' imprisonment. Now it came up under the 190th Rule of Court, under the provisions of the Ordinance for irregularity, the contention being that the Magistrate should never have issued the summons or held the proceedings at all.

Mr. Moltano for applicants; Mr. Alexander for respondent.

Counsel took the initial stage of review on account of the gross irregularity of the whole proceedings, and if that point was not upheld then the applicants appealed on the facts. The charge against the applicants was that they wrongfully and unlawfully assaulted the respondent, Nathan Graaff, a tailor, of Dordrecht, by striking him several blows on the head and body. Counsel said no leave had been obtained, as required by section 5 of Act 15 of 1864, to issue the process. He also cited sections 10 and 11 of the Ordinance 40 of 1828, and contended where there had once been a public prosecution and where it had been carried to the completion of a preliminary examination, if the respondent was dissatisfied with the decision, he had a course open to him to go to a Judge and get an order allowing the prosecution to go on, or he could take a civil action for damages in the ordinary way.

Mr. Alexander submitted if the applicants were to succeed at all it must be on review, as they had not given statutory notice in regard to appeal. If a Magistrate made a mistake in law it did not necessarily constitute a gross irregularity. Section 1 of Act 15 of 1864 would repeal "indictment" so far as making it refer in section 5 to Magistrate Court proceedings. The whole point would be what was the meaning of "indictment," as indicated by the context? What it meant in the previous Act would not affect the question very much. The "indictment" had a different meaning in Act 3 of 1861, because that is provided for in section 1 of 1864. He submitted under the Ordinance 8 of 1852 the Attorney-General may intervene in summary proceedings at any time in order that a preparatory examination might be taken. From section 11 of Ordinance 40 of 1828 it would be found that it did not deal with the further prosecution at all. It simply said when a private party intended to prosecute and keep another party in gaol, then application could be made in the Supreme Court or Circuit Court. There was no such application here to keep the men in gaol. Counsel submitted it was clear that the trial should proceed, and that his lordship should hear the record to see if there were any grounds of appeal.

Hopley, J.: In this case the present applicants were arrested on the 6th November, and a preparatory examination began against them on a charge of assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm on Nathan Graaff. The Magistrate held the preparatory examination on the 6th November, and on the 7th November committed them for trial in the ordinary way. The papers were sent in due course to the Solicitor-General at Graham's Town, who on the 14th November granted his certificate that he declined to prosecute these people. Thereupon on the 29th November a summons was issued out of the Resident Magistrate's Court, who had held the preparatory examination, summoning these same people at the instance of the private prosecutor, the man who was alleged to have been assaulted, and the Magistrate thereupon proceeded to try the case summarily. Before the then accused pleaded, their attorney took the exception "that it was not a competent course for this man to sue on the ground that they had been committed for trial by this Court, for the very crime or offence alleged in the indictment now before the Court, and had upon such commitment been liberated or discharged by the Solicitor-General, and that no leave of the Supreme Court, Eastern Districts Court, or Circuit Court, or some judge thereof, as required by section 5 of Act 15 of 1864 had been obtained for suing out the process for summoning the defendants to answer the present indictment at the suit of the private prosecutor, Nathan Graaff." The Magistrate overruled that exception, proceeded with the trial, and found the two prisoners guilty, and fined them £5 1s. each, and it is from such finding—not so much from the finding as upon an allegation of irregularity—that the present application is brought, which, in so far as I have to deal with it, is under the 190th rule of Court, on the ground that the Magistrate was guilty of a gross irregularity in hearing this matter at all, in face of the terms of the section quoted. Now, the rights of private prosecutors are fully laid down in the various Ordinances and Acts of Parliament, and they have sometimes—not very frequently—been acted upon in this country. Apparently as far as summary proceedings are concerned, and having regard to the terms of the Magistrate's Court Act, a private prosecutor may prosecute summarily in certain cases, and that Act was in existence in 1861, when the Criminal Law Amendment Act was passed. Act 3 of 1861 does not deal specifically with private prosecutions, but it does contain a section which defines the word "indictment": "In the construction of this Act the word 'indictment' shall be understood to include any charge or complaint in any court of the Resident Magistrate, or in any other court, and also any plea, replication, or other pleading." That shows, at all events, that the word "indictment" is taken in an Act of Parliament dealing specially with criminal proceedings in the widest sense, and is not confined to any one Court, or the higher Courts in this country. In fact, I have always taken these complaint summonses in the Magistrate's court to be indictments in the courts in which they are presented. Now, after the Act of 1861 there came the Act of 1864, dealing specifically with this Act of 1861, and generally with the criminal law, and the 5th section is material in the present case. After saying that no defendant shall be tried in the Supreme Court or any Circuit Court for any crime or offence unless such defendant shall have been previously committed for trial by some competent Court or Magistrate, for or in respect of the crime or offence charged in such indictment; it goes on to say: "And in case any defendant after having been so committed for trial shall, if he be again liberated by order of the Attorney-General, no process for summoning such defendant to answer any indictment at the suit of any private prosecutor shall be sued out without the leave of the Supreme Court, or some Circuit Court, or some Judge thereof for that purpose first had and obtained." This seems to me not to apply only to the superior Courts, but to be so widely and generally laid down as to apply to any procedure against the same party, on the same charge, in any court whatsoever, and the reason it seems to me is perfectly clear. It is intended to protect the subject from harassing prosecution at the hands of people who might institute spiteful prosecutions. A man has an individual arrested, the Magistrate inquires into the case, commits him for trial, and sends the papers to the Attorney-General. The Attorney-General, or his deputy, looks carefully into the matter, and having come to the conclusion that he will not prosecute the individual for the particular crime it seems to me that this all means that the individual is free from prosecution under that particular charge unless the prosecutor comes before some higher Court, or some judge thereof, and shows good cause why the proceedings should be re-opened, and the private prosecutor has the right to prosecute, I think the words are strong enough to include prosecution in an inferior court if the Attorney-General has refused to prosecute, and in this case the Solicitor-General, having refused to prosecute the present applicants, it was an irregularity in the face of the terms of this section for the Magistrate to allow summons to issue out of his court, and an irregularity for him to try the case even after the terms of this Act had been brought to his notice. It is said it was only a mistake of law, and, therefore, not a gross irregularity, but where the Legislature lays down that a Magistrate shall not do a certain thing, and he proceeds to do it, it seems to me this is an irregularity as contemplated by the section. The proceedings are, therefore, set aside from the commencement of the private prosecution, with costs in this court, and costs in the court below.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Herold and Gie; Respondent's Attorneys: Faure, Van Eyk and Moore.]

GROENEWALD V. NEWMARK.

Civil imprisonment—"Means"—
Act 8 of 1879, Sec. 6.

Mr. Louwrens for the appellant, said he understood the respondent was not opposing. A rule nisi had been granted on February 6th calling on the respondent to show cause why the applicant should not be allowed to appeal in forma pauperis against a decree of civil imprisonment on an unsatisfied judgment for £106 3s. 10d., granted by the Resident Magistrate of Bredasdorp. The evidence of the defendant showed that he earned nothing, and was supported by his sister. The Magistrate granted the decree, and stayed execution pending payment of monthly instalments of 7s. 6d. In his reasons he said the only parties before him were the defendant, himself, and his brother-in-law, and he was by no means satisfied that the defendant was speaking the truth, or that he could not obtain work. The defendant had appeared before him on several occasions, and he was known to be a person who relied upon others for support. He was physically able to obtain a livelihood. Counsel pointed out that the evidence on the record was to the effect that the defendant had no means or property whatever. The terms of the Act of 1879 had been complied with, and the Magistrate was bound, on that evidence, not to have granted a decree. It was not within his right to have granted the decree.

Hopley, J.: The Act 8, of 1879, section 6, enacts that "no writ of civil imprisonment for non-payment, or non-satisfaction, of any judgment, or decree, shall be granted or issued by the Supreme or any other Court of this colony, in cases in which the defendant, or any other party against whom such writ of civil imprisonment is sought to be issued, shall prove to the satisfaction of the Court—to which such application is made—that such defendant, or other party as aforesaid, has not property or means sufficient to satisfy in whole, or in part, the said judgment or decree." In the present instance, Newmark sued the appellant Groenewald to show why he should not be civilly imprisoned for debt owing to Newmark. Upon a return of nulla bona by the officer of the Court, the defendant, however, appeared to show cause, and did produce evidence that he came within the terms of this section of the Act, that he had no property of any sort, nor means, to satisfy in whole, or in part, the said judgment. In this case there is no conflict of evidence in which the Magistrate could have come to a decision one way or the other for all the evidence tendered in the matter, namely, the evidence of the defendant himself, and of his brother-in-law, is in one direction only, namely, that the defendant had absolutely no means. He was an insolvent, and some debts were incurred even after his insolvency. He had never been rehabilitated, and he had no farm stock or property of any sort. He seems to have been sponging upon his sister for a livelihood. The Magistrate does not seem to think there was any property of this man's hidden away—or that he was concealing anything—but he seems to have held that the defendant, even if he had no property, might find the means wherewith to satisfy the judgment. In other words, he holds that the man, being still an able-bodied person, ought to be able to get work, and be able to pay something. The Magistrate has travelled outside the evidence given before him in this matter to other facts, that he seems to know from other proceedings, things which I cannot take into consideration, and which it was not proper for the Magistrate to take into consideration. He seems to think if this man set about it vigorously he could get something of a living. A good deal of what he says in his reasons for his judgment would be very useful to convict this man of being a vagrant, with not having any means of livelihood, and of being an idle person, going about without any visible means of subsistence. Because the man is an idle man, and relies on whom he can sponge, it does not follow he has any means to satisfy this judgment, and by "means," I take it, present available means, and not potential means, which might possibly be earned if the defendant was lucky enough to obtain employment. If such construction could be put upon the Act, it seems to me that with any person out of employment, it might very well mean that the order at present might take away from him the only chance of his getting employment, because if he was not fortunate to get the 7s. 6d. at the end of the first month, if he does not get immediate employment, then he would be at once imprisoned, and all potential means would vanish, because his body would be incarcerated, and he would not be able to apply for work. It seems to me that the Magistrate has placed a wrong construction on the word "means." If the man had been earning money in employment, the Magistrate might have made an order giving some of his wages to his creditor. It seems to me that the order appealed from must be set aside, with costs, and costs in the Court below.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ESTATE OF ABRAMS V. INDUSTRIAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF SOUTH AFRICA, LTD. 1907. Feb. 19th.

Insurance—Forfeiture of policy.

This was an action in which the plaintiff claimed the amount of a certain insurance policy on the life of the late John Abrams. Plaintiff sued as the executrix in the estate.

The declaration set forth that the plaintiff was a widow residing at Cape Town, and sued in her capacity as executrix dative in the estate of her deceased son, John Abrams. In 1894, John Abrams effected a policy of insurance on his life for £45, for a premium of 9d. a week, it being an undertaking that the defendant's agents should call for the premiums. In April, 1906, Abrams was engaged to act as a transport driver in German West Africa for six months, and it was then agreed that the premiums falling due during Abrams's absence should be suspended until his return. Abrams died in German West Africa on July 5, 1906, but the defendant company had refused to pay the amount of the policy, though the arrears of premiums had been tendered.

The defendant company, in their plea, stated that one of the conditions of the policy was that the assured should not become employed as a soldier without the sanction of the directors endorsed on the policy. They denied that there was any undertaking that the premiums should be collected at the insured's place of residence. Abrams, in April, 1906, became a soldier, or otherwise entered into the service of the German military authorities while active military operations were in progress. They denied that any arrangement was made to defer payment, and said that if their agent gave such undertaking he was acting, to the knowledge of the plaintiff, wholly outside the scope of his authority. The defendant company further stated that there was an arrangement to suspend the policy for one year on condition that if Abrahams returned to the Colony before the expiration of that period he should revive the policy, but that if he died during his absence the policy should become null and void. Defendants denied knowledge of Abrams's death, and put plaintiff to proof thereof.

Mr. Lewis was for the plaintiff; Mr. Struben was for the defendant.

John M. Commaille, clerk in the Master's office, produced letters of administration and the death notice, given in the estate of John Abrams.

Baron Von Humboldt, Consul-General for Germany, deposed to having given a certificate of the death of John Abrams, who died of inflammation of the lungs at Windhoek on July 5 last. Witness received official advice of Abrams's death. Abrams was a transport driver. His wages began on April 9. The wages due had been paid to the Master.

Cross-examined: It very rarely happened that a transport driver was shot. It had happened.

Wilcox Wilkens, recruiting agent for the German authorities at Cape Town, deposed to having engaged a man named Abrams as a transport driver for three or six months.

Georgina Meyer, the plaintiff, said that Abrams was her son by her first marriage. She was the executrix in the estate. The witness deposed as to insuring her son's life in 1894 for £45. The payment to be made was 9d. a week. The collector was to call, and did call, for the payments. She paid the premiums from 1894 up to May 9, 1906. Last April her son signed to go to German West Africa. He left on Easter Monday. She saw him go away in a boat. Witness told the collector, Mr. Wasserfall, that her son was going to Swakopmund, and the latter said he would report it to the office. He took the money for four weeks after John had gone. On May 7 the inspector (Mr. Moore) came, and said that the office had said it was all right, that in six months she was to come to the office and report whether John had returned, and that the six months' premiums on the policy would be paid for by the 12 years' interest on the policy. Mr. Moore said that if John went as a soldier £10 would have to be deducted from the amount of the policy. Witness said he had gone as a transport driver. Subsequently witness paid premiums in respect of other members of the family—the agents came to collect these.

Corroborative evidence was given by a daughter of the plaintiff, and her husband, who said they interviewed the manager of the company, who said they would only get a few pounds, as Abrams might have been shot.

Maasdorp, J., said there was no proof of death.

Mr. Struben said that, if necessary, he would admit the death, in order to get a declaration from the Court as to what this contract was. There were other cases depending on this, and the defendant company wished to have the Court's decision.

Mr. Lewis closed this case.

Chas. Wm. Corlett, manager of the defendant company, said it was decided to suspend the policy during Abrams's absence from Cape Town for a period limited to twelve months, renewable on his return. A minute was made in the books of the company accordingly. There was a record that Abrams's mother had been advised.

Cross-examined: Witness's contention was that anyone in the employ of the German Government at the front was a soldier. He was satisfied this was so from the regulations.

Charles Moore, inspector in the employ of the company, said he told Mrs. Meyer that the policy would be suspended for twelve months, and that if the assured returned before that time, he could renew it. That was perfectly understood.

Herman Wasserfall, a former agent of the company (called by the Court) said that Mrs. Meyer informed him early in April of the fact that her son had gone to German South-west Africa. He had instructions from Mr. Corlett to convey to Mrs. Meyer that her son would be allowed to proceed to German West Africa, on condition that there would be a 25 per cent. increase of the premiums, or that there would be a reduction of £9 in the policy amount. He did not tell Mrs. Meyer that the premiums while Abrams was away would be covered by the interest and bonus on past premiums. He conveyed Mr. Corlett's statement to Mrs. Meyer.

Maasdorp, J., said that this evidence introduced an entirely new point.

Mrs. Meyer (recalled) denied that Mr. Wasserfall told her she would have to pay extra in premiums.

Mr. Corlett (recalled) said he had no recollection of what Mr. Wasserfall said had happened. They had been in the habit of increasing the premiums or reducing the amount of the policy, and Mr. Wasserfall had either confused this case with previous ones, or he had acted entirely on his own authority.

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff in this case is the executrix dative in the estate of her son John Abrams, and she claims from the defendant insurance company the amount of a policy effected on the life of the deceased. The deceased man insured his life with the defendant company for the sum of £45, and the premiums payable weekly amounted to 9d. One of the conditions of the policy is that it shall become absolutely void, and all premiums paid thereon be forfeited to the defendant company, and absolutely retained by them, if default shall be made in the payment of the premiums. It appears that this policy was effected on the 29th of October, 1894, and the premiums were regularly paid every week until the 7th of May, 1906. The assured died on the 15th July. If the default in payment is not excused or justified on good grounds, then the policy has become void, and nothing can be recovered by the executrix from the company. The question therefore arises: was there any agreement arrived at between the interested parties which altered the condition as to the weekly payment of the premiums? Referring to the evidence, his lordship said there were very important documents which corroborated the evidence of the defendants, and there was no corroboration of a similar kind of the evidence of the plaintiff. The documents put in, written by different persons, supported the contention of the defendants that an agreement was entered into whereby the defendant company refused to be responsible at all for the amount of the policy during the absence of John Abrams. If neither of the agreements set up was absolutely established, then the plaintiff must fail, because the burden was upon the plaintiff to prove that an agreement was arrived at by which she was excused by the company from the payment of the premiums during the interval of John Abrams's absence. The impression on his (the learned judge's) mind was that no payments were made because the agreement as proposed by the Board of the defendant company was accepted by the plaintiff. The plaintiff's case was, to his mind, improbable. On the whole, he came to the conclusion that the agreement set up by the plaintiff had not been proved, that the assured failed to pay the premiums as they became due, and that, under the conditions of the policy, the policy was rendered void, unless it was kept alive by the condition now set up by the defendant company. Judgment would therefore be for the defendants, with costs.

[Plaintiff's attorney: C. Brady. Defendants' attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton.]

Dr. Rainsford: Our affidavit says that the costs have reached that amount.

Mr. Buchanan: It includes survey fees and everything.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How could a transfer cost that sum? I want to get to the bottom of this. Surely the most complicated estate could not have cost that money? How could it have run up to such a figure?]

Mr. Buchanan—It seems that the journey from Lady Grey to this farm occupies three days.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I see he has charged for that in the appraisalment—£10 3s. 6d. Does he charge in addition for travelling as an attorney?]

Mr. Buchanan: On the same day, my lord? He may have gone out to the farm on another occasion. The appraisalment was made for the purpose of the transfer. The surveyor would go out for the purpose of surveying, and plaintiff would probably go out with the surveyor to assist him.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I think attorney's accounts should be taxed and made perfectly clear. The charges are enormous.]

Mr. Buchanan said that defendant was given a very full explanation of the various items in the plaintiff's bill, and it was not until he had given a further promissory note that he sought legal advice.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Have the other parties paid the full amount?]

Mr. Buchanan: One has paid; the other has not. Counsel submitted that provisional sentence should be given upon the promissory note, and that the defendant should, if so advised, afterwards go into the principal case.

Dr. Rainsford (in answer to the Court) said that he did not know how much the defendant said he owed. He did not think that the question of precise indebtedness had been gone into.

De Villiers, C.J., suggested that the matter should stand over for two days, and that in the meantime the defendant should go into the account and consider what amount he admitted his liability for. In the meantime any of the charges in the plaintiff's account subject to taxation must be taxed. The case could be mentioned again on Thursday.

Dr. Rainsford then raised the question as to whether the case was res judicata.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was not the Magistrate's judgment equivalent to absolute from the instance?]

Dr. Rainsford said that the terms of the judgment were "case dismissed with costs."

De Villiers, C.J.: I do not see how it could have meant anything else than absolute from the instance, and, if that is so, then of course it is open to the plaintiff to re-open the case, though if he had reopened it in the Court where the case was originally tried other considerations might have arisen. That is one of the reasons why I am not prepared at once to give provisional sentence. The case will be postponed, and in the meantime the defendant should consider what amounts he admits to be owing, and the plaintiff must see to it that any of these charges appearing in the account which are subject to taxation shall be properly taxed. The case will stand over until Friday.

Postea (February 22nd).

Further affidavits having been read, and a communication from the plaintiff refusing a tender of £60 from the defendant, counsel moved for provisional sentence for the full amount.

Dr. Rainsford having been heard in reply on the different items, some of which he contended were unauthorised expenditure, and others excessive,

De Villiers, C.J., said an attorney of the Supreme Court stood in a peculiarly confidential position to his client. If a client trusted an attorney he would naturally sign any document which was placed before him for signature by such an attorney. He was not, however, prepared to accept the position that merely because the defendant in the present case gave a promissory note for £90 to the plaintiff, who was his confidential attorney, that the Court would be bound to accept that as conclusive proof that that amount was due and owing by him. If there had been any clearly taxable items on this amount of £90, he should certainly have directed that these items should be fully taxed in a proper manner, but it did not appear that any proceedings took the form of judicial proceedings. He understood it had not been the practice in such cases to have a taxation, although he considered it would be well worth considering whether a taxation of costs should not also be applied to such cases. On the face of it, he did not see how the item in connection with the survey could be interfered with. Of course, if provisional sentence were granted, it would still be competent for the defendant to go into the principal case, and have this matter fully discussed. The initial mistake made by the plaintiff in the present case was made by him in the course of the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court. It was an extraordinary position for the plaintiff's agent to take up to take exception to the jurisdiction of the Court after the defendant had given his evidence in support of his plea. The plaintiff might have sued the defendant in a superior court, and in that case his charges would have been inquired into by the superior court. But he chose to sue the defendant in a Magistrate's Court, and the Magistrate very properly refused provisional judgment, with costs, and dismissed the case, with costs. Now the question had been raised as to what was meant by the case being dismissed with costs, and he considered it ought to be treated as absolute from the instance. Thereupon the plaintiff brought an action in this court, and it would have been far better in the first instance if the plaintiff had brought his action in a superior court. At all events, no such exception would have been listened to for one single moment. Then the mistake made by the defendant in this court was that he did not himself prepare any account, so as to show the amount due by him. It was true, as long as the plaintiff and defendant were dealing with each other in a confidential position, the defendant was not in a position to discover what amount was due to him. When he gave the matter into the hands of his own attorney, his lordship thought they had ample time to prepare some counter account, to show what they admit to be due and owing to the plaintiff. There had been a tender of £60, but there had been no explanation of how that amount was arrived at. Among the objections raised, he could not find any tangible objection, except the objection to the appraisal, which, upon the face of the account, was £9 15s., which was charged against the defendant alone, and there was no explanation as to why that was done. He could hardly imagine that the plaintiff made two other appraisements, and went to the farm for the purpose of two other lots. In his opinion, only one-third of that should be charged as against the defendant. If this view was wrong, it was still open to the plaintiff to go into the principal case, and claim the whole amount. In regard to the Divisional Council rates, here was the cheque for the amount of rates, £6 0s. 2d. It was incredible that three cheques would have been given for each rate, and only one-third of this would be charged to the defendant. There would be provisional sentence for £90, minus £8 6s. 8d., with costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: P. A. M. Cloete. Defendant's Attorneys: Herold and Gie.]

FOSTER V. BEELDERS.

Mr. Van der Byl moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £575, with interest from July 1, 1905, less £2 15s. paid on account; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE EATON V. VISSER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest from July 1, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

S.A. PRODUCE, WINE AND } 1907.
BRANDY CO. V. MOORE. } Feb. 19th.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £115 15s., goods sold and delivered, and Excise duty paid by plaintiffs on behalf of defendant, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

MUZOYI V. MUZOYI.

This was an action brought by a native residing at the Ndabeni Location against his wife Lydia, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce.

Mr. Howes was for plaintiff (Harper John Muzoyi); defendant did not appear.

The parties were married at the Wesleyan Church, Healdtown, in the division of Fort Beaufort, in 1882. Plaintiff alleged that his wife had refused to join him, although he had requested her to do so. She remained in the Transkei.

Decree of restitution granted; defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 1st April, failing which, to show cause on the 15th April.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

HAASBROEK V. HAASBROEK. } 1907.
Feb. 19th.

This was an application to have a certain award of arbitrators a Rule of Court, costs to be divided between applicant and respondent in equal proportions.

Mr. Benjamin was for applicant; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for respondent, Johannes Jacobus Russouw.

The arbitration related to the subdivision of the farm Op de Tradouw, in the division of Swellendam. Respondent, who is interested to the extent of one-ninth, objected to the award, on the ground that the division of the arable land was inequitable, and that the division of the water was also unjust, inasmuch as no provision was made for him to get the water allotted to him unless he trespassed on the property of Hermanus Haasbroek, and there was no right of servitude reserved. Respondent also attached to his affidavit a power of attorney made by P. G. Haasbroek and R. G. Haasbroek, which was the foundation of the arbitration proceedings, and he took up the position that, the old people having died, the award was no longer binding. It was intended to be a division during their lifetime, and the award had now practically lapsed.

Mr. Buchanan said that his client had got transfer of his undivided share of the property under the will, and not as per the award.

Mr. Benjamin said that all the parties had treated this award as if it were an agreement to partition the property, not merely during the lifetime of the old people, but also afterwards. The point that the power only applied to the lifetime of the old people was raised for the first time by his learned friend. The parties had hitherto acquiesced in the partition laid down in the award of the arbitrators.

Mr. Buchanan argued that the partition had been looked upon by the applicants themselves as one that was available only during the lifetime of the old people. When the testators died the children were given transfer according to the will. Counsel also discussed the question of the water rights of respondent as set out in the award. Furthermore, he argued that the pasture land was divided in such a vague way that it was not a division at all.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that it was quite clear from the affidavits that had been filed that the sub-division was a fair one.

De Villiers, C.J.: It seems to me that this was a family arrangement made during the lifetime of old Haasbroek and his wife. I am satisfied that all parties understood that this arrangement was made not only to remain in effect during the lifetime of the old people, but also to have effect after their death. It is true that the power of attorney might be read as if it is to be confined to their lifetime, but if the power of attorney is read by the light of the will, then I take it that the two together show what was intended by the old people. Then we have the fact that no objection is raised after the death of the old people to the sub-division made by the arbitrators, except the petition that it was unfair, but no objection was raised that such an award could only remain during the lifetime of old Haasbroek. Clearly, therefore, the respondent himself understood that it was a family arrangement, which was to be binding upon all parties. The next question is as to this sub-division, whether it is fair or not. Well, if a case had been made out of such gross injustice, as would in itself have proved partiality on the part of the arbitrators, possibly a case for interference might have been made out, but the Court has repeatedly said that, short of such proof as would amount to a want of bona fides on the part of the arbitrators, the Court would not interfere in altering or correcting the award. In the present case a point is made as to water—the difficulty of access to the river, and such matters—but it does not appear to me that the objection is of so serious a nature as to justify the Court now in setting aside this arrangement. In the absence of clear proof of partiality, I am not prepared to interfere with the decision of the arbitrators. The Court will, therefore, order that the award be made a Rule of Court as prayed, each party to pay half the costs incurred.

KRUGER V. MARX.

Mr. Close moved for the removal of this case, by consent, to the ensuing Circuit Court, to be held at Burghersdorp.

Case removed accordingly.

UNITED TOBACCO COMPANIES (SOUTH), LTD. V. DAIKOFSKY.

This was an application calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not be interdicted from selling certain cigarettes described as the "Springbok cigarette," in contravention of the applicants' trade mark.

Mr. Gardiner was for applicants; respondent appeared in person.

Mr. Gardiner read an affidavit by Mr. Palethorpe, one of the directors of the applicant company, stating that they had registered the word "Springbok" as the trade mark of tobaccos which they manufactured, and it had come to their notice that respondent was manufacturing and selling cigarettes described as the "Springbok cigarette," and thus infringing their registered trade mark.

Respondent said that in October last he began to manufacture the "Springbok cigarette," i.e., earlier than the applicants claimed to have registered the mark. He was a poor man, and had been unable to take out patent rights. He had not seen a notice by the applicants of their intention to register the mark. Respondent produced a sample packet of his cigarettes bearing the word "Springbok," and said that he would be able to produce a printer to show that he had labels printed in October last bearing this mark.

De Villiers, C.J., ordered the case to stand over until to-morrow (Wednesday), to enable the applicants to produce replying affidavits and the respondent to lead evidence.

Postea (February 20th).

Respondent (in answer to the Court) said that he instructed the printer to print the labels bearing the words, "Springbok cigarettes," in December last. The label was first printed about the middle of January, and it was about the middle of January when the cigarettes were sent out in packets labelled "Springbok cigarettes." He had a conversation in October last with a printer about printing the labels.

Mr. Gardiner said that the applicants gave notice in the "Government Gazette" in November of their intention to apply to have the trade-mark registered. The mark was registered on the 21st January.

Max Syrkin, printer, said that respondent gave him an order to print the labels in the middle of December.

Cross-examined: The printer's block was delivered on or about the 16th January, and a number of labels were printed on the same day.

Mr. Gardiner said it was clear that there was no user of the mark before the time within which opposition must be made to the application for registration. He read an affidavit by a representative of the applicant company, who said that on the 18th February respondent called at their offices and offered to cease selling the cigarettes manufactured by him if they would compensate him. He had more than once offered to destroy the cigarettes if they would compensate him. Definite instructions were given by the company on the 2nd November to take steps to have the mark registered, and public notice was given on the 16th November.

Respondent proposed to use the rest of the labels and to consent to an order.

Mr. Gardiner said that his clients could not acquiesce in such a course.

Respondent then proposed that applicants should buy the remaining labels for £15.

Mr. Gardiner, however, said that the applicants could not entertain the offer, as the labels were absolutely worthless to them.

De Villiers, C.J., said that applicants' trade-mark must be protected, and an order be granted as prayed, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

WESTERN WINE, BRANDY AND SPIRIT CO. AND OTHERS } 1907.
V. FEDERAL SUPPLY AND } Feb. 20th.
GOLD STORAGE CO. }

[At the time of going to press this case was standing over for further hearing. The report will be given under the date of the judgment.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

RAUSBY AND COVELL V. } 1907.
WOUDBERG. } Feb. 20th.
" 27th.
" 28th.

Patent—Infringement—Helm of still.

This was an action for an injunction restraining respondent from making, using, vending, or exercising helms for eliminating fusel oil and other impurities in the distillation of brandy, in infringement of patent rights granted to the plaintiffs on the 17th April, 1905.

The declaration set forth that the plaintiffs carried on business in partnership at Montagu as mechanical engineers and copper-smiths, and were patentees, on letters patent, of a certain helm for a pot still and apparatus in connection therewith. Letters patent were granted on the 17th April, 1905. Plaintiffs alleged that the defendant, who is a copper-smith, carrying on business at Wellington, had, since the grant of letters patent, infringed their rights by making and selling helms which were constructed in the same manner, or which were a colourable imitation. They claimed an injunction against defendant, an account of the profits made by defendant from the sale of the helms by him, and £2,000 damages by reason of injury to their business.

The defendant, in his plea, denied that the plaintiffs were the true inventors of the helm and apparatus, said that prior to the granting of the letters patent he (defendant) had made helms of a similar kind. He and his father had, for the last 25 years, made and sold helms similar in all material respects to the helm in respect of which plaintiffs had obtained letters patent.

Mr. Upington, with him Mr. Toms, was for the plaintiffs; Mr. Benjamin, with him Mr. Cloese, was for the defendant.

Mr. Upington explained, with the aid of a specimen in court, the construction of the helm made by the plaintiffs, and the features in regard to which plaintiffs complained there had been imitation by the defendants.

Mr. Benjamin also detailed, by means of a model, the nature of the alleged infringing helm.

Henry Pain, professor of civil engineering at the S.A. College, deposed to having examined the letters patent of the plaintiffs. The patent, for the first time within witness's knowledge of pot stills, contained a means of fractional distillation within the helm for the pot still. Prior to this, witness was not aware of any case where fractional distillation was employed inside the helm of a pot still. The witness described the process.

[Hopley, J.: The principle of fractional distillation is a very old one?]

Witness: Yes.

[Hopley, J.: But you say the plaintiffs are the first people in the world to whom it has occurred to put it into such a small space as the helm of a pot still?]

Witness: Yes, so far as I know, my lord.

Dr. Hahn, professor of chemistry at the S.A. College, said that the plaintiffs' apparatus displayed ingenuity in that there was put into the helm a simple contrivance by which the heavy fusel oil vapours were condensed, and at the same time a contrivance by which the fusel oil, condensed, was removed, so that it did not run back into the pot. The plaintiffs had also added to the tubes an arrangement by which the condensed fusel oil was drawn away, and it was done in such a simple way that it was not at all to be compared to the large rectifying columns of the ordinary farmer's still, but could be done in the ordinary farmer's still, and a palatable liquid at once distilled. The ingenuity consisted in the simplicity of the apparatus by which the deleterious fusel oil was condensed and also removed in the ordinary pot still.

[Hopley, J.: If this thing had been eight times as large and could not be put into a farmer's still—?]

Witness: There would be nothing new in it, then. As it is now, every farmer can use it.

[Hopley, J.: It is really because it is small and handy, though it introduces a well-known principle, that it is novel and good?]

Yes, certainly.

[Hopley, J.: its smallness and compactness constitute what you consider its novelty?]

Yes.

James Henry Covell, one of the plaintiffs, gave evidence, detailing the circumstances leading to the making of the helm. He took out letters patent not only here but in England. In May, 1906, he received a letter from defendant saying that he had heard plaintiffs had made a new kind of helm, and he would like to be given the work of making such helms for them. Witness did not agree to defendant's terms. A man named Jenkins was subsequently sent by defendant, and there was further correspondence, after which defendant came to see witness. Witness showed defendant one of the helms (this was about August 20), and told him that the firm needed capital for their business; that they were handicapped for want of capital. Defendant said he had copper to the value of about £1,000, and about £500 cash, which he was willing to put into the business if they came to terms. He said, also, his connection was worth £500, which made up the amount of capital (£2,000) which the firm required. The invention was explained to defendant, who said it would be a good thing to amalgamate the businesses. He did not, however, then decide on the matter, saying he would have to consult his father. He said he would like to see the whole thing to explain it to his father, and thereupon witness showed the drawings and the whole thing perfectly openly and frankly. Three days later, defendant wrote saying he did not feel inclined to enter into any arrangement. Subsequently, witness saw an advertisement, in which defendant drew the attention of the farmers to a helm made by him for separating the fusel oil from the brandy. When defendant first saw the apparatus he expressed admiration of its utility and ingenuity. The helm made by defendant was an infringement of the patent of witness's firm. Witness had sold a number of these stills to farmers. The firm had been injured in their business through the advertisement of the defendant.

Ernest George Rausby, partner in the plaintiff firm, also gave evidence. He said that one Jenkins called upon him before defendant's visit, and said defendant had asked him to see the firm as to making the helms. The witness corroborated Covell's evidence as to what occurred during the interview with Woudberg.

A. P. Burger, a brandy farmer, said that the helm made by the plaintiffs had resulted in the making of better brandy. Witness had obtained better prices for his brandy. He had never seen an apparatus like this applied to a helm before.

George J. Barry, partner in the firm of Messrs. Barry Brothers, said he had bought stills from the defendant, but the latter had never supplied a still with a helm containing an apparatus such as the one in question. An apparatus of this sort was highly desirable. Superior brandy was made in this manner.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

The defendant, Daniel Benjamin Woudberg, copper-smith, who has been twenty-five years in business at the Paarl, stated there was an advertisement in "Ons Land," and in consequence of what he read, witness approached the plaintiffs. It was stated they intended having the apparatus made by Colonial workmen. The first he knew of the interior of the apparatus was at the interview in August. When the plaintiffs opened the apparatus, he saw it was quite a simple thing, and he said to them he wished they could see the one he had made and set up for Messrs. Sedgwick at Wellington. The Robertson show was held before he saw the apparatus in August last. Twenty years ago his father had an apparatus for taking fusil oil from the brandy. The objections the farmers had were the pumping of the water, and that they did not get anything more for the purer article. The farmers looked to the quantity, and not quality.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: It did not strike him to say in his affidavit in the application to restrain him that he had made before the phylloxera a tin helm for his father, which was identical with the one he exhibited in court. His father also did not say that witness had made for him exactly the same as the model produced. The brandy which he made by the still was for home consumption, but witness was not a judge of brandy, and could not say whether the brandy was good or not. Witness neither exhibited the brandy nor did he offer to give the farmers a free trial. Witness had shown the interior of his helm which he had in his shop at the Paarl to many prominent wine-farmers, but could not give the name of a particular one who had seen it before the case. Mr. Malan had seen it after the case began.

William T. Steven, copper-smith for about 35 years, and manager of Sedgwick and Co.'s distillery at Wellington for many years, stated that he remembered about 27 years ago being called on to examine a helm for Atherton. The still, excepting having fewer pipes, was the same as the one produced. Witness reported that the apparatus was not worth repairing. Witness was positive that the construction was exactly the same as the defendants. Witness constructed a similar one for the then head of the Excise, who was trying to improve stills for farmers. One was worked suitable for farmers by witness at the exhibition about 25 years ago. Apparatus similar to the one produced was put up at the distillery at Wellington.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness had made four helms similar to the model produced. He had eight baffle plates on the one he put on exhibition, and it was about 6 feet high. It was not a small distillery column. In his particular column the baffle plates were not perforated.

Dr. Marloth stated he had seen the distilling apparatus on the Rhine and Switzerland and a good many in this country. The witness described the stills in use on the Rhine.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The shape of the drip plate in plaintiff's helm was different to any other, but the effect was the same. There was nothing novel about plaintiff's helm.

Have you seen anything like it before?—It is a primitive arrangement.

But you see, by this primitive arrangement, you get £2 a leaguer more for your brandy. Have you seen anything like it before?—No; I have not seen the same thing before.

By the Court: Defendant's helm was better than plaintiff's, but there were better ones still in use.

David M. C. Roux, farmer, Paarl, said that in February, 1905, he was supplied with a still by Mr. Lambrechts. He had not seen the inside of the top of this still, but the parts he had seen were like those in the model of the alleged infringing still produced in court.

Mr. Benjamin closed his case.

Mr. Upington, in argument, referred to section 32 of Act 17 of 1860, and urged that a considerable amount of the evidence led by his learned friend was wholly inadmissible and irrelevant in face of the provisions of that section. Counsel further quoted "Wallace and Williamson on the Law of Letters Patent," p. 489 and 491-2, contending that as to actual user of similar machines, the particulars in the plea were defective, and that evidence was not admissible to impeach the validity of the plaintiffs' letters patent in respect of particular instances and particular times and particular places, such as had been endeavoured to be led in this case.

[Hopley, J.: But if these people give vague particulars, isn't it your duty to come to the Court and object to the particulars?]

Mr. Upington submitted that if the defendant gave general particulars he must be bound by them, and he could not attempt, in the course of the case, to prove specific instances. As regarded specific instances of prior publication and prior user, he contended that the evidence led by the defendant was not admissible. Counsel went on to argue on the merits of the case, quoted "Frost on Patent Law" (1898 Edition), page 65. He contended that, assuming it could be taken that this new arrangement produced something different from what the distillery column and the ordinary helm produced, it was patentable. Counsel urged that, on the evidence, wherever the idea came from, or wherever part of the idea came from, the helm of the defendant was an infringement of the plaintiff's invention. The use of a baffle plate, which was a colourable imitation of the baffle plate used in the plaintiffs' helm, constituted an infringement of the plaintiffs' patent rights. It was in little things that the difference in process was seen, but it was in these little things that the real novelty and inventiveness of a thing consisted. It was surprising, to say the least, that in all the alleged anticipations of this helm in the Cape Colony, there had been none in which there had been only one baffle plate. There had been evidence of the use of miniature distillery columns, but these had not been proof of the previous use of anything substantially resembling the plaintiffs' invention. In all prior arrangements, the process of distillation was radically different to the one embodied by the plaintiffs in this helm.

Mr. Benjamin, referring to the objection taken in reference to the alleged lack of particulars in the pleadings, submitted that if the particulars were not sufficient, the plaintiffs should have followed the general rule, and have applied to Court to compel the furnishing of further particulars. Counsel quoted Edmonds on Patents, p. 412, and the authorities there cited case on this point, and said that if the plaintiffs objected to the particulars as not being sufficient, clearly their course would have been to apply for further particulars. In the course of further argument, counsel referred to 15-16 Vict., c. 83, and to cases reported in 20, Solicitors' Journal. In regard to the evidence in the present case, Mr. Benjamin contended that it was amply clear that the apparatus manufactured by the defendant had been manufactured in substantially the same manner, if not in every detail, by other people for years past. It was very difficult to crystallise out what was the special merit of the plaintiffs' apparatus, and on what the claim for a patent rested. If it consisted in the use of water inside a helm, it was clear that a similar apparatus was in use in Sedgwick's distillery. Moreover, there was evidence that this apparatus had been in use elsewhere, and it seemed idle to argue that apparatus identical in principle was not generally in use before. The reduction of the baffle plates, as in the case of plaintiff's apparatus, could not be held to be such a novelty as would justify the plaintiffs in coming to Court and asking for a patent. Counsel cited Edmonds on Patent Law, pp. 54 and 59. On the point whether plaintiffs' apparatus was patentable, counsel said that every detail of this alleged invention was described in books on the subject of distillation. He urged that the plaintiffs could not combine together two or three of the principles contained in these works, and then come to the Court and ask for patent rights. Counsel quoted from the judgment of Lord Esher (Edmonds on Patent Law, p. 83). Where, counsel asked, was the novelty in plaintiffs' apparatus? There was a combination which, in the language of Lord Esher, "any fool would have thought of." Mr. Benjamin referred to Edmonds, p. 341, and to the case of Seed v. Higgins (8 H.L. 550).

Mr. Upington having been heard in reply, the Court gave judgment for defendant, with costs.

Hopley, J., said this was a matter of great importance to the parties, and if he had any doubt at all as to how his judgment should go he would have taken time to put it into shape, and to have looked up the various authorities which had been cited; but having analysed carefully the arguments advanced on both sides, he did not think it was necessary or advisable to do so, because his own mind was fixed upon what he thought was the view which should be taken of the evidence in this case. The first point he had to consider was the case advanced by the plaintiff that he was the first person who had reduced this process of distillation to such a small scale as to enable it to be used in ordinary farmers' stills, and on this point the evidence convinced him that others had done this many years before the plaintiffs. He did not say for a moment that plaintiffs knew this, but it was perfectly clear to his mind that others had done this on such a small scale as to make it applicable to the ordinary farmers' skill. It seemed to him that the other alleged original features claimed for the plaintiffs' apparatus were purely mechanical contrivances, which were of no inventive merit whatever. It was argued that the combination of these features might be so ingenious as to be patentable, but it seemed to him that there was no such amount of ingenuity exhibited in this combination as to merit such protection. It was said further that the baffle plate in plaintiffs' machine was of such design as to be patentable, but, though it might have been shown to be a very good machine, he did not think a combination of known processes had been shown to display such genius as to entitle plaintiff to patent rights in respect of the apparatus. His Lordship reviewed the evidence, and said that in principle he could see no difference between the machines spoken of by witnesses for the defence, and the machine made by the plaintiffs. He thought that on all the essential points, although in its actual shape the utility of the plaintiffs' machine was great, it had been anticipated. He had no reason to doubt the evidence of the defendant as to his having built machines to attain the same results, previous to the patent rights being obtained by plaintiffs. At any rate, there did not seem to him to be an infringement of the rights of the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs had got their patent for what it was worth, but whichever apparatus attained the better results, it seemed to him that the helm of the defendant did not constitute an infringement of the patent, and judgment would, therefore, be given for the defendant, with costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Herald and Gie. Defendant's Attorneys: Faure, Van Eyk and Moore.]

Ex parte FRIEDLANDER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones asked leave to mention a matter of urgency.

Leave having been granted,

Mr. Jones said that the petition was that of Charles Friedlander, acting on behalf of Carl Frank, of Gordonia.

The circumstances were that the Immigration Department refused to allow a man named Wursing to land in the Colony from the S.S. Buergermeister, which arrived here from Germany on the 17th inst. According to the petition, Wursing was engaged by a store-keeper named Frank as a shop assistant. Frank handed Wursing £20 on board the ship at Cape Town, but the Immigration Officer refused to allow Wursing to land on the ground that the declaration required by the Act had not been made, there being no proper contract of service, while the man had not £20, as required by the regulations. The vessel had sailed from Cape Town to Europe, and was now between Port Elizabeth and East London. An order was asked compelling the Government to allow Wursing to land, subject to his undertaking not to leave the port at which he landed until the question was decided by the Court, after notice given to the Colonial Secretary.

Hopley, J., said he would grant a rule nisi allowing Wursing to land, upon security for £50 being given (to cover the cost of the proceedings and the cost of removing the man in the event of an adverse decision), that Wursing would leave this country if the Court should find against him, the rule being returnable on Tuesday next.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

PROVISIONAL ROLL

MARSH MEMORIAL HOMES { 1907.
V. KRAMER. { Feb. 20th.

Mr. Inchbold moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £3,200, with interest from the 1st July, 1906; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable and rents attached.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

JANSEN V. WHILLIER.

Mr. Inchbold moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £11, balance of wages due, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. KOPELO-WITZ.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, on a summons claiming that certain diamonds and rubies, value £75 or thereabouts, which were found concealed in the baggage or person of the defendant on his arrival by steamship from England on the 25th December, 1906, after he had informed the Customs officials that he had no dutiable articles, be declared forfeited, and that he be compelled to pay a sum of £225, being treble value of the said diamonds and rubies. Counsel said that service of the summons had been effected upon the wife of defendant. Defendant, however, did not appear.

Order granted as prayed.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ESTATE GARLAND. { 1907.
{ Feb. 20th.

Mr. Swift moved in the petition of the executors of the estate of the late E. B. Garland for leave to mortgage certain estate property in Cape Town in a sum of £9,000, to liquidate the claims of creditors and interest.

Order granted as prayed.

CORDER V. UPTON.

This was an application upon notice calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not be ordered to furnish security for costs of an action which he had instituted against applicant, and why he should not be barred from proceeding with the said action until such security was given.

Respondent had instituted an action against applicant to recover £1,000 damages for alleged libel and slander. Defendant says that the action is vexatious, and that he has a good answer thereto.

The ground of the present application was that plaintiff was not domiciled in this colony, that he had no fixed address here, and that his wife and children remained in England. He was frequently moving about between Cape Town, Johannesburg, and Natal.

Respondent, in his affidavit, said that he was a commercial traveller, that Cape Town was his headquarters, and that he intended to reside here. He had a post-box in Cape Town.

Mr. M. Bisset was for applicant, W. J. Corder; Mr. Burton was for respondent, W. H. Upton.

Having heard Mr. Burton in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: The respondent's own letters and cards show that Cape Town is not his headquarters. I do not think he has acquired a domicile here. He does not allege that he has a residence here. He travels over the whole of South Africa, and, as far as I can judge, Johannesburg is as much his domicile as Cape Town. If he chooses to sue the applicant for slander, he must give security. Order granted as prayed, security in the sum of £150 to be given to the satisfaction of the Registrar of the Supreme Court.

ESTATE HAZELL V. SCHMIDT.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for an order authorising the substitution of the name of Mr. J. M. P. Muirhead, trustee in the insolvent estate of Thomas Herbert Hazell, as plaintiff in an action brought against respondent for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond. The case had previously been before the Court when Hazell sued for provisional sentence on the bond, and plaintiff was then directed to give Schmidt a statement of account, and the parties were ordered to go into the principal case.

Respondent, who is a farmer on the Cape Downs, appeared, and handed in a statement in which he said that the claim was not equitable and legal, and that no statement of account had been furnished to him. He added that he had been reduced from a position of prosperity to a struggle for bare subsistence by the fraudulent actions of the said Hazell.

Mr. Buchanan read a replying affidavit by petitioner, in which he said that he had submitted a detailed statement of account to respondent, and had offered to debate same, but respondent had refused to go into the account, or to pay the balance due. Counsel said that the respondent was sued for £126 19s. 2d. on an account, which was secured by a mortgage bond for £160.

Respondent said that his books showed that he only owed £3 or £4. That was the only amount he was prepared to pay.

De Villiers, C.J., said he thought that petitioner should carefully consider whether he should proceed with his action against the respondent. If Hazell had defrauded the respondent, the trustee could not have greater rights than the insolvent had.

Respondent said he objected to the substitution of Mr. Muirhead's name as plaintiff in the action.

De Villiers, C.J.: I would strongly recommend Mr. Muirhead to reconsider the matter. In the meantime, respondent had better tender what he thinks is due. Respondent had better see if he cannot increase the tender, and then no more may be heard of the case. Application granted.

Ex parte ESTATE SYPHUS.

Mr. De Waal moved, on the petition of the curator bonis of estate Syphus, for an order authorising registration of transfer of certain properties.

Order granted.

Ex parte ESTERHUIZEN.

Mr. Pohl moved for an extension of the return day of citation and for directions as to substituted service upon respondent, efforts to effect personal service having failed.

Return day extended until the 16th April, personal service, failing which one publication in the "Volkstem."

Ex parte HERSCHMAN.

Mr. Pohl moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to issue a copy of a certain deed of Kinderbewys, or for cancellation of the said deed.

Order granted authorising cancellation of the deed of kinderbewys.

SCOTT V. CALDER.

Mr. De Waal moved for judgment in terms of a tender contained in a letter addressed by respondent's attorney to applicant's attorney on the 29th January, which tender was accepted on the following day and further for an order upon respondent to pay costs.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ESTATE KOTZE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones again mentioned this matter, which was an application for leave to mortgage estate property for the purpose of paying costs of a certain action. Counsel now presented a report by the Master, as required by the Court.

De Villiers, C.J., remarked that the costs seemed to be monstrous. He postponed the matter until Friday, and directed that the bill of costs should be produced and that the costs between attorney and client should be taxed in the meantime.

Ex parte DOUALLIER.

Mr. M. Bisset again mentioned this matter, which was an application by the usufructuary of a certain estate for leave to mortgage certain property for the purpose of obtaining funds with which to put the property in repair. Counsel produced additional affidavits.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the information was insufficient to justify the Court in practically setting aside the terms of the will, and he ordered the matter to stand over pending additional information on several points.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and a Jury.]

TURNBULL V. OHLSSON. { 1907.
Feb. 21st.
" 22nd.
" 25th.

Landlord and tenant — Assignment of lease — Acceptance of tenant — Unauthorized acts of agent.

This was an action for damages by reason of alleged wrongful ejectment.

The plaintiff's declaration was in the following terms: (1) The plaintiff (James Turnbull) resides at Wynberg, and sues in his individual capacity and as a surviving partner in the firm of Robert Dickson and James Turnbull, lately trading at Wynberg as Dickson and Turnbull. The defendant (Anders Ohlsson) resides in Cape Town. (2) On the 14th April, 1898, the defendant granted to George da Costa Ricci a lease of certain premises known as the Royal Hotel, at Wynberg, for a period of ten years from the 1st October, 1898. (3) Thereafter, on the 20th March, 1900, Ricci ceded and transferred his right in the lease to Robert Dickson and Walter Baas Pentilow. (4) In or about October, 1902, Pentilow retired from the business carried on in the said premises, and on the 28th November, 1902, Dickson entered into partnership with the plaintiff for the purpose of carrying on business as hotel-keepers in the said premises, the partnership to date from the 1st December, 1902. A deed of partnership was duly executed to that effect. (5) Prior to the execution of the deed Dickson obtained the consent of the defendant through the latter's duly authorised agent and representative, one Bultitude, to the introduction of the plaintiff as a partner in the business and as a lessee of the premises under the lease, together with Dickson, but the consent in writing of the defendant to the transfer of the lease into the joint names of the plaintiff and Dickson, as required by the terms of the lease, was not obtained, owing to the express representation of Bultitude, acting for the defendant, that such written consent to the cession was not necessary, and that the plaintiff would be recognised by the defendant as a lessee fully and equally with Dickson. (6) Thereafter the plaintiff and Dickson proceeded to carry on the business under the style of Dickson and Turnbull, and the plaintiff acted as managing partner thereof, all transactions of the firm being conducted through him, as a rule, to the knowledge and with the approval of the defendant, who accepted payment of rent under the lease from the firm as the lessees, and in this and other respects fully recognised and accepted the plaintiff's position as lessee of the premises. (7) In or about April, 1904, the defendant, at an interview with the plaintiff, confirmed an undertaking and promise previously made by the defendant to Dickson to grant a renewal of the lease after the expiration of the ten years' period thereof. (8) On the 25th June, 1906, while the partnership was still subsisting, the private estate of Dickson was sequestrated as insolvent, and thereafter, on the 30th August, 1906, the defendant gave the plaintiff notice that he regarded the lease as determined by operation of the law by reason of Dickson's insolvency; that he, the defendant, had made arrangements for the transfer of the liquor licence in respect of the premises—which had theretofore stood in the name of Dickson—to another person, one H. S. Boffey, to whom the defendant had let the premises, and that he required plaintiff to vacate the same as soon as transfer of the licence was completed. (9) The plaintiff objected to the proceedings indicated by the above notification, and refused to vacate the premises, claiming that the partnership of Dickson and Turnbull were lessees thereof; and thereafter the defendant applied to the Supreme Court on the 13th September, 1906, for an order directing the plaintiff to deliver up possession of the premises (16 C.T.R., 847). The plaintiff craves leave to refer to the record of the proceedings, and the order of Court thereupon, whereby he was compelled to give up possession forthwith of the premises, but the right was reserved to him of bringing an action for damages if he so desired. (10) The plaintiff contends that the lease was not determined upon the insolvency of Dickson, and that the action of the defendant in treating the lease as so determined and in purporting to re-let the premises and ejecting the plaintiff was wrongful and unlawful and in violation of the plaintiff's rights under the agreements between the parties herein referred to, especially in paragraphs 5, 6 and 7 hereof. (11) By reason of the defendant's wrongful and unlawful action and of the plaintiff's ejectment, the plaintiff has lost the benefit of the moneys invested by him in the said business, and has also suffered loss of trade as well as loss on furniture and stock, which he has been compelled to dispose of at a forced sale, has been put to considerable expense in the way of disbursements for wages and other charges, and has in the above and other respects sustained damage to the extent of £5,550. (12) The trustee of Dickson's Insolvent Estate has given the plaintiff notice that he declines to join the plaintiff in instituting the present proceedings. The plaintiff claims: (a) The sum of £5,550 as damages aforesaid; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows: (1) The defendant admits that plaintiff resides at Wynberg and defendant resides at Cape Town, but he does not admit that, for the purposes of this action, the plaintiff sues as surviving partner in the firm of Robert Dickson and James Turnbull, lately trading at Wynberg as Dickson and Turnbull, or that he is entitled so to do. (2) Paragraphs 2 and 3 are admitted. By the said lease it was agreed that the tenant shall not assign or sublet or in any way alienate or part with any of his interest in the said premises, nor transfer his licence for the sale of intoxicating liquors to any other person or persons without the consent of the landlord (the defendant), thereto first had and obtained in writing and the cession by the said Ricci on the 20th March, 1906, is endorsed upon the lease and is signed by the defendant—who thereby gave his consent in writing thereto. (3) As to paragraph 4 the defendant admits that Pentilow retired from the said business, and he admits that a partnership was entered into between the plaintiff and Dickson and a deed executed, but he had no knowledge of the date thereof, and was not aware of the terms thereof until September, 1906. (4) As to paragraph 5, the defendant denies that he gave his consent to the introduction of the plaintiff as a partner in the business or as a lessee of the premises. He denies that the said Bultitude was his agent and representative, and that he had any authority from defendant to give any such consent. He had no knowledge of representations alleged to have been made by Bultitude, and he denies that the representations were made. He says that he has never given his consent to the transfer of the lease to plaintiff and Dickson, that he never authorised anyone, and no one had any authority to do so, and that if Bultitude, as alleged, purported to give his consent and to make the representations, it was without his knowledge and consent and without any authority; but he admits that no written consent, as required by the lease, has been given by him. (5) Defendant admits that plaintiff and Dickson carried on business as Dickson and Turnbull; he denies that all transactions of the firm were conducted through plaintiff with his knowledge and approval, or that the latter was managing partner. He denies that he accepted payment of the rent under the lease from the firm as lessees, and he denies that he ever accepted the plaintiff as lessee of the premises, but says that Dickson was, after the retirement of Pentilow, regarded as the sole lessee. (6) Paragraph 7 is denied. (7) Paragraphs 8 and 9 are admitted, and defendant says further that the trustees in the estate of Dickson, in whose name the liquor licence stood, gave their consent in writing to the transfer of the licence to Boffey to the knowledge of the plaintiff. (8) As to paragraph 10, defendant denies the contention, and he denies paragraph 11. (9) Paragraph 12 is admitted, save "trustee" should be "trustees." (10) One of the stipulations in the lease is that the rent shall be paid monthly, and section 13 of the lease provides that, if the tenant commits any breach of any of the stipulations in the lease, or should become insolvent, that the defendant could at his option cancel and annul the lease, which should be thereupon absolutely determined, and in that event the landlord could, without any previous demand whatsoever, enter upon and take possession of the premises, and expel the tenant and all persons claiming under him or being on the premises let, and that the tenant should be allowed 30 days from the date of any monthly rent within which to pay the same, without his being considered to have committed a breach of the terms of the lease. The last rent paid to defendant was the rent due on the 31st May; on the 25th June, Dickson became insolvent; no rent due for the premises for June was paid, and on the 30th of August the defendant, as he was entitled to do, gave notice to the plaintiff that the said lease was determined, the defendant being legally entitled, quite apart from the operation of the Insolvent Ordinance, to cancel and annul the lease, and having so cancelled and annulled it. Save as aforesaid, defendant denies the allegations in paragraphs 4, 5, and 6. Wherefore defendant prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

Dr. Greer for plaintiff. Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington), for defendant.

James Turnbull, the plaintiff, was called, and gave evidence bearing out the statements in the declaration. He said he was an accountant, and had served as a captain in the war. He was looking out for a licence in the neighbourhood of Cape Town in 1902, and he went to Ohlsson's and saw Mr. Bultitude, who advised him not to have anything to do with a certain hotel then for sale. Subsequently he was introduced to Dickson, and there were negotiations regarding a partnership in the Royal Hotel. Witness again went to Ohlsson's, and Bultitude advised him to take the partnership. A deed of partnership was drawn up, the terms being that witness should pay £4,000 for a half-share of the hotel business. There was an addendum to the deed of partnership whereby Dickson agreed to cede to witness his half-share as security for moneys drawn by him. Before witness paid anything, witness and Dickson went to Ohlsson's, and saw Mr. Bultitude, who said that the lease did not require endorsing, but that Mr. Ohlsson agreed to accept witness as partner. Witness did not see the lease until the proceedings on motion to eject him from the Royal Hotel. Witness became the managing partner in the business, and the names of the partners—Dickson and Turnbull—appeared on the firm's letter-paper. Witness communicated with Ohlsson's Cape Breweries and with Mr. Ohlsson from time to time, signing as "J. Turnbull, of Dickson and Turnbull." The witness deposed as to correspondence which, it was contended, proved that the company and Mr. Ohlsson recognised the partnership, and dealt with Turnbull and Dickson as partners. In 1903 witness saw Bultitude about repapering the place, and the work was done by Ohlsson's Breweries' staff. Witness regarded Bultitude as fully authorised to act. He advised witness to buy Dickson's share. A billiard-table licence was taken out in the names of the partners. After Dickson's insolvency, and when trouble arose, witness offered Bultitude to purchase the goodwill for £1,500, and to pay £10 a month extra rent. His idea was to buy the goodwill outright, and afterwards to sell, so that he might clear himself. Witness had been given to understand that Ohlsson's received an offer of £5,000 for the place. He set off the improvements made in the premises against the rent due.

Robert Dickson said he was a partner in the late firm of Dickson and Turnbull, and was at the same time the proprietor of the Standard Bar, Cape Town. He also had an advertising business on the Cape Government Railways, and was the proprietor of a wholesale business as well. Witness and Pentilow took over the Royal Hotel from De Ricci. He knew that the hotel was the private property of Mr. Anders Ohlsson. The retirement of Pentilow from the business was not endorsed on the licence, which, he believed, still stood in the names of Pentilow and Dickson. When Pentilow retired, witness was on the lookout for another partner, and he got into communication with Turnbull. Witness went to Ohlsson's, and saw Mr. Bultitude, whom he asked whether there would be any objection to taking in Turnbull as a partner. Bultitude said: "Oh, you can take in a thousand if you like." He could not be certain that anything was said about the lease.

Dr. Greer said he would ask the Court's leave to treat Mr. Dickson as a hostile witness.

Maasdorp, J., remarked that he did not see that the witness had so far shown hostility.

Dr. Greer then asked the witness whether he had ever made a different statement about the lease to what he had made in the box.

Sir H. Juta objected to the question. His learned friend could not cross-examine his own witness.

Maasdorp, J., said he saw nothing improper in the question.

Witness, answering the question, said he did state on one occasion that he believed Bultitude said the lease would be all right. At the time he made this statement, he was worried with financial troubles, and he was not prepared to swear what actually took place. When Pentilow retired from the partnership there was an indebtedness of about £7,000, which was afterwards reduced to about £500 or £600. He did not remember that when the deed of partnership was signed, the thousand pounds was not paid until Turnbull had satisfied himself that he would be accepted. Turnbull said something to him about having to realise some scrip.

In cross-examination by Sir H. Juta, the witness said he took Turnbull in as a partner, but he supposed that was a different thing from taking in a co-lessee. He supposed that his financial position would not admit of him telling his creditors that he was taking in a co-lessee. The matter of the lease was never mentioned between witness, and Turnbull during the partnership. Turnbull never told him that Ohlsson had promised him a lease or an extension of the existing lease. In June last, witness was under the impression that Turnbull was a lessee, and he (witness) therefore went to Mr. Ohlsson and asked him, as a personal favour, to give Turnbull the unexpired portion of the lease.

A Juryman: When the partnership was entered into, were you under the impression that you were conveying to Mr. Turnbull not only the half-share in the proceeds of the business, but also in any interest you might have in the lease itself?

Witness: I understood I was giving Mr. Turnbull a half-share.

It included the interest you had in the lease?—At the time I understood so. That was the intention: that I was to give a half-interest in everything.

In re-examination, the witness said he ceded this remaining interest in the business to Turnbull as collateral security for moneys already drawn in excess of what witness was entitled to, and for any moneys so drawn in future.

Dr. Greer: You have seen Mr. Bultitude a couple of times?

Witness: Yes.

Lately?—Yes.

And have you been in the office of Mr. Ohlsson lately?

Sir H. Juta objected that this did not arise out of cross-examination.

Dr. Greer did not press the question.

Harry D. Bradley, racehorse owner and speculator, said he was present on an occasion when Turnbull was introduced to Mr. Ohlsson as "Dickson's partner." This was in the early part of 1904.

[Maasdorp, J.: Is it your case, Sir Henry, that Mr. Ohlsson did not know there was a partnership?]

Sir H. Juta: He says he did not know; at least, until 1904.

Henry Magor, proprietor of the Kimberley Hotel, Cape Town, said he had been for ten years connected with the trade. He had had negotiations with Dickson with a view to purchasing the latter's half-share in the Royal Witness saw Bultitude, who advised him it was a good thing to go in for. Witness had previously dealt with Bul-titude as representing Ohlsson's. Bultitude and Dickson gave witness to understand that there was a disagreement between the partners. Witness had bought the Bay View Hotel at Muizenberg and the Fountain Hotel, Cape Town. Both these houses belonged to Mr. Anders Ohlsson personally, and witness had negotiated with Bultitude in regard to these. From the previous transactions, witness regarded Bultitude as qualified to act as Mr. Ohlsson's agent.

Cross-examined: He did not say Bultitude could sign a lease, but he acted as intermediary. The leases were drawn up by Ohlsson's solicitors.

Walter Bass Pentilow, former partner of Dickson in the Royal Hotel business, said that Bultitude had authorised him to do some painting.

After further evidence of a similar nature, Dr. Greer closed his case.

Anders Ohlsson, the defendant, said he owned the Royal Hotel, Wynberg. He was director of Ohlsson's Cape Breweries, but this house had nothing to do with the company. Great care had to be taken in regard to the character of the tenants, and it was very important that there should be satisfactory proof of the tenants' honesty and good character. The leasing of houses being so important, witness always did that himself. When the question of a new tenancy arose, inquiries were made into the character of the applicant. Bultitude was a kind of outside manager of the company, who saw that the houses were properly conducted and the rent paid, and attended to other details. Bultitude had no authority to accept a tenant or to sign a lease, whether it was the company's or witness's property. No houses were leased except by witness or his son, who held his (witness's) general power of attorney. In this instance Pentilow retired with witness's approval. Witness knew nothing of Turnbull in 1902. In 1904 he heard something about Turnbull's standing and position. He would not have allowed Turnbull to take a half-share in the house, if asked. In 1904 Turnbull asked for an interview with witness. The house was then in arrears with the accounts of the company. On that occasion Turnbull said he had an interest in the business, and Dickson's position being doubtful, he wished to know if witness would allow him to have a half-share in the lease, so as to secure himself. Witness told Turnbull he had acted foolishly, and refused to give him credit. Nothing was said then about an extension of the lease. Witness never said that he would extend the lease. Shortly before Dickson's insolvency, the latter and Turnbull came and asked if witness would grant the lease to Turnbull. He replied that he could not do it. He said he would not take Turnbull as a tenant at any price. Turnbull said that he wanted a five years' extension of the lease if he were allowed to take over the lease. Witness never authorised anybody to allow Turnbull to come in as a lessee, nor did he consent to this.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: Pentilow's share in the lease had not been cancelled in writing on the lease, but there was a verbal cancellation.

If there were a verbal cancellation, could not there have been a verbal substitution?

No; because it distinctly says on the lease that there can be no substitution without my written consent.

In further cross-examination, the witness said it was provided by the lease that the lessee should not part with any of his interest. Witness was not aware that Dickson had parted with any of his interest. When he received a letter from Turnbull, signed "J. Turnbull, of Dickson and Turnbull," he took no notice of it.

Dr. Greer: You know there is such a thing as waiver by action?

Witness: You can't get me to waiver. I am perfectly straight in my evidence. I never waiver.

Dr. Greer: My waiver is not the same as yours, Mr. Ohlsson.

Dr. Greer was proceeding to question the witness with regard to letters establishing the partnership, when

The foreman of the jury said the jury were satisfied that a partnership existed. He merely mentioned this in order that it might save time in questions on this point.

Masedorp, J., said the position was that counsel, to protect himself, wanted to have as much evidence on this point as possible, because the case might take some other course.

The witness was cross-examined as to statements made in his affidavit on the occasion of the motion, proceedings for Turnbull's ejectment. He said Turnbull did not ask him for an interview to discuss the financial position of the firm. Witness knew Turnbull was managing the business.

Dr. Greer: What did Boffey pay you?

Witness: £80 a month.

What was he to pay you for the goodwill?—He was supposed to pay me £2,000 if he could pay it, but there was no stipulation fixed on account of bad times.

Do you mean he isn't bound to pay you anything?—I am not going to force him.

That is not my question. Do you mean to say he isn't bound to?—If he sells the property and gets cash, then he pays me, but not otherwise.

The witness, in further cross-examination, said that the business did not now pay. He thought this was due to the depression. He did not know it was due to the talk about Wynberg as to the transactions in regard to this hotel.

In re-examination the witness said the business of a licensed victualler was not half so good now as it had been.

F. A. Ohlsson, son of the last witness, also gave evidence repudiating that Bultitude had any power to act for Ohlsson, or the Brewery Company.

Archibald Bultitude, one of the managers of Ohlsson's Breweries, said his duties were to see that the houses of the company were properly conducted, that the people paid their rent and generally to supervise the conduct of the houses. Before a lease was granted a thorough inquiry was made into the character of the applicants. That was an important matter. Witness had never signed any leases. He had accepted tenants under Mr. Ohlsson's instructions. Witness had never been an agent to sign leases, and had never done so. He had signed monthly tenancy agreements. Witness knew Turnbull in 1902. Witness would not have accepted Turnbull as a tenant, nor would he have recommended him. Witness knew that Dickson and Turnbull entered into a deed of partnership. Dickson never asked witness to accept Turnbull as a lessee. Dickson came to witness after the partnership was entered into, and said he had taken Turnbull in as a partner. Witness said he could take in as many as he thought fit, and he added: "We look to you only." Nothing was said about admitting plaintiff as a co-lessee. No deed of partnership was shown to witness. In 1904 witness remembered Turnbull coming and asking if he could come in as a co-lessee, as he was afraid of Dickson's position. Mr. Ohlsson refused to agree to this. He was not a man whom witness would have taken in as co-lessee. The liquor business had for the last year been dwindling. That was the case all over the Cape Peninsula.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: Witness negotiated with Mr. Magor regarding the Fountain and Bay View Hotels up to a certain point. He acted, however, on Mr. Ohlsson's instructions. The first time witness saw Turnbull on business was at the interview regarding a hotel at Paarl. Witness told him not to touch it, as he did not think it good enough to buy. Turnbull did not come to see him subsequently about a partnership in the Royal Hotel, and witness did not advise him it was a good thing. Witness would swear that. Dickson did not come to see witness about it until after the partnership was entered into. Witness recollected now that Turnbull and Dickson came to him together in 1903 to ask if Mr. Ohlsson would agree to the substitution of Turnbull's name instead of Pentilow's on the lease, though in an affidavit made in September last, he saw he could not recollect this.

By the Jury: Witness never said he would accept Turnbull on equal terms with Dickson.

Further evidence was given on behalf of the defendant by Mr. Harries, one of the managers of Ohlsson's Cape Breweries, relating to the alleged default in the payment of rent. He denied, in cross-examination, that the plaintiff had tendered money to pay rent, nor had he said such money would not be accepted as rent, but would be placed to his credit on the liquor account.

H. S. Boffey said he took over the Royal Hotel last September, paying £2,250 goodwill. The agreement was to pay £80 a month rent, but after a month that was reduced to £60, in consequence of the falling off in trade. At the present rental things came out about square. He had given a promissory note for £2,000 on account of the goodwill, and had paid £250 in cash.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: The trade of a hotel depended much on the popularity of the proprietor. He intended to pay the amount of the promissory note if he could.

Re-examined: Witness was the proprietor also of the Railway Hotel, Wynberg, and had no reason to suppose that he was an unpopular man at Wynberg.

By the Jury: Witness had no lease of the Royal Hotel. He paid the good will to become a monthly tenant.

F. W. Poulton, accountant to Ohlsson's Cape Breweries, Ltd., also gave evidence.

Dr. Greer, addressing the jury on behalf of the plaintiff, said the issue was really a simple one, but it was one the determination of which meant a great deal to the plaintiff. The points to be decided were: Was the plaintiff entitled to share in the benefits of the lease of the Royal Hotel, and was he accepted and recognised by the defendant as being a participator in that lease? Counsel reviewed the evidence at length, emphasising the point that letters written by Turnbull and signed "J. Turnbull, of Dickson and Turnbull," were received and answered by Mr. Anders Ohlsson. The grounds on which the jury were asked to give judgment for the plaintiff were two-fold. There was, first of all, the ground that Bultitude was the agent for Mr. Ohlsson, that he was entitled to act on Ohlsson's behalf, and that he did say and was entitled to say, at the interview with Dickson and Turnbull: "There is no necessity to have the partnership endorsed on the lease." If the jury found that, then, of course, the case terminated at once, because that immediately fixed the defendant's liability. But if the jury were against the plaintiff on that ground, there was the further ground that, even if Bultitude did not say these words, Mr. Anders Ohlsson, immediately after the partnership was entered into, knew of that partnership, accepted it, and by his acceptance of it, tacitly consented to Turnbull having a half-share of the lease. It was a noteworthy feature of this case that in all matters not material directly to the issue, the plaintiff was corroborated by the defendant's witnesses, that he was only contradicted where it was at all material to the direct issue, and that where he was contradicted by witnesses for the defence, the latter disagreed among themselves as to detail. If the jury found for the plaintiff they must remember, in assessing the damages for the plaintiff, that he had put his worldly all into this venture, that everything he had in this world, all his earnings, had gone into this hotel, and that the benefit of his savings and earnings, at any rate, to a certain extent, had gone into Mr. Ohlsson's pocket. Plaintiff had paid a certain amount in cash, and he had allowed his share of the profits to remain in the business, and he was entitled to these just as much as though he had drawn them from time to time. He (counsel) was sorry to have detained the jury so long, but it was a matter of vital importance to the plaintiff, who was fighting for his all against a wealthy corporation.

Sir H. Juta said that the keynote of the case lay in the last remark made by his learned friend. It was an appeal to the emotions of the jury. They were not asked to consider the case as men of business; there was an appeal made to them on the ground that the plaintiff was a poor man, and the defendant a wealthy one, or a member of a wealthy corporation. It showed at once the weakness of the case. To find for the plaintiff in face of the lease providing that the written consent of the owner must be obtained before the original lease was in any way altered, the jury would have to say that the parties made another contract, in which they distinctly said: "Never mind all that about writing; we annul it; we make an entirely new contract." The jury were asked to treat the lease as though the words "consent in writing" were never there. The words "consent in writing" were put into the lease especially to obviate the kind of proceeding which had kept the jury there for three days. Counsel cited the cases of Paterson's Executors v. Webster, Steel and Co. (1 Juta, p. 350) and Green v. Griffiths (4 Juta, p. 346). Referring to the evidence, counsel urged that there was no evidence at all to establish that Bultitude had authority from Mr. Ohlsson to admit leases, or to allow any lessee to come in without the written consent of Mr. Ohlsson. That being so, if Bultitude made certain remarks attributed to him, they did not bind Mr. Ohlsson. But without going to that extent, he contended that there was no proof that Bultitude ever said that the plaintiff could come in as co-lessee. What was the use of drawing up documents if they were to be annulled by such evidence as they had heard in this case? When was this contract made? When could it be said that Mr. Ohlsson accepted Turnbull as lessee? If there were not an express contract, what happened to lead to the mutual understanding that the written contract was at an end? A good deal of evidence had been directed to showing there was a partnership, but it was of no use mixing up the case by harping on a partnership. To do that was to try to draw the minds of the jury off the real point of the case, which concerned the lease. Counsel submitted that the only way in which the whole of the case could be explained was that Turnbull did not know that Mr. Ohlsson's written consent was required. He further contended that the insolvency of one partner terminated the partnership, that thereafter the lease could not be transferred to any other parties without the landlord's consent, and that if the landlord's consent were withheld, the lease would be at an end. In that event, where were the damages? His learned friend had waved all this aside, and had argued that the plaintiff was entitled to damages because he had put £5,500 into the business, as though that were any reason why he should get anything out of it. Counsel further referred to the non-payment of rent after Dickson's insolvency, as showing that Turnbull was never considered a lessee.

Dr. Greer having replied, Maasdorp, J., in summing up, said that the main ground of the plaintiff's claim, as set forth in the declaration, was that Mr. Bultitude, being the agent of Mr. Ohlsson, made plaintiff a co-lessee. That was the first position the plaintiff had to establish, and it was the main point of the case. Now, was Bultitude's agency proved? There was no evidence of appointment in writing or by direct word of mouth from Ohlsson to Bultitude. Agency could be proved in a third way: by conduct, but was there anything here to show that Ohlsson allowed Bultitude to act as agent for the purpose of entering into written leases or to consent to the assignment of a lease? It was for the jury to say whether they could lay their finger on such conduct or circumstances as would establish an agency of this kind. Here they had a document providing that the lease could not be altered without written consent. If it were sought to establish something which was not in writing, it must be very clearly proved indeed, because the object of the writing was to have the thing clear. What had to be made clear to the satisfaction of the jury was that Mr. Ohlsson said: "I consent to Turnbull becoming co-lessee with Dickson." Was there proof that that was said or conveyed, and was it established as an agreement? His Lordship went on to refer to the evidence as to what occurred at the various interviews, and said that to find for the plaintiff the jury must be clearly satisfied that Ohlsson agreed to the assignment of the lease to the partnership, and waived his right to have nothing done otherwise than in writing. On the question of the damages, His Lordship said it was a very nice point whether plaintiff could set up a claim for damages in this form when the business had been stopped by reason of the insolvency of his partner. That was a point on which exception might have been taken, but he did not raise it now, except to mention it as a point to consider in relation to the measure of damages. It was for the jury to consider whether the plaintiff had established any rights, and if so they would determine the extent of the damages under the directions given them.

The jury retired to consider their verdict, and returned after an absence of 35 minutes.

The Foreman intimated that the jury found for the defendant, the plaintiff having failed to establish his claim as co-lessee. The jury also wished to state that they considered the aspersions thrown on the character of the plaintiff had not been established in Court.

Maasdorp, J.: I think you are quite right in the decision. There should not be any aspersions thrown on a man except on clear proof in court, and any insinuations made you are quite right in repudiating. I also think that upon the law and facts of the case your verdict is quite right.

Judgment was entered for the defendant, with costs, including costs of the proceedings on motion.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Dampers and Van Ryneveld; Defendant's Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ESTATE ROOS V. TROLLIP. { 1907.
Feb. 21st.

[At the time of going to press this case was standing over for judgment. A full report will be found under the date when judgment is given.]

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), ADMISSION.

1907.
Feb. 21st.

Mr. Sutton moved for the admission of Cyril Espineli Espin as a notary, the oaths to be taken before the Registrar of the Eastern Districts Court.
Application granted.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

LILIENTFELD BROS. V. RIEL.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.
Order granted.

ESTATE FLETCHER V. BRUYNES.

Mr. Swift moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £4,000, with interest, and £3 12s. 9d. insurance premiums, and that the property be declared executable. The bond became due through non-payment of interest.
Order granted.

SCHROEDER V. GARDENER.

Mr. Rowson moved for provisional sentence on an acknowledgment of debt for £126 15s., less £69 6s. 3d. paid on account, with interest and costs.
Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

HOBEN V. KALK BAY FISH AND LAND CO., LTD.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £11 17s. 6d., goods sold and delivered, with interest and costs.
Order granted.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Pohl moved for the rehabilitation of Arthur Isaac Meyer.
Application granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte GOOD HOPE FUNERAL ASSOCIATION, LTD.

Shareholder—Fully paid-up share
—Contributory—Petition for winding up.

The holder of fully paid-up shares in a limited liability company is entitled, under the Companies Act, to present a petition for the winding up of such company.

This was an application for the winding-up of a certain limited company and the appointment of an official liquidator.

The petition of Joseph Fock, George de Lacy, and Thomas Dawson Henry Long, in their capacity as trustees for the time being of the Good Hope Funeral Association, set out that the company was formed about 1886, with the object of carrying on the business indicated by its name. The nominal capital of the company was in the deed of association of the company stated to be £1,000, divided into 1,000 shares of £1 each, with power to the directors to increase the sum up to £2,000 by issuing additional shares. Petitioners are the present trustees of the company, and the two first-named are shareholders or contributories, while the last named petitioner, as a director of the company, represented the Independent United Order of Scottish Mechanics, who were the holders of 60 shares in the company. Of the shares in the company only 1,250 were issued, and the actual subscribed capital of the company amounted to £1,250 of fully paid-up £1 shares. The company had not paid its way for the last three years, and had gone back during that time about £900. On the 25th January, at the annual general meeting of shareholders, it appeared from the accounts submitted that the company was still losing money, and it was then decided that a special general meeting of shareholders should be convened for Friday, 8th inst., for the purpose of taking into consideration and finally deciding upon an offer to take over the assets and the liabilities of the company, exclusive of the shareholders' capital account, and to pay to each shareholder 2s. 6d. per share. The offer was made by Gert Joel Hoffman, who for many years had been secretary of the company, and to whom the company was indebted in all in about £1,100. The offer was rejected at the special meeting, the general feeling being that the assets of the company were of such value that shareholders might fairly expect upon realisation.

ation thereof to obtain considerably more than 2s. 6d. a share. Indeed, if the assets were judiciously realised, the company would probably return to the shareholders 10s. or 15s. in the £. The meeting then resolved to call for tenders for the company's assets as a going concern, and tenders had already been advertised for. After the meeting had rejected the offer made by Gert J. Hoffman, the latter informed the meeting that he would have nothing more to do with the company, by which those present understood he resigned his position. Mr. Hoffman then asked that the election of officers should be proceeded with, but the chairman ruled that as the meeting was called for an especial purpose, officers could not be elected thereat. On the 12th inst., petitioners received notice from Mr. J. C. de Korte, attorney for Hoffman, giving them three months' notice to pay up the sum of £200, owing on a notarial bond, with interest. Summons was served on petitioners requiring payment of liabilities, amounting, without interest, to £827 3s. 3d., secured by mortgage on landed properties. The summons was made returnable on the 15th inst., less than three days from the date of service. No special general meeting of the company could be held under seven days' notice, so that petitioners were unable to consult the shareholders in the matter. The assets of the company consisted of landed property, stock-in-trade, horses, etc. The landed property was valued for municipal purposes at £1,750, while the movable assets were worth £500 or thereabouts; in all £2,250. The total indebtedness of the company at the 31st December last, exclusive of liabilities of shareholders, in respect of their shares, was £1,217 3s. 3d. Petitioners were satisfied the assets, if judiciously realised, would not only pay the debts of the company, but also leave considerable surplus for division among the shareholders. The result of the judgment being obtained by Hoffman, and the attachment of the assets of the company would be entirely to destroy the goodwill of the company as a going concern, and cause irreparable damage to it, and if a judicial sale were carried through in the present state of depression, great loss would be sustained by the shareholders. It was quite clear that the company was unable to pay its debts without realisation of its assets, and petitioners considered that it was just and equitable that the company should be wound up. In order that the value of the assets might not be unnecessarily depreciated, it was advisable that its business should be continued, so that, if possible, sale thereof might be made as a going concern, and that a liquidator be appointed, and that Mr. George William Steytler, in his capacity as the secretary of the Colonial Orphan Chamber and Trust Co., should be appointed as official liquidator.

A further affidavit by Joseph Fock set out that at the present time contracts were in force with the Colonial Government in respect of burials from Valkenberg Asylum and Woodstock Morgue. Four horses belonging to the company required to be fed. There was only sufficient forage to last to Saturday next. Two drivers and a clerk, in addition to the manager, required to be paid. The manager was paralysed, and unable to carry out his duties.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones for applicants; Mr. Burton for certain creditors and shareholders.

Mr. Burton took a preliminary objection that the petitioners had no locus standi to petition for the winding up of the company. By section 137 of the Companies' Act of 1892 a company could only be wound up on the petition of the company itself, or one or more creditors or contributories. The petitioners did not fall under any of these heads.

Mr. Jones contended that two of the petitioners were contributories. They were holders of fully paid-up shares, and a holder of fully paid-up shares was a contributor. This had been decided in England under section 74 of the Act of 1882, in the case In re National Savings Bank Co. (1866 L.R., 1 Ch., 547). Counsel also quoted Lindley on Company Law (sixth edition, vol. II., pp. 845 and 850). The Court could wind up a company when it was just and equitable to do so.

De Villiers, C.J.: I am not prepared to dissent from the decision in the English case just cited. It was held by the Master of the Rolls under a section of the English Act, which for the purposes of this case, is identical with the section now in question, that the holder of fully paid up shares in a limited liability company is entitled to present a petition for the winding up of such company. That decision was affirmed by a very strong Court of Appeal, and although there is much to be said in favour of the contrary view, I am inclined, on the whole, to adopt the reasoning of the Court of Appeal.

His Lordship ordered that Messrs. J. H. Roos and George William Steytler, in their respective capacities as secretary of the Board of Executors and secretary of the Colonial Orphan Chamber and Trust Company, be appointed official liquidators, with powers under section 149 of the Act. In giving judgment, His Lordship said he thought it was in the best interests of all parties that the company should be wound up, and that the winding up should take place at once. The company seemed to have failed wholly to carry out its objects, and there appeared to be no chance of it retrieving its position.

Ex parte ESTATE LUCK.

Mr. Lewis, for the petitioner, Annie Marie Luck, executrix testamentary in the estate of her late husband, Carl August Luck, moved for leave to raise a mortgage of £200 on certain property to enable petitioner to complete certain work which enhanced the value of the estate.

Application granted.

Ex parte COSSLY.

Mr. Lewis moved for leave to sue in forma pauperis for damages for breach of contract, but counsel said he was not prepared to certify at present.

An order was granted authorising counsel to take the record.

Ex parte WRIGHT.

Mr. J. E. K. de Villiers moved, on behalf of the executrix, for leave to transfer certain property, which she had purchased at a public auction, for £1,450, in the sale of her late husband's estate.

Granted.

Ex parte SILBERMAN.

Mr. Lewis moved for leave to extend the return day. The publication was omitted from the "Gazette."

Return day extended to the second day of next term; one publication in the "Gazette."

VAN BOOYEN AND OTHERS V. MCKAY.

Mr. Molteno said this was the return day of a rule nisi, calling on the respondent to pass transfer of certain property upon the applicants' paying the balance of the purchase price, and restraining respondent from passing transfer to other persons.

Rule made absolute.

CAPE ELECTRIC TRAMWAYS CO., LTD.
V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Burton, for the plaintiffs, moved to have an award of arbitrators made a Rule of Court, and an order on the respondents to pay the costs.

Mr. Searle, K.C., appeared to consent on behalf of the respondents.

Award made a Rule of Court, with costs.

PEPPER V. PANTRY.

Mr. Burton, for the defendant (applicant), moved for removal of bar and removal of the trial to the Circuit Court at Beaufort West. There was a consent paper from the plaintiff.

Application granted.

OTTESTROM V. STEPHAN BROS.

Mr. Burton, for the defendants, moved as a matter of urgency for a postponement of the commission fixed to take evidence at Port Nolloth, until March 15, 1907. The applicants were put to great difficulty and inconvenience to enable them to get anyone to go to Port Nolloth to represent them, as there were no legal practitioners in Port Nolloth.

[De Villiers, C.J.: When does the next boat leave for Port Nolloth?]

Mr. Van der Byl (for respondent): To-morrow night.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Why cannot you send your man?]

Mr. Burton said there would be considerable difficulty in getting a man to go at such short notice without a good fee.

De Villiers, C.J., said he did not think it fair that the plaintiff, who was suing as a pauper, should have this matter further postponed, and run the risk of losing witnesses. There was ample time before to-morrow to instruct counsel, attorneys, or their clerks to go to Port Nolloth for the purpose. The application must be refused.

SOTEWU V. NOSENTI.

1907.
Feb. 21st.
" 27th.

Review—Illegality of proceedings
—Transkeian Appeal Court.

The appellant, against whom judgment was given in a Transkeian Magistrate's Court at the suit of the respondent, appealed to the Native Appeal Court, which, finding that the appellant had been unable to produce all his evidence before the Magistrate, remitted the case to the Magistrate, with the object of having such further evidence taken. The defendant, on frivolous grounds, refused to produce such further evidence, whereupon the Appeal Court dismissed the appeal.

Held on summons for review, that there was no ground for setting aside the proceedings of the Magistrate's Court.

Mr. Benjamin, for the applicant, said this was a case for review, under Rule 190, and it ought to have been set down for a Monday or a Wednesday. Summons was issued before the new rules came into force.

Mr. Alexander, for the respondent, took a preliminary objection that there was no right of review as against the Court of Appeal in native cases.

His Lordship said he would look into the papers, and before deciding upon the preliminary point, he should like to consider the facts.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Postea (February 27th).

De Villiers, C.J.: This case was heard before me sitting alone, and was heard before me sitting alone, and it came before the Court by way of summons against the Magistrate of Willowvale and also against the Native Appeal Court for the Transkei to show cause why certain proceedings should not be set aside by reason of the gross irregularity in the said proceedings. (a) In that the said first-mentioned Magistrate unlawfully and unjustly declined to allow a postponement of the proceedings to enable the said Sotewu (the defendant) to be represented by his legal adviser, who was then absent from the district in which the said Magistrate was sitting, and unable to be present, the said defendant being a native unskilled in the practice, and procedure of courts of law, and thereby being debarred from presenting the facts of his case before the said Magistrate; (b) in that the Magistrate thereupon gave judgment for the said Nosenti (the plaintiff) upon certain evidence which the said Magistrate did not consider established the said plaintiff's claim, and upon certain additional evidence "which he considered meagre and unsatisfactory." It appears that judgment was given for the plaintiff by the Magistrate's Court of Willowvale, whereupon the defendant appealed to the Transkeian Appeal Court. The Appeal Court remitted the case to the Magistrate to enable him to take evidence on behalf of the defendant. Then the case being again called in the Magistrate's Court, the defendant refused to proceed with the defence on the ground that his attorney was not there, although the attorney had left a representative for the purpose. What took place when the matter again came before the Transkeian Appeal Court would appear from the following note on the record: "When the case of Sotewu v. Nosenti was heard at the sitting of the Native Appeal Court, at Butterworth, on the 6th November, 1906, the grounds upon which it is now sought to have the proceedings reviewed and set aside, were not argued, although the Court, under the 9th section of Proclamation, No. 391, of 1894, had power to deal with such questions. It will be seen by the record that the attorney for the appellant only applied to have the case returned to the Magistrate to enable the evidence for the defence to be taken, and, as this had already been done once and the appellant had refused to give evidence, the application was refused." From this it is clear, therefore, that when the Magistrate first came before the Court of Appeal, they sent the case back to the Magistrate to take further evidence, and that the appellant then refused to give evidence. Well, then, naturally the Appeal Court went on with the case, and this is what appears on the record: "At the last hearing of this case the Court, as an act of grace, returned the case to the Resident Magistrate, to enable the present appellant to lead his evidence. This he has deliberately refused to do. The evidence taken in the several actions between the parties shows clearly that the respondent had certain cattle, being the increase of an animal given to her by her late husband, and it is also clear that there are cattle in the estate of the right-hand house of Mpiyana accruing from the dowries paid for the daughters of that house, of which the minor Tubeni is the heir; this boy, although he is unable to give the exact details of the cattle, states that they now number 26 head, and there is no reason, in the absence of any rebutting evidence, to discredit his statement. The appeal is dismissed, with costs." Thereupon the applicant sought, by procedure in review, to set aside the original proceedings in the Magistrate's Court by reason of their irregularity. In my opinion, even if he had ground of complaint as to what took place at the first hearing, he had no ground of complaint after he had on most frivolous grounds, refused to take advantage of the opportunity given to him by the Transkeian Appeal Court to produce all the evidence that could be given on his behalf. I am of opinion that the application must be refused with costs.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

MAZZUR V. MEINTJES. { 1907.
Feb. 22nd.

This was an action brought by Morris Mazzur, horse and cattle dealer, of Cape Town, against Stephen Meintjes, farmer, Dwaalfontein, district of Hanover, to recover two sums of £65, purchase price of two mares and foals and £7 2s carriage.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that he sold to defendant on the 2nd November, 1906, certain two mares and foals for £65, delivery to be taken at the railway station, Cape Town. The animals were duly trucked for the plaintiff at the railway station, on or about the 16th November, in sound condition, and consigned to defendant at Dwaal Siding, where they arrived on or about the 19th November. Plaintiff, on behalf and at the request of the defendant, expended £7 2s. in and about the carriage of the animals. Plaintiff duly delivered the said animals, but defendant refused to pay the two sums of £65 and £7 2s. respectively.

Defendant, in his plea, said that the animals arrived at Dwaal Siding, on the 18th November. A reservation was made that the foals would presently be worth £60, and would be worth £200 in about a year. The mares were to be sound and in fair condition. Defendant did not admit that plaintiff expended £7 2s., and put the plaintiff to proof thereof, and did not admit liability for such expenditure. He said specially that the two foals delivered were worthless. The mares, as well as the foals, were not sound or in fair condition. Both mares were in low condition. One was gone in the left hind leg. One foal was deformed in both his legs, and had clubbed feet and an open wound on one side, and the other had a deformed leg and one clubbed foot, and was lame. Defendant claimed in reconvention £50 as and for damages by reason of the plaintiff's failure to deliver the mares or foals in sound or fair condition.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), was for plaintiff; Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. De Waal) was for defendant.

Mr. Benjamin said he would admit that £7 2s. was expended by plaintiff for carriage of the animals.

Morris Mazzur (the plaintiff) said he carried on business in Sir George Grey-street, Cape Town. In October last, while he was returning from Johannesburg, he met defendant at Naauwpoort, and travelled with him as far as Dwaal Siding, where defendant alighted. In consequence of a talk they had about brood mares, correspondence passed between them, and eventually a sale was concluded on the 2nd November. Witness had got a number of mares from young Mr. Mellish, son of the late Mr. E. F. H. Mellish.

Mr. Searle read the correspondence which passed between the parties concerning the sale.

Witness said that he wrote a letter to defendant on the 16th November, in which he stated that the animals he was sending would be all right in a few days after they had been on the veld. He had been unable to trace this letter, but he was quite sure that he posted it to the defendant. Defendant telegraphed that the horses, which had arrived, were the most miserable creatures he had ever seen, and he did not want them at any price. Further correspondence ensued.

Mr. Searle said that the animals remained in the hands of the Railway Department; one died, and the rest were eventually sold.

Witness (in further evidence) said that the mares were called Fanny and Prosperity, and were both bought from Mr. Mellish—the former on the 28th September and the latter on the 17th October. The animals remained on the farm Mossel Bank, Mellish's Siding, until the 13th November. He sent out a man for the animals, and had them brought in by road. The mares had foaled in September. For brood mares he considered that they were in good condition. He made arrangements for the mares to be looked after by a boy while on the railway. Mr. Blaine was present when the horses were trucked. The horses walked all right. They had not deformed feet. There was no indication that one of the mares was gone in her left hind leg. There was nothing wrong with any of the animals when they were put into the trucks. He had not seen a wound on the colt's side. He had had no intimation that it had been cut by barbed wire. While the colt was in his possession he did not see any cut upon her.

By the Court: Witness sold the horses as in sound condition.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Witness had not been very anxious to sell the animals to the defendant. He had heard that the horses had since been sold by the Railway Department. He was not aware of the results of the sale. He did not know that the three animals sold, one of the mares having died, had realised £16 10s. by auction at Naauwpoort. He did not know that the cost of keep to the Railway Department exceeded the price made by the animals. He was sure that neither of the mares had a club foot.

Joseph Watkins, formerly in plaintiff's employ, said that he had had 25 years' experience of horses, and was now in the service of Fillis's Circus. He brought the mares and foals by road from Mossel Bank in November last. Mossel Bank was near Klipheuwel. The mares were in the best of condition for brood mares. The foals walked all right; neither of them was deformed or club-footed. The colt ran headlong into barbed wire, and got a "bit of a scratch," which was "absolutely nothing." Anyone looking at the foal would not notice the scratch. The animals, after reaching Cape Town, remained in Mr. Mazzur's stables until they were trucked. There was nothing wrong with the animals, except that the foals were rather sore-footed through having travelled on a hard road. There was no deformity about the animals. The foals ran about quite freely when on the way to the station to be despatched. The mares were Cleveland bays. One of them was rather aged, but otherwise she was a grand mare. She was 15 years old. The other mare was nine years old.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: When the horses were trucked the foals were not suffering from sore feet. The wound on the filly had dried up. He thought that Mr. Meintjes made a good bargain in getting the animals for £65.

Peter Dixon, an employee of the C.G.R., said that he was in charge of the trucking operations at the goods station. He saw the animals brought in by Mr. Mazzur, and found nothing wrong with any of them. It was his custom to look at stock and to make a note if he saw anything wrong.

Other evidence was also given, one of the witnesses stating that he saw the mares and foals at Mellish's farm, and offered £60 for them.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Stephen Meintjes (the defendant) said that on the 18th November he received an intimation from the stationmaster at Dwaal that the animals had arrived. He went to the station, and the animals were liberated from the truck into the small kraal. He did not find any fault with the animals so far as flesh was concerned, but they were seriously wanting as regarded their limbs. The little filly had one club foot and limped. The colt had both feet clubbed and travelled on its toes. It also had an ulcerated wound on its side. He did not think the wound could have been caused by collision with the truck.

[Hopley, J.: It seemed to be well bred, according to its pedigree?]

Witness: It was the pedigree that tempted me to buy the foal. In further evidence, witness said that during the past ten years he had dealt in better class horses instead of the ordinary farm horse. The dark brown mare had a defect in its left hind leg. He really made the purchase for the sake of the foals. He had been anxious to get the young stock bred by Mr. Mellish. He had been anxiously looking forward to the arrival of the animals, seeing that they were young stock from Mr. Mellish's farm. Witness had the animals examined by certain farmers in the district. A few days later the horses and foals were removed to Naauwpoort and were subsequently sold by auction on the 22nd December in the presence of a good number of farmers. The price realised was £16 odd.

By the Court: No pedigrees were produced at the sale. He had returned the originals to Mr. Mazzur, and he had sent the copies to his attorney.

Witness, in further evidence, said that the foals were radically wrong in their hoofs. The defects were such as could not have been caused within the period occupied by the railway journey. He did not receive a letter dated 16th November from plaintiff, saying that the horses should be rested for a few days.

By the Court: Witness did not take possession of the animals, because he wanted to make it quite clear to plaintiff that he would not accept delivery and that the horses were there at his risk.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: The defects in the foals were of some considerable standing. He was not complaining about the animals being cramped; he was complaining about their being club-footed. He did not know whether the defects existed at birth, but, if they did not, they were developed soon afterwards. The animals were three days at Dwaal siding. Excepting that they were sent to water twice a day they were kept in the truck or the kraal.

Corroborative evidence as to the state of the animals was given by Hendrik S. van der Merwe, farmer, Hanover district, and Johannes F. Celliers, farmer, also of Hanover district, both of whom saw the animals after they had been received at Dwaal siding.

Alex. R. Johnson, stationmaster at Dwaal siding, said one of the foals when it arrived stood on its four toes, and the other foal had what was called a club foot. One also had an ulcerated wound on its side of some standing. The animals were at Dwaal siding three days, and during the whole of the time the foals stood in the same fashion.

Mr. Benjamin closed his case.

Plaintiff (recalled by the Court) said that he gave Mr. Mellish £55 for the mares and foals.

Percy Andrew Melkish (called at the request of the Court) said that the foals were both sired by King Fred. He delivered the animals to Mr. Mazzur's man at the farm. He was not aware that any of the stock by King Fred had had club feet. He did not even know what a club foot in a horse was. The hoofs of the foals were all right when he delivered the animals to Watkins. Their forelegs appeared to be rather stiff. He put that down to the stables being wet. The animals were sold cheap because they had to sell off the stock in connection with the estate of his late father.

Mr. Searle having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J.: The sole question to be determined in this case is whether the animals were delivered in the trucks at Cape Town station in such a condition that the Court must hold that they were sound. If they were, and if they got damaged in any way in the truck between Cape Town and Dwaal, that risk would be the defendant's. On the other hand, if the Court found that they were not sound when they were put in the trucks, the plaintiff must be held responsible. These were young foals that were with their dams, and it seems to me that to bring them for 26 miles over a hard road did not show any great knowledge of horsemanship. It is upon the soundness or otherwise of these two foals that the decision of this case must depend. As to the witnesses called by the plaintiff, they seem to have been more concerned about the purchase of the mares than the foals, and I do not think they gave such close observation to the condition of the foals as the defendant and those who saw the foals at Dwaal did. We have also the evidence of Mr. Mellish that the foals showed a stiffness in the forelegs while they were in the stables. I do not think that that would be due to damp stables, but that it might have been the beginning of the mischief which was accentuated by the long journey over a hard road, and the railway journey, the result being that when the foals arrived at Dwaal the trouble clearly showed itself. A suppurating wound on one of the foals or a blister on one of the mares would not be sufficient to say that these animals were unsound, but it is undoubtedly unsoundness in an animal to be club-footed, and if, as I find, the colt and the filly were club footed, then the only conclusion I can come to is that the plaintiff has not made out his case. There is, however, something short still in the evidence. The people have not been called who bought the foals at Naauwpoort, and if it should appear that the foals are not now club-footed, then the plaintiff would have good cause for a further action against Mr. Meintjes. The judgment of the Court, therefore, will be absolution from the instance, with costs, defendant to be allowed his personal expenses.

Ex parte BOYES.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the attachment of certain funds in the hands of the Civil Commissioner of the Cape, balance of proceeds of a sale under a writ of execution in the case of J. M. Wilson and J. B. Eays.

Ordered that the sum of £12 8s. 2d. in the hands of the Civil Commissioner of the Cape and held on behalf of the debtor be declared executable, as prayed.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.)]

ADMISSION. { 1907.
{ Feb. 22nd.

Mr. Howes moved for the admission of Allan Emen Victor Fraser as an attorney, notary, and conveyancer.

Application granted and oath administered.

STEFFEN V. DE MARILLAC.

Mr. Pohl moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,054. The bond became due by non-payment of interest.

The defendant appeared in person and read affidavits which set out that he had an option on the purchase of a farm from the plaintiff, and upon his paying £700 in cash the plaintiff agreed to waive any right he had over the land, which had been divided into building lots and sold at the time of the public auction. Defendant suggested that if execution was issued that the execution should only apply to the portion of the land not sold by him. The purchase price had been paid to the plaintiff.

De Villiers, C.J., said he was not prepared to make the property executable. Provisional sentence would be granted with costs.

HOMES V. SCHACH.

Mr. Inchbold moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,000, with interest, and that the property be declared executable and the rents attached.

Order granted.

CAPE DISTRICT MUTUAL BUILDING SOCIETY V. JEFFERY.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds for £700, less £86 15s., and £8, with interest, and that the property be declared executable and the rents be attached. The bond became due through non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

FOUCHE V. FOUCHE.

Mr. Marais moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £90, with interest, and that the property be declared executable. The bond became due through non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

OTTOSTROM V. ESTATE { 1907.
STEPHAN. { Feb. 22nd.

Mr. Close moved as a matter of urgency to have a certain commission fixed to take the evidence of the plaintiff and his witnesses at Port Nolloth on the 26th inst. postponed, and for leave to an assumed executor in the estate to intervene in the case.

De Villiers, C.J., after hearing counsel in argument, did not see why the plaintiff should suffer. The commission would be heard on the 26th, and the application to intervene could be heard on Tuesday, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte KOTZE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to the executor in the estate to mortgage certain property to pay the costs in a certain action. The plaintiff got nothing out of the judgment, as defendant surrendered his estate after the action. Counsel put in the two bills of costs.

De Villiers, C.J., said before the Court gave the order it must be clearly satisfied that the costs were properly incurred before giving authority to mortgage an estate. Before giving an order he wished to have all the costs taxed.

Ex parte ESTATE DE BEER.

Mr. Marais moved for an order authorising the payment of certain money from the Guardian's Fund to curators in the estate. The debts were contracted on behalf of two minors.

Order granted.

Ex parte BYDELL.

Mr. Roux moved for leave to the petitioner to sell or mortgage certain property. The property was registered in the name of petitioner's husband, to whom she was married in community of property, but she had not heard of him since 1894. Petitioner bought the property with her own money.

[De Villiers, C.J.: We can authorise a sale, but the difficulty comes when you come to transfer. How is the transfer to be effected if the man is not here?]

Mr. Roux: We might assume his death.

A rule nisi was granted calling on Solomon Bydell and all concerned to show cause on April 10th why petitioner should not be allowed to sell the erf in question, and failing transfer by Solomon Bydell, why she should not be allowed to pass transfer, one publication in "Kokstad Advertiser."

LAZARUS V. ESTATE LAZARUS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones appeared for the parties who were plaintiffs in the action. Mr. Close was for Messrs. Morris and Drabbe; Mr. Swift was for the executors; and Dr. Rainsford appeared as curator ad litem to the minors, who were defendants in the action. Mr. Jones moved to have a certain agreement between the parties made a rule of Court.

Mr. Close said the testator died on the 5th May, 1899, leaving a will and a number of children. The will became a matter for decision by a special case, and the petitioners were plaintiffs in the action, and asked for the appointment of a curator ad litem to certain three children of one Sarah, the daughter of Lazarus, who died some two years after the testator. Counsel represented Morris, who married Sarah, and he was father to the children represented by Mr. Rainsford. Before her death Sarah made a will, and appointed his client executor to the will. Counsel opposed the application.

De Villiers, C.J., said it would be a great pity if everything that had been done should be undone. The respondent, represented by Mr. Close, would consider his position with a view of coming to an amicable settlement. The further hearing of the application would be postponed, in order to enable all persons interested in the settlement to come to an amicable arrangement, and if they failed to do this, the matter could be mentioned again, the question of costs to stand over.

ST. JOHN'S LODGE BENEFIT SOCIETY V. COATES AND COTTERELL.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the applicant, and Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the respondent. The application was for the setting aside of an order which his lordship granted some time ago in this case between the same parties. The order, which was as follows, was granted, pending an action to be brought by the respondent: "(a) cancelling a resolution to the effect that the said St. John's Benefit Society in future work under the charter of England, and that the sum of £10 be paid out of the funds of the society for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the initiation of twelve of the members into the British Order of Free Gardeners, passed at a meeting of the members, to be convened for the purpose at Wynberg; (b) declaring the resolution to be expunged from the minutes; (c) an interdict restraining the secretary or any other member from paying out any money for the purpose contemplated by the resolution pending an action to be forthwith instituted by applicants to have the matter properly decided." Counsel read an affidavit, which set out that the working of the society had been to some extent restricted through the order.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan read a replying affidavit, which set out that the respondent could not proceed with the action until he had inspection of the letter books, roll of membership, and other documents belonging to the society. It was the intention of the society to proceed under the new English order. Counsel's client was prepared to proceed forthwith.

It was ordered that the respondent should bring his action for a declaration of rights during next term, failing which the order of 2nd February, 1906, be dissolved, with costs, the costs of the application to be costs in the cause.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Mr. Justice LAURENCE and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

TABLE BAY HARBOUR BOARD
V. CAPE TOWN TOWN
COUNCIL. 1907.
Feb. 25th.

Cape Town Municipal Act (26 of 1893)—Valuation of property.

The respondent Town Council, under its Act (26 of 1893), caused a valuation of immovable property to be made, including some property in the occupation of the applicant Board. The Board applied for an order declaring that such property was not liable under the Act to be rated.

Held, that the Council was justified under the 87th section in having the valuation made, and that until a rate was imposed on the property, the Board had no ground of complaint.

This was an application upon notice calling upon respondents to show cause why (a) the properties mentioned in the special interim valuation 1906, which was examined by the Valuation Court of the Town Council on the 3rd December, 1906, should not be declared non-rateable, and, failing which (b) the decision of the said Valuation Court, with reference to the value of certain of the said properties, should not be reviewed, and the valuation made by the said Court set aside, or reduced, with costs.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. M. Bisset), was for applicants; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. W. Porter Buchanan), was for respondents.

De Villiers, C.J., asked counsel whether this matter was likely to occupy any considerable time.

Mr. Schreiner said he thought it would, as it would be necessary to analyse about 45 different properties.

Mr. Searle said that the proceedings might be shortened a good deal if he stated that he proposed to take a preliminary objection with regard to half the matter being heard on motion at all. One portion of the matter was an appeal from the Valuation Court, which course was provided for in the Act. Applicants said that the valuations were too high. In addition to that, there was another part, quite separate, under which the Harbour Board wished to obtain a declaration that they were not liable to be rated at all with regard to certain property. His (Mr. Searle's) position was that he took no exception to the valuations being argued, but he did take exception to a declaration on motion as to property being rateable.

De Villiers, C.J., said he thought it would be very inconvenient to hear both a declaration and an appeal at the same time.

Mr. Schreiner said that the real point was that the Act, of course, provided for a review from decisions of the Cape Town Council with regard to the rating of property. The Harbour Board took exception, both on the ground that the properties were exempt, and also to the valuations of the property. His learned friend was willing to go into the question of the valuations, but he did not want to discuss the question of the exemptions. Counsel submitted that upon the basis of the affidavits which had been filed, it would be possible for the Court to give a decision, and thus do away with another expensive and costly action for a declaration of rights. The matter involved a large range of property, that had never been valued before in the dock area. If it were not dealt with now, it would be difficult to get it tried before the next session of Parliament. It was a matter of so intricate and important a nature that it ought, after a judicial decision, to be put upon a clear basis in some Act of Parliament.

There was nothing more than pure law to be determined in the present motion. If they were to have a lawsuit, let them have a lawsuit on the whole line. The real dispute was the ratability of the property.

Mr. Searle (in reply to the Chief Justice) said, in regard to the use of the properties, they had got a general statement that they were used for harbour purposes. There were certain of the properties as to which there was a dispute upon which he was not prepared to accept their somewhat general evidence. Under the Act 26 of 1893, the Town Council was bound to value all property, for whatever purpose it may be used. Counsel was instructed that the Town Council intended to demand rates on these properties, although it had not yet done so. Counsel was prepared to go on with the case, and put before the Court any information in his power.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You cannot have a claim for a declaration until there has been an infringement of your right. What infringement of rights of your client has there been?]

Mr. Schreiner: There is the statutory assertion that our property is rateable property.

[De Villiers, C.J., said it appeared to him that the matter had not reached a stage at which the Court was in a position to make any declaration. The 87th section of the Act of 1893 enjoined upon the Council a duty of from time to time causing a valuation of immovable property within the municipality to be made by one or more competent persons, who shall be sworn appraisers. The 96th section made it lawful and competent for the Council to levy the rate, and until that rate had been levied, there was no ground of objection. It might well be that there was a private intimation to the applicants that there would be a rate, but there was no grievance and no infringement of a right until there was actual levying of the rate. It appeared to him the applicant should await the levying of the rate before he objected to the valuation of the properties. He was of opinion that the first part of the application could not be allowed. The next was why the decision should not be reviewed and the valuation made by the Court set aside or reduced, with costs.

Mr. Searle said the proper procedure was to bring the actual valuation of the Court under review.

Mr. Schreiner said he did not think the matter of such importance to take up the time of the Court to secure only reductions.

De Villiers, C.J., said the whole of the Court was of opinion, although there was no order on this application, that the question of costs should be reserved.

Laurence and Hopley, J. J., concurred.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice LAURENCE and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

KEHRMANN AND CO. V. { 1907.
POTTS. { Feb. 25th.

Sale and purchase—Delivery.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Acting Resident Magistrate of Mount Currie, sitting at Kokstad, in an action brought by the appellants against respondent to recover £55 10s. 6d. for certain goods sold, or, in the alternative, for damages for failing to take delivery, and also for carriage. The Magistrate had given absolution from the instance.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for appellants; Mr. Benjamin was for respondent.

Mr. Buchanan said that the Magistrate, in his judgment, went through practically all the facts, and came to the conclusion that he could not decide the case without the evidence of Patterson, who was the traveller of the plaintiff firm, and who received the order in question from the defendant. Patterson, it seemed, had left the country, and was believed to be in Scotland, but his address was not known. The question was raised as to whether it was not a condition of the order that delivery should not be made until the defendant told the plaintiffs to despatch the goods. Potts had had a fire on his premises, and he said he would not want delivery until he had settled with the insurance company. Counsel submitted that the Magistrate was wrong in saying that there was no evidence that this condition was made, and argued that the evidence of the documents and the conduct of the defendant showed that this condition had not been attached to the order. He submitted on all the facts the case should be sent back to the Magistrate for re-hearing as to the question of damages.

Mr. Benjamin said he relied upon the final part of the Magistrate's reasons, where he said he did not feel justified in giving judgment against the defendant without hearing Patterson's evidence. That was the only judgment which the Magistrate could give on the matter. Here was a question as to whether there was a firm contract entered into between the parties, or a provisional contract. The evidence given before the Court was that of the defendant himself. Counsel submitted it was more in the nature of what Pollock called an illusory promise.

Laurence, J.: This is one of those cases in which the Court has to deal with ambiguous phrases used by men of business, who naturally have not always a lawyer at their elbow. The action is for the value of goods, £55 10s. 6d., which, according to the summons, were sold by the plaintiff, a firm of merchants carrying on business at Durban, to the defendant, who seemed to be a country storekeeper in Griqualand East. They claimed for the value of the goods sold, and in the alternative £20 for damages, which they had sustained on this order through the defendants' conduct in the matter. There was a small matter of 12s., but the real question was about this order of goods alleged to have been given by the defendant to their traveller, a certain Mr. Patterson, when he visited him at his store in September, 1905. Now, the order was apparently for goods of a miscellaneous description, such as an up-country trader might want. The order was given to this traveller, and before this there was some little unpleasantness between the plaintiff firm and the defendant, which might possibly account to some extent for his failure to reply to the proper and business-like communications, which they sent in connection with this order. After the order was given, the defendant wrote to the plaintiff that he did not want the goods despatched until he would let them know further, at any rate, not until he had settled with the insurance company. From that he presumed the defendant had some claim against some insurance company, that the matter was still pending, and that the insurance company might dispute the claim or offer some compromise or other things might happen to render the date of settlement of an uncertain character. On receipt of the order from Patterson, the plaintiff collected together the goods, and packed them in cases, and held them at the defendants' disposal. From time to time they wrote one or two letters asking when these goods were to be despatched, and one in particular on the 21st November, in which it appeared for the first time they stated specifically that the goods were packed, and as they understood that the insurance company effected a settlement, they would like to have early instructions. The defendant gave no answer at all to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff then put the matter in the hands of their attorney. The Magistrate gave absolution from the instance, with costs, except in regard to the small amount which was immaterial to this case. The first question was, could the plaintiff recover the value of these goods which he alleged were sold and not delivered. As these had been no delivery, he did not think the plaintiff could succeed on the claim. The next point was, could he claim damages by reason of the defendant's breach of contract, damages alleged to have taken place in the packing of the goods when the order was received, and subsequently unpacking them, and the depreciation owing to the fact of their being packed in cases. The plaintiff claimed £20, and he said that was what he estimated to be a fair amount of his damages. Well, he did not know that he would not say that the plaintiff might have taken a bolder course, and possibly with more success than the course he adopted. That was when he found that the defendant had got a settlement with the insurance company he was not certain if there had been a tender of the goods that an action would not have lain for goods sold and delivered. He certainly thought it would have been more prudent for the plaintiffs to have suspended the packing of the goods until there were more definite instructions that the goods were likely to be wanted. It was still open for the plaintiff to take steps to take Patterson's evidence, and prove what actual damage they sustained by the second count of the summons. There was the further fact in the case that the Magistrate had before the uncontradicted evidence of the defendant as to what took place between him and Patterson. Having given instructions to Patterson, the defendant might believe there was no obligation upon him to develop the matter in detail in the letter he wrote to Patterson's principal. If, therefore, the order to the plaintiff was subject to the condition that the goods were not to be packed or despatched until a future event, the happening of which was uncertain, the plaintiff was not now in a position to obtain damages for the costs of the packing or such other process. He did not think the Court was justified in remitting to the Magistrate for further evidence on behalf of the plaintiff. If the plaintiff thought it desirable, he could have further evidence, as the opportunity was given by the form in which the Magistrate gave his judgment. The appeal would be dismissed with costs.

Hopley, J., concurred.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

DESCO V. SANTICH.

{ 1907.
{ Feb. 26th.

This was an action brought by an Austrian named Giovanni Desco, of Cape Town, against Orsolina Santich, of Cape Town, for damages for breach of engagement to marry.

A tender had been made by defendant, and in the replication plaintiff said that was a sufficient tender, but, subsequent to the replication, correspondence ensued between the parties, and plaintiff's attorney at one stage of the proceedings offered to accept defendant's tender, except that he made certain additions in regard to small items which were repudiated by the defendant, but subsequently to that, the plaintiff was prepared to take judgment in terms of the tender.

Mr. Alexander was for plaintiff; Mr. Upington was for defendant.

Counsel stated that plaintiff was in court, and he seemed to be dissatisfied with that course. Under the circumstances, he (counsel) thought he could not usefully occupy the time of the Court. He therefore retired from the case.

Plaintiff thereupon conducted his own case, and went into the box and gave evidence through an interpreter. He said that he was suing defendant for £600 damages for breach of promise of marriage. Witness was a widower, and had a son and daughter, and defendant was a widow and had six children. He had had work as a stone cutter in the Calvinia district. Before he went up to the work defendant promised that she would marry him in six months. A few days before he went away she said, "Look, Desco, what a nice opportunity; a young man came and asked me in marriage." Witness, in order to test her sincerity, told her to marry this young man, but she said she would marry witness. Defendant carried on business as a barkeeper at the Star Hotel, and had means. Witness returned from the country in order to prepare for the marriage. On the 25th July an ante-nuptial contract was executed. They intended to be married on the 6th August. The ceremony was postponed from day to day until the 8th August, when this young lover of hers came and presented her with a button-hole. On the following day when witness went to work as usual in the bar she told him she was not going to get married, and ordered him to go away. She asked if he was going to kill her, but he said he would take her to the Court. Witness had incurred some expense in giving presents to the defendant.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How do you say you have sustained £600 damages?]

Witness: Because of the time I have lost in staying down here. £250, and the injury to my honour, £300.

Witness, in further evidence, said that defendant had said, "It is very nice here, because you can play with the men just as you like and you are not condemned by the Court."

By the Court: He did not know whether in his native country a man could get damages from a woman for breach of promise.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I am afraid he could not.]

Mora Otavio, an Italian mason, said that if plaintiff had continued working, he could have taken on work by contract at 25s. to 30s. a day. Up to April plaintiff was earning 16s. a day. On the 6th August two other masons came up and gave out that the plaintiff was serving in the bar and was married.

Another Italian also gave evidence as to defendant having said that plaintiff came to her house, and that he would one day come for her.

Defendant, who gave evidence through an interpreter, said that she managed the Star Hotel. The hotel had belonged to her husband. They made a joint will, which gave the children an interest in the hotel. She admitted having promised to marry the plaintiff, and having signed an ante-nuptial contract. Before she could marry, she had to file an inventory of the property in the joint estate. This gave her a good deal of worry. Plaintiff came down, and kept on urging her to marry him. She told him to wait, and he then seemed to get annoyed. He then told her that he would bring her into court, and she told him to go away. He sent a demand next day for £600, and she tendered to pay £10 odd, to return a ring and certain dress material. She would not then have been willing to marry him. She had been prepared to return to him all the things he had given her. Plaintiff had never complained to her that he had lost work on her account.

Cross-examined: Her daughter had always been opposed to witness marrying the defendant. Defendant threatened to kill her if she did not become his wife.

Plaintiff: No.

By the Court: It was not true that after the contract had been drawn up another young man came along and proposed marriage to her. She was not engaged to another man.

Plaintiff having addressed the Court, De Villiers, C.J.: Plaintiff would have acted wisely in accepting the tender which was made by the defendant. There is no doubt that his feelings were hurt by the refusal of this lady to marry him, but it is not usual in this Court to give damages to a man for the refusal of a woman to marry him, unless the man can clearly prove the actual damages which he has sustained. The damages which he mentions now are wholly indirect damages; there is nothing to show direct damages. When this lady refused to marry him, he could have gone to his work, and her refusal to marry him did not in any way interfere with his facilities for obtaining work, but, instead of that, he seems to have remained here for the purpose of this lawsuit; and in that way could not earn money, but that does not entitle him to damages for the loss of that money. Defendant has made a very reasonable tender of actual expenditure by him on her behalf, with the exception of the petticoat, medicine, etc., which are not worth talking about, and for the amount tendered there will be judgment against the defendant. The Court will order that the defendant return the gold ring which plaintiff has given her, and that she also pay to him the sum of £17 19s., which is the value of the materials, etc., sent by him. Judgment accordingly, that defendant be ordered to return the ring and to pay the plaintiff £17 19s., and to pay the costs up to the 15th August, subsequent costs to be paid by the plaintiff.

JOSEPH V. ESTATE JOSEPH (1907.
AND OTHERS.) Feb. 26th.

Will — Reservatory clause — Unattested codicil.

At the foot of a will containing the reservatory clause, the testator added the following unattested disposition at a date subsequent to that of the will: "I cancel and make void the fourth clause of this my will, and bequeath the whole of my estate" in a certain manner.

Held, that in the absence of any statement by the testator that he was acting under the reservatory clause, or of anything to shew that he purported so to act, the unattested disposition could not be legally regarded as a valid testamentary disposition.

This was a special case brought by Jenny Joseph, as plaintiff, and the executor testamentary, under the will of the late Leopold Frank Joseph and others, as defendants, to determine the construction of certain codicils to the will.

The special case was set out in the following terms:

1. The plaintiff is Jenny Joseph (born Barnett), widow of the late Leopold Frank Joseph. The defendants are George Rothschild Joseph, of Port Elizabeth, in his capacity as executor dative of the estate of the said late Leopold Frank Joseph and Louis Edmund Benjamin, in his capacity as curator ad litem to Cyril Frank Joseph, Vera Constance Joseph, and Emmeline Rose Joseph, the minor children of the said late Leopold Frank Joseph and the plaintiff.

2. On or about the 6th day of February, 1888, the said Leopold Frank Joseph, then resident at Port Elizabeth, and unmarried, duly executed his last will.

3. By his said will the said Leopold Frank Joseph appointed Maurice Joseph and Frederick Maurice Joseph or the survivor of them to be the executors or executor of his said will.

4. By the second clause of the said will the said Leopold Frank Joseph directed his executors to devote the sum of £25 towards the purchase of a mourning ring, which he bequeathed to Constance Marion Webb, of Port Elizabeth.

5. By the third clause of the said will the said Leopold Frank Joseph bequeathed as a memento to each of his brothers living at his death a mourning ring, each of such rings to cost a sum of ten pounds (£10) sterling.

6. By the fourth clause of the said will the said Leopold Frank Joseph bequeathed the rest and residue of the whole of his estate, goods, chattels, and effects nothing whatsoever excepted to his mother Emma Joseph, whom he thereby instituted and appointed the sole heiress of the said residue of his estate and effects.

7. The said Leopold Frank Joseph in his said will reserved to himself the power to make all such alterations in or additions to the said will as he should think fit either by a separate act or at the foot thereof desiring that all such alterations or additions so made under his own signature should be held as valid and effectual as if they had been inserted in the said will.

8. On or about the 6th day of January, 1890, the said Leopold Frank Joseph did, in his own hand and upon the paper of the said will, write and sign the following codicil: "January, 6th, 1890: I bequeath my life policies to Jenny Barnett, of 2, Pearson-street, Port Elizabeth. Dated this 6th day of January, 1890. (Signed) Leopold Frank Joseph."

9. On the said 6th day of January, 1890, the said Leopold Frank Joseph was engaged to marry the plaintiff, then Miss Jenny Barnett. On the 24th day of March, 1890, the said parties executed an ante-nuptial contract, which was thereafter duly registered, whereby the said Leopold Frank Joseph, settled upon the plaintiff, then Miss Jenny Barnett, two insurance policies of £500 each on his life in the Colonial Mutual Life Assurance Society and furniture to the value of £1,000.

10. On or about the 26th day of March, 1890, the said Leopold Frank Joseph was married to the plaintiff at Port Elizabeth. There is issue of the marriage: the three children aforesaid, by name Cyril Frank Joseph, Vera Constance Joseph, and Emmeline Rose Joseph, who are minors.

11. On the 4th day of May, 1890, the said Leopold Frank Joseph, who was then married to the said plaintiff, did with his own hand, strike out the second clause and the fourth clause of the said will and write opposite to each such clause in the margin of the will the words "made void, May 4, 1890," with his initials.

12. On the said 4th day of May, 1890, the said Leopold Frank Joseph did in his own hand and upon the paper of the said will, write and sign the following codicil: "May 4th, 1890.—I cancel and make void the fourth clause of this my will, and bequeath the whole of my estate, goods, and chattels to my beloved wife, Jenny Joseph, whom I hereby institute and appoint the sole heiress of the said residue of my estate and effects. Dated this fourth day of May, 1890. (Signed) Leopold Frank Joseph."

13. After the said marriage of the said Leopold Frank Joseph and the plaintiff the said two insurance policies of £500 were allowed to lapse and a fresh insurance policy of £1,000 on the life of the said Leopold Frank Joseph was taken out in place thereof in the name of the plaintiff in the New York Mutual Life Insurance Society. On the death of the said Leopold Frank Joseph in 1906 the amount of the said policy was paid to the said plaintiff.

14. In the year 1903 the said Leopold Frank Joseph and the plaintiff removed from Port Elizabeth and removed to England, where they took up their residence. On March 11th, 1906, the said Leopold Frank Joseph died in England, leaving the plaintiff and the said children him surviving, and without having executed any further testamentary disposition in regard to his estate.

15. Neither of the executors named in the will took up appointment pursuant thereto, and the first defendant has been duly appointed and holds letters of administration as executor dative aforesaid.

16. On the 13th December, 1906, on the application of George Marquard Findlay, the duly appointed agent of the said Jenny Joseph, in her capacity of mother and natural guardian of the said minor children, the honourable the Supreme Court appointed Louis Edmund Benjamin to be curator ad litem in this suit to the said children.

17. The parties annex hereto copies of the wills and codicils, and beg leave to refer this honourable Court to the originals of the said will and codicils when the same are produced from the custody of the Master at the hearing of this suit.

18. The plaintiff contends: That the second and fourth clauses of the said will have been duly revoked and are of no force or effect.

19. The plaintiff further contends: That the codicils of the 6th January, 1890, and 4th May, 1890, were duly and legally executed in pursuance of the power reserved in the said will, and that the plaintiff is entitled under the codicil, dated the 4th May, 1890, to succeed to the whole estate of the late Leopold Frank Joseph.

20. The first defendant contends that the third clause of the will is of full force and effect. Save as aforesaid, he submits to the judgment of the Court.

21. The second defendant contends that the second and fourth clauses of the said will have been duly revoked and are of no force and effect.

22. The second defendant further contends that the codicils of 6th January, 1890, and 4th May, 1890, were not validly executed and are of no force or effect, and that the minor children of the late Leopold Frank Joseph are entitled to succeed as heirs ab intestato to the undisturbed portion of the estate of their father, that is to say, the whole estate save and except the sum of £30 bequeathed by the third clause of the will, dated 6th February, 1890, and save and except the insurance policy for the sum of £1,000 referred to in paragraph 13 hereof, and save and except the furniture referred to in paragraph 9.

23. Wherefore the parties pray for judgment on their respective contentions, and that this honourable Court may be pleased to direct as to their costs in this suit.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Russell), for plaintiff. Mr. Sutton for the executor dative. Mr. Benjamin, curator ad litem to the minor children of the marriage.

Mr. Schreiner, in argument, said two points arose: (1) That clauses 2 and 4 of the will were of no force and effect, having been erased by the testator with the intention of revoking them. He quoted Voet 28, 4, 3, and 4. (2) That the codicil of May 4, 1890, was of full force and effect. It was in the handwriting of the testator, signed by him, and at the foot of the will. It was a usual and common thing to refer specifically to the reservatory clause, but it was not necessary to use any specific form of words. In Sir John Wylde's will (B. 1873, 113), the codicil made no reference to the reservatory clause, and yet it was upheld. He also quoted Serfonteyn v. O'Hare (B. 1873, 49), and referred to the Digest (28, 5, 77), and 35, 1, 38), Bynkershoek (Bk. 3, 4, 389), Quaestiones Juris Privati, and Barjelijhe Rechtzaken (2, 16, 4), Lybrecht (Vol. I., 322 and 323), Van Leeuwen Censura Forensis (1, 3, 11, 10), Van der Keesell's Dictata (2, 2, 289), and Hollandische Consultation.

Mr. Benjamin said that the only question was what was necessary to give the reservatory clause effect. He relied on the case of Nelson v. Currey (U.S.C., 386), supported by Van der Wall v. Van der Wall's Executors, and followed in the Traneval case of Erasmus v. Erasmus' Executor (T.S.C.R. 843). The whole tendency of the decisions was jealousy to regard the exceptional cases of privileged wills. In Sir John Wylde's will the sole point was the appointment of an executor, and it did not appear that the codicil was ever before the Court. Further, the codicil purported to appoint an heir, and the authorities agreed this could not be done.

Mr. Schreiner having been heard in reply,

De Villiers, C.J.: There is considerable force in the argument of the learned counsel for the plaintiff, and if this were a case of first impression, I should certainly have taken time to consider my judgment. But it appears to me that the question raised in this case has been definitely decided by two judges in the Supreme Court. The first of these judgments was concurred in by a full bench, and I myself was a party to that judgment, and I am not prepared now to say that that judgment was wrong; on the contrary, I am confirmed by the arguments that the judgment was perfectly right. The only case in a court of this colony which has been cited now as throwing doubt upon the decision in the case of Nelson v. Currey and Others (4 Juta, 355) is the case relating to the will of the late Sir John Wylde (3 Buchanan, 113). The point raised there was whether a reservatory clause has force in an underhand will in the same manner as a notarial will. There was no one there to oppose letters being granted under the codicil, and the only person who raised any question was the Master, and he raised that technical point whether the reservatory clause would have force in an underhand will. It was assumed in that case, judging from the summary and from the report itself, that the testator had executed the codicil under the reservatory clause, and I can quite understand, therefore, that the learned judges, under these circumstances, would not closely scrutinize the will. It was assumed by everyone in that case that the codicil was under the reservatory clause. The fact that it is now found that the codicil was not specifically under the reservatory clause does not, in my opinion, justify the view that the case is in conflict with that of Nelson v. Currey and Others and the case of Van de Wall (13 Sup. Ct., 316). What was said in the case of Nelson v. Currey was that "all the writers on the subject are agreed that the reservatory clause in a will cannot confer validity on a subsequent testamentary instrument, unless that instrument is incontestably proved to have been executed by the testator, and unless it purported to be and was executed under and by virtue of the reservatory clause in the will." Now, a codicil cannot purport to be executed under a reservatory clause, unless in some manner or another it is shown that the testator had that reservatory clause in his mind when he executed the codicil. It is contended in the present case that the testator must have had the reservatory clause in his mind, because the codicil is at the foot of the will itself, and because the codicil refers to the will. But the codicil does not refer to the reservatory clause of the will. "May 4th, 1890.—I cancel and make void the fourth clause of this my will and bequeath the whole of my estate, goods, and chattels to my beloved wife Jenny Joseph, whom I hereby institute and appoint the sole heiress of the said residue of my estate and effects." It is quite consistent with this so-called codicil that the testator never thought of the reservatory clause. It is quite possible that he had not the reservatory clause in his mind, and that he thought he was executing a fresh testamentary disposition independently of such clause. The best proof that he acted under that clause would be a statement to that effect in the codicil, and in the absence of any such statement or of anything else to show that he purported so to act, the unattested codicil cannot be upheld as a valid testamentary disposition. I fully agree with the remarks of Innes, C.J., in the case of Erasmus (T.R. 1903, p. 643), which appear to me to summarise the authorities with great clearness and precision. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the judgment of the Court should be given in terms of defendants' contention, but I think that costs might fairly come out of the estate. Judgment in terms of the contentions contained in clauses 20, 21, and 22 of the special case, costs out of the estate.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Syfret, Godlonton and Low. For the executor dative: Findlay and Tait.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

HAYWOOD V. PAULING. { 1907.
Feb. 26th.
" 27th.
Mar. 13th.
" 15th.

Architect — Builder — Agency — Authority of architect to bind owner in respect of "extras."

This was an action brought by George Haywood, trading as E. Haywood and Co., builders and contractors, of Observatory-road, to recover £188 1s. 9d. from Augusta Mary Frances Pauling, of Rondebosch, for certain extra work, labour, and material supplied in the alterations and repairs to her residence Stanmore, Rondebosch.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows: Plaintiff is George Haywood, who carries on business as a builder and contractor under the style or firm of E. Haywood and Co., of Observatory-road. The defendant is a widow, and resides at Stanmore, in Rondebosch. About the 4th July, 1905, defendant, through William Adamson, an architect, of this city (who acted in the matters in suit on behalf of the plaintiff, and who was duly authorised thereto by her), entered into contract in writing with plaintiff for certain specified alterations and additions to her residence Stanmore. Plaintiff craves leave to refer to the said contract when produced at the trial hereof, and says that he has duly performed his part of the said contract, and has been duly paid the contract price thereunder. From time to time as the work in connection with the said alterations and additions proceeded, Adamson, who duly acted as architect, supervising and directing matters in and about the said work, found that certain extra work was essential which had not been specified in the contract aforesaid. The said architect from time to time accordingly, acting both under his general authority as architect and under special authority given by defendant to look after her interests in the matter during her absence from the Colony, directed the plaintiff to do certain extra work, and to provide the materials and labour required in connection therewith. It is usual and customary for building contractors to carry out all such instructions of the architect, even in respect of extra work outside the contract, and the plaintiff as instructed as aforesaid, did the extra work and supplied the labour and material, all as set out in the account. The prices set out in the annexure are fair and reasonable, and amount to £188 1s. 9d. All things have happened, all conditions have been fulfilled, and all times have elapsed necessary to entitle plaintiff to claim the said sum of £188 1s. 9d., but the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully fails, neglects, and refuses to pay the said sum or any part thereof, though repeatedly requested so to do. Wherefore plaintiff claims: (a) Payment of £188 1s. 9d. as and for extra work, labour, and material supplied at the instructions of defendant's architect and agent in and about the alterations and repairs to Stanmore as aforesaid (b) interest a tempore morae; (c) alternative relief; (d) costs.

The defendant's plea denied the existence of any agreement between herself and the plaintiffs, and set out that the only agreement entered into by her was with one William Adamson, who had no authority or power to enter into any contract binding her to the plaintiffs. It was denied that Adamson had any authority to act as alleged. The only authority from her which Adamson had was one given to him, authorising him to expend a sum not exceeding £1,700 upon alterations, additions, and repairs to her property in accordance with specifications which were furnished by him in writing on or about June 23. The document embodied the whole agreement between her and Adamson, save and except certain authority given to him by cable from England to renew certain electric wires at a cost of about £70. She had paid the whole amount £1,700, which she authorised Adamson to expend as aforesaid in and upon the alterations, additions, or repairs to the building save and except the sum of £9, which she had tendered to pay to Adamson, but he refused to accept the same.

Mr. Close (with him Mr. M. Bisset) for plaintiff; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Joubert), for defendant.

Wm. Adamson, architect, of Cape Town, stated that in May, 1905, the defendant consulted him with a view to certain work to be done by witness, who prepared sketches at the request of the defendant for alterations and additions to her house at Rondebosch. Quantities and specifications were prepared on the suggestion of the defendant, who was satisfied to leave the matter in witness's hands as regards the contractor. When defendant consulted witness, she selected her own decorator, Mr. Keene. Witness got an estimate for £1,250 from the plaintiff. The defendant said she would like to keep the total cost within £1,700. The actual contract with the plaintiff was made after the defendant left for England. As far as witness could make out from the letters, the matter was left in his hands for arrangement, and he entered into a contract with the plaintiff in pursuance of the directions he had from the defendant. Witness did not inform the plaintiff in any way that his authority was limited. Under the contract he had to put in girders when the walls were stripped, but the walls were in such a weak condition that steel columns had to be substituted. In the course of the work he discovered several extra things had to be done. Witness considered the extra work necessary for the safety of the premises. Witness authorized all the extra items mentioned in the declaration. The prices for the extra work were fair and reasonable. An arrangement had been made with Keene by witness for £400. Other work cropped up which he suggested should be done, and Cunningham and Gearing were given a contract to recover the wires. In February, 1906, the defendant returned from England, and wrote a letter to witness, saying the house was in such an ugly state that she could not accept it according to contract, and asking witness to meet her to go over the work. Shortly after the completion of the work the plaintiff sent in an account for the extra work. When plaintiff forwarded plaintiff's account to defendant the latter wrote that the contract exceeded the estimate given her by £41. In the arrangements between defendant and witness, the latter merely said he did not think the work would exceed £1,700, there was no guarantee given by witness.

Mr. Close was proceeding to question the witness on the custom among architects, where extra work had to be done, when,

Mr. Searle submitted that in such a case the principal must be communicated with, where the agent found that the work could not be done for a certain fixed sum.

Mr. Close said the mere fact of his appointment as architect gave him the authority in relation to the builder, according to the custom of this colony. The appointment of architect authorised him to order work even outside the contract. Counsel cited Storey on Agency (page 108, section 96), and contended that Mr. Adamson, being appointed as architect without any special instructions, being communicated to the plaintiff, the presumption was that plaintiff would be entitled to take the witness as exercising the ordinary functions of an architect. Counsel would endeavour to show what the scope and functions of an architect were by usage. No exception had been taken to the declaration on that point as being irrelevant. He submitted they were entitled to get the functions of professional men by custom, particularly in a case like this, where there was no conflict between custom and law. Whatever the English law might be on the subject, architects had, at all events, the power to order extras.

Mr. Searle contended it would be an unreasonable custom to go outside the contract. According to the English law an architect would have to refer to his principal in such a case. Counsel did not wish to preclude himself from the right of raising the objection if the question was put in this form: Supposing there was a contract which says nothing about the additional work has the architect power to order the extra work?

Maasdorp, J., said he would admit the evidence for what it might be worth. At the same time he would note Mr. Searle's objection.

Mr. Close: What is the custom in this country as to the authority of architects to order extra work beyond what is in a scheduled contract?

Witness: If they order anything outside the schedule the contractor must be paid over and above his schedule by the principal.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: It was not unusual for orders for extra work to be given by architects verbally. The defendant was not informed at the time when witness wrote to her in England that he had exceeded the amount fixed by her. He would only order additional work when it was more or less necessary.

George Haywood, plaintiff in the case, stated he was not aware of any limit of price fixed with the last witness. In witness's experience he had more verbal orders as to extra work from architects than written ones. Witness explained the difference between a lump sum contract and a schedule contract. In a schedule contract, if there was more work done than in the schedule the builder would get paid for it. The architect gave directions as to extras. Witness would never go to the client for instructions.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness never saw the defendant in the matter. This was the only contract which he had signed with the architect without the client signing. The architect's orders had to be followed. Witness had to carry out the work under the supervision of Mr. Adamson, and if the latter gave instructions for extra work witness was bound to carry them out. Even though the contract said nothing about extras, he would do double the work if told to do so by the architect.

John Rayner, vice-president of the Masters' Builders' Association, Cape Town; John Cran, of A. B. Reid and Co., builders; James Morgan, builder, Cape Town; Mr. Cowin, architect and quantity surveyor; and John G. Scott, of the late firm of Howard and Scott, spoke to the practice in the building trade when orders were given by architects under a schedule contract. The builder looked exclusively to the architect and carried out his directions.

F. J. Laing, builder's foreman, employed by plaintiff, also gave evidence. Mr. Close closed his case.

Mrs. Pauling (the defendant) said that Mr. Adamson was a friend of her late husband, and she thought that she might trust him as a friend to deal properly with her. She took to him a plan which she had prepared of certain alterations that she wanted carried out at her residence, Stanmore, and spoke to him about having the work executed. Mr. Adamson said he thought the cost would be about £1,500, but later on he told her that that figure would be too small, and he promised faithfully that he would not exceed £1,700. That, he said, would be the outside figure, and there was a probability that the cost would be less. The amount consisted of £1,250 for building and £450 for decorations. When she returned from England she was dissatisfied with the work which had been done, and had to call in Mr. Adamson to have the work finished.

C. W. Herold, attorney, said that Mrs. Pauling told him that the decorator was to be paid £450 and the contractor £1,250.

John Frederick Davis (father of the defendant) said that he was present when Mr. Adamson told Mrs. Pauling that the figures of £1,700 would not be exceeded.

Caleb Keene, decorator, H. D. Pitts, architect, and F. Kendall, of Messrs. Baker and Masey, architects, also gave evidence.

Mr. Close, in his argument for the plaintiff, said the first thing to be ascertained was the way in which these extras came to be put in the building, and how they came to be ordered. The contract established the ground on which Mr. Haywood was justified in looking to Mr. Adamson as having certain authority. Mr. Adamson, of course, acted in a dual capacity. He was acting as a private individual for Mrs. Pauling in effecting the contract at her wishes, and he was also acting as the architect. Counsel submitted that Adamson was acting purely as the defendant's agent in the case, and, that being so, the case of the plaintiff was a very strong one. There was abundant authority to show that the agent had power to do whatever was necessary or required, and counsel referred to Story on Agency (sections 58, 60, and 61). As a fact, apart from any direct communication between the contractor and the principal, the contractor was justified in looking to the agent as having some authority, and the question was what authority he had. Then, if there was authority, unless there was a limit to that authority, the contractor was justified in looking to the agent in the light of the section quoted. Counsel contended that it was not necessary for the parties to get into direct communication. The whole nature of the proceedings absolutely justified Haywood in the view that Adamson was the agent. Dealing with presumptive agency, counsel referred to Leake (part 2, chapter 2, section 1), and the distinction between general agency and special agency. Bowstead (page 4 of the second edition, and articles 37 and 38). As to the powers of an architect, although there were one or two cases in English law, and the authorities were prima facie against the contention that the architect had the right to bind the owner, he thought it would be found that broad statements were made which were not borne out by the authorities. Although English law had been referred to, the Court had to deal with the law in the Colony, which, counsel submitted, was different. Where did the builder come in if he could be turned off for refusing to do extra work which the architect wished him to do. The builder could not go to the owner, and, if he did not obey the architect, he must leave the work. All sorts of emergencies might arise in the course of a contract. It was a good and sound principle where one person of two innocent ones had to suffer, he rather should suffer who had induced the other to act by means of relationship, as in this case of trust and responsibility.

Mr. Searle said if the evidence be looked into, it would be found there was practically nothing passed between Haywood and Mrs. Pauling so as to induce the plaintiff to consider that Mrs. Pauling had engaged Adamson as her agent. In the specifications and the contract Adamson was described as the architect. The contract gave no power to Adamson to bind Mrs. Pauling for any extra work. Adamson had no other power, and Haywood could only bring forward this contract, and unless he could show there was a special authority outside, and not as an architect, he could not recover. Counsel could find no circumstance that went to show that Mrs. Pauling held out or enabled Adamson to hold out to the plaintiff that he was the general agent of the defendant. Counsel referred to sections 126 and 133 of Story on Agency, and contended that it was clear that Adamson was not a general agent. He had to deal with this particular business, and, therefore, the principle applied that anyone dealing in that particular business must ascertain the nature of the authority. In the case of Bains v. Ewing (the Court of Exchequer, p. 320), Baron Bramwell said he thought the passage referred to in Story (section 131), by his learned friend, went too far. There were certain cases where it had been endeavoured to make an employer liable for work done in pursuance of a contract, because it was found afterwards it was more expensive than contemplated at the time of the contract, and counsel referred to Thorne v. Mayor of London (1, Appeal Cases, p. 120). It was held here that the contractor ought to have satisfied himself before he went into the matter that the contract could be worked according to the specifications. In the case of Randall v. Trunen (18, Common Bench, p. 786) the builder came upon the architect because the architect had told him to get certain stone which was not in the original contract, and the architect told him to order the stone. He ordered the stone, and then sued the owner for the value of the stone, and judgment was given against him, with costs in the case. Then he sued the architect, not only for the expense of the stone, but also for the costs in the previous case, and he recovered against the architect not only the amount of the stone, but the costs he had been put to in suing the owner. Counsel also cited Cooper and Langdon (9, Meeson and Welby, page 60), and said that the sooner it was laid down that architects and builders could not do what they liked in these contracts, the better it would be for building in this country.

Mr. Closo having been heard in reply,

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (March 15th).

Maasdorp, J.: I had intended at first to go rather more fully into a consideration of the authorities cited at the Bar, but as that would necessitate my deferring judgment until my return from Circuit, and thus, perhaps, cause serious inconvenience to the parties, I have come to the conclusion that after the exhaustive argument of counsel in the case, I am now in a position, upon the general result of the principles contained in the authorities, to deal with the case at once. It appears that in June, 1905, the defendant, having determined to have certain repairs and alterations effected in her house at Rondebosch, consulted Mr. Adamson, an architect, as to the probable cost, and he was at first of opinion that £1,500 would cover it. Defendant told him that that was more than she had intended to spend, but was willing to go to that amount. Subsequently Mr. Adamson informed her that the work could be done for £1,700, and after he had assured her that the cost would not exceed that amount she agreed to let the work proceed at that. On June 21 she wrote to Adamson, amongst other things, "You are hereby authorised to expend a sum not exceeding £1,700." On the same day, after seeing certain specifications, she wrote again suggesting that if some of the items were omitted there might be a margin left for a new front door, adding, "I certainly want a new door, and it must come under £1,700." Shortly after the defendant, when on the point of leaving for England, again spoke to Adamson, and emphasised that she could not spend more than £1,700. The effect of all this was that, between the defendant and Adamson, the latter was appointed the agent of the former for the purpose of having repairs and alterations made for £1,700, and no more. Adamson made out the plans and specifications, and got a tender from the plaintiff for £1,477 11s. 4d., but in order to keep within the £1,700, while also making allowance for decorations to be executed by another builder, Adamson arranged for a number of reductions totalling £186 11s. 11d., and accepted the plaintiff's tender for £1,290 19s. 5d. Mrs. Pauling having already left for England, Adamson, acting for her, entered into a contract with the plaintiff for the execution of the work in terms of the specifications. If the defendant were not herself a party to the terms of the specifications, and they exceeded the powers granted by her to Adamson, it might be contended that she was not bound by such contract. I am of opinion, upon the authorities that if Adamson exceeded his powers, he could not bind the defendant, and it was the plaintiff's duty to ascertain in this case what were the powers of the agent he was dealing with. But although the right of Adamson to enter into this particular contract was questioned in the pleadings, Mr. Searle could not but admit ultimately that the defendant is bound by the contract, and I do not see how he could deny it in the face of the fact that she saw the specifications and well knew that the work was to be tendered for in terms of the specifications. Now, the importance of the specifications consists in this: that it is contended they give power to the architect to order extras, and consequently the builder was entitled to be paid for extras executed by him under the instructions of the architect. The clause in the specifications relied on for this contention is the second, where it is provided that the contractor is to send a moneyed account and totalled copy of the approved bill of quantities on the basis of which all extras and omissions will be measured and priced. I can find no authority in this clause given to the architect to order extras. Undoubtedly extras are contemplated, but they would of course, have to be arranged for with the consent of the building owner. Mr. Close admitted that upon the English authorities upon the law of building contracts, it would be difficult to maintain that under this contract the owner would be liable for extras ordered by the architect as architect, although he did not wholly abandon the point. In my opinion the weight of authority is to the effect that under such a contract the architect could not bind the employer for extras. Then it is argued that that may be so in England, but a different law prevails here based upon the custom that the builder is bound to perform any extras ordered by the architect, independently of the terms of the contract, and so to render the employer liable. Witnesses were called to establish this custom, and one of them gave it as his opinion that the builder must do whatever he is ordered to do by the architect. It is enough to say that upon the evidence in this case no universal long-established custom of the trade has been proved, amid the conflict of evidence among the experts. And even if such a usage had been proved, the Court, in my opinion, would refuse to sanction it on the ground of its being unreasonable. Then the plaintiff takes up another position. If custom fails, and no authority for extras is contained in the agreement, the defendant, it is said, is still liable, because Adamson, if he could not order extras as an architect, really did so as the agent of the defendant. Now, it seems to me that Adamson was under the circumstances empowered as agent to make this contract with the plaintiff, because the defendant sanctioned the specifications. If she had not sanctioned them, and Adamson had entered into a contract in excess of his powers, she would not have been bound, it being a duty cast upon the plaintiff to ascertain the powers of the agent he was dealing with. After the agreement was made, Adamson had no further power to meddle with the contract as agent, but his duties as architect commenced, and even if he had power to contract further he could not exceed the powers given him, that is to say, he could not make a contract for the execution of extras beyond the limited expenditure authorised by the defendant. The actual powers given to Adamson limited the expenditure to a fixed sum, and nothing was done, or allowed to be done, by the defendant, to lead the plaintiff to believe otherwise. It seems to me that the contract was expressly drawn without leave to the architect to order extras, because the very suggestion of such a clause would have been inconsistent with the agency which was exhausted by the items agreed upon without extras. The conclusion then follows that the contract does not provide for the ordering of extras by the architect, that in the absence of such power no custom has been proved entitling the builder to payment for extras ordered by the architect without consent of the owner, and Adamson had no power as agent to order extras, nor did the defendant do anything to lead the plaintiff to believe that he had. It will be observed that I treat Adamson as a special agent, as to whose real powers any persons dealing with him are put upon inquiry; and not as an agent having a general power, limited by private instructions, which do not affect those dealing with him. But the plaintiff has still another ground upon which he relies, which touches, however, only a part of the extras. He says that, having contracted to place a girder upon two walls, he found the walls too weak to support the girder, and was obliged as a matter of necessity towards the completion of the work to put up stanchions to support the girder, and that he did so upon the instructions of the architect. There is a strange lack of authority upon this particular point, it may be because when such a state of affairs arises the owner is generally consulted, or because when the work is done the builder either does not claim for it, or when he claims he manages to convince the employer of its reasonableness. On the whole, I am of opinion that when such an emergency arises nothing can be done throwing any liability upon the owner without his consent, and it becomes necessary to consult his wishes. The absence of the defendant in England is urged as an excuse for not consulting her, but it was contemplated that it might be necessary to communicate with her there, and in her letter of the 21st of June to Adamson she says: "The above is my address up to the end of September, should you wish to communicate with me." As a matter of fact, Adamson did communicate with her in respect of the electric light. Anyhow, considering how anxious the defendant was to keep the costs within £1,700, it would have been only reasonable to consult her in the matter before burdening her with a further expenditure of £100 in the matter of the stanchions, even though some delay was occasioned thereby. I doubt whether the ground upon which this claim for the stanchions, as distinguished from the other items, is placed as a last resort, can be said to be covered by the declaration. I am of opinion that the defendant is not liable to pay for the stanchions any more than for the rest of the extras. Judgment is given for the defendant, with costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: G. Trollip; Defendant's Attorneys: Herold and Gie.]

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice LAURENCE.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

LOWE V. MILNE BROS. { 1907.
Feb. 26th.

Mr. Payne moved for the final adjudication of the partnership and private estates of the respondents.

Laurence J., said a debt of £75 was alleged, but judgment had only been given for £25 by the Resident Magistrate of East London.

Mr. Payne said that the position was that at the time of the summons there was only £25 due, but the arrears of rent had increased, and two subsequent months' rent had become due. The petition set forth that the sum of £76 19s. was owing to the petitioner.

Order for final sequestration granted, as prayed.

MARAIS V. CAPE TOWN WAREHOUSE SYNDICATE.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence for the sum of £6,250 on two mortgage bonds, with interest and costs. Counsel further applied to have certain property declared executable. Sentence was asked against defendant, Katerina Fowler and her husband, individually and in trust, she having bound herself as surety and joint principal debtor.

Laurence, J., said that as service was not proved upon one of the two trustees, it was difficult to see how judgment could be given against them as representing the syndicate.

Mr. Bisset said that one of the trustees, Henry, had disappeared altogether, and he submitted in the circumstances that service on the remaining trustee was sufficient. He would, however, take judgment against the members of the syndicate individually and against Fowler.

Provisional sentence was granted against defendants, with the exception of Henry and his wife, with costs and interest, the property being declared executable.

MARSH MEMORIAL HOMES V. VAN SITTERT.

Mr. Inchbold moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £300.

Provisional sentence granted, the hypothecated property being declared executable.

DESVADES V. EASTON.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £300 and for certain property to be declared executable.

Granted.

DE VILLIERS V. LOUBSER.

Mr. Lourens moved for provisional sentence for the sum of £1,850 on a bond, and for certain hypothecated property to be declared executable.

Granted.

ESTATE WEBSTER V. PARKER.

Mr. Gutsche said that in this matter a point arose as to the service. The return showed that the summons was served by posting at a certain shop corner. A supporting affidavit showed that this was a corner-shop formerly occupied by defendant.

Laurence, J., said he thought the service a good one, and provisional sentence would be granted as prayed.

SCARBROW V. ADAMS.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £400, less £35 paid on account. Counsel also asked that the hypothecated property be declared executable.

Provisional sentence granted as prayed.

FAIRBAIRN V. JANDRELL.

Mr. Lewis moved for judgment for £250 on a mortgage bond, and for the hypothecated property to be declared executable.

Provisional sentence as prayed.

ESTATE MARSH V. SMITH.

Mr. Inchbold moved for provisional sentence on a bond for £200.

Granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

PARKER V. EASTON.

Mr. Sutton moved, under Rule 329d, for judgment for £42, rent.

Granted.

ZEEDERBERG AND DUNCAN V. MYBURGH.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, under Rule 329d, for judgment for £20 4s. 1d., for goods sold and delivered.

Granted.

LESTER V. LESTER. { 1907.
Feb. 26th

This was an action against the husband for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce.

Mr. Watermeyer was for the plaintiff; there was no appearance for the defendant.

Defendant was last heard of in Wellington, New Zealand, and had been sued by edictal citation. The petition set forth that the plaintiff resides at Kimberley. She was married to defendant at Port Elizabeth in June, 1904. In July, 1904, defendant was arrested at Kimberley on a charge of fraud. He was convicted at Cape Town of this offence, and was sentenced to six months' imprisonment. He was released in March, 1905, since when he had refused to support the plaintiff.

Plaintiff was not present in court, having obtained leave to give evidence by means of affidavit.

The affidavit of the plaintiff was read. It set forth that after the marriage the parties spent three weeks at Graham's Town, and on their going to Kimberley, the defendant was arrested. Upon his release the defendant wrote to her. The letter was couched in affectionate terms, and the defendant said, inter alia: "This is the last time I shall bother you. Good-bye for ever." The writer went on to speak of the shame and degradation he had brought on the plaintiff, and continued: "If you don't forgive the living, forgive the dead. It is better I should go out of your life as suddenly as I came into it." The writer referred vaguely to "the coming ordeal." Defendant wrote subsequently saying he was going back to England. Attempts had been made to find defendant, and it was discovered that he was in New Zealand.

In the second letter written by the defendant, allegations were made against the wife, which she in her affidavit denied.

Plaintiff was at present living with her mother at Kimberley.

Mr. Watermeyer for plaintiff. Defendant in default.

In reply to the Court, counsel said that defendant was a commercial traveller. He appeared to have married petitioner under a false name.

An order for restitution was granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff by the 1st July, failing which, to show cause on the 14th July why a decree of divorce should not be granted.

It was further ordered that the rule be served by delivery at an address in Cape Town, to which defendant, before leaving, had directed that letters should be posted, and by publication in the "Gazette."

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ESTATE OLIVIER. { 1907.
Feb. 26th.

Mr. Toms moved for leave to transfer certain property sold by auction, and to invest moneys belonging to minors. The property was purchased by the executor, and after paying a certain part of the purchase price to some of the beneficiaries, it was proposed to leave the balance belonging to the minors on mortgage. The grandfather, who was a wealthy man, offered security. The sum of £5,050 was due to the minors.

Laurence, J., said he would grant an order allowing £4,250 to remain on mortgage, the mortgage and security to be executed to the satisfaction of the Master, and the balance of £800 to be paid into the Guardian Fund.

CAIRNCROSS AND ANOTHER V. FAGAN AND SOMERSET WEST-STRAND MUNICIPALITY.

This was an application to have the respondent Fagan declared incapable of being or remaining a Councillor of the Somerset West-Strand Municipality.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the applicants; Dr. Greer was for the respondent Fagan.

Laurence, J., said he had read the papers, and he thought, on the whole, it was desirable that the case should be transferred to the First Division, where it could probably be heard one day next week.

Sir H. Juta said he was quite agreeable to this course. He had intended, however, to apply to the Court for leave to cross-examine the Town Clerk of the Municipality.

Laurence, J., said that could not be determined without going into details, and it had better be mentioned when the case came on in the First Division.

Dr. Greer said there were certain affidavits on new matter which he desired to put in.

Sir H. Juta said he objected to these going in.

Laurence, J., said there were certain affidavits put before the Court by the respondent, which he thought it deplorable should have been put on record. Counsel were aware of what he referred to.

Dr. Greer said these affidavits were put before the Court to show the relations which existed between the parties. They showed what lay behind the whole matter.

Laurence J., said there were most abusive documents, which ought never to have been put before the Court.

The case was accordingly ordered to stand over.

OTTOSTROM V. ESTATE STEPHAN.

Mr. Gardiner moved on notice calling upon respondent to show cause why the assumed executor in the estate should not be allowed to intervene as co-defendant.

Mr. Van der Byl appeared on behalf of plaintiff to consent to the order, but contended that applicants should pay the costs.

Order granted, costs to be costs in the cause.

JACKSON V. CAPE COLONY TATTERSALL'S SUBSCRIPTION ROOMS.

This was an application on notice of motion, calling upon the respondents, members of the committee of Tattersall's Rooms, to show cause why applicant's name should not be placed on the list of bookmaking members of the Rooms.

The applicant was a member of the club in 1903. He left the Colony in that year, and a month after he left a rule was passed to the effect that if a bookmaking member of the club was absent from the Colony for a longer period than three months without the leave of the committee his membership should lapse. Notice of the rule should have been posted to applicant at an address left by him in Cape Town, to which communications were to be addressed. The applicant alleged that in the cases of other members the rule had not been enforced. He further said that on his return in 1905 he tendered to the secretary his arrear subscriptions, but he was told that no committee was in existence, and nothing could be done until the annual meeting. Subsequently he was told his membership had ceased. The respondents stated that the defendant had forfeited his membership through absence from the Colony, and through not having paid his subscription, notwithstanding notice sent to him at the Rand Tattersall's, Johannesburg, where he was carrying on business.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones for applicant. Mr. Alexander for respondents.

Mr. Jones, in argument, said he submitted that the hostile attitude of the club towards applicant was because of certain ill-feeling against him. He contended that the respondents could not set up non-compliance with the rules against applicant, for the reason that they themselves had not complied with the rules.

Without hearing Mr. Alexander, the Court refused the application.

Laurence, J., said he thought it only right to say that Mr. Jones had put the case very ably, and had said everything that could possibly be urged in favour of the applicant. But after giving careful attention to what had been urged on behalf of the applicant, he did not think such a case had been made out as would justify the Court in making the order prayed for. The question to be decided was whether the plaintiff's membership had lapsed, or whether he was still a member and entitled to privilege as such. Unless the applicant could make out a strong prima facie case, the Court would not interfere with the management of such an institution. The rule of the club required that the subscription should be so much per annum, payable in advance, and it was further stipulated that bookmaking members should pay an entrance fee, as settled from time to time by the committee. Now, when one of the rules of a club stated that an annual subscription was payable in advance, the natural conclusion to be derived from that was that if a member failed to comply with such an essential and vital provision of the club's rules, unless such failure be remedied within a reasonable time, or condoned by the action of the management, the membership became vacant. Applicant admitted that for four years, during the whole of which time he was resident in South Africa, being at no time further away from Cape Town than at Johannesburg, he took no steps to comply with the rule for payment of his subscription. Now, if subscriptions became due, and were in arrear, no doubt the ordinary practice of officials of a club was to acquaint the member with the fact, but he was not prepared to say that such an intimation from the secretary was a condition precedent to the loss of membership. As a matter of courtesy, such notice was given, but he thought it was the duty of every member to comply with such an essential rule as the payment of subscriptions, and he ran the risk of the consequences if he failed to do so. It seemed, on the affidavits, that all the conditions precedent to the erasing of the name of the applicant from the list of members had been complied with, with the technical exception that notices were not sent to him through the General Post Office, as they should have been, but were delivered by hand to his address at Tattersall's. He did not, however, regard the rule on this point as imperative, but as directory in its character, and it was not a vital omission unless the applicant could show he had been prejudiced, which was not the case here. But, apart from this question, it was impossible for him to say on the rules in force at the time of the applicant's election, that he had made out a clear right to be reinstated as a member of the club. If applicant thought it worth his while to bring an action for declaration of rights he was, of course, at liberty to do so, but the present application must be refused, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIEBS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

MARSH V. JORDAAN. { 1907.
Feb. 27th.

Mr. Marais moved for provisional sentence on a bond and on certain premiums of insurance, and for the specially hypothecated property to be declared executable.

Granted.

DICEY V. SIMPSON.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence for £46 17s. 7d., balance on a dishonoured cheque.

Granted.

SANDERSON V. GLASER BROS.

Mr. Roux moved for the final adjudication of defendants' estate.

Granted.

SCHOEMAN V. NOURSE.

Mr. Louwrens was for plaintiff; Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the respondent.

De Villiers, C.J., said he had read the papers, and he hardly thought the matter could be dealt with on application for provisional sentence. On the whole, he thought the Court should make an order that the plaintiff should go into the principal case, and that the question of costs should stand over.

Order accordingly.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

LIPSCHITZ V. PEARKS STORES f 1907.
(AFRICA), LTD. { Feb. 27th.

Mr. Alexander said that this was an application for judgment under Rule 319, but there was a motion on the roll to remove the bar and for leave to plead.

His Lordship said he would hear the motion.

Dr. Rainsford was for the applicant (Pearks Stores), defendant in the action.

The affidavits filed on behalf of the applicant set forth that when summons was served on the defendants' attorneys the matter had to be referred to Johannesburg. Defendants' attorneys wrote requesting extension of time within which to plead, but the respondent (plaintiff in the action) replied stating that the request was only made after bar, and that he would only agree to the withdrawal of bar upon applicants paying the wasted costs. The action was for recovery of salary and of moneys alleged to have been paid by the plaintiff on behalf of the defendants. A letter was read, in which plaintiff's attorney offered to consent to the removal of the bar upon costs of bar being made costs in the cause. Applicants took up the position that the notice demanding plea was served prematurely.

Dr. Rainsford said that the rules of Court provided that notice demanding plea could not be served until after the expiration of eight days from the filing of the declaration. Eight clear days' notice had not been given in this case. Counsel cited Montmort v. Board of Executors (2 Juta, p. 307.) Applicant had offered to allow costs to remain costs in the cause in the first instance, but this having been rejected, applicant, he submitted, was not bound by that offer.

Mr. Alexander said there seemed to have been some misapprehension in the calculation of the eight days. The applicants were clearly not in a position to file their plea in time. It was not, he urged, so material that eight days should elapse before notice was served, and that a full 24 hours should be allowed after notice. He submitted that costs should be made costs in the cause.

De Villiers, C.J., said the terms of the rules were perfectly clear. Before the plaintiff could bar the defendant, he must show that his demand for plea was made after the eight days had expired, provided for in the rules, and then 24 hours further must be reckoned from the time he made this demand before defendant could be barred. In the present case demand was made before the expiration of the eight days, and that invalidated the proceedings. It would seem to him, moreover, that this hurry was wholly needless, considering it was quite impossible for the parties to go to trial until some months after the notice was given. Independently of that, however, the rule had not been complied with and the defendant was therefore, in his opinion, entitled to have the bar removed. Respondent would be ordered to pay the costs.

PURCELL, YALLOP AND EVERETT V. SMOOKLER.

Mr. Inghbold moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £183 18s., for goods sold and delivered. Defendant was surety for the joint principal debtor.

Granted.

HASSAN V. ABDURAMAN.

Dr. Greer moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate.
Granted.

JOHNSTONE V. JOHNSTONE. { 1907.
Feb. 27th.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved, on behalf of the wife, for an order for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which for a decree of divorce on the ground of desertion.

Flora Johnstone said she was married to defendant at Liverpool, England, on the 24th September, 1901. Her husband was a plumber. In December, 1902, they came to Cape Town, and lived there for two years. They were not very happy, as her husband took to drink. In June, 1904, while they were living in Loop-street, Cape Town, defendant deserted her. He had not since contributed to her support. She had asked him to do so, but he had refused. He was now lodging with coloured people.

By the Court: She was a widow when she married defendant. She had two children by her first husband, but only one was alive. At present she was canvassing for medicine.

Defendant was ordered to return to or receive plaintiff, failing which to show cause on April 17 why a decree of divorce should not be granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.Ex parte GABRIEL. { 1907.
Feb. 27th.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for leave to sue in forma pauperis. Applicant wished to bring an action for restitution of conjugal rights, or for divorce on the ground of desertion.

Applicant, a coloured woman, said she had been married ten years, and had five children, who were living with her. Her husband was living with a Malay woman.

A rule was granted calling on respondent to show cause on the 12th March why applicant should not be granted leave to sue in forma pauperis.

WORCESTER MUNICIPALITY V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Grant of land for public purposes —Resolution of Houses of Parliament—Act of Parliament.

The Government was authorized by a resolution of both Houses of Parliament to grant a piece of land within the Municipality of W. to an Agricultural Society for public purposes connected therewith, but there was strong prima facie evidence, that long before the passing of such resolution, the inhabitants of W. had acquired the right to use the land as common pasturage.

Held, that notwithstanding the resolution, the Government was not entitled to make a grant which conflicted with the prior rights of the inhabitants.

This was an application upon notice by the Worcester Municipality to the Secretary for Agriculture representing the Colonial Government and the Worcester Agricultural Society, for an interdict restraining the Government issuing a grant in favour of the Agricultural Society of a certain piece of land alleged to be Crown land, or disposing of or alienating any portion of such land or commonage land, save and except, subject to, in terms of, and in conformity with the requirements of sections 160-165, inclusive, of the Municipal Act, No. 45, of 1882.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Sir H. Juta, K.C.), was for applicants; Mr. Searle, K.C., was for the Colonial Government; Mr. Burton was for the Worcester Agricultural Society.

Mr. Schreiner said that the object of the application was to have it held and determined that the Government had no right, by a resolution of both Houses of Parliament purporting to be a resolution under section 6 of the Crown Lands Disposal Act, to dispose of this ground without the formalities of the Act of 1882 having been complied with.

Mr. Searle said it was not admitted that this was municipal land within the meaning of the Act of 1882.

Mr. Schreiner said it was admitted that it was common pasture land.

A number of affidavits were read on behalf of the applicant Council, to show that the land in question was commonage or common pasturage, and that the Government had treated it as such.

On behalf of the respondents, affidavits were read setting forth that the land has not been used as a commonage, but more as a dumping-ground for refuse. The Municipality, it was contended, had recognised the right of the Government to deal with this as Crown land. These allegations were denied by applicants.

De Villiers, C.J., said he would like to hear Mr. Searle on the matter.

Mr. Searle said the case raised a very important question as to under what circumstances land might be taken to be the property of the Municipality. There must be some way in which the Municipality got land which it might call commonage or pasture land.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But it is not a question of whether the land belongs to the Municipality. The point is: Can the Government deal with that land without the consent of the Municipality?]

Mr. Searle said there was no evidence that the Council had acquired a servitude over this land by prescription, and they could not get title otherwise. The Municipality must fall back on some user, which he contended was not proved in this case. Counsel cited the case of the East London Municipality v. Colonial Government (17 Supreme Court Reports, p.p. 204. and 216-217). The mere fact of there being regulations referring to pasture lands did not vest these lands in the Municipality. The Municipality must acquire title to pasture lands in some other way than by means of regulations.

De Villiers, C.J., said that in the case quoted, there seemed to be no evidence that the land in question was used as common pasture land. Here there was evidence that from the time the town was laid out, the whole of this land was treated as common pasture land. Even for the purpose of prescription, would it not be almost conclusive evidence against the Government that eight years ago the Government, by sanctioning these regulations, acknowledged that this land was common pasturage?

Mr. Searle said it would put the Government in an extremely awkward position in regard to lands throughout the Colony if it were held that the regulations meant this. The Municipality must, he contended, show some way in which it had acquired title to these lands, and it did not acquire title merely by a Proclamation referring to municipal limits. Counsel referred to section 10 of Act 2 of 1860, to sections 12, 13, and 14 of Act 14 of 1878, and to Act 15 of 1887, more particularly sections 6 and 10.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is there not prima facie evidence that this right has been acquired by prescription?]

Mr. Searle: That, I submit, is the only case they can set up. Counsel proceeded to deal with the evidence in reference to prescription, and urged that the Municipality had shown no title to the land by user. To succeed in this application, the Municipality must come in and show that what had now been done deprived them of a right they had held for thirty years. He could quote numbers of cases in which the Court had held that the rights of the owners must always be protected, save in so far as express provisions of an Act override the rights of the owners and gave a municipality actual power; but no mere regulations could do that. That had been held by the Court over and over again. Counsel referred to the Tarkastad case (15 S.C., 371), the Aberdeen case (15 C.T.R., 661), the Steytlerville case (8 J., 12), the Bredasdorp case (1870, Buch.), and the Swelendam case (3 M., 578).

Without calling on Mr. Schreiner, the Court granted the interdict.

De Villiers, C.J.: It appears to me that the applicant Council has made out its right to an interdict. It seems that, purporting to act under the Act of 1887, the Houses of Parliament have passed a certain resolution authorising a grant of the land in question to the Agricultural Society at Worcester. The object of that grant, I presume, is to enable the society to use the land for the purpose of shows or otherwise, and, at all events, the effect of the grant would be to take the control of the land out of the Municipality and to prevent the inhabitants from using it as common pasture land. If, therefore, it would appear, from the evidence before the Court, that there is prima facie reason for believing that the inhabitants of the Municipality have acquired a common right to use this land as pasturage land, I am satisfied that it would not be in the power of Parliament by resolution to authorise the grant. His Lordship read the 6th section of the Act of 1857, and, proceeding, said: Now, if there is any land which has already been legally devoted to any special public purpose, there seems to me no power in the House of Parliament, by mere resolution, to set aside the existing public purposes, and to grant the land for other special purposes. Such power can only be exercised by Act of Parliament. If both Houses of Parliament had passed an Act authorising the Governor to make this grant, the municipality would have had no right to complain. But this was a mere resolution of both Houses, and cannot be held to be binding upon the municipality if that body has control over the land as the custodian of the rights of the inhabitants of the municipality. There has not been much evidence as to actual use of the land by the inhabitants, but this may probably be owing to the admissions made at different times by the Government as to the land being common pasture land of the inhabitants. The regulations which have been read assume that the land had been legally devoted to that purpose, and certainly since 1822 no one has seriously questioned the right of the inhabitants. Questions appear to have arisen from time to time between the Government and the municipality as to the degree of control enjoyed by the municipality, but these questions did not affect the individual rights of the inhabitants. I am not prepared at this stage to grant a perpetual interdict to restrain the grant of the land to the agricultural society, but the prima facie evidence in favour of the rights of the inhabitants is so strong as to justify the granting of an interdict with costs, reserving, however, to the Government leave to institute an action to set aside the interdict with costs, and to have it declared that the Government is entitled to deal with the land in the manner proposed by it. Such action must, however, be instituted before the end of the present year.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné; Attorneys for the Government: Reid and Nephew.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

KAHN V. SHAMSUDIEN. } 1907.
Feb. 28th.

In this case the plaintiff sued the defendant as trustee in the insolvent estate of Iemal Shamsudien. He claimed that Shamsudien, before his insolvency, had sold and delivered to him certain stock-in-trade. After Shamsudien's estate was provisionally sequestrated, the plaintiff wrongfully and unlawfully attached the goods. Subsequently the trustee rectified the wrongful action, and there was an order restraining the trustee from parting with the goods. There was a plea admitting an attachment of the goods, and setting out, if there was any arrangement of this sort between the parties, it was not bona fide. There was no replication, and the plaintiff was barred from replying. Then, according to the Rules of Court, the plaintiff having failed to set down the case, the defendant could set it down the following term, and counsel now asked for absolution from the instance and the discharge of the interdict against the trustee.

Mr. Burton was for the defendant, and there was no appearance for the plaintiff.

Absolution from the instance granted, and interdict discharged, with costs of suit and interdict.

FLAUM V. GERHARD AND HAY, LTD.

This was an application similar to the preceding, excepting that the plaintiff has not been barred from pleading; he had not set his case down, and so the defendant set the case down. The plaintiff got leave to sue in forma pauperis and by edictal citation. The defendants were merchants carrying on business in St. Petersburg. The plaintiff ordered a consignment of wood and timber from the defendants, and on arrival in Table Bay, there was a dispute as to the price. The defendant company then attached the wood and timber ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Owing to the alleged breach of contract by the defendant company, plaintiff claimed payment of £285, the value of the wood, after having made a tender to the bank, and £500 damages. The defendants denied that the bank had any authority to accept the tender, put in a counter-claim for the payment of the balance of their account (£357 1s. 9d.), and they asked for an order retaining the £114 11s., the proceeds of the sale of the wood, in part payment of their claim. The defendants had paid £25, and £357 1s. 9d. was the amount due.

Mr. Burton was for the defendants, and the plaintiff was in default.

Maasdorp, J., granted absolution from the instance on the claim in convention, and judgment as prayed on the claim in reconvention, and discharged the order of attachment.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ADMISSION. } 1907.
Feb. 28th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the admission of Sydney Moorcroft Connelly as an advocate.

Application granted, and oath administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

HANAU V. BUCHANAN.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. Counsel said that personal service had not been effected upon defendant, who it was believed was in Johannesburg.

Return day extended to the 12th March, and rule granted, calling on defendant to show cause on that date, one publication in a Johannesburg newspaper.

KINSLEY V. KRAMER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.
Order granted.

FLEMING V. BOTHA.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £100, with interest, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest since 31st December, 1904, and also for £1 5s. insurance premiums. Counsel applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.
Order granted.

GUTHRIE AND THERON V. TALJAARD.

Mr. Howes moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £40 8s. 6d.
Order granted.

DE VILLIERS V. VON HOLDT.

Mr. Rowson moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £700, with interest from the 1st July, 1906, bond due by reason of three months' notice having been given; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.
Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

WITHINSHAW V. ARENDS. { 1907.
Feb. 28th.

Mr. Swift moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £240 14s. 11d., for goods sold and delivered, with interest à tempore morae and costs.
Order granted.

CLARKE AND ANOTHER V. GREENBERG.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £112 3s., less £35 10s. paid since issue of summons, for goods sold and delivered on or about the 20th July, 1906.

Mr. Lewis (for respondent) applied for a postponement of the case. Defendant, he said was away in German South-West Africa, and the summons had been left at his house in Cape Town with his wife, who believed that her husband had a bona fide defence to the claim. Counsel cited Townley v. Cameron (1 Menzies, 134).

De Villiers, C.J.: Defendant left the country knowing that he had extensive dealings with the plaintiff, and that he might at any time be called upon to pay the debts which he owed to plaintiff. He left his wife here, and the summons was served in the proper manner by leaving it at his last known place of residence and serving it upon his wife. We must presume that she brought it to his notice, as it was her duty to do. I am not satisfied that it was not brought to his knowledge. In certain circumstances the defendant may reopen the case. I do not wish to prejudice it, but, for the present I am of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment by default, with costs.

Judgment accordingly.

INSOLVENT ESTATE WOLSTENHOLME V. ROUX.

Mr. Howes moved for judgment under Rule 319 in terms of summons for £545 and costs.
Order granted.

KELLY V. MOSSOP AND OTHERS.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 319, against the defendant, McCrum, in default of plea for payment of £26 9s. 9d., balance of certain moneys due to plaintiff, who was a mining engineer, in respect to services in inspecting certain property in the district of Hay.

Order granted against defendant McCrum.

THWAITES V. HARRIS AND KING.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in terms of the declaration.

Dr. Greer (for defendants) applied for the removal of bar and leave to plead.

Affidavits having been read and Dr. Greer having been heard in argument.

De Villiers, C.J.: There is no doubt that the defendants have been in default. There is certainly a strong prima facie case in favour of the plaintiffs, and I cannot consent to any purging of default or leave to plead unless proper security is given. The Court will grant leave to purge default and file plea, but I think that within four days from this date defendants should give security to the satisfaction of the Registrar of the Supreme Court for the due payment of the amount claimed, and costs in case judgment should be given against them, failing such security judgment to be entered as prayed, with costs.

On the application of Dr. Greer, defendant was allowed seven days within which to furnish security.

FERREIRA V. FERREIRA AND RESIDENT MAGISTRATE OF WILLOWMORE.

This was an action to have the respondent, Ignatius Wm. Ferreira, declared incapable of managing his own affairs, and a curator appointed of his property.

Dr. Rainsford (for applicant) read an affidavit by Mr. Hugo, Resident Magistrate of Willowmore, who, as curator ad litem, acquiesced in the application, and also affidavits by others to the effect that Mr. Ferreira was unfit to manage his own affairs. It was suggested that Mr. P. M. van Noorden, attorney, Willowmore, should be appointed curator of the respondent's property.

Order granted, declaring Ignatius Wm. Ferreira incapable of managing his own affairs and appointing P. M. van Noorden as curator of his property, provided that he gives security to the satisfaction of the Resident Magistrate of Willowmore for the due administration of the estate, costs of these proceedings to come out of the estate.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

JERVOISE V. JERVOISE. { 1907.
{ Feb. 28th.

Mr. Struben moved for a decree of divorce, with forfeiture of benefits of the marriage, in default of defendant's compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights.

Order granted as prayed.

MECHAU V. MECHAU.

Mr. Payne moved for a decree of divorce, with custody of the children of the marriage, in default of defendant's compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights.

Order granted as prayed.

FLUCKIGER V. FLUCKIGER.

Mr. Rowson moved for a decree of divorce, in default of defendant's compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights.

Order granted.

DUNDAS V. BEUKES.

Mr. M. Bisset applied for an extension of the return day of a certain rule calling upon respondent to show cause why transfer should not be granted of certain property. Personal service had not been effected, and no publication had been made as directed in the Rule.

De Villiers, C.J., remarked that it was a pity that the directions given in the Rule were not followed, so that this further application might have been saved. He ordered the matter to stand over for information as to when the order of Court was sent down to Upington for service on respondent.

At a later stage Mr. Bisset informed the Court that the order was given on the 1st February, and was obtained from the Registrar on the 5th February, and on that day sent up to Upington. The Rule had been left at the respondent's last known place of residence, and there had not been sufficient time to allow of publication.

Return day extended until the 15th April, to enable publication in a newspaper as directed.

Er parte STREETER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers said that this was the return day of a certain rule nisi, but owing to the fact that respondents (Myers, Puxtey and Co.) were travelling about with a bioscope, it had been impossible to effect service. The application was for the attachment of certain funds.

Return day extended until the first day of next term.

KALK BAY MUNICIPALITY V. HURST.

Mr. Burton (for applicants) applied for a postponement of the matter until the 12th March to enable the applicants to file replying affidavits.

Dr. Greer (for respondent) urged that the Court should grant costs against applicants in view of the fact that notice of motion was only given on the 25th February for the hearing to-day.

Postponed until the 12th March, costs to be costs in the cause.

Look in Sheriff 1928 O.P.D. 166.
ESTATE VAN DER MERWE { 1907.
V. THORNE. { Feb. 28th.

Expenses of transfer—Lien—
Tacit hypothecation—Retention—Insolvency—Preference —Mortgage bond—Equitable mortgage.

The applicant acted as agent of A. in passing transfer of certain land, and in afterwards passing a special mortgage on such land in favour of the respondent. A. became insolvent, whereafter the applicant, as trustee of the insolvent estate, awarded to himself, in his individual capacity, a preference by virtue of a lien, which he claimed on the deed of transfer of the land, in respect of his expenses in effecting such transfer.

Held, that the applicant, being allowed the use of the transfer deed for the purpose of passing a bond on the property, was not entitled, in competition, to any preference in respect of the proceeds of the land.

This was an application upon notice calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not be ordered to proceed with the objection lodged by him with the Master of the Supreme Court on the 27th August, 1906, against the confirmation of the liquidation and distribution account framed by the applicant, as trustee in the insolvent estate, or withdraw the said objection, and why he should not be ordered to pay costs.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for applicant, R. A. Jansen, the trustee; Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for respondent.

It appeared that the trustee, who is also the secretary of the Graaff-Reinet Board of Executors, had filed a distribution account awarding the respondent £1.198 on a claim for £1,371, being the amount of a bond and interest in the estate, and awarding his Board a sum of £58 14s. 3d. as a preferent claim, alleging that this preference was by virtue of a lien which he held for costs incurred by the Board in connection with passing transfer to insolvent and a bond to respondent. Respondent objected to the preference, and he now appeared to show cause why the preference awarded by the trustee should be struck out of the account.

Counsel having been heard in argument.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is by no means clear to me that a lien exists in this case at all, but I will assume that the applicant Board would have been entitled to a lien as against the insolvent in respect of the expenses connected with the transfer. After the deed had been passed, the respondent advanced certain sums of money to the insolvent, and a bond was passed in favour of the respondent. It is quite possible that if the Board had insisted upon having its claim discharged, it might have said: "We refuse to hand over these title deeds for the purpose of passing a bond until our expenses connected therewith have been paid." If there were a lien, that would have been the right of the Board. But the Board allowed this bond to be passed, apparently it was the agent for the passing of the bond, and in that way led the respondent to suppose that he was going to have a special hypothecation over this property, and that he would be entitled to all the proceeds of that land in case of sale, to the extent of the amount of the bond and interest due thereunder. Whatever rights of hypothecation the Board would have had as against the insolvent himself, it cannot enforce those rights in competition with the respondent as the bona fide mortgagee of the land. The applicants are practically claiming what in English law is called an "equitable mortgage" in respect of this property, a mortgage existing by virtue of a deposit of title deeds in the hands of the creditor. This Court has never recognised that such an equitable mortgage can have any effect as against even a subsequent special mortgage which had been duly registered. For these reasons, I am clearly of opinion that the applicant is not entitled to his preference, and that the objection made by the respondent to the account was a perfectly valid one. The mistake which respondent made no doubt was that he did not press his objection, and did not follow the procedure indicated by the Insolvent Ordinance. But, on the other hand, it appears to me that it was the duty of the applicant, as soon as this objection was raised by the respondent, to admit the correctness of the objection, and withdraw the item objected to, but instead of that, proceedings were taken in this Court to compel respondent to withdraw his claim but as the applicants are responsible for all the costs. I think they should also pay the costs. It is a case in which the trustee representing the Board acted entirely in the interests of the Board. No doubt he acted with perfect bona fides, but, in my opinion, he was entirely wrong in his reading of the law, and the result is that the applicant must pay costs. The application will, therefore, be refused with costs.

Mr. Jones asked his lordship whether it was intended that applicant should pay costs as trustee of the insolvent estate.

De Villiers, C.J.: Of course, all these expenses have been incurred on behalf of the Board, not qua trustee. I should think the Board must pay the costs de bonis propriis.

MASTER SUPREME COURT V. TRUSTEE INSOLVENT ESTATE NORRIS.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for an order of personal attachment against respondent for contempt of Court in failing to obey an order of Court to file plan of distribution, and account, in the insolvent estate Norris.

Respondent did not appear.

De Villiers, C.J.: The notice of motion indicates the ground of application. Order granted.

REX V. HENDRICKS.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for the removal of the criminal trial to the ensuing Circuit Court at Worcester.

Order granted accordingly.

OTTOSTROOM V. STEPHAN BROS.

Dr. Greer moved for the appointment of a Commission to take the evidence of certain sailors in Cape Town, and also of Dr. R. W. Griffin at Aliwal North.

Mr. Gardiner (for the assumed executor of H. R. Stephan) opposed the application, and pointed out that a Commission had already been granted for examining witnesses at Port Nolloth, and there had also been an application to fix a day for hearing. His client objected to the multiplication of costs in a pauper suit in this way.

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case I have to consider the interests of the plaintiff himself. If it is essential that these witnesses should be heard, I think I should give him an opportunity, as they are leaving the Colony, of calling them. In regard to the doctor at Aliwal North, it is a pity that counsel was not authorised to consent to an affidavit being used, that would have saved expense, but if such an affidavit cannot be used the only other alternative is to appoint a Commission.

Order granted appointing Commissions in Cape Town and Aliwal North to examine the witnesses named in the petition. Mr. Advocate Giddy to be Commissioner in Cape Town, and the R.M. of Aliwal North to be Commissioner at Aliwal North. No costs will be allowed for these applications which have been made.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

FREARSON V. FREARSON. { 1907.
Mar. 1st.

This was an action brought by James Henry Frearson, contractor, Claremont, against his wife, Clara Frearson, also of Claremont, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, set out that he was married in community of property to the defendant at St. Saviour's, Claremont, on the 2nd December, 1891. There was no issue of the marriage. On the 24th August, 1906, defendant wrongfully and without reasonable and just cause deserted the plaintiff, and had since refused to return to or cohabit with him, although requested so to do. He prayed for an order of restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce and forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage.

Defendant, in her plea, denied that on the 24th August she wrongfully and without just cause deserted the plaintiff. Since December, 1905, plaintiff had been habitually addicted to the excessive use of intoxicants, and had cruelly ill-treated the defendant. In consequence she refused to return to him on the 24th August. Thereafter, she returned to him, but on the 8th September he again struck her. Since the 8th September she had refused to return to or cohabit with the plaintiff. She said that she had reasonable or just cause for refusing to return to or cohabit with him. She prayed that the claim may be dismissed. In reconvention she craved leave to refer to the allegations in the plea. She said that in 1897 she adopted a child, of which she desired to have custody. She claimed a judicial separation, with division of the joint estate, an order upon plaintiff to contribute £5 a month towards her maintenance and custody of the said child.

Plaintiff, in his plea to the claim in reconvention, denied that he was habitually addicted to drink, or that his wife had any reasonable or just cause to leave the house. He also urged that the child should be left in his custody.

Dr. Greer was for plaintiff; Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for defendant.

The plaintiff (James Hy. Frearson, a European) said that he was a jobbing contractor for gravel drives and tennis courts, and resided at Paradise-road, Claremont. He was married to defendant in community of property at St. Saviour's, Claremont. At that time they had no property. After some time he had a quarrel with his wife in reference to a sum of £25, which witness said his wife's brother had robbed him of. On the 18th August he came home, and asked his wife for money to pay for some gravel that he required. She refused to give him any money; they had words, and he eventually told her to leave the house. He did not strike the defendant. She went out; he found the money (£15), and later in the evening he went to look for his wife, but could not find her. Next day he found her at the Police Station. She returned to him on the following Friday. The next quarrel they had was in reference to a letter of demand for £2 2s. that he received from Mr. Duncan, law agent. His wife said she had been to Mr. Duncan, but he did not know at that time what her business was. He had since learnt that she had been trying to have him locked up or ordered to keep the peace. His wife told him she would have him locked up. This occurred on the 8th September. He did not threaten or strike the defendant. He had not spoken to his wife since the 8th September. He told her at that time that she was a "bit of a fraud." Witness denied that he was addicted to drink, or that he had assaulted the defendant. He said he desired to retain custody of the child, who was off-coloured. He had bought certain land at Retreat, but had been unable to obtain transfer, owing to the death of the vendor and the sequestration of his estate. Witness earned 22s. a week, and had to pay a boy 12s. He got occasional jobs, that would average about 18s. a week.

Cross-examined: He had given his wife a "smack" on the jaw now and again, just to keep her quiet. He had been under the influence of liquor at home about once a week. His wife sometimes had a good deal too much to say. He had been convicted of assaulting the defendant, and fined £1. She raised £12 to get his discharge from the Army.

James Ruck, a gravel contractor, of Claremont, said that plaintiff was a steady, hard-working man. He was a man who liked his glass of beer just as any other man did.

Dr. Greer closed his case.

Defendant, a coloured woman, said that she tried to avoid the plaintiff when he came home under the influence of drink. On the 12th August he returned home and asked for his money, which she gave him. He used to leave his money under the care of witness. He ordered her to clear out of the house. Witness stayed all night in the yard. Afterwards she lodged a complaint at the police-station, Wynberg. The police advised her to see Mr. Duncan, and this she accordingly did. Plaintiff wrote asking her to come back, and upon his promising not to assault her again, she returned to him. On the 8th September he came home drunk, and in the evening he again called for his money, and ordered her to leave the house. She went out, and he tried to drag her back by her hair, and assaulted her on the head and arm. When she refused to return he tore up her clothing. As to the child, the mother asked her to adopt it, and witness, with her husband's consent, brought the child home.

Cross-examined: Witness had been prepared to return to the defendant if he would not assault her. She was not afraid of the plaintiff, except that he might beat her. Plaintiff has earned £3, £4, and sometimes £10 in a week, but at other times he had earned very little.

Maasdorp, J., granted a decree of judicial separation, with costs, and the plaintiff was ordered to deliver up the custody of the child to the defendant.

In re ESTATE PATTERSON AND MORRIS.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the appointment of Mr. G. W. Steytler as provisional trustee in the estate of Patterson and Morris. The application was made on behalf of certain creditors who wished the business to be carried on.

Mr. Steytler was appointed provisional trustee, with powers to carry on the business.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice LAURENCE, the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

Ex parte JANSEN. { 1907.
 { Mar. 4th.

Mr. Burton moved as a matter of urgency for an interdict restraining one J. J. B. van der Merwe from proceeding with certain works on ground at Bethesda, district of Graaff-Reinet. The petitioner, Johannes Jansen, of Bethesda, said that he owned a farm, close to which flowed a tributary of the Sundays River. From this river petitioner and the former owners of the farm had from time immemorial led water by means of a furrow. This furrow at point "c" on the plan used to be distant 30 yards from the river, but, owing to the stream, having widened its course, it was now only 25 ft. distant. Before the river so widened its course a road used to cross it at about 25 yards above "c," but owing to the widening of the course a space of 75 yards, formerly the only available crossing, had been rendered impassable, and there was no possibility of making a crossing without raising the bed of the river, a step which could not be carried out without causing serious damage to petitioner's land. He had received notice that Van der Merwe, an adjoining owner, intended to repair the road. In spite of sanction having been refused by petitioner, Van der Merwe had gone on his property, and interfered with the furrow, and he was now engaged in repairing the road. Van der Merwe had no need whatever of this road as he could get to his ground by other roads. If respondents were allowed to proceed with the raising of the river bed, as he was doing, petitioner would be in imminent danger of having his furrow and lands swept away by the flood water.

The Court granted a rule to operate as an interim interdict in terms of the petition, rule returnable on March 19.

ZIETSMAN V. REYNOLD'S VEHICLE AND HARNESS FACTORY, LTD.	{ 1907. Mar. 4th. " 11th. " 12th. " 23rd.
---	---

[For Head Note and report of case in the Court below, see 16 C.T.R., 1048.]

This matter came on for hearing on appeal from a judgment of the Chief Justice, sitting in the First Division of the Supreme Court.

The matter arose out of a motion which was heard before the Chief Justice for confirmation of the liquidators' report when appearance was entered on behalf of certain persons, whom it was sought to make contributories. Amongst these was Mr. L. F. Zietsman, the present appellant.

The judgment of the Chief Justice so far as it related to the present appellant was as follows: "As to Mr. Zietsman, I have no doubt whatever as to his liability. I consider that there is clear proof that the 2,000 shares were applied for by him. We have got the books of the company, and we have the pregnant fact that in the list sent to the Registrar of Deeds his name appears as the allottee of the 2,000 shares. He had an opportunity of denying this statement that he had signed that list, but he did not deny it. He simply said he did not sanction it. I am satisfied also that he would not—if he had intended to have only the 1,000 shares—he would not have paid the £125 for allotment, and in addition to the £1,000 for the remaining 1,000 shares. I am satisfied in respect of the 2,000 shares, as he has paid only £1,125, he is still liable for the 875 shares which had been allotted to him, and stand in his name in the books of the company. Then, in regard to the other 500 shares, I am satisfied that he should be held liable in regard to them. He stands exactly on the same footing in regard to the 500 shares as the three other directors whom I have mentioned, but if there is any difference, all the difference is against Mr. Zietsman. He knew, and he had every opportunity of knowing, that these 500 shares formed part of the original number which had been awarded to Mr. Reynolds under an agreement which was never registered in terms of the 97th section of the Act of 1892. The order of the Court will be that Mr. Zietsman be placed on the list of contributories for 1,375 shares."

Mr. Close (with him Mr. Gardiner) was for appellant; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), was for respondents, the liquidators of the company.

Mr. Close, in argument, said that one of the first contentions he wished to put before the Court was that it was wholly impossible for the Court to give a decision putting Mr. Zietsman on the list of contributories, unless it were in possession of facts which it was not in possession of at the present time. There were a large number of facts which were hotly disputed. There were oath and counter-oath, and strong statements made by both sides. The statements were made either on affidavit or they were made under circumstances which came before the Court practically in the nature of an inquiry. Mr. Syfret was the inspector appointed to go into the affairs of the company, on the application of Mr. Reynolds, in December, 1903, and for the purposes of inspection or inquiry, he had a number of witnesses before him, who were called and sworn, and they gave information upon a number of important facts. It would be almost an impertinence on his part to refer to the respect which was paid to Mr. Syfret's judgment, but, whatever information there was before Mr. Syfret, and whatever conclusion he came to, that information when it came before the Court was decided by the Court quite apart from any conclusions of Mr. Syfret's, and the Court could only weigh the evidence as it actually was given. In connection with a case of this kind, when a large number of issues really causing very serious consequences for the persons concerned, how could the Court, without having the points put to the witnesses, arrive at a conclusion as to which of the parties was telling the truth in regard to the disputed facts? Mr. Syfret put certain conclusions before the Court in his report as inspector. Then, in his report as liquidator, he incorporated that. Mr. Syfret was the original inspector, and Mr. Chiappinni was never an inspector at all. He never had an opportunity of seeing the witnesses who were called before Mr. Syfret. One of the important features of the whole case was, what was the share register? There was no evidence as to whether certain books were or were not the share register. The conclusions of Mr. Syfret were adopted by Mr. Chiappini. Those conclusions comprised conclusions as to a supplementary share register. Now, the basis of the whole case in law against any person who was to be made a contributory was that he should be a member, and a member was one who was on the books and had agreed to become a member. Both those conditions were necessarily precedent. Now, what evidence had the Court as to what the real share register was? Then, it was said some other book contained it. His case was that they had never proved that that book was the share register of the company. It was the rough allotment book. The book bore no title at all. Mr. Syfret at one stage called it the share register, and some of the witnesses referred to it by that name. At the inspection proceedings this allotment book, as they called it, the rough share register as Mr. Syfret called it, the allotment book as Mr. Cosnett called it, all these referred to a book which had no name.

[Laurence, J.: According to this book, Zietsman does appear as the holder of 2,000 shares fully paid up?]

Mr. Close: Yes.

[Laurence, J.: That being so, surely it is some prima facie evidence of the fact that he is the holder of 2,000 shares?]

Mr. Close: I do not admit that it is prima facie evidence. The best evidence is to be found in the share register proper.

[Laurence, J.: In that it only appears that 500 shares were transferred to him.]

Mr. Close: With that must be taken the supplementary share register, which was opened in due form by the company. My contention is that this is a case really in which there are so many points involved that the parties ought to be ordered to go to trial. This is a case in which it is impossible for the Court, on the information before it, to find out which was the register, to find out who actually were the shareholders. The Court, I submit, will be doing the best thing in the circumstances by ordering that the matter be gone into by trial. The issues may be raised by this form of proceeding, if the liquidator bring an action to rectify the register of shareholders. In that way he would have an opportunity of showing that the 2,000 shares ought to be put against Mr. Zietsman in the share register, and thereupon at the same time he would have an opportunity of proving—

[Laurence, J.: You have not explained yet the omission apparently from the transfer of register of any reference to the 1,000 shares which you admit were allotted to Mr. Zietsman.]

Mr. Close: Mr. Sieg's evidence shows that what we call the share register is a book in which he entered the names of persons who received fully paid up shares, and the inference then is that that book was used purely and simply for the purpose of keeping a record to be entered up afterwards in the share register proper of persons who had applied for and taken shares, but had not fully paid up. Counsel went on to draw the Court's attention to section 74 of the Companies Act (No. 25, 1892) as showing who are members of a company. That section said that every subscriber to the memorandum of association should be deemed to have agreed to be a member of a company under the Act, and every other person who had agreed to be a member and whose name had been placed on the register of members should be deemed to be a member. Those two conditions, counsel submitted, were co-ordinate and co-equal, and one was just as important as the other. A member must not only be on the register but he must have agreed to be on the register. Unless Mr. Zietsman had agreed that he would become a member, Mr. Dominicus had no right to put him on the register.

Laurence, J.: The difficulty I felt was to understand clearly what was the consideration for the subsequent transfer of the other 500 shares.]

Mr. Close: That confirms perhaps the other branch in another form. What evidence is there on the record, and how can the Court determine whether the point your lordship has raised is or is not against Mr. Zietsman? He is put on the register for 2,000 shares before he gets the 500, but it all bears out my contention that the Court had to try a large number of questions of fact which it is impossible to decide on motion.

[Laurence, J.: Is it not an exceptional course to hear oral evidence in cases of this kind?]

Mr. Close said that he had authorities in support of that view. He felt more justified in putting that proposition before the Court because in the Court below, when the Chief Justice asked him whether, as a matter of fact, he could point out any specific denial by Mr. Zietsman that he had sanctioned the return, he replied that he could not. He found that was an inadvertence, because Mr. Zietsman had said that he did not sanction the return. If he did not sanction the return, then he had not acquiesced in a statement that he was the owner of those shares. Mr. Zietsman was coming in as a director, and why should he go out of his way to give this guarantee of £1,000 unless he was anxious to help the company. When

Mr. Zietsman protested that he had not taken these shares, the secretary was instructed by the company to credit him with the 1,000 shares. There was Mr. Zietsman's own statement that he had not received one penny in dividends, interest, or fees from the company. What proof was there that as a fact he acquiesced? There was the allegation that in the books of the company his name appeared, but he swore he did not see these entries in the books. Counsel referred to authorities on the procedure to rectify the register, in which oral evidence had been ordered, as follows: Winston's case (12 Chan. Div., 239), Ward's case (2 Chan. Appeals, 435), and Sichell's case (3 Chan. Appeals, 122). Let Mr. Syfret bring his action and rectify the register, as provided for in Buckley, page 47, 8th edition. Counsel referred to sections 86 and 157 of the Colonial Act. The former dealt with the method of rectification before liquidation had taken place, and the latter dealt with rectification after liquidation. These sections, he contended, corresponded very closely with sections 35 and 98 of the English Act of 1862. There must be a specific application on notice given to the parties interested to enable them to amend the register, and then on that application parties might set out such facts as they would in an ordinary application, and then the Court had the power to refer the matter back for trial in another form, where there were issues of fact involved, which it was impossible to deal with it on affidavits. The circumstances in the case, counsel submitted, were so involved and the facts so difficult to ascertain whichever way there might be prima facie proof, it was one which the Court would not accept. If the Court would look at what was called the rough allotment book, it would be found there was no provision for transfers. An interesting case was that of Cammell (1894, 2 Chan. Div., 392), in which it was held that the allotment sheets were not the register of the company. The case of Weikershein (8 Chan. Appeals, 836) was a strong one in favour of the appellant, as showing very cogent reasons for taking in another book as part and parcel of the complete register of members. On the law as to the agreement to take shares counsel cited Townsend's case (13 Equity, page 152). If Mr. Zietsman was liable at all, he must be liable on an express contract to take the shares, or by a sort of ratification of what someone had done for him. On the question of the forfeiture, counsel cited Buckley (pp. 161-2), and the case of Myles (1865, 11, "Law Times," 581). On the handing back of the shares Hartley's case (10 Chan. Appeals, p. 157) had a feature in common with the one before the Court. There was absolutely nothing to show that at the time the arrangements were made there was any dissatisfaction on the part of anyone, and it was unlikely they were making any arrangements at the time, which did not appear to be good ones. Counsel referred the Court to Allmark's case (9. Chan. Div., 333), In re Denham and Co. (25 Chan. Div., 752), and Bartlett's case (19 "Law Times," 628), in support of his argument, and submitted that the liquidator had failed to satisfy the Court, and could not satisfy the Court that Mr. Zietsman had acquiesced or had knowledge of the fact that he was registered for these shares. In pages 52, 93, and 122 of the record, Mr. Zietsman actually denied both having sanctioned the return and having seen his name on the list. As to Mr. Zietsman's liability on the 500 shares that would depend on whether the agreement of the 30th August, 1904, was valid or not, and counsel submitted that the agreement was perfectly valid. The appellant ceased to be a member for over a year before the liquidation had taken place, and as to the effecting of transfers, counsel referred the Court to Buckley, page 34, which went far beyond what he had to establish in this case. Then, with regard to the non-registration of this agreement, it was interesting to bear in mind that section 97 of the Colonial Act had taken over section 25 of the English Companies Act. Counsel quoted the case of British Farmers' Pure Linseed Cake Company, Ltd. (7 Chan. Div., 533), Blythe (4 Chan. Div., 141), Parbury (1 Chan. Div., 100).

Mr. Close said that by mistake he gave the Court a wrong reference to Simpson's case, which he cited on the question of the discretion of the Court for rectification in regard to an action. The case would be found at 9, Equity, 96. Counsel also quoted Palmer on Company Law (vol. 1, p. 1,052). Proceeding, Mr. Close discussed the agreement with Reynolds, and submitted that, as regarded the transfers and re-transfers, everything was in order. He also quoted from the report of the case heard in the Court of first instance (16. C.T. Reports, 1,050). Continuing, he said that the case was touched by the 97th section of the Companies' Act, and he cited several English cases, including Macdonald's (1, Chan. Div., 94), Parberry's (1896, the Chan. Div., 100), Blumenthal v. Ford (197, Appeal Cases, 156), and Barrow's case (14, Chan. Div., 444).

A question having been raised as to whether Reynolds had by the order of the Chief Justice been placed on the list of contributories, Laurence, J., put it to Mr. Schreiner whether the result of the order of the Court under appeal was to finally settle the list of contributories?

Mr. Schreiner replied that he unquestionably said that it was. Both Reynolds and his sons had been fixed as contributories.

Laurence, J., said that, subject to any question which might arise at any future stage as to the construction of the order of the Divisional Court, at present the only thing they were concerned about was Zietsman's liability. As to the 500 shares, as at present advised, the only point on which they desired to hear counsel for respondents was as to the validity or effectiveness of the entry in what was called the supplementary share register, purporting to transfer to Dominicus and Sieg respectively in November, 1904.

Mr. Schreiner said the first point which he wanted to bring before the Court was as to the register of the company. There had been a misconception as to the facts. The thick book produced, which was denominated the share register, contained only the names of those who had fully paid up their shares. It did not contain the names of those who had been allotted shares, and who had not fully paid up those shares. Those names appeared in the thin book produced. The so-called supplementary share register was too ridiculous to be seriously considered. It was quite clear that there were 2,000 secret commission shares promised by Reynolds to Dominicus.

[Laurence, J.: Do you suggest then that Dominicus occupied a fiduciary position in relation to the company that was to be formed?]

Mr. Schreiner: Absolutely, and no other, for the company would never have come into existence except for his occupying that fiduciary position. These things were never disclosed to the company as a company.

[Maasdorp, J.: Do you suggest that Zietsman had any benefit from that?]

Mr. Schreiner: Yes, he got 500 of the 2,000 shares. Counsel (continuing) urged that the true position was that Dominicus had promised to give Zietsman £200 out of £2,000 in cash which he was to have received. The procedure was plain enough, if there was a bona fide mistake, section 86 provided how parties might have the register amended and altered. The 2,000 shares in the supplementary share register were simply secret commission shares. It was true that the company had done good business in the earlier stages, but later the company, as a going concern, was drifting towards winding-up in one form or another. On the 22nd October, 1904, Mr. Zietsman approved of the action of the secretary of the company in taking steps to record in the office of the Registrar of Deeds a forfeiture of 1,000 shares by reason of unpaid calls thereto, he took a solemn part in these proceedings, and here he asked the Court to listen to him in stating that he never had anything to do with these 1,000 shares, and there was a condition precedent which Dominicus broke. Zietsman, it was clear, was endeavouring to make it out that the £1,000 were paid in cash for the first 1,000 shares, and he was anxious to take the line that £125 was for transfer duty. The £125 was paid on the first 1,000 shares in November, 1902, and the second 1,000 were paid for in full by him, which left £875 to be paid. The evidence went to show that there was a contract, and if there had been anything lacking in the formality, counsel submitted the appellant was estopped.

Counsel urged that if Mr. Zietsman was registered for one thousand shares, he was registered for the other. The letter of Dominicus was not consistent with the contention of Zietsman, because he (Zietsman) said that the £1,000 which he paid was for the 1,000 shares which he then applied for. The appellant was driven to this peculiar position: He evidently left the Rev. Mr. Vlok from December 31, 1902, when he got the money, until March 16, in a condition of uncertainty, and then paid him on the 6th April a dividend of 10 per cent. Up to the 16th March he could, on his own showing, only have 1,500 shares. Sieg, the secretary, and Dominicus, knew quite well there was no registered contract. On the subject of allotment counsel referred to Levitt's case (17, "Law Times," 337).

Mr. Close, in reply, said that one very strong justification of the contention that he put forth at the beginning, that this matter should be decided by trial, was approved by the line of argument adopted by his learned friend, who had devoted his attention almost solely to the facts. He submitted that it had not been proved that Mr. Zietsman ever agreed to become a shareholder for the second 1,000 shares. It lay upon his learned friend to prove conclusively that Mr. Zietsman agreed to become a shareholder in respect of those shares. This he had failed to do. As to the actual agreement, he submitted that counsel for respondents had hopelessly failed to show that there was any agreement. There had been no proof of the application for, or allotment of the second 1,000 shares. With regard to the conclusion which his learned friend sought to draw from the letters, Mr. Close said that those conclusions amounted to a charge of gross fraud against Mr. Zietsman. That, he submitted, was not borne out by the facts. It was wholly inconsistent with the report brought up by the liquidators, Mr. Syfret and Mr. Chiappinni, who said that although there had been great irregularities in connection with the company, no actual fraud had been committed by the directors.

In further argument, he protested against the general charges of fraud which had been insinuated against or levelled at Mr. Zietsman, and said that Mr. Zietsman should be given an opportunity, as he would have at a trial of meeting those charges. Counsel especially criticised what he described as the reckless charges made by Mr. Bishop. Dealing with the question of Mr. Zietsman having received shares out of secret commission paid to Dominicus and Sieg, he said that if his learned friend put it on the basis of secret commission, the position was dealt with by Vaughan Williams, L.J., in Macdonald's case and Curling's case (1. Chan. Div., 115). He also cited Ex parte Sandys (42, Chan. Div., 110).

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (March 23rd).

Laurence, J.: This was an appeal from a decision of the learned Chief Justice, by which the appellant, Mr. Zietsman, was placed on the list of contributories in a company in liquidation, called the Reynolds Vehicle and Harness Factory, Ltd., for 1,375 shares. Some question has been raised as to the construction and effect of the order of the Divisional Court. It appears to me that the report of the liquidators and the list of contributories having presumably laid for inspection in the ordinary way, and the liquidators having in their report (record page 3) asked "that the list be now settled," the intention of the order must have been to settle the list, subject to the variations indicated therein. If, however, any doubt exists as to the interpretation of the order, the proper course would be for any interested party to apply to the Chief Justice, by whom it was made. The present appeal is confined to the question of the liability of Zietsman. There was a very exhaustive argument, and a prodigious number of authorities were cited, the collection of which does much credit to the industry of counsel. I have looked through them all, but I cannot say that I have derived much assistance from their examination. I am often reminded of a saying of Lord Cairns, who once remarked that, in his experience, the essential thing in the great majority of cases was to get a clear conception of the facts. When the facts are once ascertained, the law is seldom very difficult to apply. Most of the cases cited at the Bar simply involve an application of the well-known principles of equitable jurisdiction, which the Court applies in these matters to the special circumstances in which its aid is invoked. The facts in the present case, however, are far from easy to ascertain, and the main contention on the part of the appellant was that they were so doubtful and so obscure that it would be unsafe finally to conclude the matter without the Court itself seeing the witnesses and trying the issue on oral evidence. So far as I am aware, that course has never yet been adopted in this Court in a matter of this kind, and the real question is whether sufficient ground exists for such exceptional procedure on the present occasion. In order to answer this question, it becomes necessary to examine the facts, as disclosed in the record, in considerable detail, and with special reference to the dates, which are so extremely material that I have found it convenient to construct a sort of chronological synopsis of the main features in the history of this ill-starred company, as to which it may be said that all those concerned in its promotion and management seem to "have done those things which they ought not to have done, and left undone those things which they ought to have done." There was no health in the company from its birth, which ought to have been treated as an abortion. It is fair to say that the liquidators are of opinion that no actual fraud was committed by any director in relation to the company since its formation, but it has brought nothing but misfortune on all concerned in it, while the vendor, who was the owner of what appears to have been a thriving business, seems to have lost everything he possessed, and to be now, with his sons, on the list of contributories for some 20,000 shares, on which, if the directors in general, and the appellant in particular, had discharged their obvious and elementary duty, there would have been no liability at all. The appellant was the company's attorney from the first. He was also from an early date the chairman of the Board. His responsibility for everything connected with the company subsequent to its flotation, and for all the irregularities which were committed, and for their disastrous consequences, is a very grave one.

The vendor, Reynolds, as I have said, appears to have carried on for some time a fairly good business at Claremont as a cart and wagon-builder and harness-maker. In 1902 trade was brisk, and he appeared to be prospering. About this time he seems to have made the acquaintance of one Sieg, who became engaged to, and I think married, his daughter. Sieg was a clerk in the employ of one Dominicus, who describes himself as a commission agent. About these men we know very little. Reynolds appears to have been a practical tradesman, but with little general education; he knew nothing whatever about shares; but he was persuaded by Dominicus and Sieg that it would be a good thing to take a favourable opportunity of converting his little concern into a limited company. He accordingly gave Dominicus, in September, 1902, an option for four months to buy his business with that end in view, on certain terms, which were afterwards embodied in a prospectus. The prospectus is a remarkable document. It bears no date. Dominicus (record, p. 37) says he thinks it was issued in November; but if the dates on which the first instalment was paid by three members are correctly entered (see 2, 4, 5, p. 241), it must have been issued not later than October 20. This prospectus fixed the capital at £110,000 in £1 shares, of which 17,000 were to be issued to the vendor and 40,000 offered to the public, the balance being kept in reserve. The assets were valued at over £40,000, but no mention was made of the fact that there was a bond on the property for £5,000. Neither was it thought worth while to mention that of the £40,000, in cash and shares, which the vendor was to receive, ten per cent. was to be paid as promotion-money to Dominicus, whose name appeared on the prospectus as one of the directors. This very material contract, between the vendor and one of the directors, was not disclosed, and no statement was supplied of annual or average profits. The one satisfactory feature in the business is that the number of simple persons who were induced by this prospectus to apply for shares was extremely small, even although the hook was baited with the additional attraction of a "guarantee slip" attached to the prospectus, by which the vendor guaranteed a dividend of ten per cent. for the first year. The directors, it seems, actually went to allotment on a subscription of some 7,000 shares, a figure obviously utterly inadequate to discharge the obligations to the vendor or provide the necessary minimum of working capital. The company was registered on November 21, and on that date the appellant applied for 1,000 shares, and paid £125, the amount due on application. Some question has been raised on the subject, but I find that Sieg states expressly (p. 23) that there was a written application. He also stated that the company went to allotment about December 5, and that a form of allotment, of which he identified a copy, was issued to all shareholders, including Zietsman (p. 85). There was thus a completed contract. Zietsman appears on the list of members as No. 30, with an entry of the first instalment as paid on that date. The suggestion subsequently made both by Zietsman and Dominicus (see pp. 45 and 118), that the £125 was advanced for the payment of transfer duty, etc., seems to have no foundation in fact. This duty was not paid till more than two months later, on January 29, and the amount was £600 (p. 180). The appellant undoubtedly became a shareholder at the beginning of December. He was proposed for election as a director at the first meeting, on December 5, and at the first general meeting of shareholders, held on December 9, he was present, and his nomination as director was confirmed. This having been done, he seems to have conducted practically all the business of the meeting, proposing three resolutions, all of which were carried. These resolutions are not unimportant. By the first the flotation and registration were confirmed; by the second the nominal capital was reduced to £60,000; by the third the directors were authorised to borrow from the working capital any balance which could not be raised by loan to pay the vendor the £13,000 in cash, which it had then been arranged he should accept, "and to issue shares to replace this." In other words, the directors, on Zietsman's proposition, were expressly authorised to issue further shares in order to replenish the working capital which had been or might be depleted by payments to the vendor. These proposals having been unanimously adopted, the meeting came to an end. As a matter of fact, only two independent shareholders, who held between them sixty shares, appear to have been present. The next meeting of the Board was held on January 3, the appellant being present. At that time he was about to leave on a trip on-country. Reynolds wanted his money—£10,000 had been raised on loan and a balance of £3,000 in cash apparently was still due to him—and Zietsman, before leaving, drew a cheque for £1,000, which it seems was to be given to Reynolds should he press for a further payment during his absence. The main question in dispute is whether he agreed at this date to take another thousand shares in payment for his £1,000. If so, the transaction would appear to be within the scope of the authority contained in the third resolution, already quoted, which he had proposed at the shareholders' meeting. Now it is admitted that at this time the question of his taking another thousand shares was discussed. There is said to have been some question about a bonus of £200, to be paid him in that event by Dominicus out of his £2,000. It may be a mere coincidence that, if Zietsman at this time increased his holding to 2,000 shares, he would become entitled to £200 as dividend guaranteed by the vendor. Whether he got his £200 out of the £2,000 Reynolds was to pay Dominicus, or out of the dividend for which Reynolds was responsible, does not seem very material. It may also be a mere coincidence that, three days before, on December 31 (see receipt at p. 173), he had received from the Rev. Mr. Vlok the precise sum of £1,000, being a fund raised for that gentleman by public subscription, for investment on his behalf, and that, three months afterwards, when the dividend was declared, he gave Mr. Vlok a cheque for £100. All this, taken together, seems most naturally explained on the supposition that Zietsman at this time agreed to subscribe for another 1,000 shares, used Mr. Vlok's cash for the purpose, and intended, as he himself admits he intended, if all went well, to regard it as appropriated to this particular investment. The cheque, as a matter of fact, was not cashed till after Zietsman's return, on February 13. On that day he attended a meeting of the Board and was elected chairman. At this meeting it was resolved "that the action of the chairman in having paid Mr. Reynolds the sum of £1,000 be confirmed, and that he be authorised to pay him further amounts, found out of the working capital that could be spared." Taking together the resolutions of December 9 and February 13, the natural conclusion seems to be that, when Zietsman handed Dominicus this cheque for the payment of Reynolds, it was regarded as a loan from working capital, for which he had to receive an equivalent in shares. Nothing, moreover, can be more explicit than the statement on the subject subsequently made by Dominicus himself. After an interview with Zietsman, on November 12, 1903, he wrote as follows: "Referring to your call this morning, you are quite correct. When you paid me a cheque for £1,000 on account of shares in the company, it was in full payment of 1,000 shares which you then applied for; this was subsequent to our conversation about the first 1,000 shares. The secretary is in error in not having credited you for the 1,000 shares as fully paid up." Than this, as I have said, nothing could be more explicit. But he goes on to say: "It is true that you did not sign the application for the other 1,000 shares, but promised to take them up when the £200 out of money I have to receive from Reynolds is paid to your credit. The £125 advanced by you against transfer duty, etc., should have remained to your credit in the general account, and the entry should be corrected." Than this, nothing could be more unintelligible. While it purports to confirm some statement made by Zietsman that morning, it does not in the least agree with the version given by him in his letter of the previous day to the secretary, and that letter itself appears to have been an amended version of another he had previously written, which he withdrew, and was unable to produce at the subsequent inquiry. While in Dominicus's letter the "other thousand shares" appear to relate to the earlier transaction, when the £125 was paid, Zietsman in his letter speaks of the later transaction as having remained conditional and incomplete. He expressly mentions "a second thousand shares." Dominicus says Zietsman signed no application for "the other thousand"—that seems to be the first thousand—but as to this, he is contradicted by Sieg, and, as already pointed out, it is quite clear that Zietsman then became a shareholder, while his reference to an "advance against transfer duty, etc.," has already been shown to be incorrect.

In emptis et redditis magis id quod factum quam id quod dictum sequendum. The best evidence of what actually took place should be found in the share register, which, by Section 76 of the Act, the company is bound under heavy penalties to keep. Two books have been produced—a fat book and a thin book. There has been much question about their proper description. I will call them for convenience "A" and "B." In the record the fat book ("A") is described as "share register," and the thin book ("B") as "rough allotment book." The first is really an issue and transfer book, containing all shares which were fully paid up, or issued as such—except Zietsman's thousand (see Sieg's evidence, pp. 24 and 25)—and subsequent transfers, while the allotment book ("B"), described by the liquidators as a "rough share register," gives the names and addresses of members, and the amount paid on their shares, but does not distinguish the shares by their numbers, as required by the Act. On the whole, I think the two books, taken together, may be regarded as constituting a register, sufficient at all events in the case of a prosecution under the section, to make the position fairly defensible. Now, turning to book "B," we find that while Zietsman was entered as "No. 30" as the holder of 1,000 shares on which the application money had been paid on November 21, 1902, he appears again as "No. 63" on February 13, 1903, on which date the £1,000 seems to have been distributed by the secretary between the two numbers, showing £500 paid on 30 and £625 on 63. The entries contain references both to January 3 and February 13, being evidently the dates on which the cheque for £1,000 was drawn and cashed respectively. At this period, in terms of the prospectus, assuming an allotment, £500 would have been due on each 1,000. There is no clear explanation of these appropriations; but in all the circumstances it seems almost impossible to suppose that Sieg would have made them except under instructions from either Dominicus or Zietsman, or both, though, of course, it is possible that the may have misapprehended their effect.

The next date of importance in the history of the case is March 16, when the Board held a meeting, Mr. Zietsman in the chair. It was then resolved, on the proposal of Dominicus, that "Mr. Zietsman will receive 1,000 shares of the reserved capital for services rendered in connection with the flotation of the company." When the company was floated, his only apparent connection with it was as a member of the firm of Faure and Zietsman, the attorneys to the company. It seems probable that the services referred to were in connection with a guarantee of a loan on mortgage of £10,000, which was obtained from the Board of Executors in order to pay Reynolds. However that may be, it may be observed that such an issue as that voted by the Board to the chairman apparently required confirmation, under section 58, by a special resolution of shareholders, and that, although there is a passage in the directors' report, signed by Zietsman, as chairman, dated April 3, and adopted at a shareholders' meeting on that date, which may possibly refer to these shares, there is nothing which could be regarded as equivalent to such special resolution. The contract also, of course, required registration, under section 97, the provisions of which were ignored throughout. As a matter of fact, there is nothing to show that these 1,000 shares were ever issued, and I think I need say no more about them. It is not surprising that the report was adopted by the shareholders, as it recommended the promised dividend of ten per cent. It is, perhaps, superfluous to add that no dividend had been earned. The balance-sheet was a remarkable production, and reflected little credit on the accountant, one Wilnot, by whom it purported to have been "audited and found correct." There was no statement of profit and loss, and the dividend was evolved out of a supposed original under-valuation of assets.

The next fact to be noticed is that at this time the vendors' shares were issued. No such "formal agreement" between the vendor and the company as was specially provided for by the option to Dominicus had ever been executed; and no contract under section 97, with regard to the vendors' shares, was registered either "at or before the issue," or at any subsequent date, the result being, as the appellant, at all events, must be presumed to have been aware, that, though purporting to be fully paid up, they, in fact, remained liable for their nominal amount.

The next material date is April 20, when 300 shares, purporting to be fully paid up, were issued to Zietsman. These shares were transferred in the following month to one Cadby. It is not without significance that, according to Mr. Cadby's affidavit (p. 104), he purchased these shares from Zietsman "on or about" February 12, i.e., on the precise date when the £1,000 cheque was cashed, which, according to Dominicus, was in full payment for a thousand shares. The liquidators appear to have placed Zietsman on the list of contributors for 300 shares, in addition to the 1,375, assuming that those issued and transferred to Cadby formed portion of the 1,000 allotted to him, for services rendered, in March. (See affidavit, p. 110.) But it will be noticed that the agreement with Cadby was made more than a month before the shares were voted. As a matter of fact, these shares do not appear ever to have been issued, and, at this period, if the entries as they then stood in book B were correct, Zietsman had no fully paid-up shares to transfer. If however, as Dominicus states, the second thousand had been fully paid up, that is, if the subsequent entries, to which I shall come shortly, were correct, he was entitled to transfer any less number. However, as he has not been held liable on these 300 shares, it is unnecessary to pursue the matter further.

I now come to the 29th of June, on which date a certificate that 29,915 shares had been issued and were fully paid-up was sent by the secretary, with the chairman's approval, to the Registrar of Deeds (p. 244). In connection with this certificate, a list of shareholders, with the amount of their holdings, was prepared, in which Zietsman appears as the holder of 2,000 shares. (List U, p. 170.) As there was some uncertainty on the point as to what was actually sent, the book was produced in court from the registry, and it appeared that, whatever the obligations of the company under the Act, as a matter of fact, only the return, and not the list, was actually sent in. It was sent by the secretary with a simple covering letter. Although counsel in the Court below was not able to find the reference, it does seem that Zietsman did deny having seen this list; at all events, he says he merely saw it in the hand of the secretary, and did not examine it. Sieg, however, is positive that he showed him the list (p. 87). However that may be, assuming that he did see it, he might possibly have thought that the 2,000 shares included the 1,000 voted to him for services by his colleagues on the Board. On the other hand, we must not overlook Bishop's statement, in his evidence before the inspector (p. 74), that, on August 31 Zietsman informed him that he held 3,000 shares. Mr. Close throws doubt on this evidence, and says that if there were 2,000 shares applied for and 1,000 voted, there were also 500 transferred by Dominicus, which form the other branch of the case, not yet considered, and that, therefore, the total would have been either 2,500 or 3,500—not 3,000. He seems, however, to have overlooked the fact that these 500 were not transferred to Zietsman till some months afterwards, namely, in November, 1903.

I do not however wish to place too much reliance, in all the circumstances of the case, on either the alleged exhibition of the list or the alleged statement to

Bishop. Let us assume that it was only, as he himself says, through Cosnett's report, dated October 31, that Zietsman, for the first time, became aware that he had been entered in book B as a member who had applied for 2,000 shares, all of which were partly paid up. He then took steps, as he says, to have the matter rectified at once. There were the two letters to the secretary, the conversation with Dominicus, and the latter's reply, already quoted. Then, on November 17, the Board resolved "that the sum of £1,000 paid cash for 1,000 shares be credited against 1,000 shares as applied for by Mr. Zietsman, and that Mr. Cosnett be notified to that effect." The entries in the book were altered accordingly. Thirty and 63 were both ruled through, and a new 30 and 63 entered. This was very shortly before the official inspection, applied for by the vendor, began, and they are the last entries in the book. According to the new entries, Zietsman is credited on No. 30 with £1,000, paid on February 12, 1903, and on No. 63 with £125, paid in the previous November, that is to say, on the later number with the earlier payment, which is quite irreconcilable with the history of the case and the previous entries. I suppose it was probably intended to leave the £125 standing against No. 30, and to put the £1,000 against No. 63. However that may be, it is difficult to suppose that Zietsman, at whose special instance these alterations were made, did not make himself acquainted with their tenor and effect. Doubtless, as has been laid down in the cases quoted, a director is not presumed, qua director, to be cognisant of entries in the company's books, even so far as they affect himself; but these particular entries appear to have been made in such circumstances that Zietsman must surely have felt bound to check their correctness in accordance with his own understanding of what had previously taken place, and of his then position. There does not appear to be any suggestion that the final entry, No. 63, was subsequently added. Whether, in accordance with the original entries, £625 was paid on one thousand, and £500 on the other, or in accordance with the later entries, £1,000 was paid on the one, and £125 on the other, really makes no difference. In either case there is a liability for £875 unpaid. All the facts taken together seem to point to the conclusion that Zietsman did, on November 21, enter into a contract, completed by allotment on December 5, to take 1,000 shares, and in the following January or February agreed to take a second 1,000. If the £125 was not paid for shares, it is impossible to understand why it was allowed to remain in book B, after the entries had been altered, and it is very significant that nothing was said about that sum, which, on his own showing, should have been refunded long before, in the minutes of the Board meeting of November 17, which I have already quoted. Some further question might no doubt arise as to whether the January agreement with Dominicus was authorised or ratified by the company, and whether there was an effective and valid issue of shares under section 58. That, however, is a question which I do not think, in all the circumstances of the case, the appellant can be allowed to raise. Had the shares proved profitable, no one would have been in a position to dispute his right to them. The powers of the directors with regard to the issue of shares are very vaguely defined. The only references to the subject I can find are in memorandum of association, clause 4, and the articles, clause 33 (D), (pp. 192, 196), and the resolution of the shareholders, passed on December 9, and that of the directors of February 13, appear to constitute a sufficient authority for borrowing this £1,000, and issuing shares to the lender in consideration of the advance. The authority was given by the shareholders, and acted on by the Board.

Lastly, there comes the point as to forfeiture, on which we intimated that we did not wish to hear Mr. Schreiner. In October, 1904, when I think the company may fairly be described as moribund, a resolution was passed by the Board, the appellant being present to cancel all shares forfeited for non-payment of outstanding calls. A return of forfeited shares was thereupon sent to the Registrar, in which Zietsman appeared as the holder of 1,000 shares on which £125 was paid, "issued and forfeited as per subsequent resolution of the Board." As a matter of fact, although the balance had been long overdue there is no direct evidence of any call having been formally made, or of the regulations contained in clauses 17 and 18 of the third schedule to the Act having been complied with. Although at this time the books were in the possession of the Inspector, the then secretary seems to have ascertained, from some source, the state of the entries as to these shares; but it is difficult for the appellant on the one hand to deny that he had ever accepted these shares, and on the other to say that they were long afterwards forfeited by resolution of the Board. In any case, none of the authorities cited support the proposition that a director could get rid of his liability by a proceeding of this kind, and, apart from authority, the matter does not seem arguable. I notice that clause 21 of the schedule expressly states that "any member whose shares have been forfeited shall notwithstanding be liable to pay to the company all calls owing upon such shares at the time of the forfeiture."

Taking this view of what took place, on the facts before us, after very careful and anxious consideration, and a very minute scrutiny of the record as it stands, I have on the whole come to the conclusion that no advantage could be anticipated from directing an action to be brought, or an issue to be tried, if that were competent, on oral evidence. It seems perfectly obvious that it would be impossible at this stage of the proceedings for the appellant to give a satisfactory and coherent explanation, consistent with his admissions on record, with the dates, the documents, and the general history of the case, confining his agreement with the company to a contract to take one thousand shares, which were fully paid up. I feel certain that he would derive no advantage from such a procedure, but there would only be delay and much additional expense for which he would ultimately be liable. Although his conduct in connection with this company has been very unsatisfactory, he is of course entitled to his legal rights. But, with regard to this branch of the case, I think his liability has been established with reasonable clearness and that no sufficient ground has been shown for varying the order of the Divisional Court.

As to the 500 shares, the matter is much simpler, and I need say very little. Dominicus got his 2,000 shares from the vendor as arranged. Nothing was paid on them and no contract was registered. Of these shares, he gave 500 to the appellant and others to other directors, apparently in consideration of services rendered by them which are not indicated with any precision. At one place he says he provided some of the directors with their qualification shares. These shares were issued to him at the same time as Reynolds got his shares, in April, 1903, and 500 were transferred to Zietsman in the following November. Twelve months afterwards all these shares purport to have been re-transferred by Zietsman and the other holders to Dominicus or Sieg, his nominee, and by them again to Reynolds. It seems unnecessary to discuss the question whether this was part of a bona fide attempt gradually to liquidate the company and reinstate the vendor in possession of the business, or whether the object was to get rid of the liability attaching to these shares, and pass them on to a man of straw. In any case, in my opinion there was no valid transfer. The so-called "supplementary share register," of which we have not been favoured with an inspection, but of which a copy will be found on p. 106, is simply a piece of paper, which was obtained and used ad hoc. It was confined to these 2,000 shares, one hundred being inadvertently entered twice. There is no entry of the transfer in book A, which, according to the liquidators (affidavit p. 130), was at the time available for the use of the directors. It is very easy to understand why no application was made for its use for this purpose. The so-called supplementary register seems to have been merely a private memorandum, and cannot be regarded as "a proper book, in which all transfers shall be noted," in terms of article 3 of the articles of association.

Apart from this ineffectual attempt to transfer, the liability of the applicant on these shares seems perfectly clear, and on this branch of the case nothing really need be added to the reasons concisely stated by the learned Chief Justice. Many authorities were quoted to show what is not disputed, that where shares on which there is a liability come into the hands of a bona fide purchaser without notice, or other bona fide holder for value, the liability cannot be enforced. To that principle full effect was given by the Chief Justice in the case of two of the persons on the list of contributors. It cannot be held to apply in the case of the other directors, who have not appealed, and least of all in the case of the present appellant. On the other branch of the case, as to the 875 shares, I confess that for some time I felt more difficulty, but the more closely I grappled with the facts the more strongly I was led to the conclusion that, as to those shares also, no sufficient ground had been shown for disturbing the judgment of the Divisional Court, and that the appeal must therefore fail.

Hopley, J.: I concur, and I am authorised by Mr. Justice Maasdorp to say that he is of the same opinion.

Mr. Benjamin (for respondents): I take it that the appeal is dismissed with costs?

His Lordship assented.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Zietsman and Boesman; Respondent's Attorneys: Syfret, Godlonton and Low.]

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

Postea (April 4th).

Appellant applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council.

Mr. Close was for the applicant, and Mr. Benjamin was for the respondents. Counsel for the applicant moved under section 8 of Act 36 of 1896 for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. Mr. Benjamin appeared to have the amount of the judgment and costs paid over, the respondents undertaking to give security should the judgment be reversed. He could not find an instance where a judgment of the Court below, affirmed by the Court of Appeal had not been ordered to be carried into execution at once.

man to advance to Nolte. Immelman objected, and the money was returned to the municipal account. A similar transaction was entered into by Fagan on behalf of the Dutch Reformed Church. In May, 1906, one Ebrahim Arnold, sanitary contractor to the municipality, was indebted to Fagan for a sum of £14, and the municipality was indebted to Arnold, so Fagan drew £14 from the municipal account and paid himself. It was also alleged that Fagan had appeared to conduct a case for the municipality in the Court of the Resident Magistrate of Stellenbosch.

The respondent alleged that he had been Mayor for six years, that the applicants were neighbours, and the first one did not possess the qualification of a voter. As far as the partnership between him and Markotter was concerned, there was a clause in the deed of partnership that he (Fagan) was not to participate in any profit derived from the municipal work, but that all the work was to be done by Markotter, and the remuneration for it paid to his private account. As far as the typewriter was concerned, it belonged to his son, and he instructed Markotter to sell it for him. As far as the Immelman transaction was concerned, he was acting as agent for Immelman and Nolte, and not for the municipality. Ebrahim Arnold had authorised him to draw the £14 from the municipal account. As far as the appearance in the Resident Magistrate's Court of Stellenbosch was concerned, no charge was made for appearing.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., appeared for the applicants; Dr. Greer for the respondent Fagan.

Sir H. Juta applied for leave to cross-examine De Beer, under Rule 355 (c). Leave was granted.

Andreas Z. de Beer said that he was the Town Clerk of Somerset West Strand. Fagan had informed him at the municipal office that he had a typewriter for sale. The municipal clerk's machine had broken down. He asked the price of the machine, but Fagan said that he could ask the price from Markotter; he (Fagan) would tell Markotter the price. Fagan told him to buy the machine.

By the Court: He would not have liked to refuse the machine. If the machine had not been worth the money he would have been in an unpleasant position. The money was paid by cheque to Markotter.

Sir H. Juta said that the application was founded on Section 17 of the Act. The section disqualified any councillor who was "concerned in or participated in the profit" of any contract with the municipality. The policy of the law was clear; it was to prevent any councillor being concerned in any transaction between the Council and anyone else.

[Laurence, J.: Suppose the municipality purchased a councillor's property by public auction, would that disqualify the councillor?]

Sir H. Juta: The Legislature has not provided for that.

Continuing, counsel said that Section 3 of the Divisional Council's Act contained the same clause, but the old Divisional Councils Act 4 of 1865 contained a different clause. He contended that "concerned in" meant "interested in" either directly or indirectly.

[Laurence, J.: Does not "concerned in" mean "concerned in the making," because a man may be concerned in the making of a contract, yet not participate in the profit, and vice versa?]

Sir H. Juta: No. A concrete example may be given. If a mayor lent money to a contractor to carry out the contract he would be concerned in the contract. The meaning of "directly or indirectly interested" is illustrated in the case of Arnholz v. The Divisional Council of Talbagh (1868, B. 37). The meaning of this section was also considered in the case of Schlag v. Barry (16 C.T.R., 172). Fagan was clearly concerned in and participated in the profit of the sale of the typewriter. Fagan used his position as Mayor to obtain the money for Immelman and advance it to Nolte, and so make a commission on raising the money.

[Laurence, J.: As a matter of fact, no commission was charged.]

Continuing, counsel said that, as far as the partnership between Fagan and Markotter was concerned, the respondent, if not interested in the profits of municipal work, was concerned in the work itself, and was consequently disqualified from acting as councillor by the second part of the section, especially as the partnership deed did not provide for the losses to be paid by Markotter alone.

[Laurence, J.: You mean if the municipality sued Markotter for negligent work and succeeded, then Fagan would have to pay part of the costs?]

Sir H. Juta: Yes.

The Court said that it only wished to hear Dr. Greer on three points: (a) the question of the £14 due to Arnold which had been drawn by Fagan from the municipal bank account; (b) the question of the typewriter; and (c) the question of partnership between Fagan and Markotter.

Dr. Greer said that even if the respondent were liable for losses of the partnership, he was not disqualified. In support of that contention he cited the Maidstone case referred to in Rogers on Election Petitions (vol. II., p. 26). Fagan appeared in the Resident Magistrate's Court of Stellenbosch, not as partner of Markotter, but as Mayor of the Strand. The only construction which the Court could put on the words "concerned in" was "financially concerned." The case of Arnolds v. The Divisional Council of Tulbough did not apply here, because in that case money was advanced to a municipal contractor on the security of a contract, but here there was nothing to show that money had been advanced by Fagan to Arnold. Counsel also referred to Ohlsson and Others v. The Municipalities of Woodstock and Claremont (18 S.C., 63). He cited Winterbach v. the Worcester Municipality (16, S.C., 247) and Lewis v. Carr (34, L.T., 393). The meaning of "contract" was explained by section 104 of the Act.

Sir H. Juta was heard in reply.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (March 12th).

Laurence, 6.: This is an application by certain ratepayers of Somerset West Strand for an order declaring the respondent Fagan, who is and has been for some years the Mayor of that municipality, to be disqualified as a Councillor under the provisions of section 17 of the Municipal Act of 1882. That section provides that "no person holding any office or place of profit... under or in the gift of the Council of any municipality, or concerned in, or participating in the profit of, any contract with any municipality, or concerned in or in the profit of any work to be done under the authority of any such Council, shall be capable of being or continuing a Councillor of such municipality." The affidavits on both sides are very numerous and lengthy, and enter into much intricate detail as to the various incidents and transactions on which the application is based. The broad question for the decision of the Court is whether any conduct on the part of the respondent has been admitted or proved which amounts to a disqualification under the Act. After hearing counsel at length for the applicants, the Court intimated that there were only three points on which it desired to hear the respondent, namely, firstly, as to the incident in connection with one Ebrahim Arnold; secondly, with regard to the purchase by the second respondent, the municipality, of a certain typewriter, alleged to have been the property of the respondent Fagan; and, lastly, as to the effect of the business connection of the latter with one Markotter, an attorney, who was employed by the municipality to collect and sue for rates, and to do conveyancing and other legal work on their behalf. As to the other matters referred to in the affidavits, I shall say very little. What we have to do is first to ascertain what is the proper and reasonable construction of the material words of the section, and then to decide whether it has been established that the conduct of the respondent falls within its ambit. The material words appear to be: "Concerned in, or participating in the profit of any contract with any municipality, or concerned in or in the profit of any work to be done under the authority of any such Council." No direct authority has been cited as to the meaning of the words "concerned in." They are not technical words, and must be construed in their ordinary sense. Their construction may perhaps be assisted by the alternative preposition which follows in each sub-clause of the sentence. When the Legislature, or the draftsman, adds an "or," this may sometimes be ascribed to an apprehension lest the preceding words should not be sufficiently wide to include some matter which is contemplated by the enactment. It might in the present case have been argued that the words, "concerned in any contract or work," standing by themselves, meant actively concerned, in entering into or performing the contract, or undertaking and carrying out the work, and that it might not cover the case, for instance, of a sleeping partner, who, without being actively concerned in the matter, nevertheless participated in the resulting profit. Sir Henry Juta contended that the Court must go further and hold that they were intended to include the case of anyone interested, whether directly or indirectly, in such matters. It is perhaps worth observing, as pointed out by Mr. Greer, that the words, "directly or indirectly interested," do occur in the old Divisional Councils Act 4 of 1865 (not 6 of 1865, as erroneously reported in the case cited from Buch., 1868, at pp. 38 and 39), but they are not to be found in section 17 of the Municipal Act of 1882. They do, however, as I shall have occasion to show presently, occur in another section, which has an important bearing on the present case, and which I am rather surprised was not cited from the bar. Mr. Greer also stated that they were not to be found in the present Divisional Councils Act 40 of 1899. As to this, however, it is unfortunate that he appears to have been under a misapprehension of fact. I had some trouble to ascertain the exact state of the case, especially as the old Statute is not only wrongly cited in Buchanan, but is omitted from the consolidated edition, which was the only one I had at first available for reference. On examination, however, it appears that the former statute provided, by sec. 14, that no contractor under any subsisting contract should be eligible for election as a member, while sec. 75 provided that no member shall "become a contractor with the Council... nor shall such member be directly or indirectly interested in any such contract." Section 30 to 40 of 1899 copied verbatim from 17 of the Municipal Act, but 32, which deals with vacancies in Divisional Councils, does especially provide, by clause (g), that the office of any Councillor shall become vacant when he shall "become a contractor . . . with the Council . . . or be interested in any such contract directly or indirectly, or become surety for any contractor under such contract." The important part for the present purpose is that while 30, as I have said, is copied verbatim from 17 of the Act before us, 82 is adapted from 22 of the Municipal Act. Clauses (a) to (d) of the former correspond verbatim with clauses (1) to (4) of the latter; clauses (e) and (f) correspond, with certain modifications, to clauses (5) and (6), but the above-quoted clause (g) is an addition, to which there is nothing corresponding in sec. 22, although portion of its substance will be found included among the causes of disqualification in 16 and 17. The whole thing is rather a tangle, which it has taken me some time to unravel, but the upshot is that the phrase "directly or indirectly interested" in every such contract" does occur in both the Divisional Councils Acts, and does not occur in section 17 of the Municipal Act. I may observe that the same expression is also to be found in the English Statute, 5 and 6 William IV., cap. 76, which was considered by the Exchequer Division and the Court of Appeal in the case of Lewis v. Carr (1 Ex. D., 484), 28 of that Statute containing the words, "Nor shall any person be qualified to be elected or to be a Councillor of any such borough. . . during such time as he shall have directly or indirectly, by himself or his partner, any share or interest in any contract or employment with, by, or on behalf of such Council." I shall have to consider that case very carefully later on; for the present I will only observe that as the words "directly or indirectly" do not occur in the section now under consideration, I do not think we should read them in by implication, neither do I regret that we are under no obligation to do so. Questions of indirect interest may lead to many ramifications and much subtle definition and to an extension of disqualifying conditions, which might be thought undesirable. In a small country municipality, under the general Act, the number of eligible persons, both willing and competent to take part in local administration, must usually be small. It seems inadvisable to limit too narrowly the area of selection or to fence the field of choice with too many incapacitating restrictions. The most suitable persons are probably as a rule engaged in carrying on some business of their own. If any interest, however remote or indirect—that, for instance, of the supporter of a storekeeper, or the creditor or surety of a contractor—were sufficient to disqualify, the only persons to whom no such objection could be taken might not be the best men to do the work, and might be confined to the category of those who had retired from business or those from whom business had retired. What the Court must do is to take a common-sense view of the facts in the case before it, and to decide whether they are equivalent to "concern" or "participation" in the ordinary meaning of those words.

With these preliminary remarks, I now proceed very briefly to refer to the principal points on which we did not call on the respondent. And first, as to the Blake incident. It seems that a small strip of land, registered in the name of the municipality, was claimed by one Blake. The matter was referred to the municipal surveyor, who reported in favour of Blake's right, and, acting on this report, the municipality re-transferred the land to him for a nominal consideration. Had this not been done, it seems probable from the affidavit of his attorney, Mr. Cluver, that they would have been involved in litigation without having any good defence. Shortly afterwards Blake sold certain property, including this strip of ground, by public auction, and the respondent was employed by Cluver as the auctioneer. I can find no evidence in this of the respondent being concerned or interested in the formal contract of sale by the Municipality to Blake. It is altogether too remote and far-fetched. Then it seems that the Dutch Reformed Church, on the advice of the respondent, left some spare cash for a period at interest, as a floating deposit, with the municipality, and subsequently, also on his advice, withdrew it and lent it on mortgage to certain persons named Nolte and Scholtz, for whom he appears to have acted in the matter. It is not suggested that he received any commission on the temporary loan to the municipality. There was also a sum of £250 in the possession of the municipality, belonging to one Immelman, which the respondent, purporting to act on behalf of the latter, withdrew in order to lend it to Nolte on a second mortgage. Immelman denied having authorised this step, and the amount was returned. The respondent's conduct in this matter was, to say the least, unbusinesslike, and, if Immelman's statement is correct—as to which I express no opinion—it was also highly improper. There was, however, no concluded contract with Nolte, and neither in the case of the church funds, nor in that of Immelman, can I find any proof of Fagan being interested in any contract with the municipality or of any conduct on his part disqualifying him as a Councillor within the meaning of the section. Then it is alleged that he was elected trustee of certain insolvent estates, on which the municipality had proved a claim for rates, and that the municipal proof was used in his favour. If so, his allegation that it was not required to secure his election is immaterial, but the contention that for a municipality to vote for the election of a Councillor as a trustee in an estate places the latter in any contractual or profitable relation with the former, appears to me a startling and quite untenable proposition.

I now come to the three points which seemed to be of some substance, and upon which the Court reserved its judgment. And, first, with regard to the Arnold incident. One Ebrahim Arnold, it appears, was the sanitary contractor to the municipality, and in May last, some money was due to him in that capacity. At the same time he owed money to Fagan, who says that Arnold authorised him to draw the sum of £14, being portion of the amount so due to him, in the circumstances explained in paragraphs 3 to 5 of his affidavit of February 15, and paragraphs 3 and 6 of that of De Beer of the same date. This took place on May 22 last, and the amount though not at the moment actually due and payable, was deducted from the sum due to Arnold at the end of the month, such occasional advances, on account of his contract having previously been authorised. The respondent, however, does not allege that he obtained any written authority from Arnold, Arnold denies having given him any authority at all, and, as he shortly afterwards assigned his estate, it is possible that Fagan by this proceeding may have gained some advantage over the other creditors. Apart from authority, however, I think it would be going very far to hold that a creditor of a creditor of the municipality, would, if delegated to receive payment on his behalf, become concerned or interested in the contract of his debtor. On this point we were referred to the case of Amholz v. Tulbagh Divisional Council (Buch., 68, 37). That was not an application for an order of disqualification. It was an action brought by a Councillor as cessionary of a debt due to a contractor. Unfortunately for him, it appeared that he had been anticipated by the secretary to the Council, who had already paid the amount to another gentleman, with whom he was himself connected in business, and had obtained a receipt from the contractor himself. The facts in other respects were to some extent analogous, but that case was decided under sec. 75 of the D.C. Act of 1865, the majority of the Court being of opinion that the words "directly or indirectly interested" were sufficient to cover the case of the cessionary of a debt, and precluded the plaintiff from recovering. Bell, J., however, held that, even under that section, Amholz was not interested in the contract, and there seems much to be said for his view. However that may be, I cannot regard the decision of the other judges as a clear authority for holding that Fagan, assuming him to have been duly delegated by Arnold to receive the money, thereby, in terms of section 17, became concerned or participated in the profit of the contract of the latter. His conduct in this matter, and also in that of Immelman, may have been open to criticism, and may even have been actionable on other grounds. But the facts are in dispute, and, in any case, it is not a matter in which, in dealing with the present application, it is necessary for the Court to express an opinion.

I now come to the matter of the typewriter, a very petty matter in itself, but one on which, since it has been brought to our notice, we must apply the law as we construe it, to the facts as we find them. The allegation is that, in November last, Mr. Fagan, being Mayor at the time, sold a certain secondhand typewriter for the sum of £7 to the Municipality. This amount was paid by De Beer, the Town Clerk and treasurer, to Markotter, Fagan's partner, who gave his receipt for "£7, being in settlement of amount due for a typewriter sold to the Strand Municipality by H. A. Fagan." I regret to say that, with respect to this transaction, I cannot regard the respondent's explanation as ingenuous. He suggests, but does not state specifically, that the machine belonged to a minor son of his, for whose use he had bought it. But he does not assert that he ever actually gave it to his son, or that the latter authorised him to sell it, or received the purchase money. He states that Markotter told him that he had an offer of £7 for the machine, which was at the office at the time, that he authorised him to accept it, and subsequently received the cash from a clerk of the firm. He adds that "even had my partner told me that the offer was from the Town Clerk, I would not have hesitated to allow him to sell, as, in my opinion, there would have been nothing wrong in such a transaction under the circumstances, and because I never looked upon the typewriter as my property." This version appears to be irreconcilable with the oral evidence of De Beer, which was given very fairly, and which is to the effect that he purchased the machine, in the circumstances he mentions, on explicit instructions from the respondent himself, at a price fixed by the latter. There was, in my opinion, a clear contract of purchase and sale between De Beer, on behalf of the Municipality, and Markotter, as agent for Fagan, both acting under the instructions of the latter. The next question is whether such a contract comes within the statutory prohibition on the subject. Some hesitation may naturally be felt in holding that prohibition to embrace ordinary cases of purchase and sale—over the counter, so to speak—of articles required by a municipality for current use, which a Councillor, who was also a local store-keeper, was the only person who could supply, or could supply on better terms than anyone else. For instance, as I suggested during the argument, if a Councillor, who happened to be the only person in the place who stored such articles, sold the municipal stable keeper a bottle of embrocation for a cow or mule, it would almost seem a reductio ad absurdum to hold that an isolated transaction of that character involved a disqualification. A similar point seems to have been raised last year before the Chief Justice, in the case of Schlag v. Barry (16 C.T.R., 172), but not decided, the matter having been postponed for further information as to the facts, and apparently not having afterwards come up for decision. The observations of the Chief Justice, as reported in that case, would seem to suggest that he recognised the possibility of drawing a distinction between such sales and a continuing contract for the supply of some article required by the municipality. It does not, however, appear to me that section 104, referred to by Mr. Greer, which deals with the power of the Council to make contracts, has any bearing on the meaning of the word "contract" in section 17. The latter section contains a proviso that it shall be lawful for any Councillor to purchase municipal property at public auction. It seems clear that purchase by private contract is prohibited, and there is very good and obvious reason for such prohibition. On the whole, it appears to me that the same principle must apply to the case of such a sale as that now in question. There is no reason to suppose that this particular transaction was other than a fair and mutually advantageous bargain. But it was not, I conceive, the intention of the Legislature that whenever a Councillor had some article which he wanted to sell, and which he sold by private treaty to the municipality, the Court should have to determine whether that bargain was or was not a fair one. The Act does not, like some other enactments, give any discretion to the Court or any power to relieve from the consequences of any infringement, and I can come to no other conclusion than that this was a contract within the meaning of the section.

But the question still remains whether this finding is sufficient to establish the right of the applicants to the relief sought. So long as a contract is executory, or in course of execution, or uncompleted, it disqualifies the contracting party from "being or continuing" a Councillor; but what is the effect of a contract of sale after it has been executed, the price paid, the article delivered, and the dominium transferred? The question is not free from difficulty. I suppose it would scarcely be contended that, if the respondent's seat were vacated, and he stood, on an opportunity arising, for re-election, he would not be eligible as a candidate, or that the fact of such a transaction having taken place would involve a permanent disqualification. He is not therefore, in that sense, incapable of "being" a Councillor. He is not incapable of "being elected" under the concluding clause of the previous section, section 16. If he can be, or be elected, can he not also continue to be, or is it necessary that his seat should be vacated before his qualification revives? In other words, was the transaction in November, though no bar to his "being" a Councillor, a bar to his "continuing" as such at the end of January, when these proceedings were instituted? On this point, it seems to me that the judgment in Lewis v. Carr—the unanimous decision of the Exchequer Division and the Court of Appeal—is of much importance. Carr was an alderman of Macclesfield, and a tallow-chandler by trade, and on several occasions sold goods to the Corporation. He was sued for penalties for acting as an alderman after such sale. If he was liable to the penalties, it was for acting when disqualified; if he was not liable, then it is clear that the sales did not disqualify him from so acting. I have already quoted section 25 of the English statute, and the other material sections will be found at p. 485 of the report. The Court held that he was not liable to the penalties sued for. The first question was the same as that raised in Schlag v. Barry, namely, whether such sales were contracts within the meaning of the Act. On this point Lord Bramwell, who gave the leading judgment in the Exchequer, said: "Whether the Legislature intended that such contracts should or should not be within the Act is another matter, but I think if a shilling's worth of stationery were bought of an alderman, that would be a contract between the Corporation and that alderman. Probably, if they had intended it, they would have used the word 'dealing' or some such word. However, it is a contract, and independently of any reasoning upon the matter, I think it is concluded by the case of Nicholson v. Fields, when a somewhat similar contract was involved. There it was a bill for lime supplied to certain commissioners. In this case it is a casual supply of candles, or some such thing" (p. 487). And Cleasby, B., at p. 491, illustrated the stringency of the section as it stood by reference to a subsequent statute, which expressly exempted newspaper advertisements. Apart from this exemption, apparently anyone having an interest in any newspaper in which the Borough Council advertisements appeared would have been held to be in a contractual relation with the borough. Then the next question was whether Carr was liable to the penalties. The Court held that, as he was qualified for election, so also he was not disqualified from continuing to act, as soon as he had ceased to be interested in any current contract. That is the substance of the decision, and I need not quote the reasons given by the judges at considerable length. They seem, if I may venture to say so, to be good law and good sense. It is, I think, sufficient to quote one passage in which the pith of the matter was put very concisely by James, L. J., who says at p. 494: "When we turn to the 28th section there is no sufficient reason for applying only to the election the limitation of the disqualification to the time during which there is an interest in a contract. We must give full effect to all the words of the section, and doing so we find that the defendant was not qualified to be an alderman during the time of his interest in these contracts, that is to say, the disqualification is temporary." Similarly, in the present case it appears to me that, however undesirable such transactions as the private sale by a Councillor to the Council of second-hand property may be—and I do think they are highly undesirable, and might lead to grave abuses. The Court cannot hold that the temporary disqualification attaching thereto is still operative or that the respondent is now concerned in any contract with the municipality, within the terms of section 17, or that his seat must be declared vacant by reason thereof. I should like to add that it by no means follows from this decision that the law on the subject of what may be described as transitory contracts is nugatory or ineffective. Such transactions have a disqualifying effect so long as they remain in any respect incomplete; any Councillor voting or taking part in the discussion of any matter in which he has any interest renders himself liable to penalties under section 87; and it would seem, from the decision in Arnholz's case, that he would be unable to recover any amount due to him on such a contract.

I now come to the question which appeared to me, when I first perused the papers, and still appears to me, to be the most substantial and important matter—I mean the question of the effect of the respondent's business relations with Markotter. Under the English Statute, which speaks of having "directly or indirectly, by himself or his partner, any share or interest in any contract, etc.," no question could arise as to the disqualification. There are no such words in the section before us, though it may be worth observing that the identical words do occur in section 87, where it is provided that "no Councillor shall vote upon or take part in the discussion of any matter in or before the Council in which he has directly or indirectly, by himself or his partners, any pecuniary interest. And any Councillor contravening the provisions of this section shall, for every offence, be liable to a penalty not exceeding £50." In any case, it seems to me that the existence of such a partnership raises a prima facie presumption of interest, which it lies with the respondent to rebut. What are the facts as disclosed in the affidavits? It appears that, in December, 1905, an attorney named De Villiers was appointed attorney to the municipality. Immediately afterwards he entered into partnership with Fagan, who states that their agreement provided that the latter should not participate in the profits made by De Villiers out of his legal work for the municipality. Shortly afterwards De Villiers disappeared. He is supposed to have been drowned, and his death has been presumed. There was a substantial amount due from De Villiers to the municipality for rates collected, and this sum Fagan himself paid, less the commission due for collection. He was acting, he explains, on behalf of the estate, though no executor had then been appointed. On March 29, 1906, Markotter, who described himself in a letter to the Council as having "taken his (De Villiers') place in Mr. Fagan's office," was authorised to collect and recover rates. I should have thought myself that in a small place this would have been the business of the town treasurer, and that the employment of an attorney would be only occasionally required. It may be pointed out that a simple method of recovering rates in arrear, without calling in legal assistance, is provided by section 129 of the Act. It does not appear that Markotter has been, like De Villiers, formally appointed attorney to the municipality, but he was also employed to do certain conveyancing work on their behalf. On April 2 a partnership was entered into between Fagan and Markotter. In his case, as in that of De Villiers, the partnership with the Mayor, if not an immediate consequence, was at all events an immediate sequence to his entering into a contract with, or undertaking work under the authority of the Council. The deed contained a clause by which it was agreed that "all earnings to and charges paid by the municipal ity, for any work done for them in which, by statute or otherwise, the said Fagan as a Councillor or officer is not allowed to share, be the property and earnings of the said Markotter for his personal use and benefit to do with as he may think fit." The agreement, however, must be considered as a whole. The existence of a formal renouncing clause is not in itself sufficient to dispose of the matter. There is, I find, another clause (14), by which it was arranged that, in consideration of being admitted as a partner on equal terms, Markotter should pay Fagan the sum of £250. In agreeing to make this payment, it is impossible to say that he may not have been more or less influenced by the arrangement embodied in clause 8. That hypothesis, however, would not in itself, in my judgment, be sufficient proof that Fagan was concerned or interested in Markotter's contract. I will only say that agreements of this nature should be very jealously scrutinised, as in such circumstances direct proof of such interest or concern must obviously be difficult to obtain. Moreover, apart from such direct proof, I fail to see how, so long as this partnership existed, the respondent could properly and effectively discharge his duties as Councillor and Mayor, without exposing himself to penalties under section 87, which I have already quoted. Questions, at all events, and it may be important questions, must from time to time arise in which he would be unable, without exposing himself to a penalty, to give the Council the benefit of his advice. There are also two specific matters which weigh with me a good deal. In the first place, there is the incident of a small payment received by the respondent, for rates due from one Roos, for which he forgot to account, in consequence of which inadvertence the municipality was put to certain legal expenses, which he subsequently refunded. With regard to this, Fagan says: "To the best of my recollection the said Roos handed over the money at the Strand on my way to Somerset West. I received it from him as a personal favour, as my rule is not to accept money outside my office." From this statement it is a natural inference that it would have been quite in the ordinary course for Fagan, when in the office, to receive payments from ratepayers, on which his partner, De Villiers or Markotter, charged a commission. Had he not done so, the latter would have had to give more of his own time, or of that of some clerk of the firm, for this branch of the work. On the whole, it appears to me that such a state of things was tantamount to Fagan being concerned in the performance, even if not directly participating in the profit, of his partner's contract with the municipality. Again, with regard to the case of Ahrendse, Markotter, under instructions from the Municipality, sued Ahrendse for rates. The case was heard at Stellenbosch, and Fagan appeared for the plaintiffs. He explains that he made no charge for such appearance, or even for his expenses—a fee of 10s. 6d. for "attending Court" was included in Markotter's bill, but afterwards erased, it does not appear when or by whom—and I see no reason to doubt his explanation that his motive was a disinterested one, and his object to do his best for his Council. Still, whatever the motive, the effect seems to be that he was actively concerned in the performance of Markotter's work for the municipality, while Markotter himself was left free to exert himself elsewhere for the benefit of the firm. Moreover, the respondent himself explains that Ahrendse's was not an isolated case. He says that: "I have on several occasions conducted cases, which I considered important, for the Municipality, free of charge." I do not think it necessary to go further into the facts of the case. They are of such a nature that it has been impossible to avoid a detailed analysis of their nature and effect. On the whole, I am of opinion that the respondent has not succeeded in so clearly dissociating himself from his partner's engagements with the Municipality as to escape the disqualifying consequences. I think, therefore, that the application must succeed. I am free to say that I have come to this conclusion not without regret. There seems no reason to doubt that Mr. Fagan has done useful public work in the locality for a considerable period—work of a nature which often involved a great deal of anxiety and responsibility, a great deal of unreasonable and unfair criticism, and very scanty recognition or appreciation—and that the severance, even though it prove only a temporary severance, of his connection with such work, may well be a misfortune to his fellow-townsmen. It may also be the case, as he alleges that these proceedings may not have been uninfluenced by motives of professional rivalry, or of a personal nature. With regard to costs, the general costs of the application must be borne by the respondent, Fagan, save in so far as, in the opinion of the taxing officer, they have been increased by the allegations as to which the Court did not call for counsel for the respondent. With regard to such increased costs, we think in all the circumstances that there should be no order.

Maasdorp, J.: The applicants in this matter pray that the respondent may be declared to have forfeited his seat as a Councillor of the Municipality of Somerset West Strand, on the ground that he has been concerned in, or has participated in, the profits of contracts with the Municipality, or has been concerned in, or has participated in the profits of work done under the authority of the Municipality, and is therefore not capable of being or continuing a Councillor. A great deal of the argument in the case was devoted to the consideration of the meaning in the abstract of the terms employed in section 17 of Act 45 of 1882, under which the Municipality is at present governed, but for my part I consider it expedient to determine first what are the facts proved in the specific transactions which are challenged by the applicants, and then to ascertain whether they fall plainly within the terms of the section. The most direct case of a contract in which the respondent is said to be concerned is the sale of the typewriter. It is admitted by Fagan that he did sell to the Municipality in about December, 1906, a typewriter for the sum of £7, and the account was received by him through Markotter from the secretary of the Council. He says the instrument was really the property of his son, and that he received the money for his son, but it is not denied that the whole transaction was carried through by Fagan without any instructions from his son, and that Fagan must be regarded as a principal in the business, and at the very least he must, in terms of the section, be taken to be concerned in the contract. But, then, it is contended that this sale is an isolated transaction, which cannot be called a contract within the meaning of the section. The case of Barry, decided in this court, was cited for the purpose of showing that in that case the opinion was there held by the Court that it would be necessary to prove more than casual sales by a store-keeper, who happened to be a Councillor of the municipality, to the municipality, and that evidence was required to establish something in the nature of a running contract for supplying goods from time to time. But no judgment was ultimately given in that case, which cannot therefore be regarded as an authority upon the point. In the case of Lewis v. Carr (1 Exch., 484), it appeared that the defendant, who was a tallow chandler, while holding the office of Alderman, sold goods on several occasions to the Corporation. At a time thereafter when all the goods had been supplied, and the defendant had obtained a settlement, he acted on several occasions as Alderman. Upon these facts, the plaintiff, a burgess of the borough, claimed the penalty from the defendant for acting as an Alderman, under the 53rd section of the Statute, which provided that any person who shall act as Alderman after he shall cease to be qualified, according to the provisions of the Act, or after he shall be disqualified to hold any such office, shall forfeit a certain penalty. The section under which the disqualification is alleged to have occurred is the 28th, which provides as follows: "Nor shall any person be qualified to be elected or to be an Alderman of such borough during such time as he shall have directly or indirectly, by himself or his partner, any share or interest in any contract or employment with, or on behalf of such Council. Bramwell, B., doubted whether the contract mentioned fell within the terms of the section, and thought the Legislature had in view one of those continuing contracts, that is to say, a contract for the supply of coal for a year, or a contract to do a large piece of building. The other judges did not agree with him. Cleasby, B., said he felt to some extent that the case is within the mischief pointed at by the Act, and comes within the terms of it, and Amphlett, B., seemed to have no doubt that the contract in question came within the section. The only question the Court had to decide in that case was whether the defendant had acted as Alderman during the time he was disqualified by being interested in any contract or employment with the Council, and the conclusion they came to was that the acts complained of were done after he had ceased to be interested, and consequently he was not liable. There are obvious differences between the terms of the English Act and our Act, but however that may be, the English Court was not asked to decide whether the seat of the defendant was vacated by his conduct. Bramwell, B., seems to me expressly to draw a distinction between the man who may on a quo warranto be found to have forfeited his seat as alderman by reason of his being interested in a contract with the Council, and one who acts as such after the period when he has ceased to be interested in a contract, and who is sued for the penalty. Under our law no person concerned in any contract with the Council shall be capable of being or continuing to be a Councillor, and in my opinion such Councillor, even though the contract has been finally performed, may thereafter be declared by the Court to have, because of such contract, and at the time he entered into the contract, become incapable of being a Councillor and to have in law at that time forfeited his seat. The disqualification may not be a continuing one, and the Councillor may be eligible for re-election; nor does there appear to be any way of having his seat declared vacated except on order of Court; but when application is made to the Court it cannot do otherwise than declare that the Councillor forfeited his seat when he became concerned in a contract with the Council. As to the concern of the respondent, in the work done by his partner for the Council, I desire to state briefly that he himself saw the danger of his position and attempted to avoid it by providing in the contract of partnership that he should not share in the profits of such work. But that was obviously not enough. It is clearly proved that he in one instance did part of the work in one of the Council's lawsuits, while his partner did the rest. He made no charge for his work, but without his portion of the work his partner could not have earned his fees for the rest. This admittedly happened in other lawsuits of the Council, and in my opinion, by his conduct, he became concerned in work done under the authority of the Council. As to the other charges, I may say generally that in receiving money from the Council which the Council owed to third parties, either in satisfaction of a debt due to himself or to invest for such parties, does not amount, in my opinion, to being concerned in a contract with the Council. I wish to state that all the transactions of the respondent took place openly, and with full knowledge of the municipality, all parties feeling satisfied that they were keeping outside the terms of the 19th section of the Act. This, however, they failed to do, and, in my opinion, it must be declared that at the time the typewriter was sold, and again when he took part in the work his partner did for the Council, he forfeited his seat, whatever his position may now be in regard to re-election.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn. Respondents' Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buiesinné.]

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1907.
{ Mar. 5th.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Henry Telfer Low as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Sutton moved for the admission of Hendrik Jacobus Raubenheimer as an attorney and notary. Counsel mentioned that applicant had not been able to obtain a certificate from the Registrar of the University, but he appended to the papers a copy of the "Government Gazette," showing that he had passed the examination.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the admission of Cornelis Johannes Strydom as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Alexander moved for the admission of Joseph Barnard Shacksnovis as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

LIPSCITZ V. SELIGMAN.

Mr. Alexander moved for the removal of this case to the Circuit Court to be held at Middelburg on the 30th March. The parties consented.

Case removed accordingly, costs to be costs in the cause.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

REYNOLDS V. EXLEY AND ANOTHER (TRADING AS CHARLES EXLEY AND CO.)

Mr. Hawes moved for the final adjudication of the estate of Charles Exley and Co. and the private estate of Charles Exley.

Order granted.

PATERSON AND CO. V. LEVIN.

Mr. Payne moved for the final adjudication of the defendants' estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

VAN DER BYL AND CO. V. VENNER.

Mr. Palmer moved for the final adjudication of the defendants' estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

STREETEER V. MYERS AND ANOTHER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment for £20 6s. 3d., with interest and costs. Counsel (in answer to the Court) said he took it that each of the partners would be liable in solidum under the judgment. The defendants were touring in the Colony with a bioscope, and it was impossible to effect service upon them.

Decree granted, with costs of this application.

MARAIS V. BOSMAN.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,700, with interest from 1904, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

MOLTENO V. MACBETH.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £200, with interest.
Order granted.

KEYS V. SAMUEL.

Mr. Philipson Stow moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £300, with interest from 8th July, 1905, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.
Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

TABLE BAY HARBOUR BOARD (1907.
V. NEUGEBAUER. (Mar. 5th.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £29, for demurrage of certain trucks, with interest a tempore morae and costs.
Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.Ex parte LYON.

Mr. De Waal moved, on the petition of the executors dative for leave to take over, on behalf of the minor children, a certain erf at Carnarvon in satisfaction of a debt of £600, due from one Barnett to the estate. The ground was valued at £500, but it was considered that the proposal was in the interests of the minor.
Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte TURF HALL ESTATE, LTD.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Struben), moved for an order authorising the petitioner to receive from one Charles Hy. Wolff seven shares in the company, which Wolff had had handed over to him as secret commission on a sale that he had negotiated with one S. M. Christie. Counsel said that Mr. Wolff acted in a fiduciary relationship to the company about to be formed in the purchase of the Turf Hall Estate from Mr. Christie. Mr. Wolff, it was only fair to add, was misled as to what he might do, and when he found that the legal position he occupied was entirely erroneous, he entered into a consent, and so litigation was avoided. Counsel read a consent by Mr. Wolff to the order prayed for.
Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ESTATE STOCKHAM.

This was an application for confirmation of a certain arrangement entered into with reference to the restaurant business carried on at the Theatre Buildings under the style of Stockham and Hurst.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., was for petitioners; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan appeared for Tom Loveridge Stockham; and Mr. Russell appeared for J. E. P. Close, as curator ad litem of the minors. The facts appear from the judgment.

Hopley, J.: The first point that arises in this matter seems to me to be the construction of the interest that Thomas Stockham has in the business of the Grand Parade Restaurant as a partner with his late father. It appears to me to be quite clear, that the arrangement was a reasonable and natural one between the father and the son, whereby the father, wishing to go away to England and also to take his son into partnership, stipulated that he should from the date of the agreement become a full partner in his share of the Theatre Restaurant business. He also stipulated, as was again very natural, that as long as the father should live, the son should be content with only £100 a year as his share of the partnership, stipulating, further, that at the moment of his father's death, he should come into a full half share of all that the thing was worth. The father died in 1906, and it seems to me then that Thomas Stockham has a right to claim under that agreement that a half of whatever is his father's interest belonged to him absolutely without any fresh payment on his part or anything of that sort. That being the case, it appears to me that the agreement which has been entered into might receive the sanction of this Court, and the Court might order that the arrangement be confirmed subject to the following safeguards, viz., that it be confirmed upon a full and valid release being granted to the estate of all liability to the lessors of the portion of the building which is occupied by the applicant, and also by Mr. Frye on any deed of suretyship which might entail any liability upon the estate. As a further precautionary measure, it be understood and ordered that the capital sums which are guaranteed to be paid by the new firm or by Mr. Hurst, should be paid to the executors, to be dealt with by them in terms of the will, always subject to the modification that £100 of such sums is ear-marked for the expenses of Mr. Frye (one of the executors), in coming out from England. It is, of course, quite understood that this estate is in no sense liable after the agreement is approved, for any liabilities in this restaurant business. The estate hereafter, according to the agreement, might come in for some further amounts if the business is properly sold, but they are not in partnership in any sense to make them liable for any losses incurred in the business in case of a disastrous issue to the present enterprise. I think on those terms the agreement might be confirmed and sanctioned.

Mr. Buchanan asked that the respondent's costs should be allowed out of the estate.

Hopley, J.: I should think each party should pay their own costs. The Court orders that the contention of Thomas Stockham as to the agreement of the 20th April, 1901, is upheld, that the proposed agreement be confirmed subject to a valid release by the lessors from all liability in respect of suretyship, and that the capital sums when paid be paid to the executors to be dealt with under the will, with the exception of £100 for Mr. Frye's expenses, costs of the curator ad litem to come out of the estate.

Ex parte HANAU, REPRESENTING THE KALK BAY FISHING COMPANY (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Roux moved for a rule restraining the sale of certain goods advertised to take place to-morrow. The respondents were certain judgment creditors.

The Court granted an order restraining any further proceedings upon the attachments, with leave to any party interested to have the order set aside or modified.

FCHMIDT V. SCHMIDT.

This was an application by the husband for leave to sue by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights.

The petition set forth that the parties were married at Glasgow in 1895. In 1904 petitioner came to this country, having arranged that his wife should follow him. She had, however, refused to join him, and had written to say she would never return to him.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the applicant.

Order granted, giving leave to sue by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, returnable on May 21; personal service to be effected, with leave to apply for substituted service, if necessary, before the return day.

Ex parte VAN DER WALT.

This was an application for an order confirming a certain arrangement as to the disposition of property in the joint estate of the petitioner and his deceased wife. The will gave the survivor the usufruct of the property, and provided that it should go, after the death of the survivor, to the children or the next-of-kin. The property had been realised with the authority of the Court, and it was now sought to pay the children, of whom there are eight, £3,000 each, and to allow petitioner, who was otherwise without means, to retain the balance of £8,000. A sum of £3,000 had to be paid to each of the children, who had bought land with the money. The property was estimated to be worth £10,000 at the time of the wife's decease, but a syndicate had bought it for £36,000.

Mr. Benjamin moved.

Hopley, J., said he noticed that the Master referred, in his report, to ex parte Zondag (11, C.T.R., 767).

Counsel referred to the case, and said that in the present case the children had got the property already. He submitted that if they gave an undertaking that they would not dispose of the properties otherwise than in terms of the will that would meet the case.

Hopley, J., said he might grant an order authorising the arrangement so far as the grandchildren who had become heirs were concerned, but making the order in respect to the others, subject to the children of petitioner giving security that they would not dispose of the property. The point was whether the sons were prepared to enter into some sort of security not to alienate their children's rights before the death of the petitioner. Of course, the grandchildren had to be protected against the possible dissipation of the property before their grandfather's death, because a son might die before the petitioner, and in that case the former's children might be deprived of the £3,000, which was rightfully theirs in case their father died before their grandfather.

Mr. Benjamin said his suggestion was that the arrangement should be sanctioned subject to the children of the petitioner giving such an undertaking.

[Hopley, J.: Would they give the children a mortgage on the farm for the £3,000? The bond could be worded so that it would only run until the death of the petitioner.]

Mr. Benjamin said he would see his attorney and would mention the matter again.

At a later stage Mr. Benjamin said that his attorney had telegraphed to the client and no reply had yet been received.

The matter was ordered to stand over.

Ex parte TRUSTEE IN THE INSOLVENT ESTATE DE VILLIERS.

Mr. Roux moved for the appointment of a commissioner to examine the insolvent's wife and one L. P. Steenkamp as to the ownership of certain goods alleged by the petitioner to belong to the insolvent estate, but which were claimed by the wife.

Order granted, the Resident Magistrate of Venterstadt being appointed commissioner.

LEHR V. NICHOLAS.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order restraining respondent from disposing of his stock. It was alleged that respondent was disposing of the stock otherwise than in the ordinary course of business. Respondent was a fruiterer carrying on business in Somerset-road, Cape Town, and was indebted to petitioner, who was about to take proceedings for the recovery of the debt.

Order granted, pending action.

BOYES V. BOYES.

Mr. De Waal moved, on the petition of Johanna M. Boyes, of Prince Albert, for leave to sue her husband by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce. Petitioner said that she was married to respondent in July, 1904, and that he deserted her in February, 1905, and was at present residing in India.

Usual order granted, rule returnable on the 5th June.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE STUCKE.

Mr. Swift moved for the appointment of Mr. D. P. Smit, representing Blayne and Co., as sole trustee in the insolvent estate.

Mr. Inchbold (for Mr. Maxberg) applied for the matter to stand over until the 26th March, to enable replying affidavits to be filed. He said that there was some competition as to the appointment of trustee.

Hopley, J., said that if the parties were sensible, they would come to an arrangement for the working out of this insolvency.

Mr. Swift consented to the application standing over, but applied for the appointment of petitioner as provisional trustee.

The matter was ordered to stand over until the 26th March, applicant to be provisional trustee, with power to sell the perishables.

Ex parte ESTATE CONRADIE AND ANOTHER.

Mr. De Waal moved, on the petition of the executrices testamentary, for leave to mortgage certain property. The Master recommended that the petitioners should be granted leave to raise on mortgages such amounts as may seem to him necessary.

Order in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte ESTATE JORDAAN.

Fidei-commissum Residui.

Brown v. Rickard (2 Juta 314) followed.

Mr. Molteno moved, on the petition of Catherina E. Jordaan, as executrix testamentary in the estate of her late husband, for an order authorising her to deal with or alienate the landed property in the estate in such manner as she may deem fit during her lifetime, or so long as she may remain a widow. Petitioner said that the Registrar of Deeds took up the position that she could not legally sell any of the property in the estate, on the ground that she had only a life interest. She said that she had no intention of remarrying, and submitted that the Registrar of Deeds' ruling was incorrect. Counsel said that it was proposed to sell a portion of the ground to one of the sons. Petitioner was appointed sole and universal heir under the will, and counsel contended that she was the domina of the property, and cited Brown v. Rickard (2 Juta, 314) and Klopper v. Smit (9 Juta, 167). There was an absolute devise to the survivor of the whole estate.

Hopley, J.: The terms of this will are by no means free from ambiguity and perplexity, but I see nothing in them to distinguish the case from the facts upon which Brown v. Rickard cited by Mr. Molteno was decided. In that case, as in the present one, the survivor of two spouses was left sole and universal heir of certain property, with the remainder over to somebody at the death of the survivor of whatever there was of the estate then left. It was held in that case, as I understand it, that the survivor may spend and alienate it at his pleasure, and the heir, the applicant in that case, had to take his chance of what there might be left at the death of the survivor, in strict terms of the will. It seems to me that the terms of the present will are much the same. The survivor is instituted sole and universal heir in very strong terms, almost as strong as one could imagine, in the following terms: "I, the testator, do nominate and appoint as my sole and universal heir my wife, the second undersigned, all property to be relinquished by me on demise, movable as well as immovable, nothing excepted, to be assumed and possessed by her as free and personal property, without the contradiction of any one." The next clause of the will, after saying that the property need not be appraised, and that it should be registered without sending an inventory to the Master, says that the survivor might remain in undisturbed full possession of the estate until the death of such survivor, and enjoins that after giving three months' notice there should be a public auction, so that all their heirs should obtain possession equally of their inheritance of what is then to be found in the estate. Now, it seems to me that the proper reading of this will is the same as the reading put upon the will in the case of Brown v. Rickard. The survivor is made the absolute heir, with power, it seems to me, to use the estate in any way which appeals to her as being the proper way to use it, and thereafter, after her death, I think then the heirs, the children of the marriage, come in for what may be left of the estate. I think she is entitled for a good purpose to deal with the property. She asks leave in this petition to sell portion of this estate, and I think she cannot be stopped from doing so. Therefore, I think the Registrar of Deeds should be authorised to pass transfer. It will be ordered that the sale by her be approved and authorised by the Court, and that the Registrar of Deeds be authorised and directed to pass transfer of the property sold.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Syfret, Godlonton and Low.]

HAWKINS V. HAWKINS.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for removal of this case to the ensuing Circuit Court to be held at East London on April 8, in terms of consent.

Removal of case ordered accordingly.

VAN DER MEULEN V. GREEFF AND ANOTHER.

This was an application brought by Greeff and wife to set aside an order interdicting Mrs. Greeff and her husband from parting or in any way dealing with the sheep and goats, and progeny of such sheep and goats, taken by them from the possession of the applicant (Van der Meulen), pending a final account between the parties as to the restoration of the original sheep and the progeny, and the wool which arise out of the possession of the sheep, and pending an action to be brought for such sheep as are claimed by Van der Meulen and Zacks, during the February term, costs reserved.

Mr. Gardiner was for applicant; Mr. Alexander was for respondent Zacks.

Mr. Alexander applied for a postponement pending the return of certain affidavits from Laingsburg.

Mr. Gardiner opposed a postponement on the ground that Zacks had had ample time to bring an action as allowed by the Court when the order was granted. He added that Van der Meulen, upon whose application the order was granted, had consented to the present application.

Rule discharged, with costs, such as could be shown to be caused by the intervention of Zacks up to the present stage.

Es parte MARCHIANO AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Lewis moved as a matter of urgency for the attachment of certain furniture at Highcliffe, Sea Point, pending an action to be brought by petitioners against Hugh Ross Sharpe to recover £60 4s. 10d. Petitioners alleged that respondent owed them £36 10s. for rent of premises, and £23 14s. 10d. for goods supplied by the firm of Joseph Marchiano. They feared that respondent intended to dispose of his assets, more particularly the furniture.

Ordered that the respondent be interdicted from removing the furniture in the premises pending action for the recovery of £36 10s., due for rent of the said premises.

Hopley, J., added that, of course, if respondent paid £36 10s., the furniture must be released.

REX V. VAN RENSBURG. { 1907. Mar. 5th.

Scab—Duties of owner of sheep.

An owner of sheep who has reasonable cause to suspect that any of his flock are infected with scab, is bound both to give notice to the inspector and also to make proper efforts to cleanse the infected sheep.

R. v. Van der Walt (16 C.T.R., 732) followed.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Coleberg, who had convicted appellant of contravening section 21 of the Scab Act (No. 20, 1894), in that on or about the 8th December last, having become aware, or having reasonable grounds for suspecting scab in his flock, he failed or neglected within seven days thereafter to give notice thereof to the inspector, and forthwith to proceed to make proper and diligent efforts to cleanse such sheep. The Magistrate had imposed a fine of £10.

Mr. Benjamin was for appellant, Nicolaas Albertus van Rensburg; Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Mr. Benjamin argued that there was no evidence to show that appellant did not give notice, and cited Rex v. Van der Berg (16 C.T. Reps., 216).

[Hopley, J.: The whole question is, did he cleanse?]

Mr. Benjamin: On the authority of your lordship's decision in Van der Berg's case, I submit that if he had given notice previously, then he had fulfilled his duty according to the section.

[Hopley, J.: I never placed such a ridiculous construction upon the Statute. I never said that if a man chose to let the inspector know that there is scab amongst his flock, he could then sit with his arms folded for months and not cleanse.]

Mr. Benjamin contended that on the evidence appellant had apparently taken some steps to hand-dress his sheep. Counsel also cited Rex v. Van der Walt (16 C.T.R., 782).

Hopley, J.: I do not think there is any necessity to hear Mr. Jones in this case. The circumstances seem to be that the inspector, on coming to the farm of the appellant on the 23rd October, found a considerable amount of scab in his sheep, and properly ordered him to cleanse. It was on that occasion that the appellant told the inspector that there was scab amongst his flock. His telling him at that stage, as far as I can see, was certainly not the notice contemplated in the 21st section, because the inspector was there, and would find out for himself that scab was there. However, it had then come to the knowledge of the inspector, and he then gave him six weeks in which to cleanse the flock, serving him with a notice to that effect. More than six weeks after, on the 8th December, the inspector again visits, and he says that there had been some hand-dressing, but that the scab had increased, and was worse than before. He was then asked by the owner for an extension of time. The owner did not say anything more; he did not say, "I am coping with this disease"—he could not say so; the disease was increasing, but he asked him, as a matter of favour, to give him an extension. The inspector said he was not in the habit of doing that, but he gave him four weeks more. More than four weeks after, the 17th January, he goes again, and he is this time accompanied by another inspector, Mr. Cronwright, and they found the sheep worse than ever; they had not been shorn, the scab had increased, and altogether they were getting to be in a deplorable condition, and, moreover, the owner was so little regarding his duty that he had actually gone away from his farm, leaving his son in charge, with very lax orders as to what he should do; in fact, as far as I can see, he ordered them not to dip, not to cleanse, but simply to go on on a sort of patch-work system, simply getting the wool off the sheep. Even then one could have understood that if he had shorn prematurely and then proceeded to dip, he would have been doing his duty. It seems to me that he was not in any way doing his duty under the section of the Act, that the hand-dressing that he ordered was not by any manner of means the cleansing of the sheep that he had been ordered to do; it was wholly inadequate, and it was not a proper and diligent effort to cleanse the sheep, as he had been ordered to do. He clearly contravened the 21st section, and the appeal must, therefore, be dismissed. But with regard to the reading of the case of Van der Berg, which has been quoted, I wish to say that I want that case to be confined to its own particular facts, and not to be extended to such a reading as has been endeavoured to be put upon it in the present appeal. I never meant anyone to infer, if an owner once gave notice, or somehow brought it to the notice of the inspector, that there were scabby sheep at his place, that thereafter he could neglect any other steps and still be free from prosecution under that section. I say again, as I said in that case, that the duties are concurrent, and if, when he has given such notice, he is told to do certain things in the way of cleansing his sheep, he should make diligent and proper efforts to cleanse such sheep. If he fails to do that, he ought to be prosecuted, and he may be prosecuted under this Act. The facts in Van der Berg's case were different from those in this case, and the decision was wholly upon that case. There the man had given notice, and he had also actually cleansed before he was prosecuted; in fact, he had done both things which the Act enjoins him to do, and any expressions of mine which are reported in that case must be taken to be confined only to that particular case. This appeal must be dismissed.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

In re ESTATE KING BROS. { 1907.
Mar. 6th.

Mr. Watermeyer moved as a matter of urgency for the appointment of a provisional trustee in the estate of King Bros., of Durbanville. The estate was sequestrated on the 27th February, 1907, but prior to that King Bros. petitioned the Court to surrender the estate, and it was agreed that the estate should be liquidated under Mr. G. W. Steytler, but a creditor for £149 had declined to concur. The business was a large one, and it was absolutely necessary that Mr. Steytler, who was thoroughly conversant with the business, and enjoyed the confidence of the bulk of the creditors, should be appointed. The closing down of the business would be prejudicial to the creditors. The petition was signed by creditors to the value of £12,000, out of a total of £18,000.

Maasdorp, J., granted an order appointing Mr. G. W. Steytler provisional trustee, with power to carry on the business.

APPEAL CASES.

REID AND CO. V. FEDERAL SUPPLY AND COLD STORAGE CO., LTD.

Landlord and tenant—Broken window.

R. & Co. leased a certain shop to the F. Co. When the premises were handed back to R. & Co., it was found that during the tenancy a certain window had been cracked. There was no conclusive evidence to show how the damage had been caused or whether it had been broken from within or from without.

Held, that the tenants were not liable.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the A.R.M. of Cape Town, in which absolution from the instance was given in a claim by the plaintiffs for £6 9s. 4d., as damages done to a window.

The plaintiffs leased certain premises to the defendants at 224, Long-street. The defendants took tenancy under the plaintiffs on the 1st December, 1903. The tenancy terminated on the 30th November, 1906. On the 1st December, 1903, a plate glass window was handed over intact by the plaintiffs to the defendants. Upon the vacation of the premises by the defendants the window was handed back in a broken condition. During the tenancy the plaintiffs called upon the defendant to make good the damage amounting to £6 9s. 4d., which the defendants refused to pay. The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said the plaintiffs admitted they had to keep the outside of the premises in repair. It had been urged for the plaintiffs that the breakage was due to portion of the window being painted, and thus causing unequal expansion. On the evidence he could not come to any other conclusion, but that the plaintiff must fail. The premises were let for a butcher's business, and the plaintiff admitted the defendants had the right to advertise their business by painting on the window.

Mr. Benjamin was for the appellants, and Mr. Close was for the respondents.

Mr. Benjamin said there was not a word that the issue was confined to the breakage of the window from paint. The summons was perfectly general. There was no word on the record to show whether the window was broken by being painted upon, or not. All that was necessary was to show that the premises were handed over in a sound condition, and when handed back they were in a damaged condition, and the onus was on the defendants to show that they were not liable. Counsel quoted Van der Linden (1, 15, 12, 4), Voet (19, 2, 32), and Grotius (3, 19, 11). Grotius said: "The lessee is bound also to make good all damage caused to the leased property through his own dealing, or the negligence of his household, or even by others out of hatred to the lessee." Counsel relied upon the general doctrine that the premises must be handed over in a sound condition. The Magistrate was wrong in giving absolution from the instance, because if the plaintiffs again went into the case they could not adduce further evidence.

Mr. Close said the Magistrate was wrong in giving absolution from the instance, he ought to have given judgment right out for the defendant. Taking the English law, generally speaking, if there was a question of dealing more leniently it dealt more leniently with the landlord. Even had there been no evidence for the defence, the Magistrate would have had to give absolution from the instance. The manager of the plaintiff company admitted the defendants had a right to paint on the window as they did. The lessee was legitimately using the premises to the knowledge of the landlord. According to Voet (19, 2, 29, 30 and 31), the onus was on the owner to prove that the damage happened from the concurrent fault of the lessee. Taking what he submitted was the common law, and the position by agreement between the parties in this case, the tenant was not at all liable and the onus was strongly on the landlord generally, under the common law, and specially in this particular case, under the agreement to show that what happened was not something which did not come under repairs, and was the fault of the tenant.

Mr. Benjamin having been heard in reply,

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the plaintiff sued the defendant in the Magistrate's Court for a sum of £6 9s. 4d., in respect of damage suffered by him through injury caused to a plate-glass window in his house. In the summons the ground which is stated for the claim is that when the premises were taken possession of by the defendant as tenant this plate-glass window was intact, and that upon the expiration of the lease, when the premises were handed back, it was broken. There is no allegation that the damage was caused through the default or negligence of the defendant. However, the action proceeded upon the summons, without any exception being taken, and it was then presumably considered necessary by the parties to prove that the damage was actually caused by the negligence and default of the defendant. The ground which the plaintiff seems to have rested his case upon in the evidence was that this plate-glass window was painted for the purpose of lettering by the defendant in such an improper manner that the natural result was that the glass got cracked. He called certain witnesses as experts to express their opinion that in such a way glass could get cracked through partial and improper lettering. On the other hand, witnesses were called by the defendant, who seem to be of equal standing as experts, and who said that under the circumstances they came to the conclusion that the injury was not caused by the painting. The Magistrate was of opinion that it had not been proved that the damage was caused in that way. Thereupon the case, as it was narrowed down by the plaintiff himself before the Magistrate, utterly failed because the only act on the part of the defendant which was urged as being negligent was the manner in which he treated the window in painting it. But Mr. Benjamin now urges that, notwithstanding the failure of the plaintiff on that ground, he ought to succeed on that summons, even if he failed to prove that the manner of painting the window caused the damage. Still, the injury remained, and the only natural inference could be that that injury, even if it did not arise from the painting, must have been caused by the negligence or wrongful act of the defendant. Now, I quite agree with Mr. Benjamin in this, that there are certain cases in which, from the very nature of the damage, it will be concluded that it must have arisen through the fault of the defendant, or of some other person for whom he is responsible. Supposing the damage had occurred inside the house, to which only the defendant and his servants had access, and it was in itself of such a nature that it could only have arisen from gross ill-usage of the property, then the Court would come to the conclusion, merely from the nature of the damage, that the defendant had been guilty of negligence, through which the plaintiff suffered injury. This case, however, is different.

An injury is done to the window which may be looked upon as part of the building, which requires external repairs, and the injury could be caused from outside as well as from the inside. And from the whole nature of this case, it appears that both parties are wholly ignorant as to how the damage occurred, and it is not a case in which, from the mere fact of the window being broken, the conclusion must be deduced that it was caused through the negligence of the defendant. Mr. Benjamin also tried to extend his rights rather further, by stating that it was the duty of the tenant, under all circumstances, to hand back the property to the landlord in the same state in which he received it. Now, it appears quite clear from the authorities that when a house falls out of repair, the duty of repairing it so as to keep it habitable for the tenant falls upon the landlord, unless the disrepair is the result of a wrongful act on the part of the tenant. The only conclusion on the whole of this evidence one can come to is that for some unknown reason this window has fallen into disrepair, and it is not the duty of the tenant to hand it back to the landlord in the same condition in which he received it, unless there is some proof, positively, that the injury arose from the negligence of the defendant, or unless there is proof of certain facts from which it must necessarily be concluded that there was such negligence as to cause the injury. The Magistrate, finding that no negligence of the character stated by the witnesses for the plaintiff had been proved to his satisfaction, gave absolution from the instance in this case, and I think he was correct in his decision. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

[Appellants' Attorney: J. Buirski.
Respondents' Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton.]

REX V. KRUGER.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Acting Assistant Resident Magistrate of Woodstock in a case in which the appellant, Benjamin Kruger, a European youth of 16 years of age, was charged with the theft of five ducks belonging to one Newman. The Magistrate found accused guilty of the theft of two ducks, and fined him £5, with the alternative of fourteen days' hard labour. The appeal was brought on the grounds that certain evidence admitted on behalf of the Crown was inadmissible, that evidence tendered on behalf of the accused was wrongly rejected by the Magistrate, that the weight of evidence was against the decision, and that the balance of evidence was in favour of acquittal, or raised such doubt that the Magistrate should have given appellant the benefit of it, and have dismissed the case.

Mr. Close was for appellant; Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Counsel read the record of evidence, and in argument, submitted that, even if the Magistrate was right in finding the accused guilty, the case was eminently one which should have been treated under the First Offenders' Act. The accused was a lad of 16 years, and there was nothing previously against him. He contended further that the Magistrate was not justified, on the evidence, in convicting accused.

Masendorp, J.: In this case there were certainly some circumstances in the evidence which required to be very carefully weighed by the Magistrate before he could arrive at a satisfactory conclusion, but I have no doubt that the Magistrate did weigh all the difficulties which he had to bear in mind in considering the case. After all, there is a certain portion of the evidence which, if it is accepted by the Magistrate, is conclusive of the fact that the two ducks were stolen from Mr. Newman, and that these two ducks were found in Mrs. Kruger's yard. These ducks are positively identified by the owner by the description and the colour, and in one case by a special mark on the web of one of the ducks. The ducks were produced in court, and I have no doubt that the Magistrate saw what the nature of the birds was, that he would have considered whether the colour was such, and the general appearance was such, that they could be with any certainty identified by the owner. That he must have taken into consideration when he had to consider whether these ducks belonged to Newman. He must have come to the conclusion upon the positive statement, and on all the other circumstances, that they were Mr. Newman's ducks. If they were, then they were found, within two days of their loss, in the yard belonging to Mrs. Kruger, the mother of the accused. The question then arises: how did they come there? We have the positive statement of two servant girls who were about the premises that these two ducks—these very ducks—were brought there by the accused. There is proof, therefore, that within two days of the birds disappearing from Mr. Newman's place, the accused was seen to carry them into his mother's yard. There is evidence given also that upon the day when one of the ducks was missed by the owners, the accused was in the neighbourhood of the place, with his two little brothers not far off, and that, while they were catching a duck, he was apparently watching a portion of the premises of Mr. Newman, to ascertain whether there were any persons about. It is said that the witness who gives that evidence, being a young boy, can hardly dive into the motives of another boy, who is simply seen observing certain premises, but at the same time that he saw the accused watching, he saw the duck being caught, and I see no difficulty in believing that he connected the act of one of the brothers with the act of the two other brothers. Now the Magistrate came to the conclusion that they were then acting jointly, and that one of the ducks then disappeared. From the manner in which they acted, the Magistrate came to the conclusion that the ducks clearly belonged to Mr. Newman's poultry yard, and that they were Mr. Newman's property; and it being once established that they were Mr. Newman's property, then all other difficulties in the case disappear. It has been pointed out that the Magistrate might have dealt with this case in a more lenient way if he had proceeded under Act No. 10 of 1906, but it is perfectly clear that under that Act, the mode of dealing with the case is left almost wholly in his discretion, and it is a discretion that this Court cannot now interfere with. He would have been justified in acting under the terms of that Act if he had found any extenuating circumstances or if the nature of the offence was very trivial, but evidently he did not regard the act as a trivial offence, and I myself do not consider that the theft of poultry, considering the great deal of trouble it causes to the community, can be regarded at any time as a trivial offence. But I do not express the opinion that, under the circumstances, this case might not be more leniently dealt with. I merely point that out as a reason why I am not in a position to say that the Magistrate should have regarded this particular act as trivial. The appeal must be dismissed.

MANSELL V. HARTMANN.

This was an appeal from a decision of an Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town.

The appellant appeared in person; there was no appearance for the respondent.

The facts appear from the judgment. Masendorp, J.: In this case it appears that the plaintiff sues the defendant for the recovery of £3 6s., as damages suffered by him through injury caused to certain photographic plates belonging to him. It is alleged that the injury was caused by the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully causing water to run over these plates and thereby rendering them unfit for use. The defendant, through his agent, put in a plea of the general issue, and the plaintiff then proceeded to call witnesses to prove his case. He led evidence to show that there was a tank situated above the room belonging to a Mr. Dart, in which he stored his photographic plates, and that the portion of the premises where the tank was situated was then occupied by the defendant, who had hired it from Mr. Dart. It was discovered that water had issued from the premises above into the room belonging to Mr. Dart, where the plaintiff kept his photographic plates, and upon inquiry it was admitted by the defendant that he had forgotten to turn off the tap of this tank and that had caused the flow of water. Evidence was also called to the effect that the plates belonging to the plaintiff were in such a state that they were unmerchantable through the damage caused by the water. This, to my mind, amounts as far as the evidence went to proof of negligence on the part of the defendant; proof that such negligence caused the damage to the plates; and proof that the damage to the plates was a material injury to the plaintiff. When the evidence for the plaintiff was closed application was made by the agent for the defendant for absolution on the ground that no negligence was averred in the summons. It is quite true that there is not an averment of negligence in so many words. The summons avers wrongful and unlawful conduct on the part of the defendant. Possibly exception might have been taken on this ground, but upon that I do not express my opinion. If the summons was somewhat defective, exception might have been taken in the first instance, and the Magistrate might have dealt with it before the case proceeded. But after the defendant's plea, and after the evidence was led, it appeared quite clear that the parties had come prepared to try an issue as to whether the plaintiff had suffered from the negligence of the defendant, and the words in this summons sufficiently cover that allegation, although the summons may be said to be not very artistically drawn. Under these circumstances, the Magistrate was wrong at that stage of the case to allow the exception to the summons. It now appears in the reasons given by him, that he dealt to some extent also with the merits of the case, and he states that upon the evidence he finds no proof of any damage having been done to the plaintiff. Now that finding of the Magistrate is wrong, because there is evidence, at present uncontradicted, that the plaintiff has sustained damage. It is quite possible that it may be disproved by the defendant, but until such evidence has been called the evidence of the plaintiff must be taken for the present to be true. The Magistrate's finding, therefore, is quite incorrect that there is no proof of these photographic plates having been damaged by water. Under the circumstances, the case must go back to the Magistrate, and he must proceed with a trial of it upon its merits. I would like to point out now that if there is any doubt whether serious damage has been done to the defendant in this case, he should still have the opportunity to produce on his behalf all the cases containing the alleged damaged plates. It seems to me that the Magistrate went wrong in dismissing the case upon an exception and then proceeding to deal with it upon its merits. Having dealt with it upon its merits, in the face of his finding that there is no evidence of damage, opportunity must be given to the plaintiff, in addition to the evidence he has already given, to produce the plates for proper examination and investigation, if necessary. The appeal will be allowed and the case sent back to the Magistrate to be tried on its merits, an opportunity to be given, if necessary, for the plaintiff to put in the alleged damaged packets of plates. I add this because it may be held that the plaintiff's case is closed and no more evidence is to be allowed on his behalf.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

COLLINS V. KING. { 1907.
Mar. 6th.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the A.R.M. of Piquetberg in an action in which appellant claimed from respondent £5 for drawing plans of a certain house, working out estimates, and preparing specifications, and £14 12s. for services rendered in supervising building operations and granting certificates on £715 at 2 per cent. The Magistrate had given absolution from the instance.

Mr. Gardiner was for appellant, W. C. Collins, of Piquetberg; Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for respondent.

Collins had sued King in the Court below for £5 for drawing certain plans for a house, and for £14 12s. for supervising the building of the house. The Magistrate had given absolution from the instance, and on December 11 Mr. Justice Hopley remitted the case back to the Magistrate for further evidence on: (1) Why the three certificates (if they were certificates by surety merely) were given before the clause of suretyship were added to the agreement; (2) the exact date of the agreement itself; and (3) for how much did the plaintiff give certificates, and why did he cease giving them? (16, C.T.R., 1,119.)

The evidence taken on these points was conflicting.

Mr. Gardiner said that the probabilities were in favour of Collins. The words "according to architect's note of hand" showed that an architect was contemplated.

Hopley, J., asked if Collins, who was a missionary, could be called an architect. He might perhaps be what Mr. McGregor would call an "al-fresco" architect.

After further argument on the facts:

Hopley, J.: I do not think it is necessary to call upon Mr. De Villiers today. When the case was last heard before me I was inclined to look upon the conclusion which the Magistrate had come to as not an unreasonable conclusion, and his judgment of absolution from the instance as one which was, in the circumstances, a just and proper result to arrive at. But there were one or two points which seemed to me to rather tend in an opposite direction, and it was to get an explanation of those difficulties, if possible, by fresh evidence that I remitted the case to the Magistrate. The facts seem to be that somewhere about August, 1905, one Bell contracted with King (the respondent) to build him a house. It is quite clear that Mr. Collins intervened considerably in this matter, either as a professional man or as a sort of mutual or common friend of the parties. He is a missionary, and he seems to have some little skill in drawing plans for houses. One can hardly dignify it by calling it "architectural skill," just ordinary drawing skill, and he certainly was a friend of Bell's. Now, he seems to have busied himself in this matter, and it is quite clear that he and King had speech of each other—one could hardly call it "negotiations"—about this matter before the contract was actually entered into. He drew either for Bell or King the plans of the house, which were subsequently adopted, and one of the questions which arise in this case is whether he is entitled to any charge for drawing those plans. The charge he makes is reasonable, considering the skill exhibited. The Magistrate, however, quotes evidence taken from Mr. Collins's own mouth, evidence which was apparently conscientiously given. He said: "I did not make any charge at the time for the plans and specifications, but the defendant said he hoped I would not charge him too much. I had not at that time made up my mind what to charge." That is not a professional man's way of doing business, not an architect's way, and, as far as that goes, he would probably leave it to the generosity of the defendant to give him something or other for the plans if he adopted them. Then he says that he made this claim for £5, and the rest of the claim from the defendant for the first time when the latter summoned him for £5. That was at a much later date than the completion of the building, long after the respondent had possession of and was living in the house. There, again, the Magistrate had the conduct of the plaintiff himself to go upon, and he not only says he did not make any charge at the time for the plans, but he did not send in a bill or try to get anything from the defendant for a considerable time after the whole thing was finished, and then under the somewhat suspicious circumstance that the defendant had sued him for a sum of £5. But the evidence does not stop there. Plaintiff says: "I did not draw this plan for any remuneration. I did not have an agreement with Mr. King, except that he said 'I hope you will not charge me too much.'" All that induced the Magistrate to feel and believe that this work was done gratuitously, at the outside that the plaintiff might have thought that the defendant would be generous enough to recognise his services by giving him some small amount for what he had done. Then, as to the supervision, I cannot say that if the plaintiff busied himself gratuitously about the drawings or plans, there was any other understanding as to the supervision, except perhaps at a point that is more strongly against the plaintiff is that he had a personal object to serve in giving his supervision to the work. The builder was a friend of his, and the Magistrate comes not unreasonably to the conclusion that one of the objects was to assist the builder, to help him along, to give him a name in Piquetberg, so that possibly he might get one or two other works, certainly one good work, and, more than a week after the work had been begun and the original contract had been signed, a clause was added to the contract whereby Mr. Collins himself became a surety for the builder's work and for the builder's carrying out the work in this matter. Therefore it became his interest to see that the work was properly looked over, and that not too much money was drawn, and the Magistrate came to the conclusion that that was the reason why he gave these services of supervision and the certificates for drawing money which he gave. Now, three of those certificates were given about the date when the contract was supplemented by the addition of the surety clause, and it was that that rather weighed on my mind in sending back the case for further evidence. But the evidence of the respondent, which I have now elicited, explains that fact. He says that he gave these on the verbal undertaking that Mr. Collins would be the surety, and simply trusted to his good faith, and that, after the time when the certificates had been given, he thought it better to have it put on a more businesslike footing. He caused this clause to be added to the contract, and that explains what seems to be an inconsistency in the matter. I cannot say, under the circumstances, that the Magistrate was wrong in giving absolu-tion from the instance. They are both parties of good standing in the place, occupying a reputable position, and they give contradictory explanations of a loosely-drawn set of documents. The Magistrate may have been in a position to decide exactly who was speaking the truth. He gave absolution from the instance, and I see no reason to interfere with that judgment, and the appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

MARTIN V. ROBERSON. { 1907.
Mar. 7th.
" 15th.

Attorney acting as agent for another attorney—Client—
Liability for fees of agent—
Practice.

Respondent had instructed one C., an attorney residing at Somerset East, to conduct a case for him in the Magistrate's Court at Butterworth, and signed a power of attorney in blank. C. instructed the appellant, a Butterworth attorney, to act for him, and sent to him the power of attorney. The appellant, having conducted the case, demanded payment for his services from C. But on the refusal of C., who was in financial difficulties, to pay him, he sued the respondent on a taxed bill of costs.

Held on appeal, that respondent's power of attorney in blank having been lawfully made over to appellant, respondent was liable to him for his fees.

Semble, the practice that the attorney who employs another as his agent, and not the client, is liable to the agent for fees exists only in the case of London attorneys employed by Country attorneys, unless in other cases the agent waives his rights against the client by his conduct or otherwise.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Somerset East in an action brought by appellant against respondent to recover £2 12s. 4d. for work done and professional services rendered at defendant's special instance and request, as per taxed bill of costs annexed to summons.

From the record it appeared that the plaintiff (appellant), who was an attorney practising at Butterworth, sued the defendant for £2 12s. 4d., for work done and professional services rendered in a suit between Roberson and one Greeff. Plaintiff had received his instructions in the case against Greeff from Attorney Cohen at Somerset East, but the power of attorney under which he acted was signed by defendant in favour of plaintiff. Plaintiff rendered the services and demanded payment from Cohen, whom he had debited in his books, but Cohen had left Somerset East, and plaintiff then sued defendant. Defendant had admitted that he had signed a blank power of attorney, which he gave to Cohen to proceed against Greeff, and he also admitted that the power in favour of Martin (plaintiff) bore his signature.

The Magistrate dismissed the case, with costs, and, in his reasons, said that defendant, at the request of Cohen, who had all defendant's accounts to collect, signed a blank power of attorney, which was the usual practice by long usage amongst legal practitioners when they undertook to collect moneys for their clients from distant parts. Defendant was not prepared to pay plaintiff, as he did not employ him. The case cited by plaintiff's attorney (Wright v. Williams (8 J., 166) did not rebut the country attorney's liability. He had not found any cases decided in this colony bearing on the question at issue, but on reference to the procedure in England he found "that where one solicitor does business for another, the solicitor who does the business invariably gives credit to the solicitor who employs him and not to the client for whose benefit it is done. If the solicitor in such case intends not to be personally responsible, it is his duty to give express notice that the business is to be done on the credit of the client. But such notice, though it may protect the solicitor from liability, will not necessarily make the client liable," and he was of the opinion that the evidence was clearly in favour of the contention of the defendant.

Mr. Close informed the Court that a similar point was involved in the case of Estate Ross v. Trollip, which was standing over for judgment.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for appellant, Attorney G. M. Martin, of Butterworth; there was no appearance for respondent, Albert O. Roberson, a blacksmith, of Somerset East.

Mr. De Villiers, in argument, said inter alia, that the only question was whether Martin could sue Roberson on the power of attorney signed by Roberson in favour of Martin, and under which Martin disbursed moneys and rendered services. Roberson could not vary his written contract. There was no proof of a custom that one attorney should look to the other. Even if the local attorney guaranteed the costs that did not deprive the town attorney of his action against the man employing him. He cited Story on Agency (sections 201 and 217a), which had been adopted in our Courts in the case of Murray v. Cammark (3 H.C., 12). In this case Martin was acting on direct authority given by Roberson. The magistrate did not give the reference to the English law quoted by him, but the case of Seruce v. Wittington (2 B. and C. 11), in which a London attorney sued the country attorney and recovered, seemed to cover part of what the magistrate said was the English law, but it did not go so far as the magistrate went. He could find no authority for the sentence, "Such notice, though it may protect the solicitor from liability, will not necessarily make the client liable."

[Maasdorp, J.: Supposing Martin had sued Cohen?]

Mr. De Villiers said that then the custom of attorneys in this country would have to be gone into. The London attorneys looked to the country attorney, and not to the country client, but this was a custom peculiar to London attorneys. He quoted Cordery on the Law of Solicitors (p. 254), and Van Zijl (Judicial Practice, 2 ed., 783) was quite inconclusive, but as far as he went in appellant's favour, he said that the local attorney was taken to guarantee the town attorney's expenses.

Cur. Adt. Vult.

Postea (March 15th).

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff, who is an attorney, living at Butterworth, conducted a case in the Magistrate's Court there on behalf of the defendant, who resides at Somerset East, against one Greef. After the close of the proceedings he had his bill of costs against his client duly taxed, and upon his client refusing to pay, he sued him for the amount in the Magistrate's Court at Somerset East. At the trial he put in his taxed bill of costs and a power of attorney in his favour, signed by the defendant. The defence was set up that the defendant never engaged the services of the plaintiff, but employed an attorney named Cohen, residing at Somerset East, and was therefore not indebted to the plaintiff. The Magistrate dismissed the case, and gave as his reason that, according to the common practice, attorneys are responsible to one another for the bills of costs of their clients, and that under English law, "where one solicitor does business for another, the solicitor who does the business invariably gives credit to the solicitor who employs him, and not to the client for whose benefit it is done. If the solicitor in such case intends not to be personally responsible, it is his duty to give express notice that the business is to be done on the credit of the client. But such notice, though it may protect the solicitor from liability, will not necessarily make the client liable." The Magistrate does not say from what authority he has taken this passage, but it obviously has reference to the custom of dealing between country solicitors in England and London agents. The matter is briefly disposed of by a passage in "The Annual Practice" for 1904, vol. 2, page 380: "As between London agents and country solicitors the client is deemed to employ and to be liable only to the solicitor whom he retains. If this solicitor employs another, the latter must look to the solicitor employing him, and not to the client. But this depends upon special custom, and does not apply where the solicitor retained employs a solicitor in Ireland." If any custom does exist in this colony as between the country attorneys and those practising in the seats of the Higher Courts, it will have to be established by evidence, or judicial decision as to its existence must be adduced. But there is clearly no evidence in this case of any custom as to the dealings of attorneys in different villages in this country. The Court can only look to the contract and the conduct of the parties concerned. Here we have a limited power of attorney from the client at Somerset East to the attorney at Butterworth, and if that were all the attorney would be entitled to look to the client for his remuneration. It is quite possible that there may be a practice among attorneys to let the settlement be effected between them, and their conduct in any special case may vary their rights. For instance, supposing in this case the plaintiff had acted in such a manner as to induce the defendant to believe that he looked only to Cohen for a settlement, and the defendant had in consequence paid Cohen, I think he could have pleaded such payment in an action by the plaintiff. But he has neither paid nor pleaded payment. There is no evidence that anything was paid to Cohen in respect of the costs of this case. The defendant only goes to the length of saying that Cohen has several sums of money due to him. The plaintiff in this case debited Cohen in his books, and looked to him in the first instance for payment, but when Cohen got into difficulties he thought it only fair that Roberson should pay the costs. There is no doubt that by the power of attorney given direct to the plaintiff privity of contract was established between the plaintiff and defendant, and unless plaintiff by his conduct induced the defendant to do anything to his own detriment, he would not lose his right under the original contract of agency. Van Zyl, in his "Judicial Practice," page 783, has a passage which in so far as it refers to English law and the English case cited, is based wholly on custom, and in so far as it refers to our law, it may refer to a custom of which there is no evidence in this case, and for which no judicial authority is cited. In my opinion the plaintiff was entitled to succeed upon the evidence. The appeal will be allowed and judgment entered for the plaintiff for £2 12s. 4d., with costs in the Court below and with costs of appeal.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLY.]

REX V. SHEAR AND SHEAR. (1907.
Mar. 7th.
Act 28 of 1883, Sec. 75.

Principal and agent cannot both be convicted of the same offence under the above section.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Uniondale.

The appellants had been charged on five counts with contravening section 75 of Act 28 of 1883, as amended by later Acts, by selling liquor without a licence. The first count alleged a sale on September 9, 1906, to one Amos at Haarlem, the second on October 4 to Amos at Ongelegen, the third on October 3 to Pieter Sellig, the fourth on October 13 to Pieter Sellig, and the fifth at divers dates to Finch.

The Magistrate found the appellants guilty, but he did not specify in his judgment on which counts he found them guilty. He stated, however, in his reasons for judgment, that he found them guilty on the second and third counts, but gave them the benefit of the doubt on the other occasions.

The appeal was brought on two grounds; the first was, that the appellant, A. Shear, acted as agent for Z. Shear, and so both could not be convicted of the same offence; and the second ground was, that the conviction was against the weight of evidence.

Mr. Gardiner appeared for the appellants; Mr. Howel Jones for the Crown.

Mr. Gardiner contended that a principal and his agent could not both be convicted of the same offence, and referred to Rex v. Willem (9 H.C., 242) and Rex v. Nokitsini and Druri 13 S.C., 413). The Magistrate had not apportioned the sentences to the various counts, so the case ought to be remitted to him to apportion the sentences to the various counts. He cited Rex v. Loots (13 S.C., 121). Counsel also argued that the conviction was against the weight of evidence.

Mr. Howel Jones said he would not contend that the appellants were guilty on counts 1, 4, and 5, and it was also clear that the Magistrate only meant to convict A. Shear on count 2 and Z. Shear on count 3, and so he would agree to the sentence being quashed, and the case remitted to the Magistrate to apportion the sentences to the various counts.

Hopley, J.: In this case the appellants, Z. Shear and A. Shear, who stand in the relation towards each other of father and son, managed different shops near Uniondale, apparently along the line of railway. Z. Shear was the head of the business, but the shop managed by A. Shear was licensed in A. Shear's name. They were charged together on five counts, with contravening the 75th section of the Liquor Act 28 of 1883, and the Magistrate, after hearing the evidence, found them generally guilty, and fined the father in £25, or three months' imprisonment, and the younger man in £15, or two months' imprisonment. The general finding as it stands means, of course, that he finds them guilty on all five counts. It is clear from the Magistrate's reasons that he did not mean to find these accused guilty on all the counts. From his reasons it would appear on the first, fourth, and fifth counts he entertained doubts, and he would have no objection to these counts being set aside, and so the conviction on these counts will be quashed. On the second count the Magistrate found them both guilty, but it is clear from the evidence that A. Shear sold the liquor to Amos, that Z. Shear was not present, and there was no evidence to show that he authorised the sale. Even if he had authorised it as principal, principal and agent could not both be convicted of the same offence, so the conviction of Z. Shear on the second count will be quashed, and the conviction of A. Shear confirmed. On the third count there is more to connect them both with the sale. Sellig ordered the brandy from Z. Shear, and Z. Shear sent the order to A. Shear, who delivered the brandy to Sellig. It is clear that A. Shear acted only as his father's agent, and both of them could not be convicted on that count. The conviction against A. Shear on that count will be quashed, and that against Z. Shear confirmed. The case will be remitted to the Magistrate to pass such sentence as he thinks proper under the circumstances.

VAN DEN BERG V. RIDDELL.

Billiards—"Good for"—"Entertainment"—Act 28 of 1883, Sec. 69.

Where the lessee of a hotel billiard room sued on a "good for" for charges for the use of a certain billiard table.

Held, that he was entitled to succeed.

Semble: In view of the use of the word "entertainment" in Sec. 69 of Act 28 of 1883, it is doubtful whether the landlord could have recovered on a similar "good for."

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Aliwal North, sitting at Lady Grey, in an action brought by appellant against respondent to recover £1 11s. on a certain good-for and 10s. money advanced.

From the record it appeared that appellant was the sub-lessee of the billiard room at the Commercial Hotel, Lady Grey, and that respondent, a local tailor, had been a frequent patron of the table. When the case came on for hearing before the Magistrate, exception was taken by defendant's attorney: (1) That the good-for was in the name of Mr. Rose, proprietor of the Commercial Hotel, and that plaintiff had no cession; (2) that the good-for was for billiards and could not be sued upon in terms of section 69 of the Liquor Act No. 28 of 1883; (3) that no date was disclosed on the summons as to when the advance was made. The exception was upheld, with costs. Certain evidence was, however, taken, from which it appeared that plaintiff said defendant had signed the good-for sued upon for billiards, and that he also owed him (plaintiff) 10s. money advanced. Defendant admitted that he owed plaintiff 10s. for an advance and also 15s. for billiards.

Section 69 of Act 28, 1883, reads: "No person shall receive in payment, or as a pledge or security for any liquor or entertainment supplied in and from his licensed premises, anything except current money, cheques on bankers, or orders for payment of money."

Mr. Upington was for appellant, George S. van den Berg; respondent, James Riddell, did not appear.

Mr. Upington submitted that the Magistrate's finding was wrong, that it was not necessary for appellant to have had cession of the good-for, that a billiard debt was not excluded under the 69th section, and that the third point was not material seeing that defendant himself admitted the loan. It was not plaintiff's desire, however, that the case should be remitted to the Magistrate, in view of the small amount involved, but he would prefer that the Court should give judgment for the amount of indebtedness admitted by the defendant.

[Hopley, J.: There is nothing in the Act which says you shall not give a man credit for billiards?]

Mr. Upington: I am not aware that there is.

[Hopley, J.: Does "entertainment" mean billiards or a dance or anything else, or does it mean provisions merely?]

I have looked into the Act, and there is no definition of "entertainment."

[Hopley, J.: "Entertainment" very frequently means food rather than anything else. It does not mean amusement necessarily, does it?]

The section was certainly never intended to apply, for instance, to a dance being held. Sections 68 and 69 are merely aimed mainly at the running up of credit for liquor supplied. I submit that an I.O.U. is really to be classed, for the purpose of this section, as an order for the payment of money.

[Hopley, J.: Oh, no.]

Mr. Upington, in further argument, remarked that the section was certainly not very artistically drawn. He added that the judgment of the Magistrate was most technical, and the Supreme Court had never encouraged technicalities, but had said that substantial justice should rather be done. The technicalities in this case were worthy of two centuries ago.

Hopley, J.: It is a pity that this small, petty amount should have had to come in appeal, or that the technicalities with which it is interwoven should have been raised in such a small dispute between the parties. The plaintiff sued for £2 1s.—£1 11s. upon a certain good-for made in favour of the plaintiff by the defendant, and 10s., being the amount of cash advanced, as is alleged, by plaintiff to defendant. Exceptions were taken, first of all, that the good-for is headed Commercial Hotel, and that the name of C. W. Rose appears below, and that, presumably, it would be a good-for to Mr. Rose, and that there was no cession from Mr. Rose to the plaintiff. As to that, all one can say is that it is a disingenuous exception, because all the parties, including defendant and his attorney, who took the exception, knew from the start that it was a good-for to Van den Berg, who was simply using that card bearing Mr. Rose's name until he got some printed for his own purposes. The facts seems to be that Van den Berg was the lessee of the billiard room from Rose, who was the licensed victualler of the Commercial Hotel. He, apparently, did not want to have the trouble of managing the billiard room, so he let it to Van den Berg. At the date when the debt was incurred there never was any set of circumstances which would have necessitated a cession from Rose to Van den Berg. That exception was badly taken, and cannot be sustained. The next exception that was taken was that in terms of the 69th section, if the good-for in question is for billiards, the said section provides that only current money, cheques, and orders for the payment of money should be taken. The exception there is curiously worded. It would have been better if it had been taken as a special plea, not an exception at all, because in itself a good-for is a document which is a proper document. To set up a defence upon such a good-for he should have said that the amount, in so far as it is admitted, was for billiards, and that, therefore, in terms of that section, the plaintiff could not recover. The Magistrate seems to have treated it as a special plea, and to have taken evidence, and the facts are that a certain amount was incurred for billiard debts, that is, for the use of the table and the room by the defendant, who was a tailor, and who seems to be fond of billiards. When the billiard debt had reached a certain amount, it was put upon a good-for, and it is that good-for which is now sued upon. Now, the Magistrate seems to have upheld that exception also simply on the ground that billiards would come under the heading of entertainment supplied in and from licensed premises, and that therefore a good-for ought not to have been taken for it. Well, that may be, but there is also force in what Mr. Upington says to begin with: that there is nothing in the section which makes it impossible for the licensed victualler himself to recover payment by process of law for such a thing as an amount run up for the lease of a billiard table in these licensed premises. The 69th section of the Act says that a licensed victualler shall not receive anything but money, cheque, or order for money for entertainment in his licensed premises, but it does not say he shall not recover in law such amounts as may be due on behalf of such entertainment in his licensed premises. Such entertainment does not stand on the same footing as liquor supplied on credit, which is dealt with by the 68th section. With regard to such entertainment, I think it is correct, reading the 69th section as it stands, and the Act as it stands, for a person to sue for entertainment supplied in his licensed premises, but in this particular case the case is less strong for defendant than it would be if Rose himself were suing. Here we have a person who has nothing to do with the licence, excepting that he has taken over the responsibility and expense of managing the billiard-room, for which he pays the rent, and from which he earns a living. He allows people to play on the table, the licensed victualler does not interfere, though he would be responsible for the orderly conduct of that room, and I see nothing in the Act which prevents such a lessee of a harmless form of entertainment in public premises from suing for any debt that is incurred to him for the use of such a thing as a billiard table. The Act certainly does not say so, and it is not for us to make an Act more strict than its own words necessarily imply. Therefore it seems to me, with regard to that portion of the exception, the Magistrate also was wrong. With regard to the exact amount which is due, there is a dispute, but it would be well at once to put an end to the paltry litigation between the parties. There is a conflict of evidence on this point, and the good-for is certainly not in such clear terms as one might wish. The defendant admitted to the Magistrate that he owed the sum of 25s. Nothing of that was incurred in ex turpi causa, or in disgraceful consideration, and the Magistrate may well have said: "Well, subject to any further evidence that may be led, I will give judgment for the plaintiff for 25s." There is conflict as to the amount, but Mr. Upington has said that, to put an end to the matter, he is perfectly willing that the Magistrate's judgment should be changed to one for the plaintiff for 25s. The appeal will be allowed, and the judgment in the Court below changed to one for the plaintiff for 25s., with costs in this Court and in the Court below.

[Appellant's Attorney: P. A. M. Cloete.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

STRAUSS V. VAN DER BERG. { 1907.
Mar. 8th.

Trespass—Poundmaster—Tender
—Costs—Act 15 of 1892,
Sec. 49.

Respondent's stallion donkey had broken into appellant's camp, in which there was a number of mare donkeys. Appellant sent the stallion to the pound and sued respondent in the Magistrate's Court for £10 damages. Respondent had released his stallion by paying pound fees, and also, under protest, £5 into the hands of the poundmaster. The Magistrate held that this £5 was a tender made by respondent to appellant in terms of Sec. 49 of Act 15 of 1892, and gave judgment in £5 for appellant, but ordered him to pay costs.

Held on appeal, that the £5 was not a tender to appellant, but the security mentioned in Sec. 49, and that the Magistrate's judgment must be varied by ordering respondent to pay costs in the Court below and also costs of appeal.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Prieska in an action brought by appellant against respondent to recover £10 damages, sustained by reason of a certain stallion donkey having broken into and trespassed in a camp occupied by donkey mares from which appellant intended to breed mules.

The Magistrate had given judgment for plaintiff for £5 damages, but had ordered him to pay costs, holding that £5 had been tendered by defendant through the poundmaster. The present appeal was brought solely on the question of costs.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that from the evidence brought forward it appeared that the donkey stallion was sent to the pound by the plaintiff on or about the 27th April, 1906, along with a letter claiming £5 as damages. The poundmaster released the stallion some time after payment of the £5 had been made by the defendant. The Court gave judgment for plaintiff for £5, but ordered plaintiff to pay the costs, the judgment being arrived at by virtue of the provisions of section 49, Act 15, 1892.

Dr. Rainsford was for appellant, Jacobus C. Strauss; Mr. Roux was for respondent, Johannes A. van der Berg.

Dr. Rainsford submitted that there was nothing on the record to justify the Magistrate's finding that defendant had made anything in the nature of a legal tender. The Magistrate was under the impression that the sum of £5 was given as a tender under the 49th section, instead of being, as counsel contended it clearly was, security for any judgment that might be given under the section. On the question of whether the poundmaster had power to pay over the money to plaintiff, he cited Schultz v. Spala (9 S.C. Reports, 423). From that decision it was clear that the poundmaster had no power to pay over trespass money which had been paid under protest, as in the present case, and that he simply held such trespass money as security. Counsel also cited Van der Spuy v. Colonial Government (14 S.C. Reports, 410).

Mr. Roux said that the mistake in this case was made by the Magistrate in not handing over to plaintiff the sum of £5 paid by the defendant. It seemed that when the defendant demanded the stallion from the poundmaster, it was refused unless £5 was paid as damages or security. The defendant went and demanded the donkey and paid over £5 to the poundmaster, as well as mileage and pound fees. The donkey, however, was not released, and it was not until he had commenced proceedings that defendant got the animal from the poundmaster. As soon as defendant got the stallion donkey there was no protest, and the money should have been handed by the poundmaster to the plaintiff. The cases cited by his learned friend were not in point.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the plaintiff sued the defendant in the Magistrate's Court for damages sustained by him for trespass by the defendant's stallion in a camp in which a number of the plaintiff's mares were running. The following plea was put in to this claim: "Denied the debt and pleaded that the sum of £5 has already been paid to the poundmaster." Under strict rules of pleading, this plea would be regarded as inconsistent in terms. A general denial of a debt cannot be pleaded at the same time with a tender of part of the amount, but if it appears clear to the Court that the parties understood the issue that they had to meet, then the Court would not apply any strict rules of pleading to the process of the Magistrate's Court.

This is contended to be a plea of a tender of £5 in satisfaction of the damages suffered by the plaintiff. On the face of this plea, there is no tender to the plaintiff of anything. The statement is that a certain sum was paid to the poundmaster without any further allegation as to what the relationship was between the poundmaster and the plaintiff, but here, again, if upon the evidence as it stands it should appear that the poundmaster, to the knowledge of both parties, received the money from the one for payment to the other, then the form of the plea may also be disregarded in this respect. It appears that after the stallion had trespassed upon the plaintiff's property and had been sent to the pound, the defendant sent a sum of £5, together with pound fees, to the poundmaster. The poundmaster received this amount, and informed the plaintiff afterwards that this amount has been received by him merely as security for a penalty which might possibly be recovered by the plaintiff if he instituted an action against the defendant. The poundmaster himself now says that he did not quite understand why the money was deposited with him, but he received it upon instructions from a justice of the peace. Well, in all probability, if the poundmaster merely received this money in the exercise of his duty as poundmaster, upon some advice he received from a justice of the peace, as a friend, then he must have acted under section 49, and under the provisions of section 49, the owner of any stallion is entitled to its release upon his depositing with the poundmaster the pound fees and a certain amount of security, or should give security for the payment of any penalty that the injured person might recover. The plaintiff himself says that he handed the money to the poundmaster under protest, and that such money was only to be paid over to the owner of the farm upon proof being given that he had suffered damage. The poundmaster himself says that he received this money as security, and that he could not pay it over to the plaintiff, who could only obtain it by proceedings at law. The plaintiff was informed of this by the poundmaster. Under all the circumstances, it is difficult to discover any evidence that any tender of this amount was made by the defendant to the plaintiff. The money is in the hands of the poundmaster, and the poundmaster is not the defendant's agent for the purpose of paying, nor is he the plaintiff's agent for the purpose of receiving, and he, having received the money from the defendant, very properly refused to pay it over to the plaintiff. Under the 49th section, it was his duty to retain that money for the purposes of the suit which might be brought for the recovery thereof, unless, of course, the parties had consented that the money should be paid over, and the matter had been settled by such consent. The Magistrate made a mistake in holding that he really proceeded under section 49. There is a provision in section 49 that where the owner of a stallion tenders a sum which is subsequently found to be sufficient to cover the damages, costs will not be awarded to the plaintiff, but this tender is not the payment of the money to the poundmaster, as the Magistrate seemed to imagine, it must be the tender of the money to the injured party direct. Such tender has not taken place, and consequently the Magistrate was wrong in finding that the defendant was not liable for the costs, because he had made a legal tender. The appeal must be allowed, and the judgment varied by ordering the defendant to pay costs in the Court below. Defendant also to pay costs in appeal.

[Appellant's Attorney: P. de Villiers;
Respondent's Attorneys: Mostert and Son.]

FICK V. ABEL.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Malmesbury, sitting at Hopefield, in an action brought against appellant by respondent to recover £20, paid for and on behalf of defendant at her special instance and request in October, 1903.

Plaintiff alleged that he made a payment of £20 to Mr. W. J. H. Wilson, to be paid over to the Colonial Mutual Life Insurance Co. on the 3rd October, 1903. Defendant denied the debt. The Magistrate gave judgment for plaintiff, with costs of suit as prayed.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that this appeared to be a perfectly bona fide transaction. Mr. Abel, the plaintiff in this action, actually and bona fide paid the sum claimed, viz., £20, on behalf of the defendant, to the Colonial Mutual Insurance Co., and Mrs. Fick, the defendant, actually requested Mr. Wilson, a highly-respected resident of the village, to obtain the money for her to pay her premiums on a certain life policy, either from Mrs. Wilson or any other source. Mr. Wilson, acting with the best intentions towards the defendant, and being under the impression that the life policy would lapse, with some difficulty managed to obtain the money on her behalf from Mr. Abel. The money was actually paid, but Mrs. Fick failed to inform Mr. Abel or Mr. Wilson that she had already paid the sums due.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers appeared for appellant, Mrs. M. Fick; Mr. W. Porter

Buchanan was for respondent, Richard Abel, a general dealer.

Mr. De Villiers said the defence was that defendant was quite willing to settle with the Insurance Co. for any amount which might be due, but that she was not liable to the plaintiff. Possibly it was a technical defence, but there might be substantial reasons for the defendant's attitude. Counsel argued that Mr. Wilson had not a general authority from defendant to raise money from any source, but only from Mrs. Wilson. Defendant raised all the money she required, except £20, by her own efforts after she had been informed by Mr. Wilson that he could not raise the money. Counsel contended that plaintiff was not entitled to interest from the 3rd October, 1903, as allowed by the Magistrate.

Mr. Buchanan (in reply to the Court) said that he did not press the point as to interest.

Maaadorp, J.: In this case the Magistrate has found a certain number of facts as proved by the evidence, and as there is evidence to support such finding, the Court will not interfere with his finding upon such points, with the exception of one point upon which there may be some doubt as to whether the evidence really supports his finding, and that point I may have to refer to. It would appear that in 1903 the defendant owed certain money to the Colonial Mutual Insurance Society, and her circumstances were such that she found it difficult to pay the amount. She approached Mr. Wilson, from whom she endeavoured to obtain assistance in raising that amount. Shortly after the debt was paid on her behalf by the plaintiff, and the dispute between the parties now is as to the circumstances under which that debt was paid. Mr. Abel contends that the amount was paid at the request of Wilson, as the agent for Mrs. Fick. Mrs. Fick says she did not appoint Wilson as her agent to raise the money from anyone, but only from Mr. Wilson's wife. It seems to me quite unnecessary now to decide that single point upon which the Magistrate's finding upon the facts may be doubtful, because in consequence of the subsequent conduct of the parties, there is no doubt that the debt arises between Mrs. Fick as debtor and Abel as creditor. A dispute having arisen as to the conduct of Wilson in obtaining this money from Abel, Wilson, considering himself responsible, instituted an action to recover the amount from Mrs. Fick, and when it appeared during those proceedings that the money had actually been paid for a debt that was due by Mrs. Fick to the insurance company, the action was dropped on the general understanding that Mrs. Fick would admit her liabilities to Abel himself. Now, the Magistrate finds that, after that Mrs. Fick did actually acknowledge to Abel that she did owe this debt to him, and requested that more time should be allowed her by Mr. Abel to pay. She was not immediately pressed, so I take it that request was complied with—that time was allowed her by Mr. Abel to pay a debt which she admitted to be due. After that, the defendant is debarred from taking up the attitude that the debt arose from the action of an unauthorised agent. Her subsequent conduct is full ratification of anything that had been done previously, and she is indebted to Mr. Abel in the sum of £20. Some suggestion is made now that the Magistrate in dealing with the interest in the matter exceeded his jurisdiction. It is too late now for the appellant in this case to raise the question of jurisdiction. As the respondent has abandoned the claim for interest, it is not necessary further to mention that matter, except this, that if the Court had disallowed the interest as against the defendant, it would not have affected the question of costs. The main question between the parties raised in appeal was whether £20 was due by the defendant to the plaintiff. The appeal will be dismissed, with costs.

MCGREGOR V. PHILLIPS.

Evidence—Shop-keeper's books.

A shop-keeper's books are not per se evidence of the indebtedness of a customer, unless, owing to special circumstances over which the shop-keeper has no control, they are the best evidence which it is possible to produce.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Matatiele in an action brought against appellant by respondent to recover £18 11s. upon an account for goods sold and delivered.

The Magistrate, who had given judgment for the plaintiff, said that he considered the evidence of the books sufficient proof of the debt.

Mr. Benjamin was for appellant; Mr. Sutton was for respondent.

Mr. Benjamin said that the account was of a very stale description, and dated back to 1901. On the main point in the case, he submitted that there was no evidence upon which the Magistrate could give judgment for the plaintiff in the case. The only evidence of the debt was given by a bookkeeper, who had never anything to do with serving the goods, and who apparently was not employed by plaintiff at the time of the alleged sales. On the authority of Van Nickerk v. Fagan (14 S.C. Reports, 47), judgment should have been given of absolution from the instance.

Mr. Sutton pointed out certain features of dissimilarity between the present case and the case cited. At the hearing in the Court below, defendant was legally represented, and he allowed the books to go in, and, as he had taken no objection, those books, upon which no discredit had been thrown, must stand for what they were worth. Counsel quoted "Kenny on Criminal Law" (p. 359) and "Taylor on Evidence" (pp. 365 and 623), and submitted that the rule laid down in section 37 of Ordinance 72, 1830, was only intended to apply to the contents of written documents.

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff, who is a shopkeeper, sues the defendant in this case, for the price of certain shop goods alleged to have been sold and delivered to him. The defendant denies the purchase of a certain specified number of these articles, and as to the remainder of the goods he does not admit that they were purchased by him, and puts the plaintiff to the proof. He adds that as to such articles as he might have from time to time purchased from the plaintiff he duly paid for them, but he is unable now to produce the receipts. It now becomes necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the goods in the account were actually sold and delivered to the defendant, and he proceeds to do so by calling a bookkeeper, who is at present in his service, to put in an account taken from the books. This account the bookkeeper alleges is a correct statement of the items as they appear in the books. The bookkeeper, who is now in plaintiff's service, is not the person who kept the books at the time when the transactions in question took place, and he is, therefore, unable, from his own knowledge, to give any evidence as to the sale of the goods. The result is that the whole of the evidence produced by the plaintiff in this case may be said to be the books without any proof at all of the correctness of these books. Now, generally speaking, the books of a shopkeeper are not in themselves evidence of their contents, but in certain circumstances the rule is somewhat relaxed, and when those circumstances are established, the books are taken to be the best evidence that could be produced. Now, none of these circumstances exist here at all. I may only instance one of these circumstances, and that would be this, that where a bookkeeper whose duty it is to make entries of transactions which are clearly brought to his knowledge, made those entries, and has since died, the books may be used for evidence of those transactions. I do not state the case with all its qualifications, because that is not a case which arises here, but I merely state it as one of the circumstances which might make the books admissible in evidence. Under the circumstances of this case, there is no proof that the persons who actually sold the goods cannot be produced to give evidence of the sale, or that the bookkeeper, whose duty it was to make entries of transactions which were brought to his notice by the proper persons, cannot now be produced, because of their death. It is very unfortunate for the plaintiff that he is now in this difficulty, that the only persons who might have assisted him in the matter are no longer in his service, but for that he has himself only to thank. Here we have got a shop account for a number of trifling items running over a period of five years, and under the circumstances it is only to be expected that the plaintiff would find himself in great difficulty in establishing his case. He has not in the present case overcome those difficulties, and the Magistrate was wrong in holding that the sale of the articles was proved. The Magistrate should have given absolution from the instance, and the appeal will now be allowed, and the judgment altered to one of absolution from the instance, with costs in both courts.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

MOSTERT V. LUNDEBSTEADT. { 1907.
Mar. 8th.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Stellenbosch, in which judgment was given for the defendant, with costs, in an action brought by the plaintiff to recover £2 10s., agreed to be paid in lieu of notice.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for £2 10s. for rent due in lieu of notice for the month of October, 1906. The defendant hired a house from the plaintiff at a monthly rental of £5 a month, and it was agreed that £2 10s. was to be paid by the defendant in lieu of notice. The only evidence given was that of the plaintiff. The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said: In this case it appears that the plaintiff hired a house to the defendant from 1st April on a monthly tenancy of £5. The rent was paid regularly up to the end of August, 1906. On the 3rd September, a message was left with the plaintiff that the defendant intended to vacate the premises. To this the plaintiff objected, and at an interview with the defendant he stated he required a full month's notice. On paying his rent on the 28th September, plaintiff alleges it was agreed to reduce the rent in lieu of notice to £2 10s. The defendant refused to do so. I consider reasonable notice was given by the defendant, and it would be a hardship to the defendant if she was compelled to occupy the house another two months. In the absence of any evidence of custom as to a clear month's notice, there would be judgment for the defendant, with costs.

Mr. Benjamin was for the appellant, and there was no appearance for the respondent.

Mr. Benjamin having been heard on the facts,

Hopley, J.: In this case the defendant was sued in the Court below on an agreement stated in the summons to pay £2 10s. to the plaintiff in lieu of further rent. The summons states: Summon Mrs. Landerstedt for £2 10s., which the plaintiff complains that the defendant owes him for rent due in lieu of notice for the month of October, 1906, it having been agreed that the sum of £2 10s. be paid by the defendant in lieu of notice. To that the defendant pleads the general issue. The only evidence that was given is that of the plaintiff on this point, and he says we agreed to reduce the rent to £2 10s. in lieu of notice. This she promised to pay, but asked for time. The facts seem to be that the defendant hired from the plaintiff a house, paying him by the calendar month £5. The tenancy had begun on the 1st of the month, and the rent was always paid for the calendar month. On the 3rd September, the tenant came and told the landlord that she gave him one month's notice, and that she was vacating the premises. He replied next day that he wanted his full month's notice, in other words, he wanted a month's notice terminating a calendar month. She only said she did not think he would insist upon that. She remained on for a part of September, and then left, going to her new tenancy, I suppose, at all events, leaving that house somewhere about the middle of September, on which date she returned the key to the landlord. He did not ask for it, except for a special purpose, to view the house. She told him he might keep the key. On the 25th September she came and paid him £5 for the month of September, 1906, and on that day or the next day she received a receipt from the plaintiff, in the following terms: "Received from Mrs. Landerstedt, £5 10s., for the month of September, 1906. Balance due for October, £2 10s. (Signed) D. P. Mostert." This receipt she must have received and made no demur as to its terms. She does not deny the agreement to pay £2 10s. in lieu of notice, which the plaintiff demanded. That is the whole point the Magistrate had to consider. I do not understand how he can possibly come to such a decision. It does not seem to me that the legal point can possibly come up for decision on these facts. It is not necessary for me to decide here whether or no the notice must end with the calendar month if the house is hired by the calendar month. All the facts indicated are that there was a contract to pay £2 10s., that the £2 10s. was sued for in definite terms, and that it was not paid. It seems to me that the appeal must be allowed, and the judgment of the Magistrate changed to one for the plaintiff for £2 10s., as prayed, with costs in this Court and the Court below.

GUNKEL V. TURNER.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of the district of Port St. John's. The plaintiff sued on two contracts for the delivery of certain tobacco, and claimed delivery of 5,000 lb. of tobacco, or £64 1s. 9d., as loss sustained. Judgment was for the plaintiff for £64 1s. 9d., but if the defendant delivered the amount of 5,127 lb. of tobacco to plaintiff within thirty-one days from date, this delivery would be held to satisfy the judgment.

Mr. Howes was for the appellant, and Mr. Benjamin was for the respondent.

Mr. Howes said the contention of the appellant was that there was no agreement of intention between the two parties. There was no proof that the defendant knew of such an agreement as plaintiff suggested was made. He contended that the defendant imagined that the contract he was entering into was quite a different thing from the contract upon which the plaintiff claimed. The corroboration of the plaintiff's version mentioned by the Magistrate was hardly corroboration at all. The plaintiff's evidence, it was said, was supported by the entry in his firm's diary, but it was in evidence that it was plaintiff's custom to have witnesses to an agreement of this sort.

Hopley, J.: I do not think it necessary to hear Mr. Benjamin for the respondent. The appeal is purely on a matter of fact. The plaintiff, in the Court below, alleged certain facts on certain two transactions in tobacco with the defendant, who is a Kafir trader or a trader among the Kafirs, and the defendant denied these transactions, and tried to put a different construction on the dealings between himself and the plaintiff. It is sufficient for me to say, in spite of the able argument of Mr. Howes in this matter, that I see no reason to disagree with the Magistrate's finding on fact. He had the witnesses before him, and heard their explanation. He also had the original books, from which these accounts are taken, and the result was that he had a very much better power of discerning as to the merits of the evidence than we have in this Court. That being so, he gave judgment for the damages for breach of contract. He also gave the defendant the opportunity, if he so chose, to fulfil his contract by delivering the tobacco. There is nothing to show that the defendant is so ignorant or so little acquainted with the English language to misunderstand the contract. However, the Magistrate had a better opportunity of forming an opinion on this point than this Court, because the defendant was actually before him, and the Magistrate would know if he was the sort of man likely to misunderstand the contract. The Magistrate decided that the contract was as alleged by the plaintiff, and I see no reason to interfere with his judgment. The appeal will be dismissed, with costs.

In re LOCKED OUT CIGARETTE WORKERS' COMPANY.

Dr. Greer moved, as a matter of urgency, for leave to the provisional liquidator in the estate of the S.A. General Workers' Union Locked-Out Cigarette Workers' Co-operative Society, Limited, to sell certain cigarette-making machinery in the estate. The machinery was stored in the premises of the South African Newspaper Company, and further rent was accruing.

Hopley, J., said this would practically mean the winding up of the company by a provisional liquidator.

Dr. Greer: We might minimise the expense by storing the machinery in a place at a lower rent.

[Hopley, J.: I do not think there is anything to prevent him doing that if the rent is paid. There will be no order.]

SUPREME COURT

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1907.
Mar. 12th.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for the admission of Robert M. Exham as an advocate.

Application granted, oath to be taken before the Registrar of the Eastern Districts Court.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Marthinus J. Hattingh, as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of Tarkastad.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Stephanus Sebastian Walters as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the admission of Pieter Eduard Roux as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

MOLTENO V. HACKENBERG.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, with interest from July 1, 1905, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

REID AND NEPHEW V. LEATBERMAN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £6 10s. 6d., with interest and costs.

Hopley, J., said that provisional sentence would be granted, but only Magistrate's Court costs would be allowed. Both parties lived in Cape Town, and the amount was small.

Defendant admitted the debt, and said that he had not been able to meet it, because he was out of work.

Mr. Jones then applied for a final judgment against defendant in view of his admission.

Final judgment granted.

LEIBBRANDT V. TASSIEM.

Mr. Marais moved for provisional sentence for £18 10s., balance of interest due on a mortgage bond, less £2 10s. paid.

Order granted.

TRUTER V. BARENDSE.

Mr. Close moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £40, with interest at 10 per cent., from January 1, 1903, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable; counsel also applied for provisional sentence for overdue interest on a mortgage bond for £25.

Order granted.

HEINAMAN V. BADARDIEN.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on three mortgage bonds for £600, £150, and £100 respectively, with interest, less £112 8s. 11d., paid on account; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated, to be declared executable.

Order granted.

MOWBRAY MUNICIPALITY V. AUSTIN.

Mr. Swift moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon certain unsatisfied judgments of the Resident Magistrate's Court, Wynberg, for £10 10s. and £11 5s., and costs, amounting to £3 11s. 5d.

Defendant did not appear.

Order granted.

MALING V. MULLER.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

MALING V. DOMANOWITZ.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

FLEMING V. CORBETT.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £225, with interest from the 1st January, 1906, and £1 2s. insurance premiums, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable. Defendant was sued by edictal citation, substituted service having been effected.

Order granted.

ENSLIN V. SWANEPOEL.

Mr. Toms moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £50, with interest from the 1st January, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable. Defendant was sued by edictal citation.

On its appearing doubtful whether a copy of the document sued on had been served upon defendant, the matter was ordered to stand over until the 19th inst. for further information.

STEYN V. VICTOR.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £275, with interest from the 1st July, 1905, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE YOUNG V. AUSTIN.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, with interest from the 1st July, 1904, and for £3 0s. 6d., insurance premiums, bond due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

FRASER AND SONS V. COHEN.

Mr. Swift moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

GOLDSMITH V. IRWIN AND LEVIN.

Mr. Alexander moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment for £36 11s. 7d. (costs). Counsel (in answer to the Court) said that the matter arose out of a case of spoliation of certain horse and wagon.

Levin repudiated any liability.

Hopley, J., said that he could not enter into that question at this date.

Irwin said that he did not understand English, and could only speak Yiddish.

It appeared that an interpreter was not available, and the matter was ordered to stand over for a week, his lordship advising the defendants to try to come to terms with the plaintiff in the meantime.

REVIEW.

REX V. MARTIN.

Act 7 of 1905, Sec. 2—Fine for deterioration of stolen stock.

Hopley, J., said that this case, which was for theft of a mare, came from the Resident Magistrate of Prieska. The accused was clearly found guilty of the theft of the mare, and the Magistrate sentenced him to 12 months' hard labour and to pay a fine of 10s., or in default one day's imprisonment. Now, he must have acted in that matter under the Act 7 of 1905, but that only said that if the property were lost or deteriorated to more than half its value the Magistrate may enforce a fine and further imprisonment beyond the ordinary jurisdiction of the Stock Thefts Act. However, the mare was recovered, and apparently without any deterioration. While the sentence of 12 months' hard labour must stand, that portion of the sentence which imposed a fine and in default one day's imprisonment, must be struck out.

SUPREME COURT

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

SCARBROW V. ADAMS. { 1907.
 { Mar. 13th.

Mr. Roux moved, as a matter of urgency for an interdict attaching certain money in the hands of defendant or her agents, Fagan and Markotter. Petitioner said he was a medical practitioner, of Somerset West Strand, and that defendant owed him £400 upon a second mortgage bond. On the 26th February last he obtained judgment against her, and a writ of execution was issued against the defendant's movable and immovable property. The movables had been disposed of by defendant to defeat plaintiff's claim, and the proceeds were in the hands of defendant or her agents. There was a piece of land against which a first mortgage bond was registered, and it was expected that there would be a considerable shortfall if the land were sold. Mr. Roux (in answer to the Court) said that petitioner's bond contained the general clause.

Order granted, authorising the Sheriff to attach the said moneys in the hands of the defendant or her agents, Fagan and Markotter, and rule nisi to issue calling upon defendant to show cause why such moneys should not be applied in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, rule returnable on the 26th inst.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

WALKER V. BRUNT, INDIVIDUALLY AND AS TRUSTEE OF INSOLVENT ESTATE WALKER.

Mr. Alexander moved, under Rule 350a, for leave to sign judgment against plaintiff (Brunt) for not proceeding with his action within the time fixed by Rules of Court, and for removal of a certain interdict.

Dr. Greer appeared for respondent, and said that he opposed the portion of the notice of motion asking for the discharge of the interdict in reference to certain portion of the money, viz., £32 10s.

Mr. Alexander said that respondent had consented to withdraw the summons and pay taxed costs.

Affidavits having been read and counsel heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J.: In this case Mr. Brunt was the owner of a house which he sold to one Hazell, who immediately resold it to Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Walker passing a bond directly to Mr. Brunt for the sum of £3,000, and, I suppose, paying some cash. At the time the place was taken over by the Walkers there were some articles which were of a debatable nature, as to whether they were fixtures or not, or as to whether they passed with the house to the buyer, and eventually a compromise was arrived at in respect of these, and a sum of £32 10s. was agreed upon as being the value at which they should be taken over, and it would appear, and the correspondence shows that Mr. Walker had rendered himself liable for the sum of £32 10s. for these alleged fixtures. Subsequently the Walkers lived in that house, there being furniture in the house, and they seem to have got into difficulties, so that at a certain stage they advertised the furniture for sale. Thereupon Mr. Brunt came in his individual capacity and got from the Court a rule interdicting the auctioneer, who was allowed to go on with the sale, from parting with the proceeds of the furniture he was selling, and also at that same time he asked that the estate of Mrs. Walker be provisionally sequestrated. He got his order; Mrs. Walker's estate was sequestrated, and the money was interdicted in the hands of the auctioneer. Now, it is clearly proved that the Court, in giving such order, looked upon this furniture as being, as alleged in the petition, the property presumably of Mrs. Walker, who was then insolvent, and if there were any doubt upon that point that doubt would be resolved by the fact that he obtained an order pending the appointment of a trustee, clearly showing that it would be in the mind of the Court that it was the property of Mrs. Walker that was interdicted. Well, the insolvency proceeded, and Mr. Brunt was elected sole trustee. He, apparently, is also the largest, if not the sole, creditor. He thereupon went to the auctioneer, and, showing the order of the Court, got the auctioneer to hand over to him the proceeds of this sale, £83 or £84. That I do not think he had any right to do. He certainly was the trustee, but the order of the Court did not say that upon the appointment of the trustee the auctioneer is to forthwith hand over to him this money, more especially as it afterwards became evident there was really another claim to the proceeds of this sale, viz., that of Mr. Walker himself, who is married to insolvent out of community of property. He claimed that certain of this property which the auctioneer was selling was his own, and he produces proof which the respondent apparently is not in a position to controvert. So matters stood for a time. Eventually, on the 30th October, some time after the sale of this furniture had taken place, and the property had been interdicted, Mr. Walker was compelled to come to this Court, and the Court then ordered that the rule be extended for a fortnight, and then be set aside, and the money handed by the auctioneer to the applicant (Mr. Walker), unless the respondent previously bring an action to establish his right to the said money, in which case the rule should stand. It was further ordered that, if the applicant were to give security to the satisfaction of the Registrar, the payment of the money might be made forthwith to him. The Court therefore still thought the money was in the hands of the auctioneer. Well, the respondent allowed the whole of the November term to go past, and at the very end of the fortnight he issued a summons, and since then he has done nothing at all. Another term has elapsed, and it seems Mr. Walker now comes and asks to sign judgment against the respondent. I do not think Mr. Brunt can escape the consequences of such a motion as this at the last moment by withdrawing the summons and offering to pay costs. I do not want to settle this finally, but it seems to me to withdraw the summons at such a stage is a proceeding which the Court will take no notice of. The only thing that complicates it is that to-day it is opposed on the ground that amongst the moneys so interdicted was alleged to be a sum of £32 10s., the proceeds of articles which were looked upon as fixtures. On that there is a dispute. Walker denies that he has sold any of those articles. I think, if the facts as to those articles had been before the Court when the interdict was applied for, no order would have been made interdicting the proceeds of sale of such articles which were in dispute between the parties. Mr. Brunt, if he can establish his right, may bring an action against Mr. Walker. At present I see no reason for restraining any portion of these articles. The order will be that judgment be signed against plaintiff as prayed, and that respondent pay over to applicant the moneys obtained by him from the auctioneer Phillips forthwith, and that respondent pay the costs of this and previous applications.

OUUDTSHOORN MUNICIPALITY V.
MOOICHANG.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea, for £10 10s. 3d., with interest and costs, being for rates. Defendant was sued by edictal citation. Counsel also applied for certain moneys in the hands of the Master, which had been attached, to be declared executable.

Order granted as prayed, moneys in the hands of the Master declared executable.

LEON V. STEYN.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for judgment, under Rule 319, in default of plea, for payment of £40, money lent, with interest and costs. Service had been made upon defendant's attorneys. Order granted.

GOURLAY V. JONES.

Mr. Gutsche moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £290, upon certain promissory note, with interest, and for £69 19s. 3d., goods sold and delivered. Order granted.

DEMPERS AND VAN RYNEVELD V.
GROENEWALD.

Mr. Pohl moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £9 6s., amount disbursed for defendant. Order granted.

GUTHRIE AND THERON V. TALJAARD.

Mr. Gardiner moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £108 17s. 11d., goods sold and delivered, with interest and commission and £32 8s., moneys advanced and disbursed, etc.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan (for defendant) applied for leave to purge default and enter appearance, or, alternatively, for a postponement of the case until fuller affidavits could be laid before the Court. Plaintiffs had already obtained provisional sentence for £40 on a promissory note.

The matter was ordered to stand over until the 26th inst., defendant to pay wasted costs.

KIMBERLEY WATERWORKS CO. LTD. V.
STEWART.

Mr. Inchbold moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £9,097 19s. 3d., being the amount of certain defalcations by defendant of moneys of the plaintiff company. Counsel put in a confession by defendant and the record of the High Court of Griqualand.

[Hopley, J.: I suppose defendant is in prison.]

Mr. Inchbold: Yes. He was sentenced to two years' hard labour.

Order granted.

REHABILITATIONS. { 1907.
{ Mar. 13th.

Mr. Toms applied for the rehabilitation of Christian Frederick Zietsman.

Granted.

Mr. Marais applied for the discharge from insolvency of David Johannes Welgemoed.

Granted.

Mr. De Waal applied for the rehabilitation of Hendrik C. Rensburg.

Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

ESTATE LLOYD V. JACOBS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for judgment in terms of consent paper. The action related to the proceeds of a policy of insurance effected on the life of deceased for £1,000. By the terms of settlement a sum of £700 was to be paid to the plaintiff, and £300 to the defendant, each party to pay his or her own costs.

Judgment entered in terms of consent.

Ex parte SPIES.

Mr. Swift moved for a certain rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

In re PURE MILK SUPPLY CO. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Roux presented the second report of the liquidator, and applied for the usual order as to lying for inspection and publication.

Usual order granted, publication in the "East London Dispatch."

HOBEN V. CAPE TOWN STEVEDORING CO., LTD.

Mr. Swift moved for an order on respondents to return a certain steam launch and for an interdict.

Mr. Gardiner was for respondents.

An action had been heard before the Chief Justice, in which Hoben sued the respondent company for £100, being part purchase price of certain launch. (17 C.T.R., 154.)

Mr. Swift said that respondents had abandoned the yacht at the docks, and, while it was so abandoned, the brass-work had been removed by thieves. Applicant claimed that he was entitled to the return of the launch by respondents with the brass work intact.

Mr. Gardiner: The applicant failed in his claim in convention, and respondents succeeded in their claim in re-convention to the extent of £28, and were awarded costs. Applicant should restore the brass work and bring an action to recover the cost, if need be, against respondents.

Mr. Swift said that the Chief Justice, in an obiter dictum, stated that the launch must be delivered by the company in the condition in which it was handed over at the time of the sale. That, however, did not form part of the written order.

Mr. Gardiner said that he had no recollection of the Chief Justice having made the remark quoted by his learned friend. Respondents had got their judgment, and now wanted to take execution.

The matter was eventually ordered to stand over till to-morrow.

Postea (March 14th).

The affidavit of the applicant set out that for the last six or seven months the launch was left by the respondents uncared for in the open, and practically everything movable had been stolen out of her. The engine and machinery were badly rusted, and it would require something like £200 to put her in the same order and condition in which he handed her to the respondent company. The boiler had been removed, and the stay had not been replaced. He declined to accept the launch in such a state, but the respondents declined to hand it back in accordance with the judgment. He was prepared to pay the respondents £38, and the taxed costs, when the launch was handed back in the same condition.

The answering affidavit of Joseph Watson, one of the directors of the respondent company, denied that the respondents were ordered to return the launch in the same order and condition as at the time of the sale. The Court ordered the respondent to replace the boiler in the launch as far as the materials were concerned. He admitted that some brass fittings had been stolen, and that she had been lying in the open, and that there was some water in the hull, but that was the fault of the applicant in not having taken steps to remove the water, as the launch was lying there at his risk.

Mr. Cloete said the launch was sold to the company on the 7th March, 1906, with a guarantee that the launch was in good working order and condition. For six months the company had the launch running, and at the end of that time an examination was made by having the boiler taken out. Having paid £38 as one instalment, they were sued in an action for £100 as being the next instalment of the contract. That was defended on the ground that the goods were not up to warranty, and they were not bound to carry out the contract. They claimed in reconvention to have the contract rescinded and tendered back the launch. His Lordship the Chief Justice gave judgment for the defendant in convention, and consequently for him as plaintiff, in reconvention for the rescission of the contract, and for the return to him of the £38, with costs, on his tendering back the launch. The point in the action was as to the boiler apart from the machinery. His Lordship held that this boiler was not in good order and condition in terms of the guarantee otherwise there was no fault to be found with the launch at all. As counsel understood the order of the Court, His Lordship said the tender on the 24th August was no tender, because the boiler had to be put in the launch, and judgment was for the defendant in convention, for plaintiff in reconvention for a rescission, and for return of £38, with costs, the defendant to return the launch with the boiler in it, and as received. They admitted that the written order did not contain anything that was directed at the time. Mr. Watson, for instance, in his affidavit said the boiler had since been connected as far as materials would allow, and that did not appear in the order.

Mr. Gardiner said he did not remember the Court ordering the launch to be restored in the state in which it was at the time of the sale. Counsel's note was to the effect that the defendant was ordered to return the launch and boiler with the boiler inside, so far as materials would allow, the defendant to replace the stolen parts, but counsel's attorney did not recollect anything about the stolen parts.

Mr. Close said technically the plaintiff might claim the whole of the profits made during the running, according to Voet (21.1.4), where the various things a purchaser must do were discussed.

[Hopley, J., said it seemed to him a good marine surveyor would have been the man who could have made an equitable allowance. He often wondered why people like these brought such matters before the Court.]

Mr. Gardiner said there had been negotiations, but nothing had resulted. The resident engineer of the Union Castle Co. had said the boiler was dangerous to life, and it was not a boiler that would be passed by the Harbour Board. There was evidence that it was worth nothing but as scrap iron.

Hopley, J., suggested that the parties should come to terms, and after the adjournment.

Mr. Close announced an arrangement as follows: That the applicant, Mr. Hoben, accept the launch, boiler, and machinery in their present state, the applicant to keep the £38, which he was ordered to repay, and each party to pay its own costs in the action and the motion.

An order accordingly was made.

PENHALONGA PROPRIETARY MINES, LTD.
AND ANOTHER V. STRICKLAND AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an extension of time within which to prosecute certain appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Southern Rhodesia in the next ensuing term of the Supreme Court. There had been some delay in the printing of the record.

Leave granted to prosecute appeal during the next ensuing term.

Ex parte STONE.

Mr. Swift moved to make absolute certain rule nisi authorising amendment of certain transfer deed.

Rule absolute.

Ex parte GABRIEL.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for a certain rule to be made absolute authorising petition to sue her husband in forma pauperis for divorce.

Rule absolute, Mr. Stent to act as attorney, and Mr. D. Buchanan as counsel to the applicant.

Ex parte LEVING.

Dr. Greer moved on behalf of the petitioner for leave to sue his wife by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. Petitioner said he came to this country from Australia about six years ago; he carried on business near Port Nolloth, and his wife, although repeatedly requested so to do, refused to join him.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted, with leave to serve citation interdict and notice of trial together, returnable on the 13th June.

Ex parte SNOOKE.

Cricket team—Articled clerk—

Leave of absence.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave of absence to petitioner from certain articles of clerkship for a period of six months, in connection with the English tour of the South African cricket team, of which Mr. Snooke is a member. Petitioner is articled to a firm of attorneys in Cape Town, and has his principals' consent.

Leave granted to applicant as prayed, on the understanding that service be given at the end of the articles in lieu of the period of absence allowed.

STEENKAMP V. STEENKAMP.

Mr. Roux moved, as a matter of urgency, on behalf of the plaintiff, who lives in the division of Calvinia, for an interdict restraining defendant from parting with any of the assets of the joint estate, and directing an inventory to be made, pending an action to be brought by petitioner for divorce and division of the joint estate.

The Court granted a rule nisi, to operate as an interim interdict, calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not be restrained from parting with any portion of the joint estate of himself and petitioner, pending decision of the action instituted by petitioner, and why Nicolaas S. Louw should not be appointed receiver of the said estate, pending such action, and the said Louw authorised to make immediate inventory of the joint estate, and why respondent should not pay costs, rule returnable on the 2nd April, with leave to petitioner to telegraph the order.

GRAY V. R.M.'S CLERK, CAPE, AND ANOTHER.

Magistrate's Court—Appeal from—Rule 33, Schedule B. to Act 20 of 1856.

An appeal from the decision of an R.M. Court must be noted on the next Court day, that is on the Tuesday or the Friday following the day on which the judgment is given.

This was an application upon notice to (1) the Resident Magistrate's Clerk of the Cape, and (2) the Green and Sea Point Bowling Club for an order compelling the first-named respondent to accept notice of intention to appeal from a judgment delivered on the 16th January by Mr. Lotter, A.R.M., in a suit in which the applicant was plaintiff, and the second named respondents were defendants, which notice was on the 19th January tendered to him, and refused on the ground that it did not comply with Rule 33, Schedule B, of Act 20, 1856, and why the second-named respondents, in case they opposed, should not be ordered to pay costs.

Mr. Gardiner was for applicant; Mr. Howel Jones was for the first-named respondent. The second-named respondents did not appear.

Rule 33, Schedule B, of the Resident Magistrates' Court Act of 1856, says that an appeal from a judgment of the Magistrate must be noted not later than the next Court day. The Resident Magistrate's Court in the Cape has two proclaimed days in the week, viz., Tuesdays and Fridays. Judgment was given in the present case on a Wednesday, and applicant claimed that by the practice of the Court he was entitled to note an appeal with the Magistrate's Clerk not later than the following Tuesday. Mr. De Smidt, attorney, and Mr. W. B. Shaw, law agent, said that this had been the practice for some years. The Magistrate's Clerk said that the appeal should have been noted on the following Friday, which was the next Court day after that on which judgment had been given. An affidavit to the effect that this had been the practice had been sworn by Mr. Brittain, another practitioner.

Mr. Gardiner (in answer to the Court) said that he did not press for costs against the R.M.'s Clerk. What his client desired was leave to appeal. He submitted that the Court had power to grant leave, on the authority of Africa v. Rhenish Mission Society (21 S.C. Reports, 650). The Magistrate's Clerk had bona fide erred in refusing to accept notice. Two days had been proclaimed in 1874 as Court days in the district of the Cape, viz., Tuesdays and Fridays. Government Notice No. 546, 1895, said that Resident Magistrates should hold a Court upon such days as had been announced, and should, if occasion required, hold their Courts daily. That notice, counsel submitted, did not affect the question of what were the days proclaimed. The applicant had no wish to secure an interpretation of the rule; what he wanted was leave to appeal.

Mr. Jones said that the authorities contended that the rule must be read as it stood, taking Tuesdays and Fridays as Court days. The appeal should, they said, have been noted on the Friday.

Hopely, J.: In this case there is apparently a desire on the part of the present appellant to appeal against a judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court, given on the 16th January. As there seems to have been a bona fide mistake either on the part of the practitioner, who was acting for the applicant, or on the part of the clerk to the Resident Magistrate, it is right that there should be relief to that extent for the applicant, and that he should not, on account of that bona fide mistake, be precluded from the right which every man has if he is dissatisfied with a judgment of the Lower Court. Therefore, especially as the other party does not oppose, leave will be given to note an appeal and to prosecute it in the ordinary course. A further question, however, arises as to whether the Magistrate's clerk was at all in the wrong in refusing to take the notice which was tendered to him on the 19th January. Now it appears that since 1874 there are two days in the week that have been set aside as regular Court days for the purpose of the construction of Rule 33, Schedule B, of the Magistrate's Court Act, viz., Tuesdays and Fridays, and it is said, and not contradicted that those are the only days for which summonses in the Court in civil matters can be made returnable. The rule says that "any party . . . in any civil case . . . if he intend to appeal therefrom to any superior Court, shall, on the next Court day, make known his intention to the clerk of the said Court, who shall note his appeal, with the date thereof, in the proper column of the record-book." In the present matter, the case in the Court below was first of all called on the 14th January, it was part heard on that day, and it was continued on Wednesday, the 16th January, when judgment was given. Then came Thursday and Friday, the 17th and 18th, and only on Saturday, the 19th, was the noting of an appeal tendered to the Resident Magistrate's clerk. The Magistrate's clerk thereupon says that he must abide by the reading of the rule, and that applicant should have come on the next Court day, which he understood to be the Friday. It is said that there is a practice in the Court, or has been, that all cases decided between Tuesday and Friday should be taken as if they had been decided on the Friday. Two practitioners of considerable experience say that that is their experience, but, on the other hand, a practitioner, who has been practising longer in that Court, and with a very large experience of that Court—Mr. Brittain—comes and says he knows of no such practice. He, therefore, reads the rule in the same way as the Magistrate's clerk does. It seems to me that, there being this dispute, the Court must take the rule as it stands, and read it accordingly. I cannot, therefore, say that the Magistrate's clerk was wrong; I think he was right. While the applicant has leave to appeal, and the Court will direct the Magistrate's clerk to accept notice of appeal, I think the application for costs against the clerk should be refused, and that the applicant should be ordered to pay the clerk's costs in coming here. I would just say that I do not think the practice which Mr. De Smidt and Mr. Shaw contend was in their minds as the correct practice is by any manner of means a bad one or an inconvenient one. I think, on the other hand, it would probably be very convenient to have some such practice established if it were thoroughly understood by everybody, and if the Magistrates were to let it be known to practitioners that that was the reading to all concerned. But then the grievance is a very small one, because if they deposit £1 17s. 6d., that is all that is required when noting an appeal, and that amount can always be got back if within a fortnight they abandon their appeal. On the present application, the applicant must pay costs of the respondent who has appeared, and the Resident Magistrate's clerk will be authorised to note an appeal, so that the appeal may go on.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ESTATE VAN DER 1907.
BYL. } Mar. 14th.

Mr. Gutsche moved for an order authorising the Sheriff to attach the respondent's undivided portion of certain land, and sell same, to meet the taxed bill of costs, surveyor's expenses, etc., in connection with partition. The amount of the respondent's share of expenses was £294 10s. There were eight respondents in default. The petitioner had been unable to find movables on which to satisfy the claim.

Hopley, J.: In the peculiar circumstances of this case, which has often been before the Court, it was wise, perhaps, to come to the Court. All the same, I think you might have got the writ from the Registrar. The Court will authorise a writ to be issued against the immovable property for the satisfaction of these costs.

Ex parte BERNING.

Mr. Roux moved, on the petition of Frederick Simon Berning, attorney, Kokstad, for leave to sue one Tonsi Kuswaye, a blacksmith, by edictal citation on a mortgage bond granted by petitioner on security of quitrent ground at Kokstad. Petitioner said that respondent had paid no interest since June 30, 1905, and that he left the Colony a few years ago, and had lately been residing in Alfred County, Natal. Counsel also applied for the property to be attached ad fundandum jurisdictionem.

Leave to sue by edict granted and property attached, personal service, failing which, one publication in the "Kokstad Advertiser," citation returnable on the 2nd May.

AMALINDA V.M. BOARD V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the appointment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of East London as commissioner, to take the evidence of such witnesses as may be called by the respective parties.

Mr. Howel Jones appeared for the Government to consent.

Ordered that a commission de bene esse to examine all necessary witnesses who may be called by the respective parties do issue, and that the A.R.M. of East London be commissioner, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte PIENAAR.

Mr. De Waal moved for leave to petitioner, managing director of the firm of J. P. J. Pienaar and Co., Ltd., of Loxton, for leave to sue one Mason Murray Rose by edictal citation for debt, and for the attachment of a certain erf in Loxton ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Respondent was believed to be in German South-west Africa.

Leave to sue by edict granted, and property attached ad fundandam jurisdictionem, personal service, failing which, one publication in the "Windhoek Nachrichten," citation returnable on the 14th May.

MAREE V. MAKEE.

Mr. Roux moved for the removal of this case for trial at the ensuing Circuit Court at Aliwal North. Notice was given to respondent in the citation that an application would be made for removal of the trial.

Case removed accordingly.

Ex parte VINK.

Mr. Alexander moved for an order authorising the executors in the estate Vink to pass transfer of certain farm property at Koeberg, in the Cape Division, to the petitioner. Counsel said that the other parties interested under the will had entered into a deed of renunciation. Petitioner was the grandson of the testator. One of the executors consented to the application, but there was no statement by the other executor.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte KOTZE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on the petition of David Jacobus du Plessis, as executor in the estate Kotze, for leave to mortgage certain property at Pearston, in order to pay the costs of an action brought by the estate against one Van As. The matter had previously been before the Court, and the Chief Justice had ordered the attorney and client bill of costs to be taxed, an amount of about £11 having been taxed off. The costs and disbursements amounted to £680 3s. 9d. After the action, Van As became insolvent, and a very small sum had been received from his estate. Counsel read a report by the Master, who said that as father of the legatee, petitioner had sufficient ground for the action, but he did not satisfy himself that Van As was in a position to pay costs.

Hopley, J., said that the executor seemed to have acted bona fide throughout. The costs seemed to be heavy, and the remit was extremely unsatisfactory, but there appeared to be no alternative but to allow the property to be mortgaged.

Mr. Jones applied for leave to mortgage the property for costs of the action and of the present application.

Leave granted to mortgage the properties mentioned for the amount of the costs in the action against Van As as taxed, and taxed costs of this application.

Ex parte PUXTY.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order for the release of the petitioner from arrest pending payment of £3 a month. Petitioner had formerly been associated with one Jacob Myers in pushing a consumption cure called "Acrum." Myers was out of the country. Petitioner had been touring the country for some months past with a bioscope. A decree of civil imprisonment had been obtained against him by one L. C. Streeter, of Worcester, without his (petitioner's) knowledge. He was arrested on the 11th inst. at Mossel Bay and lodged in gaol.

Hopley, J.: It is impossible for me to vary the order of the Court on an ex parte motion where there are other parties interested who might very well wish to oppose such a change in the order. I cannot, therefore, make an order at present. I can only advise you to give the opposition party due notice, so that they may be properly before the Court.

Ex parte VAN WYK.

Mr. Burton moved for a certain rule to be made absolute authorising the sale and transfer by the petitioner to his three sons of half-share in a certain farm for £500, authorising the minor children to mortgage the said property, and appointing one Mr. Louw as guardian. Counsel said that there was no opposition by the children of Hendrik C. van Wyk, to whom notice of the rule had been given.

Rule absolute.

Ex parte STRAUSS.

Mr. Roux moved, as a matter of urgency, for an order authorising registration of transfer of certain property in the division of Calvinia belonging to the estate of Catherina Wilhelmina A. Strauss, bought at public auction by petitioner (who is executor testamentary) and another.

Order granted as prayed.

JAGGER V. WEINBERG AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Burton moved as a matter of urgency for an order restraining Joe Weinberg and Simon Weinberg, of Prieska, from dealing with certain articles which they had obtained by undue preference from an insolvent estate.

A rule nisi was granted to act as an interim interdict, calling on the respondents to show cause why they should not be restrained from parting with the property pending an action to be brought by the trustee, and why they should not pay the costs, the rule to be set aside on respondents giving sufficient security, rule returnable on April 2.

Postea (March 21st).

It appeared that the parties had not arrived at an agreement. The first-named petitioners are creditors to defendant for about £76, and the second-named petitioners have a claim against him for about £60. Defendant some time ago assigned his estate to the Board of Executors in Cape Town, and petitioners were alleged to have been parties to the deed. They alleged, however, since the said assignment, certain other creditors, one of whom was not a party to the deed, had been paid in full, and that writs of execution had been taken out against defendant. The defendant replied that the payments had been made, not by himself, but by third parties.

Laurence, J., informed Mr. Benjamin that he was of the same impression as he was on Tuesday, that this was a case in which final sequestration should be granted.

Mr. Benjamin said that he had been instructed by his attorneys to lay the facts of the case before the Court.

[Laurence, J.: I suppose I am bound to hear you, but I certainly think that the case is one in which the provisional order should be made final.]

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the petitioners had an ulterior object in view in the proceedings, viz., to upset the deed of assignment. If the estate were to be administered under the provisions of the Insolvent Ordinance, as provided in the deed of assignment, all the movables which had been assigned to the assignee would be distributed amongst the creditors in accordance with the provisions of the Ordinance, and there could be no advantage in coming to the Court and asking that the estate should be wound up under the Insolvent Ordinance. Counsel submitted that the petitioners wanted the assignment set aside, because there was a possibility that the immovable property could be realised to their advantage. This immovable property was not included in the assignment, and was bonded to the Board of Executors. In this case a bargain had been made between the debtor on the one hand and the creditors on the other. By that they must abide. There was no express condition that the creditors only signed subject to all the creditors signing. The fact that certain creditors had not signed was no ground for setting aside the deed. Counsel submitted that there could be no bona fide reason for the present application.

Without calling upon Mr. Burton,

The Court ordered the final adjudication of the defendant's estate.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice LAURENCE.]

ADMISSIONS.

{ 1907.
{ Mar. 19th.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Michael Muller Brink as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of Ladismith.

Mr. Inchbold moved for the admission of Philip Jacobus Fouché as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of Barkly East.

Mr. Toms moved for the admission of Gilbert Cronwright Christie as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

SMUTS AND KOCH AND ANOTHER V. SMITH.

Mr. Burton moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Mr. Benjamin appeared for defendant, a farmer in the Malmesbury Division. Defendant, in an affidavit, said that it was not for the benefit of his creditors that his estate should be sequestrated. He had assigned his estate to the Board of Executors, Cape Town, with the exception of a fourth share in certain farm, which was mortgaged. The creditors had agreed to the deed of assignment, and had already acted under it, having advertised a sale of his property. Deponent said that there was a debt due to a firm of creditors, who had not signed the deed. This had been paid by his brother, and the indebtedness had been extinguished.

Mr. Burton read a replying affidavit by A. C. Koch, one of the petitioners, who said that since his firm had signed the deed of assignment certain writs of attachment had been issued against the movables of the estate of Smith. He was informed that the debts due to two creditors had been paid in full since the deed of assignment. On learning this, deponent's firm withdrew from the deed.

Mr. Benjamin said that this was not a bona fide application. Two debts owing by defendant, it was true, had been paid off, but by a third party. It would be more to the advantage of the creditors that the estate should be administered under the hands of a well-known gentleman like Mr. Roos, who under the deed of assignment was appointed to administer in accordance with the terms of Ordinance 6, 1843.

Laurence, J., threw out a suggestion that it would be in the interests of all concerned that the estate should be sequestrated and a trustee appointed. He ordered the matter to stand over, and urged the parties to try to come to an arrangement in the meantime.

HANAU V. BUCHANAN.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. Counsel read an affidavit by Isidor Hanau, of Wynberg, the holder of a bond for £1,600, money lent and advanced to respondent, who formerly carried on business in Cape Town as a bookseller and stationer. In 1903 Buchanan became involved financially, and his estate was assigned in November, 1905. About £229 was available for distribution, and this amount was awarded to petitioner as preferent creditor under the bond. A sum of £1,050 was still due to petitioner, in addition to which there were concurrent creditors. The deponent also referred to an interest which respondent had held in a mining venture at Millwood, Knysna.

Mr. Moltano (for defendant) read an affidavit, in which he said that he was at present residing in Johannesburg. He claimed that he was released under the deed of assignment, which had been acted upon by petitioner, and pointed out that an application had previously been made in the Court for the sequestration of his estate, the provisional order being discharged in January, 1904. He also stated that the mining venture at Knysna was being liquidated. Counsel also read an affidavit by B. G. Heydenrych, who said that, after the payment of his interest in the mining venture at Knysna there would be no balance available for other creditors. He was a creditor to the extent of £2,400. It would not facilitate the liquidation if defendant's estate were sequestrated. Messrs. Syfret, Godlonton and Low had called for tenders for the purchase of the property and business at Millwood.

Mr. Searle read an answering affidavit by petitioner, who said that Heydenrych was not a party to the assignment, and he had refused to be a party. It was through Heydenrych's action that cash in hand was being wasted and the liquidation of the property of the Preston Buchanan Gold Mining and Development Syndicate was delayed. It would be to the benefit of the creditors that the defendant's estate should be sequestrated. Counsel added that the object of the present application was to bring the whole matter to a head. Heydenrych and Martin claimed a preference over the mining venture at Knysna, and said that the creditors of Buchanan, the bookseller, had no claim against Buchanan, the miner. Sooner or later there must be an action to determine the rights of parties.

Laurence, J., suggested that the proceedings should be postponed until the tenders had been dealt with.

Mr. Searle said that the tenders received had been so unsatisfactory that it was not likely that anything would be gained by a postponement.

Mr. Moltano submitted that under the assignment the defendant was entirely released. Plaintiff was bound by the assignment. It was not alleged that defendant had not in every possible way carried it out. It would not be to the benefit of the creditors in any shape or form to place defendant's estate under the insolvency law. The respective rights of plaintiff and Heydenrych and Martin as regards the prospecting and mining venture could very well be determined without incurring the expense of a sequestration. Counsel cited Hosack v. Lippert (3 Juta, 272) and Truster De Vos v. Bournill and Co. (1868, Buchanan, 1).

Laurence, J., said that the amount in question was a very small one, and he suggested that the case should stand over for a week with a view of arriving at a modus vivendi between plaintiff and Heydenrych.

To this counsel commented, and the matter was accordingly ordered to stand over until the 26th inst., His Lordship observing that, as the assets were so small, it would be a misfortune to have a complicated litigation.

GOLDSMITH V. IRWIN AND LEVIN.

Mr. Alexander moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against defendants upon an unsatisfied judgment for £36 11s. 7d., amount of taxed costs incurred in certain spoliation proceedings. The matter was before the Court last week and was ordered to stand over, as Irwin said that he could not speak English and there was no Yiddish interpreter in Court. Mr. Justice Hopley, before whom the application last week was heard, suggested that in the meantime a settlement should be come to. Defendants, however, had made most inadequate offers.

Defendants both said that they were not in a position to make any substantial offer towards the liquidation of the debt. They were cross-examined at considerable length as to their means.

Mr. Alexander said that Levin had money, and could make a reasonable offer, but his objection was principally as to his liability.

Laurence, J., said he was not satisfied with regard to either of the defendants, that they were not able to do something towards meeting the debt which they owed by the judgment of the Court. He would, however, give both the defendants a chance. The Court would order a decree to issue; to be suspended on payment by Levin of 15s. a month and Irwin 5s. a month, first payment to be made on the 1st May; payment to be made at the office of plaintiff's attorney, with leave to plaintiff to move the Court for an increased order when so advised.

MARAIIS V. TRUSTEES, ST. DAVID'S LODGE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,800, and to have the property declared executable.

Order granted.

LUYT V. YOUNG.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £650, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

PHILLIPS V. DOMINGO.

Mr. Lewis moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £750, less £50 paid on account, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. The bond became due through non-payment of interest.

Order granted.

STAHL V. KRUGER.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £250, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Order granted.

SWART V. COFFIN.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £270, and that the property be declared executable.

Order granted.

COTTERELL V. VORSTER.

Mr. Payne moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £80, and that the property be declared executable, with costs.

Order granted.

SAVAGE AND SONS V. JACOBSON.

Mr. Inghbold moved to have the provisional order of sequestration discharged. The plaintiff had come to an arrangement with his creditors.

Order discharged.

ESTATE GUDGEON V. JACOBS.

Mr. Pohl moved for the final adjudication of the respondent's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

HUGO V. JEPPE.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £300.

Order granted.

FLETCHER V. MATTHES.

Mr. Inchbold moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds for £400 and £100, and that the property be declared executable.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

BETTINGTON V. SCOTT AND } 1907.
ANOTHER. } Mar. 19th.

Dr. Greer, for the applicant (defendant in the action) moved for leave to sign judgment against the plaintiffs for not proceeding with their action. Mr. Uppington, for respondent (plaintiff in the action) moved to have the bar removed, and for leave to proceed with the action.

Laurence, J., said he had had the papers on the matter. It was the business of the plaintiffs to guard themselves against the negotiations which were going on.

Dr. Greer: It is simply a question as to what order the Court should make as to costs.

Mr. Uppington suggested the respondents should pay the wasted costs, but as far as this application was concerned the costs should be costs in the cause.

Dr. Greer said the application to sign judgment was made first.

It was ordered that the declaration be filed and served within seven days, plaintiff to proceed with the action, bar removed, wasted costs to be paid by plaintiff, and costs of the application to be costs in the cause.

BARLOW V. LAW.

Mr. Pohl, for applicant (defendant in the action) moved for judgment against the plaintiff for not proceeding with the case.

Order granted.

ADLER V. STAPLES.

Mr. Lewis moved under Rule 329d for judgment for £55, board and lodging supplied to the defendant, less £15 paid on account.

Judgment as prayed.

TENNANT V. A.M.E. CHURCH.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £31 7s. 5d. for professional services rendered and moneys disbursed.

Laurence, J., felt some doubt as to whether the service on the wife of a representative of the Church was sufficient, and ordered the matter to stand over for further information.

WHITE V. STEVENS.

Mr. Pohl moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £127 14s. 6d., materials supplied, work and labour done, with interest a tempore morae, with costs.

Order granted.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Swift moved for the release from insolvency of Johannes Jacobus Kruger, under Section 117 of the Insolvent Ordinance. No creditors had proved on the estate, and no trustee had been appointed.

The matter was ordered to stand over for the production of authorities.

At a later stage Mr. Swift cited In re Burn (1 Juta, 49), and Balenski v. Lategan and Wife (22 Supreme Court, 97).

Laurence, J.: The result is that it seems to reduce insolvency to a farce.

Mr. Swift also quoted Van Zyl's Judicial Practice (p. 680).

Laurence, J.: In view of the decision of the case of Balenski v. Lategan and Another, I do not see that it is open to refuse an order in this case.

Application granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ESTATE BEUKES. } 1907.
} Mar. 19th.

Mr. De Waal moved for an order authorising transfer of certain property at Heidelberg in the division of Swellendam, the executor having died.

Order granted as prayed

Ex parte ESTATE SMIT.

Mr. Pohl moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to register a mortgage bond for £150 on the landed property Namakuasfontein so as to meet estate debts.

Order granted as prayed.

HARCOMBE AND ESTATE HARCOMBE V. COSAY.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order upon the Master to report to the Court a certain offer which he had received for certain property bonded to applicants.

Laurence, J., said that he had read the papers in this case. The property was sold by Harcombe to Cosay for £35,000, and a bond was granted for £25,000. Judgment was taken on the bond, and the property was declared executable, and the only bid was one made by the applicant of £10,000, which the Sheriff declined to report for confirmation.

Mr. Jones said that a deadlock had occurred. The applicant's only remedy was to come to the Court for an order confirming the sale, and authorising the sale to go through, or for a report from the High Sheriff as to whether he thought it probable that any other offer would be made for the property. The property was at present bringing in an income equivalent to 19 per cent. on the bond.

The Master said that the sworn appraiser's valuation was £20,000. Under the 113th Rule of Court, the Sheriff fixed the reserve price at £18,500, and the only bid received at the sale was £10,000. The Sheriff, of course, was not obliged to report unless the reserve price were reached. The bondholder was not without his remedy. He could take over the property at the reserve price, and he would still have a margin of £5,000 on his bond. He did not think the Registrar of Deeds would accept transfer duty on any sum less than the valuation of £20,000.

Mr. Jones (in answer to the Court) said that the applicant sold the property in 1905. The rents received for the year ending 30th September, 1906, were £1,142 14s., but the administration reduced the income to £483 0s. 3d., after payment of rates, insurance, caretaker's charges, and electric light.

The Master said that he did not oppose the application, but merely wished to bring the facts before the Court.

Laurence, J.: I do not think the Court would be justified in directing the Sheriff to move the Court to confirm the sale when the discrepancy is so very considerable between the valuation, the reserve, and the actual bid. I think the applicant ought to approach the Court further. I will take the reserve price of £18,500 fixed by the High Sheriff, and go so far as to deduct from that 15 per cent., viz., £2,775, leaving £15,725. I think the case is one in which, if you increase your offer to £15,725, or within 15 per cent. of the reserve, the Sheriff might fairly move the Court to confirm on that basis. I do not feel justified in making any order on the £10,000 offer. The Court will suggest that the Sheriff take a bid for the amount of his reserve price, less 15 per cent.

Ex parte FRIEDLANDER BROS.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved to attach certain property to found jurisdiction, and for leave to sue the respondent by edictal citation on interest due on a kustings brief.

Leave granted to sue the respondent by edictal citation, and to attach the property ad fundandum jurisdictionem, with one publication in the "Government Gazette."

Ex parte BROOKS.

Mr. Inchbold moved for leave to sue Lewis Levinson by edictal citation for an amount due on a mortgage bond, and to have the property declared executable. The respondent's last address was a P.O. Box address at Springs, Transvaal. Application granted, service to be effected personally if possible, if not, one publication in the "Government Gazette" and a Johannesburg paper, and by registered letter to the respondent.

In re GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS.

Mr. Upington presented the third report of the administration of the estate. Counsel moved that the report should lie for inspection.

Application granted.

Ex parte MCOWAN.

Mr. Swift moved for leave to the petitioner to register a supplementary bond for the benefit of the applicant's son.

Application granted.

Ex parte DE WET.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to the petitioner's mother, who was an alleged lunatic.

Application granted, Mr. De Waal appointed curator ad litem.

Ex parte ESTATE DU PREEZ.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to the minors in respect of the partition of certain property. The name of Louis du Preez was suggested as curator.

The matter was ordered to stand over for further information as to the subdivision of the estate, and as to whether the person proposed to be appointed curator was interested in the estate, and the qualification of the major children to represent the minors.

In re GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS, LTD.

Mr. Searle, K.C., presented the official liquidators' report, and moved that the report should lie for inspection, with publication in South African newspapers and in England.

Application granted.

Ex parte ESTATE MAYBERG.

Mr. Lewis moved for leave to the executrix to sell certain property in the estate, in which certain minors were interested.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte TRUSTEES RHODES RECREATION GROUND, MOWBRAY.

Trust deed—Prohibition: to mortgage.

Although the Court may dispense from a prohibition to mortgage in the case of a will, it cannot do so in the case of a trust-deed.

The trustees' only course is to obtain the sanction of the Legislature.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on the petition of the trustees for leave to raise a mortgage of £3,500 to pay for work already executed, and to erect stands and conveniences, and put the ground in a revenue-producing condition. The petitioners said that they did not anticipate any difficulty in raising the loan. The municipal valuation of the ground was £10,000. There was a clause in the trust deed prohibiting alienation or mortgage of the property. Counsel pointed out that the position had been rendered very difficult by reason of the withdrawal of the inhabitants of Woodstock and the Salt River workmen, who had made no contribution to the recreation ground. Counsel also pointed out that, unless the trustees were allowed to mortgage the ground, the object of the donation could not be served, the money being required in order to make the ground available and suitable for recreation purposes. The parties principally concerned, including debenture holders and the Rhodes Trustees, consented to the application. The petitioners had been authorised by a meeting of the inhabitants of Mowbray, held on the 18th January last, to move the Court for leave to raise this loan.

Laurence, J., raised a question as to whether the Court had power, in face of the prohibition in the trust deed, to authorise the mortgaging of the ground.

Mr. Jones said that the dispensing power had been exercised in the case of wills, but he was not aware of any such case in trust deeds.

Laurence, J., declined to make an order on the application, and said that, as far as he could see, the only course open to the trustees was to go to the Legislature.

Ex parte LUYT.

Mr. Pohl moved on behalf of the agent of Leopold Luyt, of Uitenhage, for an order authorising transfer of certain property.

Order granted as prayed.

In re EXLEY AND CO.

Mr. Searle, K.C., mentioned this matter, which, he said, ought to have appeared on the provisional roll. An application had been set down on the motion roll. It appeared that there was a firm of Exley and Co., carrying on business at Port Elizabeth, and also a firm of Charles Exley and Co., practically the same firm, carrying on business in Johannesburg. A provisional order was granted last month by the Chief Justice, returnable on the 27th February, and then extended by the Court until this day. This was the return day of the order for the compulsory sequestration of the firm in this Colony, but the parties thought that, as the other matter was on the motion roll, it was not necessary to put this on the provisional roll. Defendants had not been called nor had they been summoned, because a petition came down from Johannesburg asking the aid of this Court to make the same trustees who had been appointed in Johannesburg by a prior order of the High Court, appointed to administer the estate here. There was no landed property in the estate in this colony. The difficulty was that should the rule not be extended or the motion not heard to-day, the estate would not be hung up any longer so far as this Colony was concerned.

Later in the day, Mr. Searle, K.C., moved, on the petition of the trustees of Charles Exley and Co., appointed in Johannesburg and another, for an order confirming their election, and authorising them to administer the estate in this colony.

Laurence, J., granted an order as prayed.

Mr. Searle then formally applied for the provisional order of sequestration made in this Court to be discharged.

Laurence, J., said that the estate would be released from the operation of the provisional order, which would, accordingly, be discharged, usual notice to be given in the "Gazette."

Ex parte VAN DER MERWE.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for leave to register a certain waiver, and the removal of certain conditions as to alienation of property in the estate of the late W. J. van der Merwe, sen. The present application was rendered necessary by the death of Van der Merwe after giving a release under power of attorney. Counsel said that from the Master's report it was not quite clear whether the Master recommended that only a portion of the application should be granted.

Laurence, J.: There is no difficulty as to making an order for registration of the notarial deed. The matter will stand over for a further report by the Master as to whether there is sufficient ground to authorise the executors to execute the powers, etc., as prayed in paragraph (a) of the petition.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice LAURENCE.]

(IN CHAMBERS.)

ERLANK V. TENNANT AND Another. 1907. (Mar. 20th.)

Insolvency — Endorsement of letters of administration — Intention to surrender — Irregularity—Act 38 of 1884, Sec. 2.

The applicant (A. G. E.) had obtained judgment against the estate of the late Mrs. E., and had attached certain sheep in execution. Before these sheep were sold, the first respondent, as executor dative and administrator of the estate, gave notice of his intention to apply for its sequestration as insolvent, and thereupon the deputy sheriff refused to sell the sheep without an order of Court. Application was now made to set aside the notice of surrender, on the ground that the respondent had not been duly appointed administrator, his letters of administration having been signed by the Magistrate of Rouxville and not, as prescribed by the law of the O.R.C., by the Master of the High Court at Bloemfontein. The Master of the Supreme Court now refused to recognize these letters of administration or to issue letters in respect of such part of the estate as is within this Colony.

Held, that the deputy sheriff should forthwith proceed with the sale of the sheep attached.

Held further, that the notice of intention to surrender the estate was of no force and effect: but that, in view of the fact that it was alleged that the written sanction of the Master of the H.C. of Bloemfontein to the letters of administration granted to the respondent was expected to arrive in a day or two, the proceeds of the sale must remain in the hands of the High Sheriff until the application for sequestration had been disposed of.

This was an application upon notice to David Tennant, attorney, Cape Town, and the High Sheriff, for an order setting aside a certain notice published in the "Government Gazette" on Tuesday signed by the first-named respondent of intention to surrender the estate of the late Alida Hendrina Margarotha Erlank, and also directing the execution in the matter of Erlank v. Estate Erlank to be proceeded with in terms of the writs issued in this matter, and for costs against the first-named respondent.

From the affidavits, it appeared that on February 19 last applicant obtained judgment against the estate in question for £500, with interest and costs, and a writ of execution was issued and 594 sheep were attached. These sheep it was proposed to sell in execution of the judgment at Lady Grey, division of Aliwal North, to-morrow (Thursday). Yesterday (Tuesday) a notice appeared in the "Government Gazette" over the signature of Mr. Tennant of an intention to surrender the estate of the late Alida H. M. Erlank, as insolvent. Mr. Tennant purported to act for the executor, but it appeared that an informality had occurred as the letters of administration had been endorsed by the R.M. of Rouxville, and should have been endorsed by the Master of the High Court, Bloemfontein, and, as a consequence, the Master of the Supreme Court declined to issue letters of administration.

Pending the arrival of the proper authority, Mr. Tennant, finding, as he said, that the estate was insolvent, had given notice of intention to surrender the estate. The proceedings now taken, he said, were strictly bona fide, and in the interests of the creditors in general.

It was also stated that the applicant had served bills of cost upon the first named respondent for £567 6s. 9d. in the action between the applicant and the said estate. These bills had been reduced on taxation to about £300. Mr. Tennant said that he also had a bill of costs against the estate amounting approximately to £200. Mrs. Erlank died while the action was proceeding.

Mr. Upington was for applicant, Andries G. Erlank; Mr. Burton appeared for Mr. Tennant.

[Laurence, J.: It is suggested on behalf of the respondent that there are other creditors in the Orange River Colony who are entitled to share in the assets?]

Mr. Burton: There are creditors in the Orange River Colony, and there are creditors here besides the plaintiff.

[Laurence, J.: I have looked at the papers, and I at once formed a strong impression that it might be a case in all the circumstances for an order under section 3 of the Act of 1884.]

Mr. Upington said that that was not the application. The position was that a notice of intention to surrender had appeared in the "Government Gazette." That notice was not worth the paper it was written on. The applicant asked the Court to declare that the notice was invalid, and that it had no legal effect. The High Sheriff, very properly, upon seeing the notice, gave instructions to his subordinate to stay his hand as regards the sale, and the applicant now applied for an order authorising the Sheriff to direct the sale to proceed.

[Laurence, J.: I think the Sheriff may be at once informed that the Deputy Sheriff may proceed with the sale to-morrow. As to the proceeds, I was going to suggest, subject to anything that counsel may say, that the matter of urgency being thus put out of the way, the simplest course would be to let the proceeds remain in the hands of the Deputy Sheriff, where they would be perfectly safe until this application is disposed of in the ordinary manner.]

Mr. Upington said their position was that the notice could not be recognised. The notice had been inserted in the "Gazette" for the purpose of defeating the judgment claim of the plaintiff. The Court, he submitted, would not interfere with clear rights, such as the plaintiff now possessed, to proceed to execution, merely because there were other creditors concerned, and merely because it was alleged that the estate was insolvent. Those other creditors must look after themselves.

[Laurence, J. (to Mr. Burton): Do you admit the irregularity in this notice?]

Mr. Burton: It is irregular to a certain extent. I cannot admit that it is irregular to the extent that it is entirely valueless and that it is not a good notice under the Act. Proceeding, he submitted that the Court would not go out of its way to allow one creditor to have the benefit of a large portion of the assets of an estate like this to the prejudice of the other creditors. He cited In re McLeod (1876 Buchanan, 1). Plaintiff had presented a handsome claim against the estate, and the respondent had come to the conclusion that the estate could not meet the claims, and he had taken steps to surrender the estate. There had been a technical hitch in the way, because certain documents had been attested by the Resident Magistrate of Rouxville instead of the Master of the High Court.

Mr. Upington having been heard in reply,

Laurence, J.: This is rather a nice point, and it is not by any means an easy matter for the Court to decide what is really the fairest course to all parties to pursue in the somewhat exceptional aspect that this matter now presents. A notice appeared in the "Gazette" that it was the intention of the executor of the late Mrs. Erlank to apply for the surrender of her estate to one of the Judges of this Court, on the 23rd of this month. Now, a notice of this kind can be made by a party who has an estate to surrender, or the legal representative of that party, as executor testamentary or dative, and it is also competent for it to be signed by the attorney for the party, either, that is to say, for the party or the executor of the party whose estate it is desired to surrender. When this notice appeared, which prima facie is a notice in the usual form, the execution sale, which had been advertised to take place at day Grey to-morrow, was ipso facto suspended under the provisions of section 2 of the Act of 1884, except by an order from a competent Court to the contrary, and therefore, very properly, on the publication of that notice the High Sheriff sent directions by telegram to his deputy to suspend the sale. Now, application is made to the Court to allow the sale to proceed on the ground that no valid notice of intention to surrender has ever been given, the point being that, although it is not disputed that there is an executor of this estate duly appointed in the Orange River Colony, no executor has been appointed in the Cape Colony, and therefore, Mr. Tennant, as attorney, could not be authorised to issue the notice which he did. The reason why he issued that notice has been sufficiently explained in the affidavits. It seems that an application was made for letters of administration here, but as the certificate of the appointment of the executor in the Orange River Colony was signed by the Resident Magistrate of Rouxville, and not by the Master of the High Court at Bloemfontein, the Master could not accept that as a valid attestation of his authority, and the matter stood over until his authority could be proved. Now, the question is, what ought to be done in these circumstances? In the first place, I am quite clear that an intimation should be sent to the Sheriff at once that his deputy is authorised by the Court to proceed with the sale of these assets. The sale has been advertised, and, whoever may be the party entitled to the proceeds, it is clearly in the interests of such person or persons that the expenses incurred should not be wasted, and that there should not be the expense of a postponed sale. Then the question arises as to whether the Court ought to make any special order as to the proceeds. I quite recognise what Mr. Upington says about the Court not being prepared to go out of its way to defeat the rights of a vigilant creditor, but, at the same time, as was pointed out in the case quoted by Mr. Burton, the Court is extremely reluctant to interfere with the distribution of assets in insolvency in the manner provided by law, and the mere fact that one creditor has got an execution before others should not give him a prior right unless there were special circumstances for departing from the ordinary distribution. In this case it is perfectly clear, or, at any rate, there is good ground for the Court to believe, that if there had not been this little hitch in the Orange River Colony as to the authority, there would have been a valid notice in the ordinary course. The notice which has actually been published is unauthorised, and is worth nothing at all. But it is also stated that it is the intention of the respondent to take all necessary steps, as soon as he is authorised, to proceed with the sequestration of the estate. The necessary documents are said to be in transit, and it is expected that they will arrive the day after to-morrow (Friday). I am inclined to think in the circumstances the safest course will be for the proceeds of the sale to remain in the hands of the Sheriff until the application for the surrender of the estate has been disposed of. There must be no delay in the matter, and the respondent will be put to terms. It will be provided in the order that proper notice of intention to surrender be published not later than Tuesday next for the application to be heard at the earliest practicable date. I think an earlier date than the 23rd April should be appointed, but I will not fix the date. Then, of course, it will be competent to the applicant to present a caveat against the acceptance of the surrender. All the facts can be brought before the Judge, before whom the application is heard, and if he then, having all the information that is not now available, comes to the conclusion that the application for surrender is really not an attempt to benefit the general body of creditors, but to impede and interfere with the prior rights of the judgment creditor then, in accordance with the principles referred to by the Chief Justice in the earlier case of Van Ellenee (Buch., 1876, p. 3) the surrender would, I take it, be refused. I only add that the case is one in which the Court ought not wholly to ignore the fact that there has not been much time to get the papers in order, and have the information laid before the Court by an executor, who does not live in this colony, but who was, as a matter of fact, made a party to this suit. I think, if only on the ground of comity, the executor having been appointed by the Court of another colony, it would not be desirable to shut the door on any application which he might wish to make simply through what may prove to be an inadvertence on the part of one of the officials in the O.R.C. In all the circumstances, I think the proper course will be to authorise the Sheriff to proceed with the sale of these sheep, and anything else that may be included, but not to distribute the proceeds pending the determination of the contemplated insolvency proceedings, provided that proper notice of application is published not later than Tuesday next for an application to be heard at the earliest practicable date.

Applicant will be at liberty to lodge a caveat to oppose the application for surrender, and to raise any grounds which might have been submitted on the present application.

The costs of this application should, I think, be reserved.

[Applicant's Attorney: P. A. M. Cloete. Respondent's Attorney: D. Tennant.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice LAURENCE.]

Ex parte REED. { 1907.
Mar. 21st.

This was an application to make absolute certain rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act. Mr. Benjamin was for petitioner; Mr. Gardiner appeared for one Grant to oppose the application.

Laurence, J., raised the question as to whether this was a matter which could be disposed of under the Derelict Lands Act.

Mr. Benjamin said that the affidavits were very voluminous, and he would suggest that, if the matter could not be disposed of on affidavit, it should be dealt with by an action without pleadings, as was done in the case of King Brothers v. Wasserfall (15 C.T. Reports, 356). Counsel added that there was no one through whom the present applicant could obtain title. He claimed title from a person who was deceased, and whose executor was now deceased. The applicant claimed to have purchased in 1875, and the respondent claimed that he had acquired the property by prescription. Counsel (in answer to the Court) said that the ground was valued by the local authority at about £75.

Laurence, J., said that, after perusing a large number of the affidavits, he could see no reason for granting any special order for dispensing with pleadings. An order would be granted to try the issues of fact by pleadings, without issue of summons, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ordered that the rule be discharged, applicant to be at liberty to proceed under section 9 of the Act 28, 1881, without summons, but upon pleadings, for determination of the issues in dispute between the parties, if such action is brought, costs to be costs in the cause, if action not brought within a reasonable time costs to be paid by petitioner.

INDUSTRIAL LIFE ASSURANCE CO., LTD, V. ESTATE FELIX AND THE R.M., CAPE TOWN.

This was an application calling on respondent to show cause why an order should not be granted authorising the Resident Magistrate of Cape Town to complete a certain record. Mr. Alexander said the position taken up by the respondent was that there was no precedent for the application.

Mr. Benjamin was for the applicant, and Mr. Alexander for the respondent Felix.

Laurence, J., said, on the whole, it was much fairer that the plaintiff should have the opportunity of going to Court and repeating her evidence. The best thing would be to have this witness recalled, and for the record to be returned to the Magistrate to be completed for the purpose of appeal, costs to be costs in the cause.

LAZARUS AND OTHERS V. ESTATE LAZARUS AND OTHERS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the applicants; Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Close) was for respondents (Morris and Drabbe). Dr. Rainsford appeared for the minors, and Mr. Swift was for the executors.

Laurence, J., said he understood that the matter had been before the Chief Justice, and thought it would be more satisfactory if the matter was taken before the Chief Justice. The best course, his lordship thought, would be to leave the matter over until Tuesday next.

The application was for an order, calling on the respondents to show cause why a certain agreement should not be made a Rule of Court.

The matter was ordered to stand over.

The matter was again mentioned later in the day, when

Mr. Jones said that the late Laurence Lazarus made a will in which he directed that his estate should practically remain as a fund for the benefit of his widow and his children, and in the last clause, which was really the contentious clause, he said that, after the death of his children, his estate should go to his grand children, and the question was whether those words created a fidei commissary of the property or direct substitution. Mr. Justice Maasdorp, who heard the matter, found that it was a case of direct substitution which resulted in the estate being in this position, that, during the lifetime of the widow and the children, it should not be sold, and each of the children and the widow after the payment of certain bequests, would be entitled to receive one-ninth of the proceeds of the estate, which should remain under the administration of the Colonial Orphan Chamber, who were appointed joint executors with Mrs. Lazarus. There was some question of her renouncing her rights in this particular action, and his lordship said it was open to the parties to enter into any arrangement by which transfer of the undivided shares of the estate could be given to the heirs, and it was with a view of effecting some arrangement of that description that the deed which was to be placed before the Court had been drawn up, and the only party who really had not signed was his friend's client (Mr. Morris), who married one of the late testator's daughters, which daughter died after the testator's death, and who left a will making Morris her sole heir. Mr. Jones submitted that under the will there was a prohibition against the sale of the property during the lifetime of the children.

Dr. Rainsford said that he submitted to the Court's order.

Mr. Benjamin said that the position taken up was one to which they could not consent. They had offered certain terms, which the applicants had refused.

Mr. Jones said that Morris's disagreement was that they would not accept Drabbe as a party to the deed. Morris's consent at first appeared to be on the verge of being given, but eventually, when he found himself financially involved, away went all his rights to Drabbe, and he said, "Now deal with Drabbe."

[Laurence, J.: You must produce all the necessary consents before this agreement can be made a Rule of Court. The Court can make no order on the matter.]

Mr. Benjamin applied for costs.

[Laurence, J.: From the somewhat superficial acquaintance that I have with the matter, I should think costs should come out of the estate.]

Ex parte BRINACOMBE.

This was an application calling on the respondent to show cause why the applicant should not be declared entitled to the custody of two minor children.

Mr. Alexander was for the applicant, and Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the respondent.

Laurence, J., said the children were quite young, and it was desirable under all the circumstances that they should remain in the custody of their mother. If the applicant could prove his wife was guilty of misconduct it was open for him now, after judicial separation, to bring an action for divorce. Application refused, with costs

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice LAURENCE and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

REVIEW

REX V. DE WEI. { 1907.
Mar. 23rd.

Laurence, J.: A case came before me for review from the Special Justice of the Peace of Loxton, district of Victoria West, in which one Abram de Wei, described as a coloured shepherd, was charged with contravening section 4, Act 28, 1898, by procuring liquor on behalf of one Speelman, a native, of Loxton, against the conditions of the licence. There is evidence that the accused gave another man named Speelman a drink, and there is no evidence that Speelman was a native, or even if he were a native, that the accused bought or received liquor as his agent or on his behalf, or that the purchase involved a breach of the conditions of anybody's licence. All that appears is that Speelman says: "I know the accused; I saw him last Monday; he gave me some brandy. I became intoxicated." The remainder of the record consists of a somewhat detailed narrative of the proceedings of Speelman when in this condition. Accused pleaded guilty. He is described on the charge sheet as a coloured shepherd. When a man of this class, at all events, pleads guilty to a statutory offence, there must be some prima facie evidence of a contravention of the Statute. Here there is no such evidence. The accused was convicted and fined 20s. The conviction must be quashed and the fine returned.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice LAURENCE.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1907.
Mar. 26th.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Gerhardus van Copenhagen as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Ernest Daniel Engels as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. De Waal moved for the admission of Jacob Meyer de Kock as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the admission of Foster Allan Frederick Bone as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the admission of Hubertus J. A. Pritchard as an attorney.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Johannes T. van der Vyver as a translator.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of Wodehouse.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

HANAU V. BUCHANAN.

This was an application for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. The matter was before the Court a week ago, and was then ordered to stand over, a suggestion being thrown out that an arrangement should be come to between the parties.

Mr. Searle, K.C., was for plaintiff; Mr. Molteno was for defendant.

Mr. Searle said that no arrangement had been arrived at between the parties, and he had now to renew the application. Counsel read a further affidavit by the plaintiff, Isidor Hanau, who said that, in consequence of the action of Heydenrych, who was not a party to the assignment of the defendant's estate and the claims made by him, it was impossible to deal with the property at Millwood, Knysna, of the Preston Buchanan Gold Mining Syndicate, which was assigned under the estate. Mr. Searle also read an affidavit by Mr. Simpson, of Syfret, Goddington and Low, attorneys, who considered that under all the circumstances it would be in the interests of the creditors that the estate should be sequestrated.

Mr. Molteno read a further affidavit by Mr. V. van der Byl, of Van der Byl and De Villiers, attorneys, in which he said that Buchanan's position was that he had carried out the terms of the assignment into which he had entered in 1903. Counsel added that he also had an affidavit by Heydenrych, in which he said that he had agreed with Hanau to raise a special case to determine their respective rights in relation to the Millwood property, but that the negotiations collapsed because they could not agree as to costs.

Mr. Searle: We do not admit that.

Laurence, J., put a question as to any assets defendant might now have in the Transvaal.

Mr. Searle said that the plaintiff was prepared to give an undertaking that he would not attach any asset Buchanan might have in the Transvaal.

Mr. Molteno argued that Hanau was estopped from coming to the Court to override the terms of the assignment and force the sequestration of Buchanan's estate, seeing that there was no allegation in the summons or affidavits that Buchanan had not carried out the terms of the assignment, which was an out and out release on the part of Hanau. Buchanan had assigned his private estate, and it had been liquidated by Hanau. Counsel cited Hossack v. Lippett (3 Juta, 273). He submitted that the position of Buchanan ought not to be prejudiced, and that the dispute between Hanau and Heydenrych could be determined without sequestrating Buchanan's estate.

Mr. Searle submitted that it was clear that Buchanan's estate was insolvent and that it was for the benefit of creditors that it should be sequestrated. The only other question was: Had the creditors debarred themselves by the assignment? Hanau only signed subject to reservation of his rights under the bond, so that all he would have to do now would be, if he wished, to sue upon his bond. Hanau was not now before the Court as assignee, but as a creditor. Counsel cited Gourlay, Curunagh and Co. v. Gromer (13, C.T.R., 1090), and he contended that the course of action taken was the only way out of the difficulty as to the mining venture.

Laurence, J.: This is an application for compulsory sequestration of the estate of the respondent Buchanan, who formerly resided in Cape Town, and is now residing in Johannesburg. The petitioning creditor is one Hanau, living here, and he recites that the respondent Buchanan passed a bond for £1,500 and afterwards assigned his estate, he (Hanau) being one of the assignees, and the only amount available on the assignment for distribution was a sum of £230, which was awarded to himself as preferent creditor, and the present indebtedness by the respondent is alleged to be something over £3,000, including £1,000 to Hanau himself, as a balance still due. It is alleged that the only remaining asset in the estate is a mining venture and the proceeds of this mining venture, in which Buchanan was in partnership with one Martin, and in which an interest is claimed by one Heydenrych. Petitioner goes on to allege that the estate is insolvent and that it would be for the benefit of creditors that it should be sequestrated, and that the rights of creditors decided in insolvency. He is opposed by Buchanan, mainly on the ground that he has carried out his obligations under the assignment, and that, as those obligations have been carried out, he is entitled to the release which the creditors who are parties to the assignment then agreed to give him. Buchanan's position is supported by affidavits by Heydenrych, who denies that insolvency is necessary or desirable in the interests of the creditors in the estate. Apart from the deed of assignment, it seems clear that there would be no defence to any application to sequester the estate on the ground that it would be for the benefit of ment, it seems clear that there would be no obstacle to Hanau first taking judgment on the bond and then obtaining sequestration as a judgment creditor. It is said in argument that he could now obtain judgment for the balance still due on the bond. That is a matter I do not wish to express an opinion about. I do not think it necessary for the present to express an opinion, and it does not appear to me to be quite so clear. It depends upon the effect of the condition on which he became a party to the assignment. The original deed of assignment contained this condition to the signature of Hanau. It was only produced in court this morning. There was nothing to indicate that any such condition had been attached on the copy that is annexed to Buchanan's affidavit, and I do not wish to express any definite opinion in my judgment as to what the present position is as to the effect of that condition. It seems to me if a creditor is a party to an assignment which provides for a release of the debtor on the assignment of all his assets being included—and this assignment included all his assets except some property in Cape Town, which was specially excluded for the operation of the deed—and if the debtor proceeds to carry out his portion of the bargain and his assets are duly assigned, then the release would be a good defence to an action by a creditor who had a bond. The release would operate as a release of any assets which might at any future date be acquired by an insolvent from the operation of any bond which might then be existing. The reservation of rights by a creditor in becoming a party to an assignment, I think, would only be his rights to priority in distribution of the assets which were included in the assignment, and would not, as I think, affect any assets subsequently acquired. At the same time, it is clear that a deed of this kind does not in any way take away the discretion of the Court. It does not preclude the Court from ordering a sequestration if the trend of events subsequent to the assignment has been such as to render sequestration the proper course to take in the interests of the creditors at large. While that is so, one cannot help being impressed on the other hand with the feeling that if a debtor has made a full and fair assignment of his estate the Court is always reluctant to make an order for compulsory sequestration and put him in the position of an insolvent. Whether it is necessary for the Court to exercise that discretion I have referred to, notwithstanding the reluctance to which I have just referred, seems to me to be a question which must necessarily depend upon the view which the Court takes of all the facts of each case as it is brought before it. How do the facts stand so far as they are material to the present case? It is perfectly clear that the estate is insolvent. It was insolvent then; it is insolvent still. There is a very large balance, said to be about £3,000, due to the petitioner and other creditors, while the assets are reduced to one small asset of apparently diminishing value. Buchanan, as I understand, at the time of this deed, was in partnership with one Martin, Buchanan apparently being a party to three-quarters and Martin being a party to one-quarter. They were concerned with a certain mining venture in the Knyana district, and the rights of Buchanan in this venture were included in the assignment. This property, as I understand, was subsequently let to some syndicate; I think it was called the Buchanan Syndicate. Disputes arose as the rights of the lessors and lessees, with the result that an action was brought by the assignees of Buchanan, his partner, Martin, and Heydenrych, who was also joined as co-plaintiff against the syndicate. The action did not come to trial, because the question was compromised. The defendant syndicate gave up possession of these claims, or whatever they were, and they paid a sum of £600 in satisfaction of what was claimed against them by the plaintiffs. The £600 which they paid, as I understand, was paid over to Messrs. Syfret, Godlouton and Low, the attorneys for the plaintiffs, and is still, to some extent, in their hands. It has been considerably diminished since then by subsequent outgoings—I suppose by licence money and other incidental expenses necessary to be disbursed for the preservation of these mining rights and the actual cash remaining is said now to be about £400. It is steadily diminishing, and if this litigation is prolonged might ultimately become, so to speak, a vanishing quantity. It is clearly desirable that these mining rights, if they are worth anything, should be sold as promptly as possible, that, if they cannot get a satisfactory offer, they should be abandoned, and the liabilities on them cease, and the net balance, whatever it is, in cash, should be distributed between the creditors according to their legal rights. The great dispute is as to who are entitled to this balance, whatever it may ultimately turn out to be. Hanau, as I understand, claims to be entitled to this balance under the bond to which he refers in the summons. Heydenrych, on the other hand, claims a preference or lien on the property or cash resulting from sale of the property for moneys advanced by him to carry on the business. The question is whether Hanau, as acting as signee, ought now to bring an action for a declaration of rights, an action to determine what is Buchanan's share of these assets, and then proceed to distribute the proceeds. As to that, it is impossible to shut one's eyes to the fact that Hanau's interest as a creditor might conflict with his duty as assignee to the creditors at large. There might be conflicting rights which Hanau would not be the most satisfactory person to determine, and the weight of that consideration is rather augmented by the circumstance that Hazell, his co-assignee, who is said to have been acting assignee in this deed, unfortunately, has now been convicted of a criminal offence, and a substantial sentence of imprisonment has been passed upon him, so that he is no longer able to act in the matter. On the other hand, if the estate is sequestered, a trustee would have to be elected. He could claim Buchanan's share, and after settling that matter by whatever process may be most expeditious and economical, at all events he would have to claim and realise Buchanan's share in this property, then to frame an account, and if he frames a distribution account to which any creditor objects, the creditor could take his legal course, and bring the matter before the Court, and have it finally decided in that way. I have given my best consideration to the matter, with a desire to do justice to the position of both applicant and respondent, and I have come to the conclusion, on the information before the Court, that this really is a case, if I may so describe it, in which the gordian knot should not be unravelled by assignment, but that it should be cut by the knife of the insolvency law. I felt, as I have said, anxious to protect the respondent, who is in no way, as far as I can see, to blame for the application which has resulted, and there is no reason to apprehend, even if he has acquired any assets subsequently in the Transvaal, that any attempt will be made to place such assets under the operation of the Colonial sequestration. The petitioning creditor, at all events, gives a distinct undertaking, as far as he is concerned, to make no such attempt, and if, in the improbable event of any such attempt being made, it does appear to me if the facts were laid before the Supreme Court of the Transvaal, or the High Court of Johannesburg, it is not a sort of case in which the Court would be likely to make such an order as is competent for the Court to make. I do not think Buchanan is likely to be prejudiced. I think the order for the final adjudication must be granted. At the same time, if any application were made to me, I should not be unwilling to make an order directing that it should lie in the office, say for a week, so that the parties may have some final chance of coming to an arrangement.

Mr. Greer (intervening in the absence of Mr. Molteno) applied for costs of opposition to come out of the estate.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for applicant) opposed.

Laurence, J.: I do not think the circumstances are of so very exceptional a character as to justify the Court making a special order as to costs.

DE WAAL V. RADEMEYER AND RADEMEYER.

Promissory note—Special verbal agreement—Novation.

Defendants being sued on a promissory note, set up the defence that the note had been varied by a verbal agreement to the effect that the plaintiff should pay himself out of the proceeds of a certain sale which he was instructed to hold on behalf of the first defendant. The sale was held, but after the mortgage on the property was paid off, the residue of the proceeds was wholly insufficient to satisfy the other creditors. Thereupon, in order to pay certain creditors, defendant agreed to pass a general covering bond, and this he contended effected a novation of the debt secured by the promissory note.

Held, that as there was no satisfactory proof of the alleged verbal agreement, it could not be taken to vary the terms of the promissory note.

Held further, that the passing of a general bond in favour of creditors did not constitute a novation.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £360, payable at the Standard Bank, Uniondale, and for interest at 10 per cent. per annum, less £10 14s. 5d. remaining in the hands of the plaintiff. Counsel also moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £18, being 5 per cent. commission on account of the sum of £360, for collection thereof, due in terms of the promissory note aforesaid, which the defendant specially agreed to pay in the event of the said promissory note not being paid on the due date.

Mr. Close appeared for defendants, and read an affidavit by J. H. Rademeyer, who pleaded that he was not indebted. His property had been sold by auction by plaintiff, and it had been arranged that the plaintiff should pay the promissory note out of the proceeds, and it was covered by a bond. He denied that either himself or his brother was liable under the promissory note. An affidavit by J. I. Rademeyer was also read, in which he said that he signed the promissory note as surety and co-principal debtor, and he repudiated liability. An affidavit by J. T. Stone, agent and auctioneer, was also read.

Laurence, J., commented on the inordinant length of the affidavits on both sides, and said he hoped that the question of superfluous length of the affidavits would come under the attention of the Taxing Officer in due course. The country attorneys seemed to have been "intoxicated by the exuberance of their own verbosity."

Mr. Close submitted that the defendants had made out a good case that there had been a novation. Once the plaintiff got the proceeds of the sale in his hands, he was bound to deduct Gert Rademeyer's indebtedness from that amount. That was the arrangement made with the surety, and if the plaintiff had not taken out that indebtedness and had paid other creditors the surety could not now be held liable. It was important to note that no demand was made for 20 months after the sale.

[Laurence, J.: If the other debts were paid, the debtor would have the benefit of those payments made by the plaintiff.]

Mr. Close: Admittedly, but the surety has not had the benefit of any such payments. The security was entered into conditionally; the plaintiff has not fulfilled that condition, and he cannot now recover against the surety. Counsel went on to say that it did not appear that other creditors were pressing Gert Rademeyer, and it was therefore difficult to see why he should have ordered other creditors to be paid, while De Waal, who was pressing, remained unpaid. He submitted that defendants had made a sufficiently strong prima facie case to entitle them to ask the Court to order plaintiff to go into the principal case, and especially so in relation to the surety.

Mr. Gardner having been heard in reply,

Laurence, J.: The claim is one for provisional sentence on a promissory note signed by the two defendants—Gert Rademeyer signs as debtor, and his brother signs as surety and co-principal debtor. I do not think sufficient ground has been shown in this case to justify the Court in refusing to grant provisional sentence. The note is in the possession of the plaintiff, and, therefore, prima facie he is entitled to sue upon it. It is not contended on the part of either defendant that the amount of the note has been actually paid. The defence, as far as I can see, is based on two grounds: (1) It is put forward that there was a special agreement at the time of renewal of the former note made by the parties, that the payee, the present plaintiff, should pay himself out of a certain fund which it was anticipated at the time would come into his hands at an early date, the fund being the proceeds of a sale which he was instructed to hold on behalf of the defendant. Well, if there was any condition in a matter of that kind—at all events, as a matter of prudence, it should have been embodied in the contract itself. Here is a liquid document, without any condition or qualification of that nature, and I am not prepared to hold, on the evidence given before me, that any such prior condition has been established which would be legally admissible to vary the contract in writing. At all events, if there was such a condition that he should pay himself out of a certain fund that would imply that a fund should be available, and I am by no means satisfied, on the evidence given by the parties, that that was actually the case. It seems that certain property was sold, realising net, I understand, something probably under £1,500, and this property was specially hypothecated, so that the net amount which the defendant could realise to meet all claims would not be very considerable. The defendant, in order to pay certain creditors who, I presume, were pressing him, agreed to pass a general covering bond for £2,000. The only question which the Court has now to decide is whether it is clear that the intention of the parties at the time when that bond was passed was that it should operate as a novation of the prior obligation created by the promissory note. It is unnecessary to refer to authorities on the law with regard to novation. It is sufficient to refer to the case of Ewers v. Roberts' Trustees (Foord's Reports, 32), in which the law is discussed at some length by His Lordship the Chief Justice, and in which it is clearly pointed out that the intention to novate is not to be presumed. I think the intention to release a surety in one instrument by means of a novation is one that should be admitted, or very clearly proved, by all the circumstances of the case. It is strongly denied by the plaintiff in this case, and all I can say is on the facts of the case before me, the balance of the probabilities is in favour of the plaintiff, and, therefore, he is entitled to provisional sentence. It will, of course, be competent to the defendant to go into the principal case if he gives security, and in that case any question of the balance of account, if he is dissatisfied with the amount which he is charged, could be debated by way of counter-claim, or in other ways. Provisional sentence granted, with costs and judgment, as prayed on the illiquid claim.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn; Defendants' Attorneys: Herold and Gie.]

STAHL V. KRUGER.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note. The matter had been before the Court last week, and counsel now said that the promissory note and the notarial certificate of presentation had been filed.

Order granted.

HUDSON VREDE AND CO. V. DE BRUYN.

Mr. Pohl moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

HIDDINGH V. STETZKOM AND VERSFELD.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest from July 1, 1906, bond due by reason of notice having been given; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

KENT V. MARGAS.

Mr. Inebold moved for provisional sentence on certain two judgments of the Resident Magistrate's Court at Woodstock for £16 15s. 9d., and £2 9s. 3d. costs, and £6 16s. and £2 6s. 4d. costs, and for certain lot of property in Richmond to be declared executable.

Defendant said that he had no means. He had ground at Richmond, but there was a bond of £40 upon it. He did not mind if the judgment creditor sold the property and paid the bondholder and satisfied the judgments out of the balance.

Order granted.

LITCHFIELD V. THURMER AND TONSTENSON.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £850, with interest, from July 1, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and the rents attached. Counsel said that the present whereabouts of the defendants were unknown. The property hypothecated was situate at Lakeside.

Order granted.

MACHAAB AND CO. V. SHAMMA.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for confirmation of a certain writ of arrest. Defendant, it was stated, owed plaintiffs £41 10s., balance of account for goods sold and delivered.

Defendant said that he did not owe anything to the plaintiff. He admitted that he had intended to go away to Delagoa Bay, but said that he would leave his property here, and proposed to return. He afterwards said that he owed the plaintiff firm £4 10s. He had no means at present.

Writ of arrest confirmed.

Laurence, J., informed defendant that if he wanted to obtain his release from custody pending the trial of the action he had better engage an attorney, to advise him with regard to providing security and entering into a bail bond.

STEEL V. DREYER.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for provisional sentence upon an unsatisfied judgment of the R.M.'s Court at Woodstock for £76, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

ANDREWS V. GOLDSTONE (1907. (ALIAS GOLDSTEIN).) Mar. 26th.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £68 18s. 4d., balance due for professional services rendered and moneys disbursed, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

[Laurence, J.: As this appears to be an application by a solicitor for an amount due for professional services, is it a liquidated demand without any allegation that it has been taxed on the amount claimed?]

Dr. Greer: This is an application for judgment under Rule 329d.

[Laurence, J.: It is for a debt or a liquidated demand without an allegation of taxation. I think there is a decision that a solicitor's bill is not liquidated until there has been taxation.

If counsel desires, I will take time to consider the matter, and authorities may be brought.]

Dr. Greer said that he would be glad if the Court would adopt that course.

Postea (27th March).

Judgment, with costs, for plaintiff.

SWART V. COFFIN.

Mr. De Waal moved for judgment for transfer of certain properties in the village of Greytown, plaintiff tendering the purchase price.

Order granted.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Pohl applied for the release from insolvency of Daniel Smalberger.

Application granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ESTATE STUCKE. { 1907.
Mar. 26th.

Mr. Swift moved for an extension of the petitioner's powers as provisional trustee. Counsel stated that the respondent had withdrawn from the case since the last hearing.

Laurence, J., pointed out that the notice of motion called upon respondent to show cause why the petitioner should not be elected sole trustee.

Mr. Swift said they had found that they could not make such an application.

Laurence, J., said that he thought, under the circumstances, it would be encouraging irregularities if the Court allowed the application to go through in its present form.

Rule granted calling upon respondent to show cause why applicant should not be given full powers to administer the estate as trustee, rule to be served promptly, and to be returnable on the 9th April.

In re INSOLVENT ESTATE LOUBSER.

Mr. Benjamin moved, as a matter of urgency, for the appointment of provisional trustees in the insolvent estate of N. E. Louber, hotel proprietor, Somerset West Strand.

Order granted appointing Messrs. Fagan and Cluver as provisional trustees with the powers prayed for.

Ex parte ESTATE ALBRECHT.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to cancel the sale of certain property to a man who had disappeared. A sum of £25 had been paid on account. Counsel cited Ex parte Henry Stevens (6 Sheil, 150).

No order, leave reserved to applicant to mention the matter again.

Ex parte ESTATE BROOK.

Mr. Toms moved on the petition of the trustee and curator bonis for leave to sell certain property and rights for the maintenance of the lunatic owner.

Laurence, J., said that the account showed a large expenditure for trips of various kinds, and subscriptions to sundry clubs, but he saw very little expenditure for the actual maintenance of the lunatic. The matter was referred to the Master for report, as to whether the amounts authorised by the Court had been properly applied, and whether a further order should be made.

Ex parte ESTATE PIET.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for leave to sell a certain undivided share in property, in which minors are interested. Order in terms of Master's report.

SMITH V. DU PLESSIS.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for the removal of trial to the ensuing Circuit Court at Aliwal North, in terms of consent paper.

Case removed accordingly, costs to be costs in the cause.

Ex parte ESTATE BLACK.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for an order authorising the executors to release a certain water right at Simon's Town upon payment by the Admiralty of £100 and all expenses.

Order in terms of Master's report, amount paid by the Admiralty to be deposited with the Board of Executors for administration.

Ex parte ESTATE VAN TONDER.

Mr. Close moved on the petition of the executors testamentary for a partition of certain property in the Ladismith district.

The matter was ordered to stand over, his lordship suggesting that petitioners should draft a form of order, and submit it to the Master. Leave was given to again mention the case on Tuesday next.

Ex parte PREECE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband in forma pauperis for judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty and ill-treatment. Counsel said that he was prepared to certify.

Petitioner, who resides with her parents at Observatory-road, appeared. Her husband, she said, was a man of violent temper, and she was afraid to live with him. She believed that defendant was still in Cape Town. She could not possibly live with defendant. She desired an order for maintenance against him.

Rule nisi granted, calling upon respondent to show cause on the 16th April why leave should not be granted as prayed, personal service.

Ex parte WOUTERSEN.

Dr. Greer moved for leave to petitioner to receive her share of the estate Loe-dolf, unencumbered with the burthen of fidei commissum. Counsel said he applied for a similar order to that given in the application made by petitioner's brother before Mr. Justice Maasdorp.

Order granted as prayed.

EXECUTORS ESTATE BAILEY V. AFRICAN BANKING CORPORATION AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Payne moved for leave to petitioners to intervene, and be joined as co-defendants in the action brought by the first-named respondents against the second-named respondent.

Order granted in terms of consent.

APPENDIX.

GEORGE CIRCUIT COURT.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

NOCHAMSON V. VAN DER WESTHUYSEN. { 1907.
 { Mar. 27th.

Lis pendens—Refusal of provisional sentence—Magistrate's Court.

The plaintiff claimed provisional sentence in the Supreme Court on a promissory note, but he was directed to proceed with the principal case. Instead of so doing, he brought an action in a Magistrate's Court on the same note. There was no evidence before the Magistrate that the action in the Supreme Court had been withdrawn.

Held, that the Magistrate properly refused, on the ground of lis pendens, to try the case.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of George.

Advocate Louwrens appeared for the appellant. Advocate Sutton for the respondent.

It appeared that in August, 1906, the appellant sued the respondent in the Supreme Court on a promissory note for £187 16s., alleged to have been made by the respondent. Provisional sentence was refused, and the plaintiff was directed to go into the principal case. Costs to abide the result. Thereafter the appellant took out a summons on the same note in the Magistrate's Court at George. At the hearing the summons was excepted to on the ground that it was beyond the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, as provisional sentence had been claimed and refused in the Supreme Court. The Magistrate upheld the exception, and dismissed the case, and from this ruling the appeal was brought.

Mr. Louwrens said he was instructed that the appellant had paid the costs of the provisional action in the Supreme Court and had withdrawn the case.

De Villiers, C.J., said there was nothing on the record to that effect.

Mr. Louwrens, in argument, said he took it the exception raised was that of lis pendens though it was not so worded. The parties had been directed to go into the principal case, and he submitted that it was competent for the appellant to go into the principal case in the Magistrate's Court, as the cause of action was within his jurisdiction. The action in the Supreme Court had been withdrawn, and consequently the appellant could proceed anew in the form he should choose. It was to the benefit of both parties that the case should be heard in the Magistrate's Court rather than in the Supreme Court.

Without calling upon Mr. Sutton, De Villiers, C.J.: It is common cause that the plaintiff chose the Supreme Court as his forum. That Court refused provisional sentence on the note and directed the plaintiff to proceed with the principal case, costs to abide the result. It then was competent to file his declaration and to proceed with his action in the Supreme Court, but instead of that he brought his action in the Magistrate's Court. It is suggested that before doing so the plaintiff had withdrawn the action in the Supreme Court and paid the defendant's costs, but there is no evidence of such withdrawal. The payment of the defendant's costs would not prove that the action had been withdrawn. According to the record before the Magistrate, the case was still pending in the Supreme Court. It is true that the declaration had not been filed, but that was not necessary to entitle the defendant to set up the exception of lis pendens in the Magistrate's Court (see Voet 44, 2, 7). The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.
Order granted.

WHITE V. ABDPOOL BROS.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Final order granted.

HOBSON V. MWUNYISWA.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional sentence for £37 Os. 2d., balance due upon a judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court, which had only been satisfied in part, for £2 15s. 9d. taxed costs, and for certain immovable property at Mount Ayliff and Tsolo to be declared executable.

Hopley, J., said that there was a question as to whether sufficient service of the summons had been given.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that due service had been given in view of the fact that the railway now ran to Maclear. According to the Registrar, the service should have been 26 days, whereas only 19 days had been allowed. The allowance, according to the rules of Court, was 200 miles a day by railway, and where the defendant's residence or last-known place of abode should be less than 72 miles from the nearest railway station, 36 miles a day. Defendant resided in the district of Mount Ayliff, which was distant from Maclear as the crow flies 64 miles, while Maclear was distant 883 miles by rail from Cape Town. These facts were set out in an affidavit by applicant's attorneys.

Hopley, J., held that the service was sufficient and granted provisional sentence as prayed.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

ESTATE THEUNISSEN AND ANOTHER V. VAN WYK. N.O.

Mr. Marais moved for judgment under Rule 329d against the defendant, requiring him to complete and finally close off the third and final liquidation and distribution account in the joint estate of which he is executor by paying into the Guardian's Fund the respective amounts awarded to certain minors.

Judgment as prayed, with costs.

STEENKAMP V. STEENKAMP.

This was an application to make absolute a certain rule nisi, interdicting respondent's property pending an action to be brought by his wife for divorce.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for applicant; Mr. M. Bisset was for respondent.

Mr. Jones applied for a postponement until the first day of term, to enable applicant to file replying affidavits. The parties resided at Calvinia.

Mr. Bisset opposed a postponement, and said that the interdict was quite unnecessary, and prevented respondent from carrying on his business. He had no intention of making away with his property.

Mr. Jones said that this was a disputed point, and he urged that a postponement was desirable, so that the whole of the facts should be laid before the Court.

Ordered that the matter be postponed until the first day of term, and the rule be modified so as to allow the respondent to carry on his ordinary farming operations, and to dispose of movable property not exceeding £200 in all to meet the liabilities set forth by him, in other respects the rule to remain of full force and effect, respondent to keep an accurate account of all such sales, and obviate application of the said money so made by him, costs to stand over.

ESTATE STEPHAN V. OTTERSTROM.

This was an application to set aside a certain order granted by Mr. Justice Maasdorp, sitting as a Divisional Court, authorising respondent to sue the applicant estate in forma pauperis, on the ground that he was no longer a pauper.

Mr. Upington was for the applicants; Dr. Greer was for respondent.

Hopley, J., said that he was not sitting there as a Court of Appeal from the decision of another Judge.

The matter was ordered to stand over, pending the return of Mr. Justice Maasdorp from Circuit.

Ex parte DIESEL AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Toms moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to register a certain notarial grosse embodied in an ante-nuptial contract executed in the Orange River Colony and registered there on the 9th January, 1907.

Order granted authorising the Registrar of Deeds to register the grosse, saving any intermediate rights of creditors in the Cape Colony which may have arisen in the interim.

Ex parte REID AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, on the petition of J. S. Inglesby Garlake, attorney, Cradock, as agent of George S. Reid and estate John Hamilton McLauchlin, for cancellation of a mortgage bond for £220, granted by petitioner's principals in favour of the Cape of Good Hope Bank, on the 31st May, 1884, specially hypothecating certain ground in Frere and Cawood streets, Cradock. Petitioner believed that the capital amount had been repaid, but was unable to state exactly when, and with a view of ascertaining the date caused inquiries to be made from one of the liquidators of the said bank, but was unable to obtain any information in the matter owing to the bank books having been destroyed by order of the Court. The bond was not in possession of petitioner's principals, but he could not ascertain that it had been cancelled or a cession registered. Every possible effort had been made to find it, but without success. Counsel applied for an order similar to that granted in re Krul's estate (4 C.T. Reports, 239), in which a rule was ordered to issue and to be made absolute without further application if within six weeks no objection be raised.

Rule nisi granted in similar terms to rule in Krul's estate, publication of rule to be made in "Midland News" forthwith.

BRADY V. ROBERTSON.

Mr. Upington moved, on the petition of Christopher Brady, for an order for the attachment of certain inheritance due to respondent, George Frederick Robertson, late of Cape Town, and for leave to sue him by edictal citation for provisional sentence for £30 under and by virtue of a certain promissory note. Respondent was stated to be serving as a trooper in the B.S.A. Police, stationed at Salisbury, Rhodesia.

Order granted authorising the attachment ad fundandam jurisdictionem of any moneys in the estate of R. and M. J. Robertson, of Colesberg, in the hands of the executor or his attorneys, and giving leave to sue by edictal citation, returnable on the 14th May, citation and notices to be served personally.

GAUSS V. HARVEY.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for leave to sue the respondent by edictal citation for £97 6s. 4d. for medical attendance, and to attach a mortgage bond to found jurisdiction. The last address of the respondent was a hospital in Dublin.

Hopley, J., thought there would be no difficulty in serving the respondent personally. She might wish to dispute the bill. It was ordered that the bond or any funds in the hands of the S.A. Association at Port Elizabeth be attached ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Leave to sue by edictal citation, interdict and notices to be served together, returnable 3rd July, personal service if possible.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

REX V. ABRAHAMS AND { 1907.
ROBERTSON. { Apr. 3rd.

Cheque form unsigned—Forgery —Crime.

The presentation of an unsigned request written on a cheque form to pay A. B. a certain sum of money, the writer and the presenter being in collusion to obtain the money does not constitute a crime.

Hopley, J., said that Mr. Justice Laurence had asked him to mention the case of Christian Abrahams and John William Robertson, which came before him from the Assistant Resident Magistrate, Cape Town, and in which the accused were charged with attempted theft by false pretences. They were both found guilty, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment. The charge alleged that they falsely and fraudulently gave out and pretended to a teller of the Bank of Africa that a certain document, to wit a cheque, for payment of £10 sterling, drawn in favour of Messrs. Crooks upon the National Bank, was a genuine cheque, whereas it was not, and had thus committed the crime of attempted theft by attempting to obtain £10. The evidence showed that one of these men wrote upon a cheque form of the Federal Supply and Cold Storage Company, and in their illiterate way, "Pay Messrs. Crooks £10." The whole thing was unsigned, and this unsigned piece of paper, which, of course, was not a cheque, there was no order by anybody at all, was presented by the other man to a teller of the bank, who, of course, at once saw that it was no cheque, nor anything else but a piece of paper. He asked the man what he wanted, and he said, "Ten pounds." Thereupon the man was given in charge. It was perfectly clear that there was no forgery in this case. If it had been signed, it might possibly have been a forgery in one case and uttering in the other, but as presented it was a mere worthless piece of paper, and the way in which it was presented and the sort of document that it was made it just as worthless as any other piece of paper, and it could not be taken to have been a pretence. It might very well be that these men did intend to commit some sort of crime, and possibly had the intention of getting hold of some money, but, as a matter of fact, the accused had done nothing which amounted to a crime, and the conviction must be quashed.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Sutton moved for the rehabilitation of Johannes Daniel Rensburg, under the Act 38, 1884.
Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte HEMMING AND { 1907.
PATTLE. } Apr. 3rd.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, on the petition of Douglas Hemming and Cecil J. Pattle, who are article to Mr. H. W. Gush, attorney and notary, Umtata, for an order condoning a certain break in their articles. From the petition, it appeared that applicants are members of the Tembuland Light Horse, and that when Volunteers were called upon to assist the colony of Natal last year in suppressing the native rebellion, they were selected for service by their commanding officer. On the 15th June last they proceeded to Natal with the Volunteer force, and were absent on military service until the 15th August, when they returned to Umtata and resumed their articles. The Incorporated Law Society had intimated that they would not raise any objection to the admission of applicants by reason of the above break of service.

Hopley, J., said he supposed applicants did not expect to be let off two months' service of articles out of the three years. He took it they would serve two months extra.

Mr. Buchanan said that in Ex parte Will (7 Juta, 67) and Ex parte Katzenstein (7 Juta, 93), it had been laid down that an article clerk was entitled to reasonable holidays during his articles, and a period exceeding two months had been allowed.

Hopley, J., said that there was nothing to show that applicants had not already had a holiday. The ground of the petition was not that they were entitled to a holiday. One wished that every young man would become a Volunteer, if possible, and he did not want to discourage Volunteering in the least, but absence on service of that kind was quite alien to the study of the law, and they desired that article clerks training for the profession should be as efficient as possible. He did not mind acceding to the application, provided petitioners had had no holiday during the articles into which they had entered, the one in March, 1904, and the other in July.

If they had had a holiday, then they must serve the two months in addition.

Mr. Buchanan said he was prepared to take an order in these terms.

Order granted accordingly.

In re ECLIPSE MINERAL WATER CO.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan presented the first report of the official receiver, and applied for the usual order as to lying for inspection and publication. Counsel said that the company, which was really a partnership, was in liquidation. In answer to the Court, he said that he believed the procedure in the Grand Junction Railways, also a partnership, was the same as it was proposed to follow in this matter.

The report was ordered to lie for inspection at the Master's Office for 14 days, publication once in the "Capo Times" and once in the "South African News."

JAGGER AND CO. V. WEINBERG AND OTHERS.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved to make absolute certain rules nisi, attaching 14 donkeys and certain loads of merchandise, and certain two promissory notes for £140 and £200, pending an action by the trustee in insolvency. Counsel said that the property actually attached consisted of six donkeys and some merchandise, the promissory notes, and £40 in cash. Service had been effected on certain of the parties concerned.

Rules absolute, pending action to be taken by the trustee in the insolvent estate of Nathan Weinberg, costs to abide result.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte VAN DER MERWE. { 1907.
} Apr. 4th.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for leave to petitioner to register a certain waiver. He said that this was an application for authority to an executor of a deceased person's estate to execute a power of attorney in the same way as the deceased person had done just prior to his death, which power of attorney had lapsed by his death. The matter had been before Mr. Justice Laurence last week, and he was inclined to grant an order, at any rate, he said there would be no difficulty about an order with regard to a certain notarial agreement as to which the Master had reported. In his report, however, the Master had not specifically addressed himself to prayer (a) of the petition, and his lordship sent the matter back to the Master for a more specific reference to prayer (a). He (counsel) had now a further report from the Master, who said that the question to consider was whether the power of attorney which lapsed at the death of the deceased was sufficient authority for the cancellation of the condition in the deed of transfer restricting the alienation of the property sold by Van der Merwe, sen., to his son, the petitioner. Indicating, as the power clearly did, the intention of the deceased to cancel this condition, the Master thought there was sufficient ground to authorise the executor to execute the powers asked for under paragraph (a) of the petition.

Order granted as prayed.

GUTHRIE AND THERON V. TALJAARD.

Mr. Upington moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, in terms of the second section of a certain summons, for (1) £108 17s. 11d., amount of account, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. from the 1st February, 1907, and 5 per cent. for collection in terms of conditions of sale; (2) interest on the sum of £89 7s., being the capital amount of the before-mentioned account at the rate of 8 per cent. from the 1st February, 1907; (3) £32 13s. 5d., balance of account for sums advanced, moneys disbursed, and interest thereon at 8 per cent. to 1st February; and (4) interest on the sum of £26 19s. 8d., being capital amount of the afore-mentioned account at 8 per cent. from February 1. Counsel added that, so far as the liquid claim mentioned in the summons was concerned, the Court had already granted provisional sentence (17 C.T.R., 241).

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan appeared for defendant, Hans J. Taljaard, farmer, Stanford, division of Caledon, and moved for leave to purge default and enter appearance. In his affidavit, defendant said that plaintiffs were a firm of attorneys at Caledon. He had a good and bona fide defence to the second count in the summons, and had tendered to plaintiffs the sum owing to them. Plaintiffs, however, had always insisted upon his signing a promissory note, which would include certain sums amounting to about £59 odd, which they alleged were due to them for purchases at auction sales. These sums, deponent said, he did not owe, and were only charged against him, because plaintiffs found that they could not recover from one Jan Swart. He claimed that on the 4th April, 1904, a complete and final settlement was arrived at between plaintiffs and himself as regarded these items. Further affidavits and correspondence were read, from which it appeared that defendant had tendered £148 4s. 8d., in full discharge of his indebtedness to the plaintiffs.

Mr. Upington read an affidavit by C. J. F. Theron, attorney, who said that defendant was given due notice of action which plaintiffs were bringing against him. He denied that the debts incurred by the defendant were incurred as between attorney and client. He also denied that his firm had always insisted upon defendant signing a promissory note, and said that on several occasions defendant had admitted the correctness of the account. He further denied that the firm had guaranteed payment of a promissory note of £47 due by one Swart to defendant. From further paragraphs in the affidavit, it appeared that the firm's bookkeeper had erroneously settled the promissory note for £47, and that communications were addressed to the defendant, but without receiving any acknowledgment. Plaintiffs had been repeatedly promised payment of the account. As to the alleged settlement of the 4th April, 1904, Mr. Theron said that the so-called settlement was obtained by defendant by a deliberate falsehood, and that when the error came to his notice he immediately wrote to the defendant on the 13th July, 1904, pointing out to him that they had not received from J. Swart any portion of the sum due on the promissory note. The present application, Mr. Theron said, was being made by defendant solely on the advice of his solicitor to force the plaintiffs into accepting his tender or losing everything. Counsel also read an affidavit by Mr. Guthrie, who said that Taljaard represented to him that Mr. Theron had said that they had received the money from Swart and thus obtained the so-called settlement of April, 1904. Affidavits by certain bookkeepers and clerks in plaintiffs' employ were also read.

Mr. Buchanan having been heard in argument on the facts,

Hopley, J., said he did not like to shut out a defendant, who seemed to have a genuine defence, from entering appearance. He was generally in favour of giving the defendant every opportunity of having his case heard and of bringing all the facts before the Court. But there were occasions, and this seemed to be one of them, where the Court should be very slow to admit a defence which was brought in at the last moment after a long term of correspondence, the effect of which would be to inevitably increase the costs over a paltry matter, and with the possible result, if the plaintiff were successful, he would not get his judgment or the costs involved in obtaining it. As to the facts in the case, it seemed to him on the affidavits that the probabilities lay strongly with the plaintiff. If he thought there was a reasonable ground of defence he certainly would not shut the door against the defendant, but as things stood, he thought there must be judgment for the plaintiff as prayed, and that the application to purge default be refused, both with costs. With regard to the voluminous nature of the affidavits, if there was anything in them which was too lengthy, the Taxing Master might have his attention drawn to them, and if he thought anything in them was unnecessary then he could strike out such unnecessary matter.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLAY.]

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY (1907,
V. COULTON. (Apr. 5th

Attorney—Law Society—Indefinite charge.

Where the Law Society calls upon an attorney to show cause why his name should not be removed from the roll; the charges against him should be stated with the same precision as is required in a criminal indictment.

Law Society v. Tottenham and another (1904, T.R., 304) followed.

This was an application upon notice directed to William Gordon Coulton, attorney, Cape Town, calling upon him to show cause why he should not be removed from the roll of attorneys of the Supreme Court.

The affidavit of A. B. Linscott stated that he was the plaintiff in an action instituted against his wife and one Marsh for divorce, heard in this Court on the 24th August last, on which judgment was given for his wife without any evidence being led on her behalf. Mr. C. H. Maasdorp acted as deponent's attorney, and the respondent represented the defendants. Deponent drew attention to the bill of costs lodged against him by respondent. In this bill were charges in respect of two witnesses named Mackay and Maguire. The Taxing Officer disallowed the charges in respect of the witness Mackay, and allowed the charges in respect of the witness Maguire. Some time afterwards his wife instituted an action against him for divorce, and he then ascertained that Mr. Maguire had had nothing whatever to do with the previous case, and that Mr. Mackay attended the Court, but did not give evidence. John Maguire, in an affidavit, stated that he was never spoken to by any person as to giving evidence in the case of Linscott v. Linscott and Marsh; he was not subpoenaed, and he did not attend the Court.

Mr. C. H. Maasdorp, attorney, stated that included in the bill of costs as taxed was the minuting of Maguire's evidence and witness's expenses and conduct money. Respondent informed the Taxing Officer that all the witnesses in question were in court. Maguire was adjudged to be a necessary and material witness.

Robert B. Saunderson, secretary of the Incorporated Law Society, deposed that early in October last Mr. Linscott wrote to the society calling attention to the respondent's conduct. The Council of the Society decided to ask the respondent for an explanation of his conduct, but the explanation furnished was not considered satisfactory, and the society's attorneys were instructed to take the present proceedings. Mr. Saunderson also called the Court's attention to certain evidence given by respondent in the case of Re v. Hilgard Home Drummond, heard at the Criminal Sessions.

The answering affidavit of respondent stated that he was admitted as an attorney of this Court in July, 1902, and had since been practising as an attorney in Cape Town. He was fifty years of age, and formerly practised in England, having been admitted there in the year 1881. As this was the first application of the kind that had been brought against him, he felt the same most acutely, especially as he was entirely dependent upon his profession for a living, and he was convinced that there was no ground for the same, after the explanation he had given to the Law Society. He emphatically denied that he had been guilty of any misconduct or unprofessional dealings or actions so as to justify a motion for his removal from the rolls. He had handed over the case of Linscott v. Linscott and Marsh to his managing clerk, Edward Collins, who conducted the case as his managing clerk throughout the whole of the proceedings. Having full reliance in the said Collins, he only occasionally intervened in the case when consulted by Collins, and when personally required to sign any document. The draft brief, minutes of evidence, etc., were made by Collins. In the fair copy brief appeared the minutes of evidence of the two witnesses Maguire and Mackay, and he entirely relied upon the said Collins for this. After the conclusion of the case, Collins handed to him minutes of the costs. The whole of these minutes were in the handwriting of the said Collins. If an error or unproved charge appeared in the minutes, it was unknown to him, and he would and did copy in the same in ignorance thereof. In the bill the names of Maguire and Mackay had been inadvertently transposed by Collins, and expenses had been allowed to one which should have been allowed to the other. The bill of costs so taxed amounted to £47 16s. 3d. After complaining that he had been placed at a disadvantage by the delay of the Incorporated Law Society, deponent went on to refer to his connection with the case of Rex v. H. E. Drummond, and said he was not informed that this case would be brought up until he received notice on the 15th March. It seemed to him that this case was simply brought up to prejudice him in the eyes of the Supreme Court, and to lengthen the proceedings. Drummond was never in his service, but he (deponent) voluntarily allowed him to temporarily use his office prior to the Webster transactions. He admitted that his bill of costs and disbursements in connection with the matter of Webster amounted to £22 5s. 4d., and that he refunded £17 14s., but said that he did so in order not to be embroiled in the disputes between Webster and the Assets Realisation Association.

The affidavit of Edward Collins, of Kimberley, and formerly a clerk in the employ of respondent, stated that in the course of the action he made minutes of the various charges due to his principal. He said that the respondent made a fair copy of the rough bill of costs, which he put before him. He emphatically denied the statement by Mr. Maasdorp as to what took place before the Taxing Officer. Respondent was not present at the taxation. Deponent said that he should have stated that Mackay, and not Maguire, attended the court, and that the expenses of Mackay should have been allowed, and not disallowed, while the expenses of Maguire should have been disallowed.

The replying affidavit of Mr. Saunderson explained that the delay was due to Mr. Linscott being away in Johannesburg.

Mr. Close for applicant; Mr. Upington for respondent.

Mr. Close submitted that, as to the first branch of the case, the respondent's present explanation was inconsistent with his former explanation on November 24. He urged that the statement given by Mr. Maasdorp as to what took place before the Taxing Officer, the late Mr. Gately, was entitled to credence. The respondent should have taken measures to check the rough bill of costs submitted by his clerk. If he chose to take the risk, and leave the matter entirely in the hands of his clerk, he could not afterwards shelter himself behind that clerk from the consequences of an error, if such it were. He could not now be heard to place the responsibility upon his clerk. As to the other branch of the case, counsel submitted that it was an improper and unprofessional act on respondent's part to enter into an agreement to share profits with a person not connected with the profession, viz., Home Drummond, upon any business introduced by the latter. There was also the question of an item in his account of "paid 15s. stamp." Respondent admitted in his evidence that he had not paid that 15s. His bill amounted to £22 odd, and he returned a cheque for £11 15s., and made further refunds, leaving nothing of the original bill, except practically the amount that he was to share with the manager of the association as profits.

Mr. Upington said he wished to draw attention to the form which the notice of motion had taken. In these matters, where it was sought to remove a man from the roll, the charges should be set out in a definite form, so that he would know what he had to meet. In this instance all that was done was to cite his client into Court, and to tell him that the Law Society intended to apply to have him removed from the roll. The only charge upon which he had been asked to make any explanation was the charge that he included in a bill of costs the expenses of a certain witness who, in fact, was not called or subpoenaed. It appeared that long prior to this explanation being demanded, evidence had been given by Mr. Coulton in a criminal case, and attention was now directed to that. No charge whatever was made, and no explanation demanded. Certain evidence had been brought before the Court to show the respondent's association with one Home Drummond, of notorious memory, and that was done in order to prejudice the respondent. He did not think a more flimsy charge had ever been brought by the Law Society against a professional man. He could have understood their position if with all the facts now before the Court they wrote to Mr. Coulton and censured him for allowing such a thing to happen in his office. He should like to see the faces of the leading attorneys of this city if they were to be held practically criminally responsible for every mistake, error, or omission which occurred through the fault of their articulated clerks. If every attorney was to be dragged before the Court under such circumstances, appearances would be very frequent. With regard to attorneys entering into partnership with persons outside their profession, counsel pointed out that the Law Society did not attempt to take any proceedings against Mr. Markotter after the hearing of the Fagan case (17 C.T.R., 196). It was a common practice for attorneys and auctioneers to enter into partnership throughout the country. The explanation of the respondent, counsel submitted, was a satisfactory one.

Mr. Close, in his reply, quoted sections 21 and 22 of Act 27, 1883, and cited Pienaar v. Incorporated Law Society (1902 T.S., 14). He repudiated the suggestion that the respondent had been picked out by the Law Society for special treatment. As to the point made by his learned friend in regard to partnerships with unqualified persons, he might say that the society were taking proceedings in respect of certain persons who were in a similar position.

Mr. Upington cited Incorporated Law Society v. Tottenham and Longinotto (1904 T.S., 304).

Hopley, J.: In this matter the respondent has been called into court on notice which reads as follows: "Please take notice that application will be made to this honourable Court on the 26th March, at which time you will be required to show cause, if any, why your name shall not be removed from the roll of attorneys of this honourable Court, and why such other order should not be granted against you as to their lordships shall seem meet, and why you shall not be ordered to pay the costs of this application." It is a notice, it will be observed, in very general terms, not specifying any particular charges against the respondent, but simply calling upon him to defend himself against any charges which might be raised out of the accompanying affidavits. The affidavits set forth two sets of circumstances which had been relied upon by the applicant's counsel as showing such professional misconduct as would justify the Court in disqualifying the respondent from practising in his profession for a limited or unlimited period. I think a very sound rule was laid down in the Transvaal Courts in the case referred to by Mr.

Upington, in that of the Law Society against Tottenham and Another, reported in the Transvaal reports, 1904, at page 304. There the Court considered this very question of a sort of vague notice, bringing an attorney or professional man into court without formulating properly the charge against him. On page 309 it says: "When a charge of unprofessional conduct is brought by the society against any practitioner, such charge should be distinctly formulated, and the inquiry ought to be restricted to the charge. This rule should have been adhered to in the present case, and it should be kept in view in all cases of a similar character. It is right, not only that the charge should be stated with distinctness, but the practitioner who is accused should not be asked to meet any point not fairly raised upon the papers. It would be wise for the applicants to bear that decision in mind, and, as far as I am concerned, I am prepared to adopt these words, and say that as the desirable course to be pursued in such a case. The man comes into court to defend himself against what perhaps is not a crime, but what to him is a charge as important as if he were standing charged on some criminal charge. Our own law as to that is that in criminal indictments the charge must be distinctly set forth, and the accused person know the charge he has to meet. Similarly with professional men, they should know the exact acts complained of, and the exact charges should be formulated. Now, in the present instance, the general notice of motion to which I have referred is supported by an affidavit, which sets forth the cause of complaint against the respondent of having made certain charges in a bill of costs in a divorce action in which he had been concerned for the defendant, and in which his client came off successfully. There was included in such bill of costs a charge which ought never to have been included in the bill of costs, a claim for moneys that had never been disbursed. That would be a serious piece of misconduct on the part of an attorney, and I shall deal at once with that portion of the case. His Lordship, after dealing with the facts of the Linscott case, said it was not until the affidavits were filed that this explanation was given of the confusion between the two names, Mackay and Maguire. In view of the lateness of this explanation, it not unjustifiably raised the suspicion of the applicants. Although I think they should formulate all the charges against any respondent, when they bring him to Court, I do not think they should hold private inquiries as suggested by Mr. Upington, and I think if censure is to be meted out to any member of the profession it would be much better it should be done openly in Court.

On the whole, I am satisfied that no actual dishonesty or malpractice was intended. I do think it was a mistake on the part of Collins in the first instance, that Collins did not maliciously go about putting these charges in, but that he intended to do the work at the time. I do not think Collins intended to get any advantage by this mistake, but the explanation was not made to the Law Society, and I think they were right in coming to the Court to have this matter thrashed out, and while I absolve the respondent of anything like intentional professional misconduct, I cannot entirely hold him irresponsible for the mistakes and carelessness of his managing clerk. I do not think the explanation was made in such time that the Law Society was bound to accept it without coming to Court. With regard to the other charge, which I may call the Home Drummond charge, no explanation was asked of the respondent in the correspondence which passed on the matter, and there was some force in Mr. Uppington's contention that it is simply tacked on to the affidavit as an extract from the records of the Criminal Sessions, embodying some evidence given by Mr. Coulton which showed he had been mixed up with Home Drummond, having him in his office and sharing certain charges. I do not think it followed at all that he must have known they were going to bring any charge arising out of that. I think it is a sound rule that was laid down by the Transvaal Court that that charge should have been properly formulated so that the respondent might know what to meet. That has not been done. Such a state of affairs as that alleged is highly undesirable. I am not going to express my opinion as to how far it might disqualify a practitioner from being a practitioner where he shared the proceeds with an unqualified person. I am aware a good deal of this thing goes on, and I am aware in the country districts attorneys have a sort of mixed or heterogeneous class of business. A good deal of money-lending goes on in their offices, and auctioneering business is carried on there, which is not always managed by an attorney or qualified officer of this Court. Whether that is a desirable state of affairs I am not going to say. I do not altogether like it, but I am not going to say generally or broadly that anybody who shares charges with an unprofessional man is necessarily disqualified. I can only say I hope such practice will extend as little as possible, and I think these people who have the honour of their profession at heart and are guided by its traditions and its etiquette, should avoid getting mixed up with that class of business. But I do not think I would consider these matters, because I do not think they have been properly brought before me. The result of it all is that I make no order such as prayed for by the applicant in the present case, because it is not properly brought before me, and, on the second case, I think a satisfactory explanation of how the mistake occurred has been now laid before me. At the same time, the conduct of the respondent was open to enquiry, and his explanations were not given at once and in such a way that the society should be altogether satisfied with the matter. They were right in coming to this court, and I think the respondent should pay the costs of this application.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinne. Respondent's Attorney: C. Brady.]

UNION-CASTLE STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. V. HEINRICH KNORR, AS REPRESENTING THE HAMBURGER ABEKUEIA-DEWIEN, OF HAMBURG, AND THE NEPTUN INSURANCE CO., OF ARENDAL, NORWAY.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order directing the Registrar to pay out certain moneys, in terms of a consent paper

Counsel read an affidavit by Mr. S. S. Jacobszohn, attorney, Cape Town, who said that the Union-Castle Steamship Company sued defendant for £2,000 for salvage services rendered in connection with the salvage of the barque Cingalese and the cargo thereof. At an early stage in the proceedings, and with the view of avoiding expense, the barque and her cargo was publicly sold by the Sheriff, and by consent the net proceeds totalling £1,721 9s. 8d., were paid into Court pending a final order in the suit. The suit, however, had now been settled by defendants agreeing to pay plaintiffs for salvage services £688 11s. 10d., for certain disbursements £75, and taxed costs £57 13s., making a total of £821 4s. 10d. On the 3rd inst., a consent paper, signed by the attorneys of plaintiffs and defendant, was filed with the Registrar, consenting to the said sum being paid out to plaintiffs, and the balance, viz., £900 4s. 10d. being paid to defendant. By formal consent of parties, Mr. Heinrich Knorr, of East London, represented all concerned as far as defendants were concerned. Deponent's firm expresses instructions were to consent to payment out of the £1,721 9s. 8d. of the sum of £321 4s. 10d., and to uplift the balance and remit it to Heinrich Knorr less the defendant's costs of suit. Application had been made to the Registrar, who, however, required an order of the Court.

Order granted in terms of consent paper.

PUNTY V. STREETER.

This was an application upon notice calling upon respondent to show cause why he (applicant) should not be released from civil arrest pending payment of £3 a month.

From the affidavits it appeared that applicant had been arrested at Mossel Bay and lodged in gaol under a decree of civil imprisonment, obtained by respondent. Applicant offered to pay £3 a month if released from gaol, but respondent was not prepared to accept anything less than a guarantee of £10 a month. Applicant had been touring the colonies with a bioscope, and one of the men who had travelled with him said that Puxty had exhibited pictures of the Springbok football matches before crowded houses. In the replying affidavits it was stated that the bioscope tour had not been a great financial success, having only left £20 for applicant's personal expenses during five months.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for applicant; Mr. Benjamin was for respondent.

Mr. Jones said that the applicant was arrested at a time when he did not know a summons was out against him. If he had known that, and he had appeared and offered £3 a month, it was possible that the Court would have suspended the decree on payment of instalments of £3 per mensem. Considering the smallness of the debt, he was now making a reasonable offer. The original debt was £20 odd, and at the most the indebtedness was now £60 odd.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the onus rested upon applicant to show that he had no property or means. He was not entitled to release, unless he paid the debt in full or made a reasonable offer. The applicant had failed to make a reasonable offer, considering the evidence before the Court, as to his means. It was clear that Puxty had property, and until he consented to hand up that property, respondent was entitled to keep him in gaol.

Eventually the Court suggested that the parties should come to a compromise to enable applicant to come to Cape Town and point out the property which he said he had.

Mr. Jones said that the property Puxty said he had at his office in Fletcher's Chambers had already been attached. He urged that the Court should grant relief on payment of from £3 to £5.

Hopley, J.: One cannot help feeling how unsatisfactory is the nature of this application, inasmuch as the Court is almost entirely in the dark as to what are the real facts of the case. I can now only make an order by guesswork—I cannot call it anything more—and leave it open to the creditor to apply again for something more substantial if he finds circumstances warrant it. The order of the Court is that the writ of civil imprisonment be suspended and the applicant released upon payment of £6 to the Deputy-Sheriff of Mossel Bay, and thereafter on the same date of each month at the office of Messrs. Walker and Jacobsohn, attorneys, Cape Town, respondent to have leave to apply for payment of a larger monthly amount if the circumstances warrant such application, applicant to pay costs of this application.

In re INSOLVENT ESTATE BUCHANAN.

Mr. Benjamin moved, on the petition of Isidor Hanau, for the appointment of J. M. P. Muirhead as provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of William Preston Buchanan, with power to make certain disbursements, in connection with certain mining venture at Millwood, Knysna.

Order granted accordingly.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ADMISSION. { 1907.
Apr. 9th.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the admission of Johannes Daniel Louw as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

In re INSOLVENT ESTATE MALAN.

Mr. Roux moved as a matter of urgency for the appointment of David Isaac de Villiers, secretary of the Paarl Board of Executors, and Alfred N. Foot, of E. R. Syfret and Co., as provisional trustees in the insolvent estate of David Johannes Malan, general dealer, of Wellington, with powers to carry on the business and collect outstanding.

Order granted as prayed.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

VAN RYN WINE AND SPIRIT CO. V. JARRETT.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Final order granted.

AIR AND CO. V. WILLIAMS.

Mr. Benjamin was for plaintiffs; Dr. Greer was for defendant.

Dr. Greer applied for a postponement to enable defendant to file further affidavits.

Buchanan, J., however, said that he would hear the case.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

From the affidavits it appeared that the respondent had been connected with Wood, Williams and Co., in liquidation. The plaintiffs had made considerable advances to the company, and they said that defendant was jointly liable to them on a guarantee for £12,000, and that he was liable upon a second bond for £2,500 registered against his house at Sea Point. Defendant said that the liquidation of Wood, Williams and Co. had not been completed, and that the plaintiffs had not ascertained to what extent he was liable under the guarantee. As to the second bond, the property had not been put up for sale, and it was not shown that it would not realise the amount of the bonds.

Dr. Greer said that there were certain allegations in the petition on which the provisional order was granted, but there was no clear allegation that any debt amounting to more than £100 was owing by the respondent to the petitioners. There was a statement that respondent was a guarantor for £12,000 on behalf of Wood, Williams and Co., Ltd., in liquidation. That liquidation had not yet been completed. It was not at all clear that there would be any deficiency in the estate of Wood and Williams, Ltd. Mr. Rubinstein, the petitioner's agent in Cape Town, throughout the whole of his affidavit talked only of the probabilities. The whole thing was in futuro. Until it was shown that there was a deficiency in the estate of Wood and Williams, Ltd., which had not yet become clear, because the assets had not been realised, and until there were some statement before the Court that the co-guarantor could not meet the liability, there was no such clear allegation of the liability on the part of the respondent as would justify the Court in granting the application under Act 38, 1884. The only other ground on which the petition was based was that there was a second bond of £2,500 in favour of petitioners on the defendant's house, Saxmundham, Sea Point. That property had not been realised; no judgment had been taken on the bond, and until it appeared that there would be a liability if the property were realised, he submitted that no such clear proof of the debt had been given as would be required under the Act of 1884. Defendant was sued on what was, after all, a contingent liability.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that it was perfectly clear that the defendant was insolvent. His learned friend said that this was a contingent liability. That was not so. Defendant had made himself liable as principal debtor in the estate of Wood and Williams, and he had bound himself as principal debtor on both bonds. The only asset that defendant had was the house at Sea Point. If that property were sold by the execution creditor the result would be to considerably prejudice the second bondholder, who was the petitioner in this case. The first bondholder only consented to stay his hand in the proceedings against Williams in consideration of the present petition for sequestration being presented. Defendant had not assets to meet even the second bond of £2,500. That bond had been offered to him for £1,000, but he would not take it up. Then there was the liability under the bond for £12,000.

Dr. Greer having been heard in reply,

Buchanan, J.: This is an application for compulsory sequestration of the defendant's estate. The defendant has not committed an act of insolvency, and consequently the creditor is not entitled to apply under the Insolvent Ordinance, but he has proceeded under the Act 38 of 1884, which enables a creditor where no act of insolvency has been committed to petition for the sequestration of his debtor's estate, but which requires that in the petition the creditor should state certain three requisites: (1) That he is a creditor for £100 at least; (2) that he should show that the debtor's estate is insolvent; (3) that he should show that the sequestration will be for the benefit of creditors. He is also required to set forth in his petition the grounds upon which these statements are based. Two classes of objection are taken to the sequestration of this estate, the first founded upon an allegation that the petition does not comply with the Act, and the second founded upon the merits. Now, the petition is certainly very bald, and had there been any conflict upon the allegations in the petition, it is quite possible that this petition might have been held insufficient. As to the first requisite, that is met in the petition by stating that there is a sum of over £1,500 due, wholly unsecured, and in addition other liabilities under a certain deed of suretyship. The second requisite is that assets of the defendant are wholly insufficient to meet his liabilities. A bare allegation is made, but, without carefully scrutinising the affidavit and picking out the allegations, it might have been difficult to show that the estate was really insolvent. However, the defendant has not denied this allegation in form, and consequently the paragraph in the petition must be held to be sufficient. Coming to the merits, it is alleged that the defendant's estate should not be sequestrated, because the claim of the creditors is only upon a guarantee. The original debtors are Messrs. Wood and Williams, the "Williams" being the defendant in this case, the company being formed as a limited liability company. Had the facts remained there, in the absence of any excussion of the principal debtors, it might have been a good answer to say that they cannot now sequestrate the debtor's estate until excussion has taken place. When, however, I come to look at the documents upon which the guarantee is framed, I see that there is an express renunciation of the necessity of excussing the principal debtor, and the creditor might have gone into court without any excussion whatever, and obtained judgment on his bond against the defendant in this case. Hence, therefore, the question of considering the necessity for excussion vanishes in the present instance. The principal point made is that until Wood and Williams are liquidated, it is impossible to ascertain the exact amount of the debt due by the defendant in the present case, but as, on the documents, there is at present a debt due, and the defendant would be liable upon it without excussion, this defence cannot be sustained in this case. Looking to the question as to whether it would be in the interests of creditors that sequestration should go through, we find that there is a first bond on the property due to somebody else, the interest upon this bond is over six months in arrear, the defendant has been threatened with proceedings on this first bond, and he has failed to meet his liability. The second bond is also due, and can be called up, and under the circumstances I think that the utmost that would be saved to defendant by refusing sequestration would be a little delay, and then perhaps proceedings for provisional sentence and a return of nulla bona. As nothing would be gained in this case by postponing the order, it is better for all parties that the provisional order for sequestration should be confirmed and final sequestration adjudicated as prayed.

[Plaintiffs' Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissonne. Defendant's Attorneys: Not on record.]

ESTATE LOUW V. LOFTUS.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Final order granted.

Mr. Buchanan also moved for the appointment of G. W. Steytler as provisional trustee of the estate, with power to sell perishable articles.

Order granted accordingly.

RUNCIMAN AND ANOTHER V. JENKS.

Mr. Toms moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Final order granted.

Mr. Toms, later in the day, moved for the appointment of Wm. Runciman as provisional trustee, with power to collect rents and look after the property of defendant at Simon's Town.

Order granted accordingly.

GENERAL ESTATE AND ORPHAN CHAMBER V. SAFIERDIEN (AS CURATOR NOMINATE TO TALIEP ABAS SAFIERDIEN).

Mr. Toms moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £215, with interest from the 1st April, 1905, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

MACLEOD V. CAMERON.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, with interest from the 1st April, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

S.A. PRODUCE CO. V. GOLDSTEIN AND HURWITZ.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence for interest on a promissory note for £100 and for costs, the capital having been paid.

Order granted for interest and costs.

ADLER V. STAPLES.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence on an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £40, together with £8 2s. 7d. taxed costs.

Defendant said he left security with the plaintiff for £50 odd. The value of the security, which consisted of plate, curios, vases, etc., was about £73.

Cross-examined: Witness paid £73 to the merchants from whom he bought the goods. He had on three occasions offered plaintiff £1 a month. He had no means whatever. He had lately returned from German South-West Africa.

Buchanan, J., said there appeared to be no proof of means, and no order would be made.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

HUDSON, VREEDE AND CO. } 1907.
V. WASSUNG. { Apr. 9th.

Mr. Gutsche moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £2,125 11s. 8d., less £82 5s. paid on account, moneys due by defendant under an acknowledgment of debt.

Order granted.

LIEBENBERG V. BALIE.

Mr. Pohl moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £20 16s., balance of purchase price of certain sheep.

Order granted.

ROODEBLOEM ESTATES V. GAUL.

Mr. De Waal moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £690, balance of purchase price of certain lots at Roodebloem, with interest and costs.

Judgment as prayed, subject to plaintiffs tendering transfer against payment.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Howes applied, under Act 38, 1884, for the rehabilitation of Henry Edward Richold.

Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE } 1907.
STOCKE. { Apr. 9th.

Mr. Swift moved to make absolute certain rule nisi calling upon respondent to show cause why applicant's powers as provisional trustee should not be enlarged to enable him to administer the estate. Respondent did not appear.

Rule absolute, costs out of insolvent estate.

Ex parte ESTATE VAN TONDER.

This was an application for the partition of certain property in the Ladismith district in which minors were interested.

Mr. Close (for petitioners) said that the matter had previously been before Mr. Justice Laurence, who asked whether the petitioners would be prepared to take an order as proposed by the Master in lieu of the order which they asked for. (17, C.T.R., 251.) There was some difficulty in the form in which the order was proposed by the Master, and the Court allowed the matter to stand over to see whether a mutually acceptable order could be framed, and, as a matter of fact, such an order had now been obtained, and he had to ask the Court to sanction the order as signed by the Master.

Order granted in terms of the Master's recommendation.

Ex parte BAILEY.

Mr. Howes asked leave to mention this matter as one of urgency. Counsel said that Mr. Bailey petitioned to have his name removed from the roll of advocates, as he was anxious to enter into articles.

Buchanan, J., said he failed to see how the matter was urgent. He thought the case should be set down in the ordinary way.

In re RECREATION SYNDICATE, LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Gutsche presented the third and final report of the official liquidator, and moved for the usual order.

Order granted.

Ex parte GELDENHUYS.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for leave to the petitioner to enter into a certain agreement by which a syndicate could test one of the farms in the Ceres district for copper deposits. The granting of the application would be to the advantage of the petitioner, and the heirs. The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted in terms of Master's report.

Ex parte SNELL.

Mr. De Waal moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to substitute a certain diagram.

The matter was referred to the Registrar of Deeds for report.

Ex parte MORGAN.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order authorising the issue of a certified copy of a mortgage bond for £500, which had been lost.

Order granted.

*Ex parte POWELSE.Mortgage—Beneficiaries' interest —Possibility of future heirs.

Mr. Benjamin moved for leave to the petitioners, husband and wife, aged respectively 87 and 65, and residing at Port Elizabeth, to mortgage certain property for £750 to pay off certain debts. All the persons interested had agreed to the passing of the bond.

Buchanan, J., said the Court would not go out of its way to sanction a private arrangement such as this unless the mortgage was authorised by the will and was necessary to preserve the property for the beneficiaries. An order would be granted authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer to the children, subject to the applicants' life interest, on the assumption that no more children would be born to the applicants, and their children could pass the bond without coming to court.

*Ex parte FRIEDLANDER BROTHERS.Sale—Cancellation—Rule nisi.

The Court has power to issue a rule nisi, calling upon a respondent, who has purchased land, but has not taken transfer, to show cause why the sale should not be cancelled and to direct substituted service of the rule.

Mr. Close, for the petitioners, moved for an order cancelling the sale of certain erven at De Aar. Purchasers of about 85 lots had not taken transfer of the lots purchased by them, and they could not now be found.

Buchanan, J., asked how could the Court cancel sales of land without notice to the purchasers.

Mr. Close then asked for a rule nisi. Buchanan, J., said it would be quite a new procedure to obtain cancellation of sales by rule nisi. There would be no order.

Mr. Close again mentioned the matter later in the day, and quoted authorities in support of the application. He cited ex parte Henry Stevens (6 C.T.R., 150), Scott v. Isaacs and Another (12 C.T. Reports, 791), and Estate Owen (16 C.T. Reports, 79, 290, and 439).

Buchanan, J.: Counsel has certainly shown precedents for this application now, although I think they are bad precedents. My first impression would have been against it. I would advise counsel when they come into court with an extraordinary thing like this to come armed with authorities. On first impression I certainly would not have granted an order. The practice, however, seems to have sprung up. You may take an order. In the other cases I see that there has been personal service.

Mr. Close pointed out that there was not personal service in Stevens's case.

Rule nisi was granted as prayed, calling upon all interested to show cause why on the 4th June the sales should not be declared cancelled and why the moneys paid under the contracts should not be declared forfeited, personal service as far as possible, failing which publication in the "Government Gazette," the "Richmond Era," and in the native cases in "Imvo" as well, costs to come out of the purchase moneys already paid.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE SPIRO.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the appointment of a provisional trustee in the estate.

Mr. A. T. Hennessey was appointed as provisional trustee, with power to sell the furniture in the estate.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE VORSTER.

Mr. De Waal moved for the confirmation of a certain sale to the petitioner, who was trustee in the estate.

Order granted, subject to meeting of creditors.

In re PURE MILK SUPPLY CO., LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Roux presented the official liquidator's final report for confirmation. The report had lain for inspection in the usual way.

The report was confirmed, with remuneration to the liquidator as brought up in the account. Liquidator authorised to apply the assets in satisfaction of the liabilities in terms of the report and on the filing of the receipts the company declared dissolved. Liquidator authorised to destroy books and documents after payment of awards.

In re GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS, LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for the confirmation of the official liquidator's third report. There were certain creditors in England, and counsel asked that the English creditors should have an opportunity of objecting. With regard to certain disputed claims, counsel suggested that a copy of the report and the Court's order be served upon the different banks, and one, Mr. Palmer, and that they be ordered within six months to establish their claims.

It was ordered that a copy of the report be served on the banks, and the creditor, Mr. Palmer, and that a rule nisi be granted calling upon them to establish their claims within six months, failing which to be struck off the list of creditors. It was further ordered that the liquidator have power to ask for particulars from creditors on affidavit as to how and when the debentures come into their possession within three months of posting the registered letter, and authority granted to pay 4s. 6d. in the £ on undisputed claims, sufficient being held in reserve to pay other creditors if necessary. The liquidator, who was appointed some five years ago, to be allowed 2½ per cent. on the amounts which he recovered.

AFRICAN REAL ESTATE CO., LTD. V. ATTAWAY.

This was an application for the ejectment of respondent from certain schools and premises.

Mr. Roux (for applicants) said that respondent had left the premises, and he had now to apply for costs only.

Order granted for costs.

COMMERCIAL UNION ASSURANCE CO., LTD. V. BRAAMT.

Mr. McGregor moved for the appointment of a commission de bene esse to take the evidence of Mr. Battersby, of Cape Town. Action had not yet been commenced, but was threatened, and the application was made under Rule 35. Mr. Battersby intended to leave the Colony on the 17th April.

Application granted, Mr. De Waal to be commissioner, costs reserved for further order of Court.

Ex parte ESTATE SMITH.

Mr. De Waal moved for leave to the executor testamentary to raise a loan upon certain landed property to pay estate debts and transfer charges.

Leave granted to mortgage the property for such amount as shall be approved by the Master.

Ex parte OLIVER.

Mr. Pohl moved for leave to petitioner to sue her husband by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce. The petition stated that the respondent was at present in gaol at Potchefstroom, Transvaal.

Leave to sue by edict granted, citation returnable on the 4th June, personal service.

Ex parte BESTER.

Mr. De Waal moved for leave to petitioner, who is surviving spouse of the late Andries J. Bester, to sell certain landed property in the division of Riversdale, minors being interested.

Order in terms of the Master's report.

SCHOOMBEE V. SCHOOMBEE.

Mr. M. Bisset moved upon notice to respondent to show cause why a certain erf in the village of Steynsburg, owned by Elizabeth MacAllister, a minor, with a life interest in favour of the respondent (grandfather of the minor), should not be sold for £125, and the proceeds appropriated to the cost of maintenance and education of the said child, payment of arrear rates and taxes, and the balance to be paid into the Guardian's Fund for the benefit of the minor. Counsel read an affidavit of service upon the respondent, who lives in the district of Jamestown, and who stated that he did not intend to oppose the application. It was stated that Mrs. Schoombée was the widow of the executor dativo of Mrs. MacAllister's estate. Mrs. MacAllister's husband was believed to be still alive, but his whereabouts were unknown. Petitioner was looking after the little girl.

Order granted, authorising the Master to transfer the property, to receive the proceeds, and therefrom to pay arrear rates and taxes, balance to be paid by him at his discretion for the past and future benefit of the minor, costs of this application to come out of the proceeds.

Ex parte EXECUTORS OF ESTATE EATON.

Mr. Gardiner moved for leave to attach the rents as against one Visser, who held a mortgage bond until such time as the immovable property was sold.

Order granted.

Ex parte ESTATE LATE ALBRECHT.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to the executor (Mr. Steytler), to cancel a certain sale, and to have it declared that certain amounts paid on account were forfeited.

A rule nisi was granted, returnable 4th June, calling on all interested to show cause why the sale should not be cancelled, with costs, personal service if possible, failing which, one publication in the "Gazette" and the "Cape Times."

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ESTATE FOURIE V. FOURIE. { 1907.
{ Apr. 10th.

This was an application upon notice calling upon respondent to show cause why she should not pay costs of an application which she made in October last for leave to sue the estate of the late Ockert Johannes Fourie, sen., in forma pauperis.

From the affidavits it appeared that the late Ockert Johannes Fourie's first wife predeceased him. He then entered into marriage with the present respondent under an ante-nuptial contract, which provided that, should he not make a will, she was to be sole heiress, and also provided that a donation of £50 was to be paid to her. She brought an application in October last for leave to sue the estate of her late husband in forma pauperis, claiming that she was sole heiress (16 C.T.R., 896). The executor dative contested her right to receive anything from the estate as sole heiress, and said that there was no property acquired by the deceased after the death of his first wife. He said he was willing to pay over £50, which had been tendered before the application was made. When the application for leave to sue as a pauper came before the Chief Justice he made an order that Mrs. Fourie be paid £50, so that there would be no good to sue in forma pauperis, and directed costs to be costs in the cause. A sum of £50 was paid over by the attorney in the estate at Jansenville, but the present respondent had taken no further steps with regard to an action. The executor had filed an account with the Master, to which, however, an objection had been taken by the respondent. She submitted that she was unable to bring an action until the executor had filed an account of the separate estate of her late husband. The executor said that there were no assets in the separate estate to account for.

Mr. Gardiner was for applicant; Mr. Swift was for respondent.

Mr. Gardiner said that the executor wanted to wind up the estate. He said that there was no property acquired after the death of the first wife, and that there was nothing for the second wife (the present respondent) to get from the estate. If the applicant were wrong, then it was the duty of the respondent to impeach the account. The respondent ought to be put to terms.

Mr. Swift said that his client was on the horns of a dilemma. She was disinclined to rush into litigation, because she did not know how much there was in the estate of her late husband that she was likely to get, and, in any case, the costs would have to be borne by her. The respondent wanted to see an account of her late husband's estate. It was desirable in the interests of all parties that a compromise should be come to, and she was prepared to accept £50 in satisfaction of any claim she might have, provided the applicant's estate would pay all her expenses. The respondent was very loth to go into an action at law against her stepson. Counsel submitted that the present application was premature.

Mr. Gardiner said that he did not see why the executor should pay the costs of the respondent. He had filed an account already, which showed what property there was in the estate. Mr. Fourie said that there was no asset to be brought up in the separate estate of the late Ockert Fourie, and that, in fact, the estate had deteriorated since the death of the first wife.

Buchanan, J.: The respondent, Mrs. Fourie, a widow in indigent circumstances, applied to the Court for leave to sue in forma pauperis. In consequence of that application the Court made an order directing the then respondent, who, it was shown, I presume, had money in his hands belonging to the estate Fourie, to pay over £50 at once. He did so, and consequently she, being put in funds, could not longer sue in forma pauperis. She took no further steps with regard to an action. The question as to why she has not taken these steps is a matter now in dispute. She says it is because the executor has not brought up proper accounts; he says he has brought up proper accounts. As the matter stands, it seems that the Master has not accepted the accounts. I would like to hear from the Master why he did not accept the accounts. It is a great pity that there should be further litigation, because the costs of whatever further steps are taken will have to come out of the estate of this poor woman. I want to save the woman any further expenses, and before making any final order I would like to be informed by the Master what is the exact state of the account. It is quite true that the executor is bound to wind up the estate, and Mrs. Fourie, if she have any cause of action, must proceed, or she must drop it entirely. Before making an order I will communicate with the Master with a view of ascertaining the exact state of the account.

HEDLEY BROS. V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Discovery—Colonial Defence Department.

This was an application calling upon respondents to show cause why (a) they should not be required to make further and fuller disclosure of the communications which have passed between the officers of the Cape Mounted Police at Prieska during the months of October and November, 1906, with their superior officers or the Defence Department, relative to the acquisition of horses or other animals in connection with the resistance or stoppage of the Ferreira raiders, or otherwise relating to the issues raised in the suit now pending in this Court, and (b) why an order should not be granted requiring Sub-Inspectors Strickland, Bosanquet, and Grant and Inspector Spencer to make discovery on oath of all papers, documents, and writings which are or have been in the power, possession, or control of each or any of them relating to matters at issue in the above suit.

Mr. Gardiner was for applicants; Mr. Howel Jones was for the Government.

Mr. Gardiner said that the application arose out of an action in which applicants sued respondents for the purchase price of certain horses and mules bought, the plaintiffs alleged, by the Government in connection with the recent Ferreira trouble. The plaintiffs alleged that the Government, through their agent, Lieutenant Bosanquet, bought the animals from them. The Government disputed the sale; they denied that any person entered into an agreement of sale, and said that, if he did, he was in no way authorised to act on their behalf. In answer to the Court, Mr. Gardiner said he recognised that he could not press the second part of the application.

From the affidavits, it appeared that on the 21st February last the applicants obtained a discovery order against the respondents, and that, in reply Mr. Janisch, the Under Colonial Secretary, stated on affidavit that they had no further documents to disclose relating to matters in the suit. However, as Mr. Jones said, "to make assurance doubly sure," the Government attorneys telegraphed as follows to the Commandant-General, Cape Colonial Forces, King William's Town: "Re Hedley Bros. v. Government. Did any communications by letter or telegraph pass between Strickland, Bosanquet, Grant, or Spencer and headquarters on the 12th or 13th November, relative to purchase of horses from Hedley Bros.? Did anyone at Prieska ever have instructions by letter or telegraph from superior officers or Defence Department as to purchase of horses. Please wire reply; urgent." The reply was as follows: "Your wire received. Your first question, no, until morning of 14th November, before breakfast, when Hedley interviewed the Commandant-General at Prieska police camp about the horses which were then in police stable yard, existence of Hedley Bros. unknown at headquarters. Your second question, only instructions in any way connected with horses were wired to Captain Grant on 12th idem, that he should be prepared to engage twenty Bastards mounted, details of pay to be notified to him on arrival Commandant-General at Prieska. No orders to purchase horses sent to Prieska."

[Buchanan, J.: I presume, Mr. Jones, that the Government has no objection to show the plaintiffs that wire?]

Mr. Jones: Not the slightest, but I submit that it is not relevant, and that we were not bound to disclose it.

Mr. Gardiner said the wire stated that the Bastards were to be mounted. That, he argued, might mean that the Bastards must be mounted. The communication to the headquarters was in very restrictive terms. He submitted that the affidavit of Mr. Janisch had not been made with sufficient care, because he said that there were no further documents to disclose, and now this telegram had been disclosed. He contended that the respondents should discover any documents relating to the purchase of horses at Prieska, not for Hedley Bros. merely. Counsel cited Wright v. Pitt (3 Chancery Appeals, 609), Lyell v. Kennedy (21, Chancery Division, 1), and Bisbrough v. Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York (1906, Transvaal High Court, 53).

Mr. Jones said that they were perfectly willing that plaintiffs should see the telegram. The telegram could not be read as an authority to anybody to purchase horses. All that it said was, "be prepared to enrol twenty Bastards mounted." The Government denied that Bosanquet had any authority to buy horses.

Buchanan, J.: The applicant in this case is plaintiff in an action against the Colonial Government for the recovery of the purchase price of certain horses supplied to one of the officers of the Government. The Government deny the authority of this officer to purchase the horses or to enter into the contract alleged in the declaration. That is a question at issue which can be decided at the trial. In the meantime, by the Rules of Court the plaintiff has applied for an order of discovery upon the defendant of all documents in his possession. The defendant has made an affidavit disclosing what documents he has relating to the matter, and he says he has no further documents in his possession which bear upon the matter at issue. In consequence of the plaintiff alleging that they had got further documents, the Colonial Secretary or the Defence Department in Cape Town telegraphed to the officers on the frontier to ask whether they had any further documents in their possession, and the reply is to the effect that there is only one document, the terms of which are set forth in the telegram which has been received. That telegram I cannot now say is a document which is inadmissible or is not relevant to the issues at the trial; on the contrary, I think it is relevant, and would be admissible at the trial, as far as the facts are before me now. I think, therefore, that the telegram is a document which ought to have been disclosed on discovery. I do not say there was any default on the part of the Defence Department in not disclosing it before, because they were totally ignorant of the existence of such a document until they communicated by telegraph with the headquarters. Seeing that one document is in existence which should have been discovered, I think as a matter of form they ought to amend their affidavit of discovery by including this telegram. It is possible, on further inquiries, they might find other telegrams and documents. If so, they ought to disclose them. I do not impute the slightest wish on the part of the Government to conceal any of these documents. An order will be made on the Government to make a further discovery affidavit, and the costs of this application, I think, may fairly be costs in the cause.

Ex parte SELLAR BROS. AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Gardiner moved as a matter of urgency for the appointment of a curator bonis in the insolvent estates of Israel Isaac Kerbel and Hyman David Sher and I. I. Kerbel, trading as H. D. Sher and Co., of Calvinia. The petitioners were Sellar Bros. and Wm. Spilhaus and Co., of Cape Town. Petitioners suggested that Mr. A. N. Foot should be appointed curator bonis pending the election of trustees, with power to carry on the hotel, canteen, and general dealer's business. It was stated that the Master would in no case appoint a curator bonis unless authorised by order of Court.

Buchanan, J., said he thought the Master was the best person to appoint a curator. An order would be granted authorising such curator as the Master may appoint to sell the perishables and carry on the business at the risk, should sequestration be superseded, of the petitioning creditors.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ESTATE FOURIE V FOURIE. { 1907.
Apr. 15th.

This matter had been standing over for judgment, his lordship having intimated a desire to see the Master with regard to the state of the account in the estate Fourie, with a view of saving further expense to the respondent.

It was now stated that the parties had come to a settlement, and had filed a consent paper.

Buchanan, J.: The order of Court will be in terms of consent paper filed.

DUNDAS V. BEUKES.

Mr. M. Bisset moved to make absolute a certain rule nisi calling upon respondent to show cause why an order should not be granted directing the Sheriff to effect transfer of certain landed property in British Bechuana-land. Counsel said that due publication had now been made of the rule, in the absence of personal service, and that respondent had not appeared to show cause.

Rule absolute.

Later Buchanan, J., said that the order he had just made would be recalled, as he found from the original papers that the rule was made returnable, not for the first day of term, but for the 16th April. The matter must be mentioned again to-morrow.

Mr. Bisset subsequently explained that he had been under a misapprehension as to the return day.

BLACK V. SCHROEDER.

Sunday trading—Ordinance 1 of 1838, Sec. 2.

The sale of live-stock on Sunday, even by private bargain, is illegal, and therefore null and void.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of King William's Town in an action brought by Samuel Black against F. W. Schroeder, a hotelkeeper, to recover £13 10s., purchase price of a certain horse bought by plaintiff from defendant.

From the record, it appeared that plaintiff's claim was based on an allegation that the horse contained a latent defect, to wit, glanders, at the time of the purchase from defendant on the 27th October last. Plaintiff re-sold the animal on the 2nd December to another party, and whilst it was in the latter's possession, the horse was destroyed under Act No. 27, 1895, as suffering from glanders and farcy.

At the hearing, exception was taken by defendant on the ground that the sale took place on Sunday, October 28, and that it was void and illegal under section 2, Ordinance 1 of 1838. The Magistrate, in sustaining the exception with costs, said that he found the sale took place on a Sunday, and both parties had placed themselves beyond the pale of the law. The contract was one that could not be recognised in any way whatever.

Mr. Gardiner was for appellant; respondent did not appear.

Mr. Gardiner said that two questions arose in this case: (1) Whether this was a sale prohibited by the Ordinance, and (2) whether, even if it were prohibited by the Ordinance, the contract could not now be enforced. Tracing the purposes of the Statute, he pointed out that the sale of landed property and of shares on a Sunday was not prohibited. In Queen v. Marks (5 H.C. 363) it had been held that a barber may carry on his avocation on a Sunday. One may catch a fish on a Sunday, but apparently, according to the Ordinance, one may not discharge a gun on a Sunday.

[Buchanan, J.: Discharging a gun may annoy the neighbours.]

Mr. Gardiner argued from this that the Ordinance was intended to prohibit public sales, the idea being that religious sentiments should not be hurt by any business carried on in public which was likely to offend.

[Buchanan, J.: Playing games in public is prohibited, but there is nothing said in the Ordinance about playing games in private.]

Mr. Gardiner submitted that the Act was not intended to deal with isolated sales, such as the one under consideration. Plaintiff wanted to go into the country, he tried to buy the horse, but failed; he then tried to borrow the horse, and failed; he could not steal the horse, but eventually a sale was concluded. The Act, counsel urged, would not have applied to a case where a horse broke down on circuit and it was absolutely necessary to buy a fresh horse on a Sunday. Surely such a purchase would not be prohibited.

[Buchanan, J.: The spirit of the Act is that you should not be travelling on a Sunday.]

Mr. Gardiner: That is so, but I am afraid it is one that is very often honoured in the breach. He cited Drury v. Defontaine (1 Taunton, 129), and Smith v. Sparrow (4 Bingham's Cases, 84). On the question as to whether, even if the sale were illegal, it could be declared actually void, counsel quoted Voet (2, 12, 2). He also cited Queen v. Hermann (1 Appeal Court Cases, 316) and Addison's "Law of Contracts" (9th ed., p. 83).

Buchanan, J.: The defendant in this case sold a horse on Sunday. The plaintiff paid the purchase price for the horse, and afterwards resold the animal, and some time afterwards this horse was found to be suffering from glanders and farcy, and had to be destroyed, whereupon the plaintiff sues the defendant to recover the purchase price which he paid for the horse. From early times there have been statutory provisions against Sunday transactions, and I see it mentioned in the first volume of our Ordinances that the first Roman Statute that can be traced was to the following effect: "On the venerable day of the sun let the Magistrate and people residing in cities rest, and let all workshops be closed. In the country, however, persons engaged in agriculture may freely and lawfully continue their pursuits, because it often happens that another day is not so suitable for grain-growing or for vine planting; lest by neglecting the proper moment for such operations the bounty of heaven be lost." From time to time our Statute Book contains various enactments prohibiting dealing on the Lord's Day, and this Ordinance, No. 1 of 1838, entitled "An Ordinance for the better Observance of the Lord's Day," makes this statutory provision: "That from and after the passing of this Ordinance it shall not be lawful for any person to sell or offer for sale any goods, merchandise, cattle, or other live-stock." There are other provisions in the section which I need not now refer to. In this case live-stock, viz., a horse, was actually sold on the Sunday. It is contended that this Ordinance was only intended to deal with public transactions and not transactions in private. The language of the Ordinance is, in my opinion, much wider than that, and it is impossible for the Court to restrict this section to public transactions only. In other sections of the Ordinance certain things are provided for, viz., playing games, and it is expressly enacted that no games shall be played in a public place, but it does not say a word about prohibiting games played in private. Hence, one would say that the distinction between public transactions and private transactions was in the minds of the Legislature at the time this ordinance was passed. They did not restrict the sale of live-stock to public transactions, but prohibited it altogether on the Lord's Day. Then it is said that if the contract comes under the ordinance it is still a contract which can be enforced. The authority of Voet has been cited to show that a contract entered into on a Sunday is not necessarily void or voidable. Voet does say that if a transaction is entered into on a Sunday, though it is prohibited, if it is carried out, it cannot be annulled. That is, in short, the opinion expressed by Voot, of the law, as it stood in the time when he wrote, but by express Statute the Legislature has placed our law on a different footing. This is a transaction entered into on a Sunday; it is a prohibited transaction, and I think the Magistrate was quite right in holding that neither of the parties who had entered into a prohibited transaction can come to the Court for redress. The Magistrate's decision on this point seems to be sound, and the appeal must, consequently, be dismissed. There is no appearance on the other side and there is no need to enter into the question of costs. It is not suggested that every contract entered into on a Sunday is necessarily void, but only such transactions as are specially prohibited, and the High Court of Griqualand has held that exercising the occupation of a barber is not included in the words "to trade, or deal, or keep open any shop, etc." That expression of opinion by another Court shows that it is not every transaction that is prohibited. But when there is a transaction which is clearly prohibited shown to have been entered into, the Court cannot assist the parties to revert to the position in which they were before the transaction took place. As to the policy of the law, I have nothing to say.

WARNER V. BOTHA.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Nqamakwe (Transkei), in an action brought by William D. Warner against Christopher R. Botha to recover £50 damages for alleged breach of contract in connection with the purchase of 200 young ewes.

Plaintiff alleged that defendant agreed to sell him the sheep on the 10th September last, and in accordance with the agreement he (plaintiff) sent a messenger to pick out the sheep. Defendant, however, refused to allow him to pick the same and to carry out the contract.

The Magistrate found that plaintiff had not proved that a sale was concluded on the 10th September, and granted absolution from the instance with costs.

Mr. Close was for appellant; Mr. Benjamin was for respondent.

Mr. Close said that the defence and the finding of the Magistrate were contradictory in that at one time it was suggested that there was no sale, and at another time it was suggested that there was a sale but a repudiation. He submitted, on the facts, that there was a concluded contract, that plaintiff never withdrew from that contract, and, even if he had wanted to do so, there was no concurrence on the part of defendant, which would have left the contract open.

Mr. Benjamin said that on the passage in the defendant's evidence on which his learned friend put so much stress in regard to the repudiation of the contract, it was clear from the Magistrate's reasons what was meant by the evidence. There was really no definite contract entered into in the correspondence. Taking the correspondence, on what number of sheep could there be said to be a definite agreement? It was perfectly clear that the intention of the parties was that the plaintiff should inspect the sheep and see if satisfactory, and then make his selection. It was only if there was approval there would be a purchase. A definite time had been fixed for the plaintiff to communicate and failing to communicate the defendant was entitled to treat the negotiations as off, and there was clear authority for him doing so in Anson on Law of Contracts (page 20). Counsel submitted there was no contract entered into between the parties because the original contract entered into on the 10th September had been put an end to by the letter of the 17th September.

Mr. Close contended, in reply, that in order to make the contract of the 10th September lapse there ought to be something more definite than there was, and there was nothing to show any acquiescence on Botha's part that he intended to allow the matter to drop.

Buchanan, J., said the issue in the case was whether a concluded contract was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant. The defendant had certain sheep for sale, and advertised in the newspapers. There upon correspondence took place between him and the plaintiff as to the price. The defendant offered the sheep for 16s. 6d., and the plaintiff offered 16s., but his lordship presumed the plaintiff must have offered something less. His lordship, after reviewing the correspondence, thought under the circumstances the Magistrate was justified in saying there was no definite and concluded contract between the parties. The appeal would be dismissed, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

DE VILLIERS V. NICHOLLAS { 1907.
AND CO. { Apr. 16th.
" 17th.
" 19th.

Sale and purchase—Estimate and expectation—Quantity.

Defendants had agreed to purchase plaintiff's entire crop of oranges and naartjes, "about 200,000," at 4s. a hundred. The portion of the crop accepted by the defendants as merchantable numbered only 95,425.

The Court found on the evidence that the plaintiff had not warranted the number of oranges, but had merely in good faith given a rough estimate of the probable number.

Held, that the plaintiff was not responsible for the shortage and that the defendant was liable for the number actually delivered.

This was an action brought by Abraham Conrad de Villiers, a farmer of the Groot Drakenstein district of the Paarl, to recover from the defendants—fruit merchants of Cape Town—sums of £5 8s., £30, and £56 9s. 9d., under a certain agreement for the sale of fruit.

The declaration set out that on the 2nd June, 1906, the defendant entered into an agreement whereby the defendant purchased and took over all the crop of the oranges and naartjes on the plaintiff's farm at 4s. per 100, and undertook to furnish the labour for the picking of the fruit, the plaintiff to convey the fruit to the railway and delivery to extend from the 1st August to the 31st October, 1906. In July it was agreed that the delivery should commence on the 20th July instead of the 1st August. On the 20th July the defendant commenced to take delivery of the fruit, and furnished a picker, and continued to take delivery until 18th September. Thereafter the defendant was unable to furnish a picker, and requested the plaintiff to undertake the picking of the fruit. Plaintiff, until the end of October, furnished the labour, which he estimated cost £5 8s. During the delivery of the fruit the defendant refused to accept the delivery of any fruit which had fallen from the trees, amounting to 20,000, and the plaintiff said he was entitled to claim 4s. per 100 for these, which was £40. In order to minimise the loss, plaintiff subsequently sold the fruit for £10. There was, further, due to the plaintiff £56 9s. 9d. for fruit actually delivered to the defendant under the agreement during September and October, and he claimed judgment for a total sum of £91 17s. 9d., with interest and costs.

The defendant, in his plea, denied that he took over all the crop of oranges and naartjes of the plaintiff. He admitted entering into a contract with the plaintiff, the terms of which were contained in a letter, by which the plaintiff undertook to deliver all his crop of oranges and naartjes to the defendant, amounting to about 200,000, at 4s. per 100, between August 1 and October 31. Defendant denied any special agreement to furnish the labour. The picking of the fruit was to be done by the plaintiff and his servants. The defendant admitted that he supplied an experienced picker, but denied any liability in respect of the picking. The defendant stated that the delivery of the fruit continued up to the 24th October, 1906, at which date 96,245 oranges and naartjes had been delivered to him. He never refused to take delivery of any fruit fallen from the trees. He had no knowledge of the alleged sale of 10,000 oranges by the plaintiff. Defendant admitted there was due and owing to the plaintiff the sum of £63 9s. 10d. in respect of the fruit delivered, and tendered that sum and £5 8s. 9d., subject to a claim in reconvention. Between July 1, 1906, and October 31, 1906, 96,245 oranges and naartjes in all were delivered, but by reason of the plaintiff's failure in terms of the contract to deliver to the defendant the stipulated number, namely, 200,000 between the dates mentioned, the defendant was compelled to purchase other oranges at prices varying from 8s. to 11s., and suffered loss in the sum of £276 10s., and claimed that amount for breach of contract, less £63 9s. 10d. and £5 8s. 9d., which he tendered.

The plaintiff, in his replication, denied he undertook to deliver 200,000.

Mr. Molteno (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Burton (with him Dr. Creor) was for the defendants.

A. C. de Villiers, the plaintiff, stated that on the 26th May one Purcell offered to find a purchaser for the oranges and naartjes. A couple of days later Purcell offered 4s. per 100, the oranges and naartjes to be picked between the 1st August and the end of October. Purcell took witness to Nichollas and Co.

Nichollas agreed to take fruit at 4s. per 100, and asked him how many there were on the trees. Witness said he could not tell, but the defendant suggested there might be 200,000. Nichollas said the number did not matter much, but they should put down some number to make the contract binding. After the picker came to the farm the defendant refused to take fallen fruit. A great deal of the fruit fell on account of the late picking and the strength of the wind. Witness had not been paid for any of the fallen fruit. It was impossible to estimate the amount of fruit on the trees when the oranges were green. He told the defendant that the crop was about 200,000. Purcell was now acting for Nichollas and Co. He had never sold fruit in that way before.

D. de Villiers, uncle of the plaintiff, said the crop of fruit in question was a good one. He would not undertake the task of estimating the number of oranges on the trees. It seemed a full crop. The coloured man who bought the fallen fruit from the plaintiff said that he took away 10,000 oranges, and left more on the ground. He sold the fruit at a profit, and paid 2s. a 100 for the oranges.

Petrus van der Merwe, an overseer on the plaintiff's farm, remembered the plaintiff selling his crop to the defendants and the arrival of the picker. Witness saw the fruit which fell from the trees. The defendant refused to accept the fruit, and portion of it was disposed of to the coloured man.

Mr. Molteno closed his case.

Nichollas Contels, a partner in the defendant firm, said his firm dealt largely in fruit, and that within a month of the transaction with the plaintiff he bought several crops at prices ranging from 2s. to 2s. 9d. Witness asked an approximate number of the oranges and naartjes, and the plaintiff said about 200,000, and witness said it did not matter whether there were 10,000 more or less. Witness asked for the number so that he would know to some extent how many thousands he would have. Witness offered 4s. because plaintiff was to keep the fruit until the end of October, when the market would be higher. Witness took everything the plaintiff sent him, and gave credit for the fruit received. Witness never told the plaintiff not to send fallen oranges, but what he objected to was rotten oranges. In the middle of August witness estimated there were 175,000 oranges left, and offered £250 for the lot. Witness had to buy 30,000 oranges in October to keep his business going, at an average of about 9s. 6d. per 100.

Hyman Purcell, hotel proprietor, of the Paarl, stated that after he had offered the oranges to the defendant, the latter said that he was well supplied, but if witness could find a farmer who would undertake to keep delivery going to the end of October he would give 3s. 6d. to 4s. per 100. That was 1s. 6d. to 2s. over the market rate, and it was made clear to the plaintiff that the increased price was given to keep the delivery running over the rising market. The defendant asked the plaintiff how much crop there might be, and the latter said about 200,000.

He was present in September last when the defendant offered £250 for the remainder of the crop. The bulk of the crop was on the trees, as only 26,000 had been taken away. Nichollas complained of receiving fruit in bad condition, and did not object to the fallen fruit. When witness was at the orchard in August and September he saw a few bad oranges lying about, but nothing like the number mentioned by Mr. De Villiers.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Mr. Molteno said he would deal first with the nature of the contract entered into between De Villiers and Nichollas and Co. He would leave the picking out of the question, and as to the fallen fruit he could deal with that afterwards. It was certain that the price of the oranges had been fixed, but the number of the oranges was not fixed. He thought the authorities upon contracts of this nature showed the contention on behalf of the plaintiff was right—that he had to get paid for the number of oranges delivered, and that the words "about 200,000" were merely words of estimate and expectation. Counsel cited the case of Maclay v. Perry and Co. (44 L.T., 152). It was held there that the words "about 150 tons" were words of estimate and expectation, and that there was no warranty as to the quantity the defendants were bound to deliver. It was an almost identical case with the one in question. The sale was fixed before the plaintiff had seen Nichollas. There was another case in favour of the plaintiff, that of McConnell v. Murphy and Co. (Law Reports, 5 P.C. Appeal Cases, 205). Counsel also cited Benjamin on sales (p. 701). The plaintiff to get paid for the number of oranges and naartjes, and when he contended that there might be 200,000, he was acting in good faith, without any intent to deceive. These words were not of the nature of a warranty, and the plaintiff did not bind himself to the amount. Counsel referred the Court to Moyle on contract of sale in the Civil Law (p. 72), and Gargullin v. Daniel (C.M. and R., vol. 2, p. 61). If there was no fraud or wrongdoing on the part of the plaintiff, the defendant could not recover damages, but must pay for the amount handed over. In conclusion, counsel quoted Voet (18-1-7), and pointed out that the crop was visited by all the parties, and the plaintiff carried out his contract in a bona fide manner. It was clear there was a dispute in regard to the fallen fruit, and counsel submitted that the claim in reconvention must fail, and the plaintiff was entitled to succeed on the amount actually due for goods delivered, and also for the picking expenses, which were tendered.

Mr. Burton referred generally at the outset to what was said in the Encyclopædia of the laws of England on the meaning of the word "about." There it was stated that where the words were not to be taken as words of strict contract and warranty, the vendor would be allowed a reasonable latitude in performance. Counsel cited the cases of Morris v. Lerison (Law Reports, 1876, the Common Pleas Division, page 158), Müller and Co. v. Born and Co. (Law Reports, Queen's Bench Division, 1900, p. 691). Stroud's Judicial Dictionary (p. 487) set out where goods were sold "say about" these words were intended to provide only for a small difference. The case of Maclay v. Perry and Co. was undoubtedly his learned friend's sheet-anchor, but it would be seen there that the surrounding circumstances were all in favour of the defendants, who were builders, and not iron merchants. The agent of the plaintiff estimated the amount. In the present case the plaintiff was a dealer in the thing of which he was going to estimate, and surely if anyone was to give an estimate it would be the man whose business it was to grow oranges. There was no agreement here on the part of the agent as to the number. The defendant, in buying 50,000 oranges from Mr. Minaar and 350,000 from Sir Henry de Villiers, must know approximately what the supply was going to be. It was significant in the case of the other farmers the difference ranged from 2 to 5 per cent., whereas with Mr. De Villiers' case the difference was 40 per cent. It was also important to note that the plaintiff was getting a much better price than his neighbours, and he must have understood that it was the intention of the dealer to maintain portion of the larger crop on the trees right through up to the end of October, when he would obtain a better price. With 10,000 more or less, the defendant would not have complained, but he had a right to protest when he was faced with such a difference as in this case. There was a representation made as to the number of the fruit in the orchard, and by that representation within a reasonable margin the plaintiff must be bound.

Cur. Adv. Fult.

Postea (April 19th).

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff states in his declaration, that on June 2, 1906, he sold to the defendant his crop of oranges and naartjes at a price of 4s. per 100, and that he delivered to the defendants in all 96,425 oranges and naartjes, on account of which he has received payments, leaving a balance due of £56 9s. 9d., which balance he now claims. The defendants allege that the contract between the parties was for the sale of the whole of the plaintiff's crop of oranges and naartjes, amounting to about 200,000 at the price of 4s. per 100, and they admit that there is a balance due in respect of oranges already delivered of £53 9s. 10d., but they set up a claim in reconvention for £275 10s. for damage suffered by them by reason of breach of contract on the part of the plaintiff. They say that the plaintiff sold to them the whole of his crop, amounting to about 200,000, and by reason of his failure in terms of the said contract to deliver to the defendants the stipulated number of oranges and naartjes they have been compelled to buy other oranges and naartjes at a loss of £275 10s., which they claim in reconvention. It appears that at the interview at which the instruments of sale and purchase were signed by the parties on June 2, 1906, the defendant Contellis wished to ascertain approximately what he could calculate upon as the number of oranges and naartjes he would receive, in order to regulate his subsequent dealings in the market. There is some conflict in the evidence as to what exactly was said upon this point, but the conclusion I come to upon the whole is that the plaintiff and Purcell both took part in an attempt to arrive at some sort of estimate. Purcell who, in the first instance, had negotiated the sale for the defendants, had seen the orchard, and I am satisfied that he considered himself competent to express an opinion on the subject. After some discussion, the two of them arrived at the estimate of 200,000. But I am also satisfied that De Villiers made Contellis understand that, in giving his opinion, he did not speak with any confidence, and did not bind himself as a matter of contract to the quantity estimated. After the conversation Contellis signed on behalf of the defendant the following document: "I, the undersigned, agree to take all the crop of oranges and naartjes, about 200,000, at 4s. a hundred. The start of the delivery will be from the 1st August to the 31st October, 1906." Upon the construction of this document in the light of the surrounding circumstances the decision of this case will depend. The plaintiff contends that he is bound to deliver to the defendants his whole crop of oranges and naartjes, and no more, the number specified being merely a guess or estimate of the probable quantity, and not a binding condition of the agreement, and the defendants maintain, on the other hand, that the specified number forms a material part of the contract, the term "about," leaving the plaintiff a reasonable and moderate margin, more or less than 200,000, in performing the contract. It appears from the authorities cited at the Bar that the principles involved in the case have been fully discussed and considered in cases decided in America and England, and it seems to me that the grounds given for the decisions are such as are fully applicable under our law. The general result of the decided cases may be conveniently given in the words of the rules laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States, appearing in Benjamin on Sale, page 701: "Where the goods are identified by reference to independent circumstance, e.g., all the goods deposited in a certain warehouse, or all that may be manufactured by the vendor, in a certain establishment, or to be shipped in certain vessels, and the quantity is named with the qualification 'about' or 'more or less,' or words of like import, the contract applies to the specific goods, and the naming of the quantity is not regarded as in the nature of a warranty, but only as an estimate of the probable amount, in reference to which good faith is all that is required of the party making it. Where no such independent circumstances are referred to, and the engagement is to furnish goods to a certain amount, the quantity specified is material, and governs the contract. The addition of qualifying words in such cases only provides against accidental variations arising from slight and unimportant excesses or deficiencies in number, measure, or weight." Having given this quotation in full, I do not think it necessary to enter into a discussion of the cases cited at the Bar, which seem to exhaust the whole subject, and I need only say that the English cases establish, it seems to me, the same rules. The same principle seems to underlie the passage in Grotius 3, 14, 33: "Land is frequently sold by the lump without measure, or in other words to the same effect, in which case even if some measure is mentioned, and the true measure is afterwards found to differ from the estimate measure by a morgen more or less, no account is taken thereof; if, however, the difference is greater, the sale nevertheless holds good, but in the case of an overmeasure the purchaser has the option whether he will keep the excess and pay for it in proportion to what he promised for the whole, or let it go to the seller; and again, if there be undermeasure, the seller has the option whether he will make good the deficiency or return a proportionate part of the purchase price." The last clause contains the principle applicable to the present case, where the estimate of a number of things is too high, the seller has the option of supplying the deficiency or abating the price. There is no question in Grotius of a breach of contract, for which the seller is liable in an action for damages, the quantity specified is regarded as an honest estimate which may turn out ultimately to be a mistake, but the contract holds good in so far as the parties can carry it out. No difficulty exists in allowing for or returning a proportionate part of the purchase price whereas in the present case a quantity of things are sold in the lump, but the price per parcel or per bushel is fixed. The principle found in Grotius and in the passage quoted from Benjamin on Sales, are contained also in Voet 18, 1, 7. It seems to me that this case falls within the first rule given in the quotation from Benjamin on Sales. The plaintiff in good faith made an estimate of the probable crop, without making it a condition of the contract, and the defendants were satisfied that they had obtained, in the estimate so made and supported by the opinion of Purcell, their agent, information upon which they might act with tolerable safety in the subsequent transactions in the market. As it was, the crop did exceed by some 30,000 what was actually delivered, but was reduced by that amount by the operations of nature, without any fault on the part of the plaintiff. There is no evidence to support the suggestion made in argument, that the crop did actually amount to about 200,000, and that it was owing to the default or negligence of the plaintiff that something approaching that number was not delivered. Nor was that question raised in the pleadings. I come to the conclusion that the plaintiff fulfilled his contract in delivering the quantity of oranges and naartjes, for which he claims in this case, and that he is entitled to payment of the balance alleged to be due. The defendants are prepared to pay for the expenses of the picker, claimed in the declaration, and as to the plaintiffs claim for the price of fruit that fell from the trees, it seems to me that if the plaintiff had tendered to deliver such fruit the defendants would have been liable for the price. But in my opinion, it was proved that upon the defendants' expositulating, and assuring the plaintiff that it was not worth their while receiving the fallen fruit, the plaintiff refrained from pressing it upon them, and made no further tender of delivery of such fruit. However, it is unnecessary to say more upon this point, seeing that the plaintiff expressed his willingness at the trial to drop this part of his claim. Judgment will be given for plaintiff for £5 8s. and £56 9s. 9d., with costs. In the claim in reconvention, judgment for defendant in reconvention, with costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Michau and De Villiers. Defendants' Attorneys: C. and A. Friedlander.]

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ADMISSIONS.

{ 1907.
{ Apr. 16th.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Adriaan P. J. Fourie as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

LOWRY BROS. V. WHITE.

Mr. Louwrens moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £225, with interest from 15th July, 1898, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable. Defendant was sued by edictal citation, substituted service having been effected.

Order granted.

VENTER V. GRAHAM.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £350, and £1 18s. 6d. insurance, with interest at 7 per cent. from 1st January, 1907, bond due by reason of non-payment of capital sum after six months' notice; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE MANSON V. VON HOLDT.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest from 21st July, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable and rents accruing to be attached.

Order granted.

ESTATE HIDDINGH V. SHILLING.

Mr. Philipson Stow moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £4,000, with interest from 13th March, 1905, less £75 paid on account, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ESTATE BADENHORST V. POTGIETER.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £100, with interest from November 21, 1906, bond due by reason of three months' notice having been given; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable and rents accruing from the property to be attached.

Order granted.

ESTATE BADENHORST V. PIETERSEN.

Mr. Payne moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £60, with interest from the 6th December, 1905, bond due by reason of notice having been given; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable and rents accruing to be attached.

Order granted.

ESTATE BADENHORST V. GORDON.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £36, with interest from the 13th June, 1906, bond due by reason of notice having been given; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable, and rents accruing to be attached.

Order granted.

DIVORCE CASES.

ENGEL V. ENGEL.

This was an action brought by Lisabeth Engel, of Cape Town, against her husband, Wilhelm Adolph Max Engel, presently of Dresden, Germany, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

It was stated that defendant was sued by edictal citation, and that personal service had been effected.

Plaintiff, in her declaration, alleged that defendant unlawfully and maliciously deserted her in May, 1906. She prayed for a decree of restitution, or, in the alternative, for a decree of divorce.

Mr. Lewis was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

The only witness called was the plaintiff, who said that she was married to defendant at the Registry Office, Holborn, England, on the 12th December, 1901. Subsequently they went to the Argentine Republic, and remained there about eight months. They then proceeded to Germany, and remained there about a year. In the latter part of 1903 witness and her husband came to Cape Town. Witness was a dentist, and she came here under a six years' engagement. Both witness and her husband were employed by doctors. In February, 1906, witness went to Johannesburg for a holiday. In May, in consequence of what she heard, she came back to Cape Town, and found that her husband had gone away. She had since received a letter (produced) from him, written in Dresden, Germany.

Ordered that defendant restore conjugal rights on or before the 16th August, failing which to show cause on the 12th September why a decree of divorce should not be granted as prayed, with costs, failing personal service of this order, publication thereof to be made in the "Dresdener Nachrichten."

JACOBS V. JACOBS.

This was an action brought by Barend Marthinus Jacobs, of Hope Town, against his wife, Rentie Jacoba Jacobs, for a decree of divorce on the ground of her adultery with one Albert Myburgh.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that he was married to defendant at Hope Town in community of property on the 28th June, 1896. There was one child of the marriage, a girl, aged six years. In July, 1904, at a certain farm in the division of Hope Town, defendant committed adultery with one Albert Myburgh. Plaintiff prayed for a divorce, and an order declaring defendant to have forfeited all benefits of the marriage in community, plaintiff to have custody of the child, and costs.

Mr. Watermeyer was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

Wm. Thomas Birch, of the Colonial Secretary's Office, gave formal evidence as to the registration of the marriage.

Barend Marthinus Jacobs (the plaintiff) said that shortly after the girl was born in 1900 he and his wife had a difference, and they parted, whereupon his wife went to live with another man. About July, 1904, he heard that she was mixed up with this man. He had then returned from the Orange River Colony. On the 1st May, 1905, she gave birth to a child, of which witness was not the father.

Mr. Watermeyer said that the claim for forfeiture of the benefits was not pressed, since there was no property in the estate.

Plaintiff said that he desired to have custody of the child. The child was badly treated by his wife. He was, however, willing that the little girl should remain in the care of his wife's mother.

Johanna A. Jacobs said that about a month after the child was born, defendant's wife told her that Myburgh was the father. The baby was baptised in the name of Albert Myburgh.

This concluded the evidence.

Hopley, J., questioned whether the evidence was strong enough to support an allegation of adultery with Myburgh.

Mr. Watermeyer applied for an amendment of the declaration alleging that defendant committed adultery "with one Albert Myburgh, or some person unknown."

The amendment was allowed.

Hopley, J.: It is clear that defendant has committed adultery with somebody or other, but it is not in any way proved that it was with this man Albert Myburgh. The declaration has now been amended by the addition of the words "or with some person unknown," and the Court finds that defendant did commit adultery with some person unknown. There must, therefore, be a decree of divorce as prayed, and it is ordered that the plaintiff have the custody of the child of the marriage. Costs are not pressed against the defendant, and there will be no order on that part of the prayer.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. Rowson applied under section 117 of the Insolvent Ordinance for the rehabilitation of Jan Jurie van Zyl.

Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

DE KLERK V. DE KLERK. } 1907.
 } Apr. 15th.

Dr. Greer moved for a decree of divorce in default of defendant's compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights. It was stated that substituted service had been given, and nothing had been heard from defendant.

Decree absolute with costs.

MUZOYI V. MUZOYI.

Mr. Howes moved for a decree of divorce in default of defendant's compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights, with forfeiture of any benefits of the marriage. Service was made of the rule on the keeper of the boarding-house where defendant resided.

Decree of divorce granted, with costs and forfeiture of benefits from the marriage.

Ex parte THE COMMITTEE OF THE CAR NABYON OUTER COMMONAGE.

Mr. Payne moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

Ex parte PREECE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones said that in this matter a rule had been ordered to issue calling upon respondent to show cause why petitioner should not sue him in forma pauperis. Counsel informed the Court that all efforts to trace respondent had failed, and he had to apply for an extension of the return day.

Return day extended to the 9th May.

Ex parte STREETER

Mr. Benjamin moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute calling upon Myers and Puxty to show cause why a sum of £60 alleged to be in the hands of Reuter's Telegram Company, or as soon as it may come into their hands, should not be attached to satisfy applicant's claim, and the exigencies of his writ.

Puxty appeared, and said that no such sum was lying at Reuter's, or was likely to come into their hands. He also objected to having to pay costs.

Mr. Benjamin said that respondent should put these facts on affidavit.

The matter was postponed until the 26th April.

Ex parte BYDELL.

Mr. Roux moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute calling upon petitioner's husband to show cause why she should not be allowed to sell a certain erf at Kokstad.

Rule absolute as prayed.

DUNDAS V. BEUKES.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for a certain rule nisi to be made absolute authorising the Sheriff to transfer certain landed property in British Bechuanaland.

Rule absolute.

In re THE EQUITABLE FIRE ASSOCIATION AND TRUST CO.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for an order authorising the liquidator to destroy or dispose of the books, and finally dissolving the company. A final dividend of 14s. 2d. in the £ had, counsel stated, now been paid to the shareholders.

Ordered that the company be dissolved and the books destroyed.

COLLIE V. KALK BAY MUNICIPALITY.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan), moved, on behalf of the Kalk Bay Municipality, for judgment in terms of referees' award.

The respondent, plaintiff in the action, appeared in person.

Mr. Searle said that the action between the parties was tried before a jury in November last (16 C.T.R., 1022). The jury made certain findings, and the Court later on appointed Messrs. Close and Jones as referees to report to the Court upon certain matters. The referees had made their report, and the defendant Municipality now moved, under section 33 of Act 23 of 1891, for judgment for £2,120 3s. 8d., which amount, it was contended, was due according to the report of the referees. The respondent Collie had given notice to apply for judgment in his favour in terms of the findings of the judge, jury, and referees' report. He referred specifically to certain items in the account filed by the Municipality, to which he took objection. Counsel detailed the items in respect of which the Municipality claimed and read the report of the referees in relation thereto. The respondent Collie claimed first of all a sum of £556 instead of £158 7s. 8d., as allowed by the referees, on the vlei mouth work. This was simply an appeal from the referees' finding. Then he claimed that the sums of £514 16s. 11d. and £337 19s. on stormwater work should be eliminated from the Municipality's account. The Municipality's position with regard to this was that the plaintiff had already had credit for £1,514, and that the plaintiff really wanted to be credited twice over. Then he further claimed £1,000 retention money, but, since the certificates had been swept aside, and the matter dealt with by the referees on the basis of the value of the work done, the Municipality took up the position that the matter of the retention money could not possibly come in. The plaintiff also claimed £900 on plant in terms of what he referred to as "the ruling of the presiding judge."

Hopley, J., remarked that he did not give any ruling on the matter.

Mr. Searle said that apparently the question of the plant had been left in abeyance by the referees by consent of the parties. The Municipality, on dismissing Collie, took over the plant, and they claimed under a section of the contract that, the jury having found that Collie was rightfully dismissed, they were entitled to the use of the plant until the completion of the work. Counsel submitted that the objections could not be sustained in view of the report of the referees, and that judgment should be for the Municipality for £2,120 3s. 8d., as prayed.

Mr. Collie said that the referees' awards in certain respects were subject to Mr. Westhofen's account being accurate. He pointed out that the referees stated that they were quite unable to assist the Court as to whether Mr. West-hofen's figures should be accepted or not.

Hopley, J., said it was his impression at the trial that the jury took Mr. Westhofen's figures as correct in substance.

Mr. Collie went on to urge that he was entitled to some allowance in respect of the plans, which the Council had had the use of since he was turned off the works. Owing to the dilatoriness of the Council, it seemed very likely that when he got the plant back again it would be practically useless, and thus the capital he had expended would be wasted. He added that in consequence of this contract and litigation he had been rendered penniless. Mr. Collie also addressed the Court in reference to the sum of £566 claimed by himself, and submitted that the referees had misunderstood their instructions on this point, and that he was entitled to receive the sum of £566, which was allowed by the Engineer. He also addressed the Court on other branches of the case.

Mr. Searle having been heard in reply.

Hopley, J.: This is an application for judgment by the defendants in a jury case which was heard last November, for the sum of £2,120 3s. 8d. The case arose from a contract for drainage works at Kalk Bay. Mr. Collie, the present respondent, was the contractor selected by the Kalk Bay Municipality to carry out these expensive drainage works. After a certain time, disagreement arose, and on an application to the Court, Mr. Collie was put out of the works, and the Municipality took over the works themselves. In so doing they retained the material and plant which he had brought upon the ground. Matters went on, and there were recriminations between the parties, and cross-accounts, and eventually the matter went so far that Mr. Collie brought an action in the Supreme Court, and chose the tribunal of a jury for the consideration of the exceedingly complicated questions of law and of fact of figures and of engineering, that arose in the matter. The jury arrived at certain findings, and the Court referred numbers of questions depending upon figures and accounts and upon engineering and technical matters to two competent referees. On the finding of the jury and the report of the referees, an account has been framed by the present applicants—the Kalk Bay Municipality—from which they make out that there is due to them by the respondent, against whom they had brought a counter-claim when he brought his action, a sum of £2,120 3s. 8d. Now, it is not suggested that the figures have been unfairly taken from the report or that the account does not fairly summarise the report of the referees. The jury having found in the first instance that there was a sum of £3,250 overpaid to Mr. Collie, which was all that was claimed by the then defendants—the Municipality—the referees went into the whole matter, as far as it was referred to them, and they have reduced this amount to £2,120 by allowing certain amounts to Mr. Collie. It is impossible for the Court to re-open all this matter and to go into it again piece-meal, bit by bit, and item by item. In the absence of anything showing that the referees have acted wrongly, the Court cannot go behind their finding on the figures. To do so would be to render the system of reference, which is designed to facilitate and shorten the work in courts, absolutely futile and entirely mischievous. The case was of such a nature that had every item been inquired into the Court would certainly have had to sit for something like a month longer than it did, and the expense to the parties would have been enormous, and the strain on the jury and upon everybody would have been intolerable. The only possible course to pursue, which was done eventually by consent of all parties, was to refer these complicated matters to competent referees. One of the most competent accountants in Cape Town was selected—Mr. Close—and a highly-qualified gentleman in the engineering line, Mr. Cecil Jones, was also selected, and to these two, by consent of the parties, was confided the task of inquiry into the complicated matters which arose. They have sent in a careful and exhaustive report, and the final result of their investigation of every item is that, after allowing for the £3,250 and the matters found in Collie's favour, and the deductions made and so on, they and the jury between them have found that £2,120 3s. 8d. is due by Mr. Collie to the Municipality. To go behind their finding and to enter into all these matters again would be simply to constitute myself a court of appeal on intricate matters of fact, which it is impossible for me to follow as well as the referees. There are, however, two matters raised outside of the figures by Mr. Collie. The first is the matter of the retention money amounting to £1,000. Now, as a matter of fact, that £1,000 was never retained by the Municipality, and after giving due consideration to that question the referees still find there is due a sum £2,120. The matter of the £1,000, therefore, cannot come into the case. There remains the question of the plant. As to that, it is said by Mr. Collie that £900 should be set-off, because the plant was his, and the Municipality have dispossessed him of it and are using it. The terms of the contract in respect of this are embodied in the 31st clause, which says that if the works are not proceeded with, for want of sufficient proper workmen and materials, with all necessary assiduity and despatch, then the Council, after giving three days' notice to the contractor, shall have the power to take the whole of the works out of his hands. Now, that was done by them, but it was not done simply on their own initiative. One of the parties—I am not sure who it was—came to the Court, the matter was thrashed out, and the Chief Justice gave an order allowing the Municipality to dispossess him of the works. And the jury have since found that he was rightfully dispossessed. Then the contract goes on to say that in such a case it is expressly provided that the contractor shall not remove any of his materials or plant and that the Council or their agents shall be entitled to use same without charge. As a matter of law, I can only read that portion of the agreement in the way contended for by the Municipality. It seems to me that at the present stage of the case, I cannot make an order saying that the £900 is to come off the £2,120. I have suggested that an equitable sort of arrangement might be come to on this matter, that whereas the Council took over the plant and have had the use of it for a considerable time, during which time it must have deteriorated, it would perhaps be a fair and equitable thing that the Council should make some sort of allowance for deterioration and wear and tear of the plant while being used by them. Of course, I am not laying down that they must do so; it is a matter they must consider. At present I cannot make any order as to the plant, and if Mr. Collie has been unfairly treated, he will have a remedy when the plant is handed back to him. Judgment must be for the Municipality for the sum of £2,120, as prayed, with costs.

Postea (April 17th).

Hopley, J.: There was one matter that escaped my notice in giving judgment in this case yesterday. As to the reference, there is no dispute in regard to the amount which should be allowed to the referees. The Court feels that they should be protected in the matter of getting their fees. The work has been long and arduous, and they have sent in a considerable claim, but by no means too much for the work they had to do. These fees must be costs in the cause, but, in order that there should be no doubt that the referees should get their fees, it seems to me a fair thing that the party who used the report and moved on it for judgment in the first instance should pay the fees and recover them as part of the costs in the cause from the unsuccessful party.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

MAGISTRATES' COURT APPEALS.

WARNER V. GONIWE. { 1007.
Apr. 17th.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Mqanduli.

The action in the Magistrate's Court was brought in respect of a promissory note made in favour of W. Warner, an attorney. Exception was taken to the summons on the grounds that it was not in proper form, and that whereas the note was signed severally and jointly by two parties, only one had been sued. The Court upheld the exceptions, and plaintiff now appealed against the Magistrate's decision.

Mr. McGregor was for the appellant; there was no appearance for the respondent.

Mr. McGregor having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, J., said that the plaintiff in the case was an attorney of the Court, and he apparently employed another attorney to sue the defendant for the balance due on the promissory note. The summons did not describe the promissory note in the form necessary, according to the rules of the Magistrate's Court. The amount sued for was different entirely from that set forth in the note. Exception was also taken on a point of law that whereas the note had been jointly and severally signed, only one of the parties had been sued. There was no doubt that the form of the summons was altogether wrong, and the Magistrate was right in upholding the exception to that, and the attorney might then have applied for leave to amend the summons. On the other point, the decision of the Magistrate was incorrect. The case would be sent back to the Magistrate to be tried on its merits, leave being given to amend the summons in the respect in which it was not in proper form. Costs in the Magistrate's Court would be adjudicated upon by the Magistrate. As to the costs of appeal, there would be no order. Attorneys ought really, added His Lordship, to be more careful in these things.

GRAY V. GREEN AND SEA POINT BOWLING CLUB.

This was an appeal from a decision of an A.R.M. of Cape Town in a case in which the present appellant sued the Green and Sea Point Bowling Club for the sum of £11 for work and labour done and material supplied.

The matter arose out of a contract entered into between the parties for the construction by plaintiff of a bowling green at Three Anchor Bay. The plaintiff's account was £536 15s., whereof £525 15s. had been paid by the defendants. The only matter in the account on which the dispute turned was an item of £36, "extra labour and material in rolling and consolidating stone, ashes, soil, and sand over the whole site." Of this sum, £25 had been paid. The defendants pleaded general issue, and in regard to the item in question, said that they agreed to pay a reasonable sum for this work, and that the defendant agreed in the first instance that £10 was a reasonable sum. When the dispute arose, they, however, paid a further sum of £15, with a view to avoiding litigation. Plaintiff admitted offering to take £25 in settlement, but said that the offer was withdrawn. Defendants, on the other hand, stated that the offer was accepted, and this was the view taken by the Magistrate, who gave judgment for the defendants, with costs.

Mr. Gardiner was for the appellant; Mr. Benjamin was for the respondents.

Mr. Gardiner, in argument, said that the issue was whether the offer of plaintiff to take £25 was withdrawn before the defendants intimated their preparedness to accept it. The Magistrate had found there was such acceptance, and though the Magistrate had said he was not satisfied with the plaintiff's evidence on the merits, the merits of the case had really not been gone into fully, since the plaintiff had experts to call if the special plea had been decided upon in his favour by the Magistrate. On the question of the acceptance or withdrawal of the offer, counsel contended there was clear evidence of a withdrawal of the plaintiff's offer in consequence of the club's delay in considering it.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that there was no withdrawal of the plaintiff's offer to take £25 in settlement of the claim and that the tender of this sum by the club concluded any difference there might be between the parties. On what date could it be said that the alleged withdrawal took place? Plaintiff himself was not definite upon the point. On the merits of the case also, counsel contended that there was ample warrant for the Magistrate's decision.

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff Gray was employed by the Green Point Bowling Club to do certain work in connection with establishing a bowling green. Tenders were called for, and certain items were definitely provided for in the tender. These items were done, but as usual in all contracts, there were a number of extras performed. These extras are all admitted by the defendants, and they have been paid for, with the exception of an item of £36 for extra labour and material in rolling and consolidating the bowling green. With reference to this £36, the defendants paid afterwards a sum of £25. Though they did not acknowledge liability for more than £10, they paid a further sum of £15 for the purpose of keeping the matter out of Court, and in acceptance of an offer made by the plaintiff to take £25 in settlement. Plaintiff now says this payment did not cover the whole of his claim, and he claimed another £11 for which he issued summons against the defendants. The defendants gave a general denial of liability, and they also pleaded that they agreed to pay a reasonable sum in respect of this extra work, that they offered £10 as a fair and reasonable amount, and that they paid this £10 and also paid an additional £15 to prevent any further legal proceedings. The issue the Court therefore had to try was whether or not the sum of £11 was due by the Bowling Club, and after hearing a considerable amount of evidence and at apparently the close of hearing the plaintiff's witnesses, the plaintiff's agent or attorney said he had expert witnesses to call, but that he was quite willing to argue the question of whether the payment made by the Bowling Club was a final payment in accordance with the tender made, or whether the offer to accept £15 had not been withdrawn before payment of the amount. This point was argued before the Magistrate, and he decided in favour of the defendant club; that the offer was not withdrawn, but was accepted by the club. Upon this decision of the Magistrate, nothing further was done by the plaintiff's agent; he did not tender the evidence of experts nor did he argue upon the merits. An appeal was noted, and the Magistrate, in his reasons, has gone beyond the question of the acceptance of the offer and has also discussed the merits. Now, on the first question of whether the offer was withdrawn or not, the Magistrate has given very good reasons for saying that the evidence did not satisfy him that the offer was ever withdrawn, and the written documents certainly do not support the contention that it was withdrawn. I do not therefore think the Magistrate was wrong in finding there was no withdrawal of the offer. On the merits, the Magistrate has gone over the evidence, and I may say that the evidence led is not only that of the plaintiff, but several of the witnesses called were members of the committee of the defendant club, and the facts were brought out in cross-examination, so that, in a way, the matter was fully before the Magistrate. The merits were never argued before the Magistrate, and I do not like to decide on appeal questions which have not been fully dealt with by the Magistrate. I must say I would have very great difficulty in saying that the Magistrate's view of the merits are wrong and that the case should go on that ground. If I thought there would be any good done by sending the case back to the Magistrate to have the merits argued before him, and to let him find again on the merits after hearing argument, I might do so; but the feeling in my mind is that the plaintiff would not be likely to succeed. The Magistrate gave absolute judgment against the plaintiff, and had the case been argued before him on its merits, this judgment would not be interfered with, but as the case has not been decided on the merits, if the plaintiff thinks he can convince the Magistrate on the merits, he will have an opportunity to do so. The judgment will therefore be altered to one of absolute from the instance. Otherwise, the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

KRIGE V. WILLEMSSE AND ANOTHER.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Ceres in a case in which the present appellant sued Johannes Petrus Willemsse, Jacoba Willemsse, his wife, and one Saul Gerber for £50, with interest, due on a certain overdue promissory note alleged to have been signed by the two Willemsse and payable to S. Gerber and by him endorsed. Gerber admitted liability and that he received the money from the plaintiff, but the other defendants denied their signatures to the promissory note, and also raised the defence that the note was obtained by fraud and false pretences, and that there was no consideration. The Magistrate gave judgment against Gerber, and in the case of the other two defendants, gave absolute from the instance. Against this decision, as affecting the cases of the Willemsse, the plaintiff appealed.

From the record it appeared that according to the evidence of the plaintiff, J. P. Willemsse, the husband, signed the note and his daughter signed the note for her mother, which it was alleged, she was authorised to do. It was stated that the money was advanced to the three defendants to go together to Cape Town. Gerber gave evidence for the plaintiff to this effect. For the defence, the defendant, J. P. Willemsse, said that when his daughter signed the document, Gerber told him it was a receipt. Gerber owed Willemsse money. Gerber acknowledged the debt and discharged part of the debt by paying the expenses to Cape Town. The two Willemsse said that both names were signed by the daughter, and the latter confirmed this. A handwriting expert gave it as his opinion that the two signatures were written by different persons. The Magistrate, in his reasons, said that he believed the evidence of the defendants Willemsse in preference to some of the other witnesses. He believed that the daughter signed the names of her parents, and that Gerber induced her to do so by the representation that it was a receipt.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for the appellant; Mr. Benjamin for the respondents.

Mr. De Villiers, in argument, referred to section 27 of Act 19 of 1893 in support of the contention that even if the daughter signed both names, providing she was authorised to do so, the fact of there being fraud, or of there being want of consideration was of no avail as a defence against a claim by the holder in due course. Counsel also referred to section 36 of the same Act, and quoted the case of the Standard Bank v. Du Ploy (16 Juta, p. 161).

[Buchanan, J.: Is it possible to have the case removed to trial in this Court? I should like it fully investigated.]

Mr. De Villiers: That would seem to be the more satisfactory course.

[Buchanan, J.: There are many suspicious circumstances connected with the whole matter that ought to be cleared up.]

Mr. De Villiers said that there was not a shadow of suggestion that Mr. Krige did not act bona fide. He submitted that the Magistrate's reasons were entirely unsatisfactory, and that the facts which he cited in support of his judgment were, in reality, dead against him, as, for instance, in regard to the expert's evidence, which the Magistrate referred to as verifying the plaintiff's story.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the Magistrate was amply justified in accepting the evidence of the Willemsse as against the evidence of the other witnesses. It was purely a question of fact. The Magistrate had accepted the evidence of the Willemsse. On the question of law as to the obligation of the maker of the note, whose signature was obtained by fraud, to the bona fide holder in due course, counsel said that a case like this was entirely outside the provisions of the Act. The question turned on this: that the parties did not at the time purport to sign a note; they intended to sign a receipt. Not having intended to sign a note, and having put their signatures to a paper, under the impression that it was a receipt, they were not liable. Counsel quoted the cases of Foster v. McKinnon (20, Law Times, p. 887), and Lewis v. Clay (77, Law Times, p. 653), and referred to Chalmers on Bills of Exchange (1896 edition, p. 277). In the present case, proceeded counsel, it was shown that Willemsse was a man of weak sight, and that he was somewhat illiterate. He clearly believed the document was a receipt, and it could not be said in the circumstances that there was negligence on his part.

Mr. De Villiers having been heard in reply,

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff sued upon a promissory note purporting to bear the signatures of C. J. Willemsse and J. P. Willemsse, and in favour of one S. Gerber, and endorsed by the latter. Gerber, the endorsee, acknowledged his liability, and judgment was correctly given against him for the amount of the promissory note. The two Willemssees, who are husband and wife, and who are stated to be married in community of property, deny their liability and deny their signatures to the note. The Magistrate, after hearing the evidence, gave absolution from the instance as regards the Willemssees. The Magistrate has found that the Willemssees did not sign the note, and he has also found that their names, as appearing on the notes, were signed by their daughter, who was asked by Gerber, in the presence of her parents, to sign a receipt for £50. Gerber, in his evidence, states that he had owed Willemsse £50 and had paid it all off. The first question one has to consider is whether the finding of the Magistrate on the facts is sustained by the evidence. Now, I must say that the record is not so full or complete as one would have liked in a case like this, and there are several matters not so clearly elucidated as they might have been at the trial. However, on the finding of the Magistrate, I must say that the record does disclose evidence which justifies that finding. A more important question is whether on these facts as found by the Magistrate, the plaintiff has a right to recover. Great reliance has been placed upon the provisions of our Bills of Exchange Act as to the rights of a holder in due course, and the 27th section of our Act defines who a holder in due course is. His Lordship read the section, and proceeding, said: The person who negotiated the note with the plaintiff in this case was Gerber, and if the promissory note was a note at all properly signed, any want of consideration, which is alleged between Gerber and the defendants, the Willemssees, would not avail the Willemssees in an action brought by the bona fide holder. This is one of the points which one would have liked to have seen made out more clearly in the evidence. I will assume, however, for the purposes of this case, that there was consideration given to Gerber. Now, I take it as clear that a contract is a matter entered into by parties who understand what they are doing, and who intend to contract. In this case the Magistrate says that there was no intention to contract in the way stated; that there was no intention to give a promissory note; and that it was only the intention to give a receipt. Willemsse seems to be an old man whose eyesight is very bad, and who was about to go to Cape Town to see a specialist about his eyes. Gerber states that Willemsse signed his name, but this is contradicted by evidence, which the Magistrate found to be correct. If the note had been signed by Willemsse there might have been other considerations, but if there is no contract at all between Gerber and Willemsse, the provisions of the 27th section of our Act cannot, I think, apply to the case. The question of the title of a person who possesses a promissory note cannot arise if there is no contract between the parties. Supposing that a person had written his name to a piece of paper simply to show his signature, and that thereafter some one had written a promissory note above the signature and had given it to another person for value, there would be no title in that person, and there would be no obligation on the part of the person who wrote his signature for quite a different purpose. Therefore, if I accept the Magistrate's finding, I am bound to say there is no contract, no promissory note made. This being the case, I cannot see how the 27th section of our Act helps the plaintiff at all in this case. The case has been referred to of the Standard Bank v. Du Ploy, in which the Bank had received certain guarantees signed by the defendants; and it was alleged that these guarantees had been obtained by the fraud of the person for whose benefit they had been taken. In that case the evidence was very strong, and the Court unanimously found there was no fraud proved to have been perpetrated; and the decision went more on this point: that if a person negligently signs a document and one of two innocent persons have to suffer, the one who was guilty of negligence should be the person to suffer rather than the other one. In the present case, I think there is no negligence shown on the part of Willemsse, and according to the Magistrate's finding there was no contract between them. On the facts set up, I do not think Willemsse can be held liable, even if the third person holds the document bona fide for value. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

OTTERSTROM V. ESTATE of 1907.
STEPHAN. { Apr. 17th.

Leave to sue in forma pauperis—
Affidavits as to means—
Wages—Executors

Respondent (O.) had obtained leave to sue applicants in forma pauperis. The householders who had certified as to his means are resident within the Cape District. In the interval between these householders swearing their respective affidavits and the time respondent applied to the Court he had temporarily removed into another Division, but had returned to his domicile before the application was made. It was now sought to set aside the order for leave to sue in forma pauperis on the ground, inter alia, that the householders were not resident within the neighbourhood of respondent.

Held, that as both he and they were resident within the Cape Division, they were in the same neighbourhood.

It was further alleged that applicant being in receipt of wages was able to prosecute his action in the ordinary way. Held, that his wages were insufficient to enable him to do so. But:

Some, if at any time it is proved that a person having obtained leave to sue in forma pauperis has become possessed of means, the Court will revoke its order.

In this matter only one of the two executors applied on behalf of the estate.

Held, that only the executors jointly had a locus standi.

Mr. Russell was for the applicant, and Dr. Greer was for the respondent (Otterstrom).

This was an application made on behalf of James Cecil Bateman, assumed executor in the estate, for an order rescinding an order of Court, which allowed the plaintiff to proceed in forma pauperis. The affidavit of the applicant set out that he was permitted by the Court to intervene as co-defendant in the action, having been appointed as assumed executor in the estate.

[Maasdorp, J.: What is Stephan doing in the matter?]

Mr. Russell: I do not know.

[Maasdorp, J.: How can you appear for part of the defence. Stephan is really the responsible person in the matter. You do not know what position he occupies?]

Mr. Russell: I do not know. Counsel proceeded with the affidavit, which further set out that from the evidence given on commission at Port Nolloth, it would appear that the plaintiff had been at Port Nolloth for a period of about three years, and was there when the accident took place. The Rule of Court provided that a motion for leave to sue in forma pauperis should be supported by the affidavit of the party so applying, and by two householders living in the neighbourhood. Neither of the householders who supported his application resided in his district. He was also in receipt of about £90 a year, and he could not be said to be not possessed of property to the value of £10. The friends of the plaintiff it would appear were willing to assist him to obtain a trial by jury. The affidavit of J. F. Oliff set out that on 15th March he went to the alleged domicile of the plaintiff, and found the premises occupied by one Andersen. He was informed by Andersen's wife that her husband and the plaintiff were both Swedes, and that the plaintiff was away at Port Nolloth.

Dr. Greer read a replying affidavit by Andersen, which set out that when he made the affidavit the plaintiff had no means within his knowledge. Otterstrom returned to Port Nolloth for the purpose of settling his affairs. Counsel also read an affidavit by James Ernest Barber, a lieutenant of the Royal Navy, which set out that the plaintiff was at present employed as a labourer in the Cape Copper Company at a salary of 6s. a day, but owing to his state of health he was not likely to be retained. He earned barely sufficient to maintain him with the necessaries of life. Affidavits were put in by Godfrey Baines and J. H. Pearce, resident householders, of Port Nolloth, which set out that the plaintiff in August, 1906, was not possessed of property to the value of £10.

Further affidavits having been read,

[Maasdorp, J.: In this matter, when the application was originally made, all the requirements of Rule 125 were apparently complied with. It was then proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the plaintiff did not possess sufficient means to prosecute his action in the ordinary way, that he was not possessed of property to the amount of £10, which he advanced as a ground for the Court allowing him to sue in forma pauperis. The merits of the application were fully inquired into in the first instance, the rule nisi was granted, and when application was made to have that rule made absolute, it was found necessary to obtain further information, and the matter was further postponed. During that inquiry the Court was quite satisfied upon the certificate put in by the advocate who was engaged in the case that the plaintiff had good cause of action, and upon the information then given the Court was satisfied that the plaintiff was not possessed of property to the amount of £10. It is now sought to re-open the matter and that is done apparently upon the bare ground that the two householders, who had made the necessary affidavits with respect to his means, were not householders living in his neighbourhood. That seems to be the most serious question raised in the present application. It appears from the affidavits that the domicile of the plaintiff was in the Cape district, that he removed to Port Nolloth for the purpose of performing certain work there, with the full intention of returning, and it is also established by the evidence not only of the plaintiff himself but by other witnesses that at the time the application was actually made, he was again resident for the time being in Cape Town. The householders living in his neighbourhood at the time were therefore householders living in the Cape district, and they made the necessary affidavits, and nothing has been shown to the Court now to establish that they were not the proper persons to make such affidavits. Then the further question arises whether in spite of their affidavits the plaintiff is not actually possessed of sufficient means to prosecute his action in the ordinary way. There is no doubt that if at any time it is discovered that the person who receives the indulgence of the Court has become possessed of means that the Court will deprive him from that time of further proceeding in forma pauperis when he has means to carry on his action. In this case nothing new has transpired. Apparently the applicant, at the time when he made the application, was earning wages at the rate of 6s. a day, and that is now raised as a ground for withdrawing the leave granted by the Court. The only evidence required from the householders is to the effect that he is not possessed of property to the amount of £10. That has been satisfactorily established. It is quite true if the Court should find that a man is not possessed of property amounting to £10, but, at the same time, he is earning such very excellent wages that out of his wages he could pay costs of suit, then the Court will withhold from him the indulgence of suing in forma pauperis. I am not satisfied that he is able out of the 6s. he earns with the necessity of supporting his family to accumulate sufficient means to prosecute this action. This application must, therefore, be refused. I wish to point out one feature in this case which would affect the estate against which the action is brought. When the matter was before the Court on a former occasion, the executor appeared, and was satisfied that he had not sufficient ground for resisting the application. Subsequently he assumed another executor, which, apparently, he had the right to do under the terms of the will. The assumed executor now appears in this case to take up this matter. No single executor can manage the affairs of the estate, the affairs must be managed by the executors jointly, and the question might arise as between the estate and this particular executor as to whether he had the authority of thus representing the estate to proceed in this matter, but that is a matter which I say I leave to those responsible for the funds of the estate. I merely refuse the order, leaving it to any parties who wish to protect themselves, and have any ground for such protection, to take such steps as they think fit, the question of costs to stand over.

[Applicant's Attorney: E. J. Sidney.
Respondent's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné.]

REX V. BEWSHER.

{ 1907.
Apr. 17th.
" 26th.

Liquor licence—Holder of licence —Manager—Act 28 of 1883,
Sec. 75, Sub-sec. 1—Act 44 of 1885, Sec. 2.

The appellant, a hotel manager, was convicted by a Magistrate of permitting, upon the premises, violent, riotous and quarrelsome conduct. The conviction was under Act 28 of 1883, which does not provide for offences committed by managers. Such provision is, however, made by Act 44 of 1885, Sec. 2.

Held, that as no exception had been taken in the Court below as to the Act under which appellant had been convicted, as real and substantial justice had been done, and as the Court was not disposed to encourage the practice of taking purely technical exceptions, the appeal must be dismissed.

This was an appeal against a conviction by the A.R.M. of Wynberg, on the 26th January last, in which the appellant, Edward Bewsher, was charged with contravening section 73 of Act 28 of 1883, by permitting violent and riotous conduct on his premises, the Royal Hotel, Hout Bay. The accused was fined in £1, and against that conviction the appeal was lodged.

The appeal was based on the grounds that the accused was not the holder of the licence of the premises in question, and the conviction was not in accordance with the evidence. The evidence showed that the appellant was manager for J. D. Logan and Co. The section under which he was charged was as follows: "The holder of any licence who shall be guilty of any of the following acts or offences, shall, upon conviction, be liable in respect of each act or offence to a penalty not exceeding £10, that is to say, permitting drunkenness, or any violent, riotous, or quarrelsome conduct to take place upon his premises."

Mr. Close was for the appellant, and Mr. Howel Jones was for the Crown.

Counsel submitted the onus was strongly on the Crown to prove that the person charged with the contravention of the section was the person who was the holder of a licence. In this case the only evidence given on the point was to the effect that the accused was manager for J. D. Logan and Co. Then the question arose whether the manager, even if he could be made liable, was as a fact the man who permitted riotous conduct on the premises. The question of permitting drunkenness on licensed premises had been discussed in the cases of the Queen v. Robertson (9 Juta, p. 303), Queen v. Otto (13 Juta, p. 250), Rez v. Norman (19 Supreme Court Reports, p. 200). Counsel contended that merely being present in a place where a disturbance happened to take place was not in law a contravention of the section, unless there was acquiescence on the part of the manager. Here the evidence was contradictory, even on the part of the Crown.

Mr. Jones admitted that the evidence showed that the appellant was the manager for Logan and Co., but that position was covered by section 11 of Act 44 of 1885, which clearly provided that a manager was liable. The section read: "Any person who shall at any time be lawfully managing, superintending, or conducting the business of the holder of any licence under the said Act or this Act shall be subject and liable to the same duties, obligations, and penalties as such holder." It was perfectly clear he was as responsible as the holder. Counsel submitted section 11 did not create any new offence, and it did not really amend the former Act. It was unnecessary to refer to that section, and the point raised for the appellant was a purely technical one.

Maasdorp, J., said he wished to have authority as to whether there was any decided case which touched upon the matter at all, whether the charge ought to have been under section 11. Counsel might find if there was authority in similar matters which, although apparently very technical, come to be regarded as serious, and then the case could be sent in.

Postea (April 26th).

Maasdorp, J., said: In this case the defendant was charged with contravening section 73 (sub-section 1) of Act 28, 1883, in permitting upon certain licensed premises violent, riotous, and quarrelsome conduct. He pleaded not guilty, but was found guilty by the Magistrate, and fined £1. An appeal was noted on the following grounds: (1) That the accused is not the holder of a retail licence for the licensed premises in question; and (2) that the conviction is not in accordance with the evidence. It appears that the accused is described as a European hotel manager, and he is charged with having contravened the section as manager and holder of a retail licence for the sale of liquor. The first ground of appeal, therefore, does not cover the whole of the charge made against the accused. He is not only described as the holder of a retail licence, but he is also described as a manager for the holder of such licence. There is no proof that he is the holder of the retail licence, and in that respect the charge has not been proved, but there is evidence that he is the manager of this business. Under section 73 it is provided that the holder of any retail licence who shall be guilty of permitting drunkenness or riotous or quarrelsome conduct shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding £10. No reference is here made to the manager for such holder. Provision is made in that respect in section 2 of Act 44, 1885, where any person who shall at any time be lawfully managing the business for the holder of the licence shall be subject to the same penalties as the holder of the licence himself. There is, therefore, satisfactory proof that the defendant is liable under the latter section, and there is proof that he actually was the manager for the holder. Then a further ground of appeal was raised during the argument on appeal to the effect that the defendant should have been charged, not under section 73 of Act 28, 1883, but under section 2 of the latter Act. That in itself was merely a technical exception, which was not raised in the Court below, and was not made a ground of appeal. But it was thought at the time when the argument took place that there might be some authority in a decided case holding that it was more than a technical exception and that it might be a ground for quashing the conviction. The presence of no such authority has been discovered, and I, therefore, come to the conclusion that it might be treated as a technical ground of exception of very trivial importance, and, as this has not been raised in the Court below or made a ground of appeal, the judgment cannot now depend upon it in appeal. A further ground for appeal is that the conviction is not in accordance with the evidence. It was contended that there was not evidence given of riotous or disorderly conduct, and that it was not proved that the defendant had not done his best to prevent such conduct, if any had taken place. There is some evidence given for the defence that what took place was merely some horseplay between a couple of men, or some skylarking, but, when we look at the evidence of the defendant himself, he says these two men were disputing with each other, and he twice told them if they did not make less noise they must leave, as soon as he saw them begin the fight. Well, that seems to me quite sufficient proof that there was some disorderly and riotous conduct. He himself says he had not time to stop this fighting before the police came in, but there is sufficient evidence to show that this riotous conduct was revived for some little while, and he must have had full opportunity for interfering before the police came on the scene. On this ground of exception, the appellant must also fail. The appeal is dismissed.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. MILLS AND SONS.

Railway Department — Tariff Book—Regulation 154—Act 19 of 1867.

The Court held regulation No. 154 of the tariff book of the Railway Department to be binding on a consignor who had signed the usual consignment note, though this regulation had not been published in the "Government Gazette" in terms of Act 19 of 1867.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Resident Magistrate of Cape Town, in an action in which the respondents were plaintiffs, and claimed for the return of thirty bags of bran, or the value thereof, from the Railway Department. The bran was delivered to the Railway Department in April, 1904, and consigned by the respondents to Calder and Co., of Wynberg. The Railway Department pleaded clause 154 of the Railway Regulations, and that the plaintiff had signed a consignment note agreeing to be bound by these regulations, and acknowledged they were well acquainted with them. The clause was as follows: "That all damage to, defect or deficiency in a consignment must be pointed out in writing at the time of its delivery, and the department will not entertain any claim when this has not been done; all claims giving full particulars of the loss or damage must be sent in to the Traffic Managers. No such claim for any damage, defect, or deficiency will be allowed unless made within three days after the delivery of the goods, etc., to the consignee, nor for total loss unless the claim be made within fourteen days of the approximate date on which the goods, etc., should have been delivered."

Mr. Howel Jones appeared for the appellants, and Mr. Close was for respondents.

Counsel said the plaintiffs made no claim until two years afterwards, and the department had no notice of non-delivery until then. It was a loss of thirty bags out of a total consignment of 295 bags. Calder said there had been no notice from the department that these had arrived. The plaintiff pleaded that the Railway could not take advantage of this condition in the Tariff Book, and that the regulation had not been gazetted in the "Government Gazette" as required by section 2, Act 16 of 1861. Judgment, after being reserved, was finally given for the plaintiff, and the Magistrate's reasons for judgment were as follows: "Plaintiff sues for £7 7s. 6d. or the recovery of 30 bags of bran delivered by him to the Cape Government Railway Department on the 28th April, 1904, but subsequently lost. (1) It is admitted that the bran sued for was received by the Railway Department from plaintiff at Cape Town, consigned to Calder and Co., of Wynberg, and that the bran arrived at Wynberg station, but thereafter no mention of its delivery to any person whatever has been furnished. The whole parcel appears to have been lost at Wynberg. (2) The plaintiff in the ordinary course of his business had repeatedly consigned to Calder and Co. at Wynberg, but there does not appear to have been any early and definite system of check of the despatch and receipt of the consignments, and the account current between them remained generally in suspense so far had been consigned, pending an annual settlement. In this instance the bran left on 28th April, 1904, and reached Wynberg the next day, and the April consignments to hand were not checked by Calder and Co. until the September following, and by plaintiff more than a year afterwards. Plaintiff received no advice of non-delivery or loss of the bran in the meanwhile; then failing to secure payment from Calder and Co., he made demand on the Railway Department on 27th February, 1906, and this action followed. In the railway service it has been customary to issue to the consignee Form T. 118 (notice of receipt of a consignment) and to request consignee to take delivery; in this instance no such advice was received by the consignee, and it is not suggested that such advice was sent, while all other consignments are found to have been duly notified, no record of this one being given has been traced, and thus Calder and Co. assert they were unaware of its arrival at Wynberg. The plaintiff, on the other hand, not having learnt otherwise, left the traffic to be governed as usual, and did not make inquiries, knowing of the railway custom already reported, concluded the bran had been delivered in the usual manner. Defendant pleads that the 154 bye-law puts plaintiff out of Court, as it there provides inter alia, 'No claim for any damage, defect, or deficiency will be allowed unless made within three days after the delivery of the goods, etc., nor for total loss unless the claim be made within 14 days of the approximate date on which the goods, etc., should have been delivered.' Plaintiff urged that as these bye-laws have admittedly not been gazetted in terms of section 2, Act 16, 1861, the defendant cannot bar plaintiff, and that the terms of this regulation were not known to plaintiff, and form no part of the contract as not set out in the consignment note. I am of opinion that there is much to be said in favour of plaintiff's contention not only as to the non-publication of the bye-law which involves a total loss of his property, but also on the absence of its terms from the invoice itself, but while I am not prepared to say that plaintiff is wholly supported in this plea I consider defendant's failure to advise the consignee of the arrival of the bran in the usual manner kept both the consignor and consignee in ignorance of the arrival and of its subsequent loss, and thus directly put the plaintiff into a wholly unexpected position, and that it is not now possible for defendant to take cover of this regulation, and so obtain advantage by his own admitted neglect."

Counsel, in argument, referred the Court to the Cape Orchard Company's case (15 C.T.R., 421), and Berger v. C.S.A.R. (Supreme Court, Transvaal, 1903, p. 571), which showed for a considerable time after the goods that the regulations were binding upon the respondent. Section 2 of the Act of 1861 referred to penalties in the nature of a fine for offences. This regulation was merely a condition to which the plaintiff agreed.

Mr. Close said this special agreement pleaded on behalf of the Railway Department made prescription within a fortnight. The Magistrate found, apart from the regulation, that there was a custom, and that this custom must be read in with the contract, and the contract was that the Railway Department shall carry the goods in terms of the regulation. The custom was when the goods arrived a notice shall be sent out to the consignee, and it was the duty of the carrier to give notice that the goods were ready for delivery. Counsel cited as to the general principle Petrochino v. Bolt (Law Reports, 9 Common Pleas, 361) and Aktieselskab Helios v. Eckman (Law Reports, 1897, 2 Queen's Bench, 87). Then there was the case of Mitchell v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company (Law Reports, 10 Queen's Bench, 260). The carrier could delay provided he had reasonable cause for the delay, and he submitted it was not for the consignee to turn up day after day to find out whether the goods had arrived or not. The regulation 154, he submitted, was not in law in force.

Mr. Jones having been heard in reply,

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (April 18th).

Maasdorp, J.: On the 28th April, 1904, the plaintiffs delivered to the Government Railway Department 295 bags of bran to be carried to the consignee, Messrs. Calder and Co., at Wynberg. Of this quantity a portion arrived at Wynberg, and was ready for delivery on the 29th of April; another portion was delivered on the 2nd day of May, but one consignment of 30 bags was never delivered at all. The plaintiffs now claim from the defendant the delivery of these 30 bags, or their value, amounting to £7 7s. 6d. No exception has been taken to the claim being made by Mills and Sons instead of Messrs. Calder and Co., and it must therefore be taken for the purposes of this suit that the plaintiffs are the right parties to sue. The defendant admits that the Railway Department received from the plaintiffs 295 bags of bran for carriage to Wynberg, and says that all of these were duly delivered, except 30 bags, which were despatched from Cape Town on the 29th of April, to Wynberg Station, where, in the due and ordinary course of transit, it should have arrived on the same day. There is some evidence that these bags of bran actually reached Wynberg. The plaintiffs' claim in the matter was made for the first time in February, 1906, and the stationmaster who then made inquiries says, in evidence "We traced the consignment from Cape Town to Wynberg, but can't trace it beyond the checker, who has checked it off as received. The checker left 12 months ago, and before the department got notice of this claim." Duncan, who is a partner in the firm of Calder and Co., says that the loss of the bran was discovered by them in September, 1904, while Mills states that his firm was not aware of it until a year after, April, 1905. Notwithstanding this no claim was made till February, 1906. This state of affairs will have some bearing upon the question of the reasonableness of the condition of the contract which is relied upon by the defendant in his defence. Upon the consignment note signed by the plaintiff appears the following condition "We hereby specially agree that this consignment is to be received and to be conveyed and dealt with in accordance with the terms, conditions, and regulations published in the Official Tariff Book in force at this date, with which we acknowledge ourselves to be acquainted." Amongst the conditions and regulations referred to is the following: No. 154. No claim for any damage, defect or deficiency will be allowed unless made within three days after the delivery of the goods, etc., nor for total loss unless the claim be made within 14 days of the approximate date on which the goods, etc., should have been delivered. The defendant pleads that no notice of non-delivery of the said consignment was given by the plaintiffs until the 27th day of February, 1906, and in consequence of the plaintiffs' failure to give notice as by regulation No. 154 required, the said Government is relieved from all responsibility therefor. The plaintiffs do not deny that they were fully aware of condition mentioned, and that it became incorporated in their contract with the defendant, but say that it was not attached to or set out in the document they signed, nor was it duly promulgated in the "Gazette" as a by-law in terms of Act 19 of 1867. It does not appear to me that either of these contentions is an answer to the defendant's plea. The plaintiffs expressly agreed that this condition should be one of the terms of this contract, and he is bound by it. Then it was argued that the condition is unreasonable, but I am unable to discover the right of a party to a contract to complain of the unreasonableness of the conditions of his contract. But if the Court had to go into that question I should hold that the condition is perfectly reasonable, and that the Railway Department would be put in a very difficult position if a question of this kind could be raised nearly two years after the events, and when their servants, who could supply the required information, had long left their service, as has actually happened in this case. I cannot help thinking that the delay in making the claim arose from the fact that the plaintiffs and Messrs. Calder and Co., themselves felt the difficulty, they must necessarily experience in making good their claim from the uncertain character of the evidence they could adduce after such a lapse of time. I doubt whether it can be said that it is clearly and satisfactorily proved that Messrs. Calder and Co. never received the 30 bags of bran. I merely mention this to show how reasonable it is to have a condition having for its object the prevention of such a state of uncertainty, which would leave the burden of proof on the Railway Department. Under the 154 Regulation, no claim for any damage or deficiency will be allowed for total loss unless the claim be made within fourteen days of the approximate date on which the goods should have been delivered. Now, it appears to me that the approximate time here referred to must be taken in this case to be some two or three days after the despatch of the goods from Cape Town. Such approximate time the plaintiffs are supposed to become aware of from the advice they would in the ordinary course of business receive from the consignors, and not from any notice of receipt from the Railway Department. Even if the department is in the habit of sending notice of goods received to consignees, they do not, and are not required to, send notice of goods lost. And the notice they send cannot affect the question of approximate time, but rather fix the true time of the receipt of the goods. That part of the plaintiffs' contention must, in my opinion, also fail. The plaintiffs should have made their claim within a fortnight of a day or two after the despatch of the goods from Cape Town. This they failed to do, and they have lost their right to claim damages in respect of the short delivery of the bran. Appeal must be allowed, with costs. Respondent to pay costs in the Court below.

[Appellants' Attorneys: Reid and Nephew. Respondents' Attorneys: Buchanan and Boyes.]

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1907.
{ Apr. 17th.

Mr. Toms moved for the admission of Frederick Howe Ely as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of King William's Town.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for the admission of Robert Trevor Stone as an attorney, notary, and conveyancer.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of East London.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the admission of John James Wiggins as a notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of East London.

Mr. Toms moved for the admission of John Lomax as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

LOYAL B.A. BUD OF HOPE LODGE V. DOMINICUS.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest from January 1, 1906, and for £2 8s., premiums of insurance and stamps, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable and the rents attached.

Order granted.

SOLOMON V. NEL.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on two promissory notes for £47 10s. 9d. and £26 2s., with interest and commission for collection.

Provisional sentence granted on the amount of the notes and interest, but no order as to commission.

ESTATE LATE HIDDINGH V. FIELD.

Mr. Louwrens moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £4,500, with interest from January 1, 1906, less £75 paid on account, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

AYLIFF V. MOHR. { 1907
{ Apr. 17th.

Mr. Pohl moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £22 15s. 8d., for professional services, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

Order granted.

UNSHER V. SEXTON.

Mr. Gutsche moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £88 19s. 8d., being interest due on a loan of £1,000.

Order granted.

CAMP'S BAY EXTENSION CO. V. TRAUTMAN.

Mr. Louwrens moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment for £7 10s. and costs.

Defendant said that he had paid one instalment of £2 10s. towards the purchase price of a plot of ground, but he did not want to pay the balance and take transfer of the ground. He did not even know where the ground was situated. He offered to pay £1 a month towards the debt.

In answer to the Court, defendant said that he bought the ground in the good time when people believed that "gold was hanging on the trees."

Decree granted with costs, operation to be suspended on payment of 25s. on the 1st of each month; first payment on the 1st May.

GEPP V. GEPP AND ANOTHER.

This was an action brought by Wm. Frederick John Gepp, fitter, Somerset West, against his wife, Catherina Christina Gepp, also of Somerset West, for divorce on the ground of adultery with one Jan Nielson, against whom £100 damages were claimed.

Mr. Pohl was for plaintiff; defendants had been barred, but were allowed to appear.

W. T. Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage register, Colonial Secretary's Office, gave formal evidence as to registration of the marriage.

The plaintiff stated that he was married to defendant on the 31st January, 1902, at St. Mary's, Woodstock. Witness was a joiner, but he was at present working in the danger area at De Beers Explosive Works at Somerset West, and received 10s. a day. Up to last December he lived on harmonious terms with his wife. On the 6th January, on account of the strange conduct of the defendants on the 5th January, he had Nielsen removed from his house by the police. Nielsen had boarded in witness's house, and he had been on friendly terms with him for some years. His wife left him on the 7th January, informing him that she would have to go and live with Nielsen. He told her not to do anything of the kind, and she remained, but on the 7th January she left in Nielsen's cart and went to some rooms at the Strand. His wife was now living with Nielsen at a house at the Saltpan. There were three children of the marriage, aged 4 years, 2½ years, and 18 months respectively. He desired to have custody of the children.

By the Court: It was true, as alleged in an affidavit filed by the defendants that the latter lent him money to buy a bicycle. As far as he knew, the money had been repaid by his wife out of the lodging-money she received from Nielsen. The defendants had gone to the Tivoli together with his consent. It was not true that he had condoned their conduct so long as Nielsen had been willing to supply money to keep the house going. He had never said to the defendants "I am going to bed now; you can have a good time." He denied that he had ill-treated his wife, though he admitted having pulled her hair in consequence of her conduct. He denied having misconducted himself with a Mrs. Davel.

Cross-examined by the first defendant: Witness admitted that about ten months after the marriage he struck his wife, but said that it was of no importance. They had had little quarrels but he had never committed a serious assault upon her.

The first defendant said that one side of her face had been paralysed as a result of a severe blow which she received from her husband after the incident of the 5th January.

Cross-examined by Nielsen: Witness admitted having called his wife a coloured woman, but denied that he had said that he would clear out and leave her.

By the Court: Witness had been under the influence of drink at times during his marriage.

Nielsen said that Mrs. Davel told him that she had been sleeping with the plaintiff.

Witness denied that he had slept with Mrs. Davel.

Nielsen, in answer to the Court, said that he did not deny that he was cohabiting with Mrs. Gepp.

John Hurling, of Somerset West, said that up to December the plaintiff and his wife seemed to be living on amicable terms.

Cross-examined by defendants: Witness had not said that Mrs. Gepp was a fool for standing such treatment from her husband.

Mrs. Hurling also gave evidence.

Mrs. Gepp said that she was too poor to employ an attorney to defend the case. She left plaintiff because he ill-treated her. The familiarity between witness and Nielsen commenced in August last. Her husband, who was then working under Nielsen, pressed Nielsen to come to their house, and he must have known of their relationship. Witness had given her husband money that Nielsen had handed to her. He had told her that she must get as much money as she possibly could out of Nielsen. Nielsen had given her £2 or so each fortnight. The assault which plaintiff committed upon her early in January led to a crisis, and witness left the house.

Jan Nielsen, the co-defendant, also gave evidence.

Hopley, J., said it was clear that the defendants had been living in adultery, but, as to the question of whether plaintiff had connived in the guilty conduct of the pair, he was more inclined to believe the evidence of defendants than that of plaintiff, because to his mind it had been given in a more straightforward way. It seemed to him that plaintiff did know what was going on between his wife and Nielsen before they left his house. The judgment of the Court would be absolution from the instance. There would be no order as to costs.

RORICH V. RORICH.

This was an action brought by William Siebert Edward Rorich, of Bowesdorp division of Namaqualand, against his wife, Anna Francina Johanna Rorich, of Frenchhoek, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Mr. Molteno was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

W. T. Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage register, Colonial Secretary's Office, gave formal evidence of registration of the marriage.

Mr. Molteno read the evidence of plaintiff, taken on commission at Springbokfontein. He said that he was married to defendant at Frenchhoek in November, 1899. They resided together in Namaqualand until November, 1903, when defendant left him and went to live with her parents at Frenchhoek. He prayed for forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage, but did not press for costs. Counsel also read a letter from defendant's attorney, stating that Mrs. Rorich did not propose to return to and cohabit with the plaintiff. Mr. Molteno also stated that the plaintiff was now willing to give back to defendant what she had brought into the joint estate.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to the plaintiff on or before the 1st June, failing which to show cause on the 2nd July why a decree of divorce should not be granted as prayed, and why she should not forfeit any benefits arising from the marriage in community.

REHABILITATIONS. 1907.
(Apr. 17th.

Mr. Upington moved under section 117 of the Insolvent Ordinance for the discharge of Heinrich Bauer.

Granted.

Mr. Marais moved under section 117 of the Ordinance for the discharge of Philip Lodevicus van Heerden.

Granted.

Mr. Toms moved under section 117 of the Ordinance for the discharge of Jabez Henry Whitehead.

Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

FRAME V. BENNETT.

This was an application upon notice to respondent to show cause why applicant should not be discharged from imprisonment in Roeland-street Gaol, wherein he was at present detained, under a writ of civil imprisonment issued in a suit at the instance of respondent against applicant.

It appeared that applicant was arrested on the 11th April, 1907, under and by virtue of a writ of civil imprisonment issued at the instance of respondent by reason of his default of payment of £69 12s., balance of principal and costs of a judgment obtained by Bennett against Frame on the 13th March, 1906 (15 C.T.R., 235). The writ had been suspended upon payment of £5 per month. Applicant had made payments from time to time amounting to £28, the last payment being made on the 4th September, 1906, but he said that at the time of his arrest and for some time previously he had been out of employment, and had been unable to pay any further instalments. A further writ had been issued against applicant at the instance of one B. G. Heydenrych.

Applicant, in his petition, said that he was prepared to offer £3 a month.

Mr. Upington was for applicant, Alexander Kay Frame, accountant, Claremont; Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for respondent, John Thomas Bennett, of the Palace Hotel, Kenilworth.

Mr. Upington said that the only way out of the difficulty, it seemed to him, was for respondent to surrender his estate, and to release him from imprisonment pending the surrender.

Hopley, J., pointed out that, even if he released applicant, he would have to go back to gaol in virtue of Heydenrych's writ.

Mr. Upington: The only way out of the difficulty appears to be insolvency.

Mr. Jones said that no explanation had been given by applicant to show a change of circumstances to prevent him from continuing his instalments. When he was arrested, applicant offered to pay £25 down, so that he must have some funds that he could lay his hands upon.

Petitioner was ordered to be released so far as Bennett's writ is concerned, writ to be suspended on payment of £3 a month, first payment on the 1st May, with leave to respondent to move for an increased amount should circumstances warrant, applicant to pay costs.

JOHNSTONE V. JOHNSTONE.

Mr. Swift moved on behalf of the applicant for a decree of divorce in default of her husband's compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights.

Decree of divorce granted.

FARMERS' CO-OPERATIVE CO. (IN LIQUIDATION) V. NOURSE.

This was an application calling upon respondent to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay certain costs incurred by applicants in instructing their attorneys to oppose his (Nourse's) application for discharge from insolvency, notice of which was published in the "Government Gazette" on the 23rd November last.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan appeared for applicants; respondent did not appear.

From the affidavits, it appeared that applicants were creditors in respondent's estate to the amount of about £930. On the 23rd November last a notice appeared in the "Gazette" to the effect that respondent was about to apply for his discharge, and such creditors who wished to oppose were given notice to do so. Applicants incurred certain costs in having affidavits drawn and a brief prepared for counsel to oppose the application, but at a late date, the respondent, learning that applicants would not consent to his application, determined not to proceed with it.

Ordered that respondent pay all costs of opposition to his proposed application for discharge up to, but not including the 10th January, 1907, respondent to pay costs of this application.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

REX V. TOMASO.

{ 1907.
{ Apr. 18th.

Splitting of charges—Immigration Act (30 of 1906), Secs. 5 and 7.

A person cannot in respect of one and the same act be convicted under both Sec. 5 and Sec. 7 of Act 30 of 1906.

Buchanan, J.: A case came before me as judge of the week, that of Bene Tomaso, for contravening the Immigration Act. The evidence shows that the accused, in the declaration which he was required to sign before being allowed to land, made one false statement. When asked if he had been previously convicted of any crime in any country he replied: "No." The evidence shows he had been convicted at Johannesburg under the Morality Act. This one act of the accused in giving a false answer has been split up by the prosecutors into two separate charges, one of contravening section 5 and the other of contravening section 7. The evidence was directed solely to the offence committed under section 7, namely, that of making a false declaration. That conviction must be sustained. I am not clear that anybody can be charged under section 5 of the Act. I think it highly improper to split up one act into two offences in this way. A person indicted for arson might just as well be also charged with malicious injury to property. The conviction under section 7 will be sustained, and that under section 5 quashed. It is important to the prisoner that this should be done as the sentences on the two different charges are to run consecutively, and consequently his imprisonment will be materially reduced by the alteration.

VAN HEERDEN V. JOOSTE.

This was an action brought by Anna Elizabeth Jooste, of Krugersdorp, Transvaal, married out of community of property to Petrus Johannes van Heerden, to recover from Francois Daniel Jooste, individually and in his capacity as executor testamentary in the estate of the late Roelof Alwyn Jooste, of Murraysburg, payment of the sum of £250, being her share of inheritance due to her in terms of the last joint will and testament of the late Roelof Alwyn Jooste and his predeceased spouse, Anna Gertruida Jooste (born Van Heerden) and costs of suit.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

(1) The plaintiff is married out of community of property to Petrus Johannes van Heerden, and by him assisted as far as need be. The defendant resides at Murraysburg in this Colony, and is sued individually and in his capacity as executor testamentary in the estate of the late Roelof Alwyn Jooste. The plaintiff and defendant are the children of the latter.

(2) The said late Jooste and his predeceased spouse, Anna Gertruida Jooste, on November 10, 1884, executed a joint will, whereby each testating spouse appointed as his or her sole and universal heirs the survivor, together with the plaintiff and defendant, and appointed the survivor as his or her executor.

(3) By the said will it was further provided by the two testators that certain landed property in their ownership (to wit one sixth share of the farms Bloemfontein, Klipfontein and Lilyfontein) should after the death of the survivor be sold to Frans Daniel Jooste for the sum of £500. The said words constituted a bequest to defendant taking effect and subject to payment by him of the said bequest price after the death of the survivor.

(4) The testatrix died in or about the year 1891 without revoking the said will which thereupon became confirmed by and took effect at her death, and the testator adiated under the same, and as executor thereunder filed a liquidation and distribution account wherein the said land was noted in the estate as sold to the defendant for £500, payable at the death of the survivor. Neither the said farm nor the said sum of £500 was further taken into account or distributed in such account.

(5) The testator died in or about the year 1902, after having by a will executed on November 19, 1886, and unrevoked and taking effect at the testator's death, appointed plaintiff and defendant his heirs, and defendant his sole executor. The latter, thereafter, took out letters of administration and proceeded to administer the estate, and purported to distribute the property therein.

(6) Thereafter defendant filed an account wherein he wrongfully and unlawfully brought up as an asset in the surviving testator's estate the said land at a valuation of £500 (being the bequest amount) and wrongfully and unlawfully awarded the same to himself without paying into the joint estate the sum of £500 or paying over to the plaintiff any part thereof.

(7) The plaintiff as co-heir under the aforesaid joint will has been damnified by the defendant's said wrongful action and through his failure to pay in the said £500 as aforesaid or to award and pay over or cause to be awarded or paid over to her as co-heir under the joint will the half thereof, viz., £250. to which as such co-heir she is entitled.

By reason of the premises the plaintiff as co-heir under the joint will is entitled to be paid the sum of £250, or alternatively is entitled to an order that defendant pay into the joint estate for the benefit of herself and defendant as co-heirs therein, the said sum of £500, but the defendant notwithstanding the premises wrongfully and unlawfully refuses to pay to her such sum of £250 or any part thereof.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims payment of the sum of £250 or alternative relief.

The defendant admitted paragraphs 1 to 5, but denied paragraphs 6 to 8, and continued:

"In April, 1903, the defendant, through his agent, applied to the Master of the Supreme Court to call a meeting of the next of kin for the election of an executor dative, and under the instructions of the Master, the said landed property being registered in the name of the surviving testator, he, the defendant, proceeded with the administration. There were no other assets in the testator's estate which was indebted to the defendant for certain sums which sums are still due to the defendant. The said landed property had registered against it a bond of £700, and the defendant took over upon himself the said liability of £700, and the said land and the said bond thereon were transferred to the defendant."

There was also a counter claim by the defendant who alleged: The plaintiff is indebted to the defendant in the following sums of money: (a) £25, being money lent by defendant to plaintiff in two sums of £10 and £15, while she was staying at Aberdeen; (b) £79 being the price of seven horses, all delivered to the plaintiff, which sum is still due and owing by the plaintiff; and (c) £32 being money lent by defendant to plaintiff in three instalments, while she was living in the Transvaal.

To that plea the following exception was taken: The plea is vague and embarrassing, insufficient and bad in law, in that:

(1) No material particulars or dates are given of the plaintiff's alleged indebtedness to defendant.

(2) It is not stated: (a) Whether defendant administered as executor dative or testamentary, nor (b) whether defendant administered solely by authorisation of the Master and, if so, what the grounds of such authorisation were or in what capacity or right he administered.

(3) Certain items in paragraph 3 are specified as being due to defendant by the testator, but it is nowhere stated that plaintiff or the joint estate is liable therefor; nor (b) is it stated in paragraph 3 when or for what consideration the bond of £700 was passed or that the joint estate was or is liable therefor, and the said paragraph is generally vague and embarrassing.

Mr. McGregor for the excipient (plaintiff) and Mr. Gardiner for respondent (defendant).

Mr. McGregor said the plea was so vague that the plaintiff was entitled to come to the Court and say there should be further information. The plea was far too vague, and it did not conform to the rules of Court. Counsel cited the case of Davis v. McDonnell (15 C.T.R., 250). The Court should lay down that the pleadings should not be of this extremely vague and loose character. Counsel read the 330th Rule of Court, and submitted that the Rules of Court must be fairly obeyed. There must surely be substantial and fair adherence to them. The plea was a general allegation which could not stand.

Mr. Gardiner thought it hardly necessary for his learned friend to come to Court to obtain particulars which could be obtained in another way. Where the Court had held that a portion of the pleadings was irrelevant, the way to get rid of that was by application to strike it out, and not by way of exception. He submitted it was sufficient for a pleader to set forth the material facts, and leave it to counsel to draw legal conclusions. It might have been better to set forth the date of the bond, but it was so easy to trace this bond that it was not necessary to take the exception.

Buchanan, J.: To the declaration filed in this case the defendant admitted all the material allegations. Then he went on to make certain allegations in the plea to show, notwithstanding the facts admitted on the declaration, that there are certain other facts which bar the plaintiff from recovering. The Rule of Court requires that these facts, if material, must be clearly and concisely stated. The plaintiff excepted to the plea as being vague, embarrassing, and insufficient in law. When I look at the details of the plea, I must say in my opinion there is ground for the exception that it is vague, embarrassing, and insufficient. It is impossible to gather from the plea at what time the property was bonded. The defendant goes on to set forth as the basis of a claim in reconvention certain items in which the plaintiff are indebted to him. Everyone of them is made in a very vague and bare way. Certain amounts are stated, but there is nothing to show when they were incurred, and other particulars which ought to be set forth in the declaration are not set forth. The exception will be allowed, with costs, and the defendant will be allowed to amend his plea within ten days.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

HARTLEY V. PALMER. { 1907.
HARTLEY V. CENTRAL NEWS { Apr. 18th.
AGENCY, LTD. " 23rd.

Libel — Newspaper — Privilege — Charge of unprofessional conduct — Measure of damages.

In the first case, the defendant, a newspaper editor, had in his paper accused the plaintiff, a medical practitioner, a member of the Medical Council and proprietor of a Medical Journal, of having, contrary to the etiquette of his profession, advertised "through skilfully engineered paragraphs in the local press," and also of having "used politics as a medium for advertisement," and further stated that "he ought to be the first proceeded against" by the Medical Council. Defendant refused either to apologize or to withdraw these statements, and virtually repeated them in a subsequent issue of his paper. At the trial he wholly failed to prove the truth of his allegations.

Held, that as the words were defamatory and published under circumstances which established neither privilege, fair comment nor justification, defendant was liable in damages.

In the second case, the defendant, a company of publishers, published P.'s paper. On plaintiff remonstrating, they apologized and stopped the issue. They, however, published the subsequent issue in which the libel was repeated. Held, that they were liable in damages and that their alleged ignorance of the contents of the paper was no defence.

Semble: In assessing damages for libel, the Court will regard not only the plaintiff's probable loss but also the degree of the defendant's malice.

These were two actions in which the plaintiff sought to recover damages for libel. They were brought by Dr. Darley Hartley, a medical practitioner, and a member of the Colonial Medical Council, and proprietor of the "South African Medical Record." The defendant Palmer was the proprietor of a weekly paper called "Palmer's Weekly," while the Central News Agency were the publishers of the paper, which had now ceased publication. The plaintiff sued the two defendants for £500 for libel alleged to be contained in an issue of the journal in question published on September 21, 1906, containing the following words, which were complained of as being false, malicious, and defamatory:

"If it comes to advertising, there is no one more guilty of this than Dr. Darley Hartley, and yet he had the effrontery to act as chairman of the Medical Council which sat on Dr. Crozier Durham's case." This, said counsel, had reference to an inquiry at which Dr. Crozier Durham was adjudged to have been guilty of improper and unprofessional conduct. The article proceeded: "But then Dr. Darley Hartley does his advertising through skilfully engineered paragraphs in the local press, and he also uses politics as a means for advertising, just as some use the church. Fancy a politico medico of this type talking about observing the spirit as well as the letter! Why, he ought to be the first proceeded against." The innuendo was that the plaintiff had been habitually guilty of improper and unprofessional conduct, for which he ought to be proceeded against, and might have been dealt with by the Medical Council, and that he was wholly unfitted for his profession. The plaintiff complained that he had been injured in his profession and office. The plea filed by the defendant Palmer admitted the paragraphs in question, but set forth that they were not intended to mean what the plaintiff alleged, and were not actionable. He contended that the words were fair and bona fide comment upon a matter of great public interest and importance. He denied malice and also denied the damages. The Central News Agency admitted publication, but disclaimed any knowledge of the contents of the paper. They had already apologised for having unwittingly and unintentionally caused the plaintiff annoyance, and said they at once withdrew the circulation of the paper. They had tendered £5 and costs to date of tender.

Mr. Upington for plaintiff. Mr. Palmer in person. Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Lourens) for the Central News Agency.

Mr. Burton said he would admit that his clients were liable in law as publishers. They did not at the same time admit the point of defamation. They were publishers of many papers.

Dr. Darley Hartley, the plaintiff, said he did not carry on private practice. He was the recognised referee on questions of medical procedure, and received remuneration for some portions of the work. He acted as chairman of the Medical Council at the inquiry into a charge of unprofessional conduct against Dr. Crozier Durham, who was reprimanded. Afterwards he saw a copy of "Palmer's Weekly" containing the passages referred to in the declaration. He objected to the concluding words: "If it comes to advertising . . ." He was injured in the opinion of his professional brethren, who were his sole constituents. He was not in medical practice now, but he earned his living as editor of the "Medical Record" and in subsidiary business connected therewith. That paper depended almost entirely upon the support of his professional brethren, and upon this he relied. Advertising was an extremely discreditable thing, and he regarded "skillfully engineered paragraphs" as a most reprehensible form of it. If it were held that he adopted back-door methods, as insinuated in the paragraph, it would be absolutely impossible for him to retain his connection with the "Medical Record."

Mr. Upington: I just ask you, Dr. Hartley, whether there is the least truth in the statement that you have been guilty of such conduct?

Dr. Hartley: Never, under any circumstances. I have been scrupulously careful during twenty-eight years of my medical life to avoid the slightest suspicion of advertising directly or indirectly.

Continuing, the witness said the paragraph had caused him a great deal of annoyance and pain. On the appearance of the article witness's attorney wrote to both defendants demanding an apology, and that the further issue of the paper containing the article be stopped, and £500 damages paid. A reply was received from Palmer's attorney denying that there was anything defamatory in the article or anything else than fair comment. The Central News tendered £5 and costs.

Cross-examined by Mr. Palmer: He was the proprietor of the "S.A. Medical Record."

Mr. Palmer: You advertise yourself in it as the proprietor of the paper?

Dr. Darley Hartley: I mention on the title page that I am the proprietor.

Further cross-examined, the witness said a few laymen got hold of the paper. He could not prevent that, but only a very few copies were sold other than were subscribed for by members of the profession. There was no broker's business run in connection with the paper. There was a medical agency for the selecting of practices. He was a junior member of the Medical Council.

The witness was cross-examined by the defendant Palmer at some length as to what he considered constituted advertising. He said he was guided by the rules of the British Medical Association, and by the Ethical Committee of the Association, which was the highest authority on the point. Witness did not wish to procure patients. He knew of nothing which could be considered as preventing him from taking the part in public life that he did. If a medical man caused a paragraph to appear in a newspaper to the effect that he had returned from Europe and had resumed practice, it would be objectionable, but if the newspaper people of their own accord wrote and published the paragraph, the medical man could not, of course, be held responsible.

By Mr. Burton: He brought the action to clear his reputation and also to stop what he foresaw would happen—a continuance of these attacks. Palmer had attacked him before. Witness did not object to being criticised as a public man, but he objected to being attacked in his professional capacity. He did not say there was malice on the part of the publishers, but he contended there was a lack of precaution on their part, since they knew what Palmer had previously done. He thought they should at any rate glance over the first copy before they distributed them.

Mr. Burton: Now, you know they are merely a distributing machine, and you sued them because you were afraid you might not get your costs out of Palmer?

Witness: Partially so, and partly because I was very much irritated at their allowing the next issue to come out with an article which practically rubbed the libel in again. Continuing, the witness said the subscription list of the "Record" had since gone down, and the business of the Agency had diminished, but it was impossible to say whether this was due to the article. Since this article appeared, he had been elected by his professional brethren as a member of the Colonial Medical Council. There were seven candidates for four vacancies. He was, however, disappointed at only being elected by the skin of his teeth, as in the Eastern Province he was better known than the other candidates.

Mr. Burton: Did you regard this paper as a leading and influential journal?

Witness: No.

Do you think any of your professional brethren would do so?—Undoubtedly. Medical men in the country districts know nothing of the status of this paper.

Now, do you really think any of your professional brethren were affected in their estimation of your character by reason of this paragraph?—I think it probable, because there is nothing which a medical man regards with so much contempt as surreptitious advertising by back-stairs means. Continuing, the witness said he did not know there was any difference of opinion among the Medical Council as to what constituted advertising.

Re-examined by Mr. Upington: The "Medical Record" was not intended for circulation among laymen, and was in no way put before them. Witness's address was inserted in the paper, because it was circulated among the medical profession. No names were given in the sale of practice advertisements. In his present position advertisements would do him no good. If a patient came to him he sent him to one of his professional brethren. He sometimes acted in consultation with another doctor.

Dr. Richardson, local vice-president of the British Medical Association, said he attended the Medical Conference at Bloemfontein, where, in consequence of something a layman said, he spoke to Dr. Darley Hartley, who showed him this article in "Palmer's Weekly." He thought the statement contained therein was one likely to lower Dr. Darley Hartley's position in the eyes of his professional brethren, apart from the effect it might have in the eyes of the public. It was particularly detrimental to one of Dr. Darley Hartley's position.

Dr. E. B. Fuller, local president of the British Medical Association, said the article in question was obviously meant to do harm to Dr. Darley Hartley in the eyes of his colleagues and the public.

Dr. D. J. Wood, a member of the Colonial Medical Council, said that the facts alleged in the article, if true, would have involved bringing the plaintiff before the Council. He considered the article imputed dishonourable conduct.

By Mr. Burton: So far as witness knew, Dr. Hartley's reputation had not suffered on account of this article.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Mr. Palmer said he had no witnesses to call.

Mr. Burton called

Ernest J. Woodley, manager of the Central News Agency, who said that the business was a very large one, and involved the distribution of all the principal papers of South Africa. The method of distribution was that the papers were received from the printers, tied up, and sent out in bulk to newsagents. The Agency had been distributing "Palmer's Weekly" for about two months previous to the publication of this article. It was impossible to scan all the publications issued. As soon as the letter was received complaining of libel, witness stopped the rest of the issue of the paper from being sent out. About a third of the number printed were stopped, and it was impossible at that time to interfere with the sale of the copies already distributed. Witness had no knowledge of the article appearing in the paper. The copies of the paper were distributed mechanically, as all other publications were. Nor was the issue of "Palmer's Weekly" of the following week read by witness. He never thought there would be a further article about the matter. Witness had previously spoken to Palmer about the affair.

By Mr. Upington: Witness did not know about an action brought against the company in respect of libellous matter written by Palmer in the "Owl," while Palmer edited that journal. Palmer gave the Agency an indemnity for any damages given against them. Witness did not regard Palmer as a man able to pay substantial damages. It would have been better to keep an eye on the paper for the subsequent issue. It was not the rule of the company to take a guarantee against libel from all papers.

By Mr. Palmer: Witness could not say definitely whether a libel action was brought and damages given against the company in respect of matter written by defendant in the "Owl." That matter was dealt with in Johannesburg.

Mr. Palmer: Have there not been more libel actions in regard to matter in the "Capo Times," the "Argus," and the "S.A. News," than against all the weeklies put together?

Witness: I do not know. These things do not come before me personally, unless they are in the form of lawyers' letters.

Then you have had more lawyers' letters in respect of matter appearing in the dailies than in relation to the weeklies?—We have had as many; I can't say whether we have had more.

This concluded the evidence, and counsel were then heard in argument.

Mr. Upington said that publication being admitted, there were only two matters in question. In the first place, the issue was: were the words complained of defamatory? And the second question was: If they were defamatory, had the plaintiff sustained damage, and to what extent? It was pleaded by the defendant Palmer that this was bona fide and fair comment, but here was a statement of fact and the question of bona-fide comment did not in the least arise where a person made statements of fact which were false. Palmer had not justified the words. The position he took up was, first of all, "Oh, my little paper could not injure you," and in the second place, "You (Dr. Hartley) are a public man, and you are fair game." But that was not a position which could not be justified in law. A public man must submit to criticism of his public acts, so long as that criticism was fair and bona fide, and did not go beyond what the necessities of the case warranted; but Dr. Hartley had done nothing which could justify any person in assailing him in his profession or business. On the question of the liability of the second defendants, counsel submitted that the Agency should have taken greater precaution to see that the paper did not contain libel, especially having regard to the fact that there had previously been difficulty in respect of matter written by Palmer. Mr. Upington contended that the liabilities of the defendants was a joint one.

Mr. Palmer contended that the paragraphs contained nothing but fair comment. It was not suggested in the article that Dr. Hartley advertised himself in order to secure patients, but that he advertised himself in such a way as to further his business in connection with the journal he owned. It was rather a commendation of Dr. Hartley's good business capacity than a statement damaging his reputation, for in the ordinary sense he was not a medical man, since he did not practice. He maintained that no damage had been done to the plaintiff. He denied that any action had been taken against the Central News Agency, or even threatened, on account of anything he had written. He did not write this article himself, but, of course, the responsibility was his, and he did not take the view that it contained anything defamatory.

Mr. Burton said there was no admission on the part of the second defendants that the article was defamatory, but at the same time they did not contest it. Of course, there was malice in law, but of actual malice and intention to injure there was none. He submitted that in the circumstances the plaintiff was not entitled to more damages than the second defendants had tendered. It had been said that the defendants were jointly liable. That might be so, but in that case why had not the plaintiff joined them in one action? Counsel quoted Odgers on Libel and Slander, 3rd edition, pp. 365 and 441, and referred to the cases of Duminy v. Thompson and Co. (Transvaal High Court Reports, 1905, p. 313), Wilson v. Hulle and Others (Transvaal High Court Reports, 1903, p. 178) and Upington v. Solomon and Co. and Upington v. Dormer (Buchanan, 1879, p. 240). He further argued that no actual damage had been proved. Could an article like this appearing in a squib of this sort, seriously affect the reputation of a man like Dr. Hartley?

Mr. Upington in reply.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (April 23rd).

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff, who is a licensed medical practitioner, practising at Cape Town, sues the defendant Palmer, the proprietor and editor of "Palmer's Weekly" newspaper, and the Central News Agency, a joint-stock company, the publishers of "Palmer's Weekly," for damages sustained by reason of the defendant's printing and publishing concerning the plaintiff the following false, malicious, and defamatory words, to wit: "If it comes to advertising, there is no one more guilty of this than Dr. Darley Hartley, and yet he has the effrontery to act as chairman of the Medical Council which sat on Dr. Crozier Durham's case. But then Darley Hartley does his advertising through skilfully engineered paragraphs in the local press, and he also uses politics as a medium for advertisement, just as some use the church. Fancy a politico-medico of this type talking about observing the spirit as well as the letter. Why, he ought to be the first proceeded against." The declaration proceeds to state that the words meant that the plaintiff had been habitually guilty of improper and unprofessional conduct, for which he should have been proceeded against, and might have been dealt with in terms of section 13 of Act 7 of 1899, and that he was by reason thereof wholly unfitted for his profession and for being a member and chairman of the Colonial Medical Council. Five hundred pounds is the damages claimed by the plaintiff from each of the defendants as sustained by him in consequence of the alleged injury. The defendant Palmer admits that he printed and published the words complained of, but says they do not bear the meaning put upon them by the plaintiff's innuendo, and he states further that the words, taken with the context in the publication, formed a fair and bona fide comment upon a matter of great public interest and importance, and were printed and published without any malice towards the plaintiff. The second-named defendants admit that they published and circulated the issue of the newspaper containing the words complained of, but say they did so without being aware of the contents of the paper, and without any malice or intention to injure the plaintiff. Through their counsel they admitted, what is not quite clear upon the plea, that the words are defamatory in their meaning, but they plead that before action was brought they apologised to the plaintiff for having unwittingly and innocently caused him annoyance, and undertook not to circulate any further issues of the paper containing the words complained of; they also tendered to pay to the plaintiff the sum of £5, with costs. It appears that the plaintiff, besides being a duly licensed practitioner, is an elected member of the Colonial Medical Council, established under Act 34 of 1891 and Act 7 of 1899. Section 13 of Act 7 of 1899 provides that whenever any bona fide information or complaint is laid by any member of the public or by the Minister in control of the administration of the law protecting public health, charging any medical practitioner with improper and unprofessional conduct, the Council shall institute an inquiry, and if such practitioner be judged by the Council to have been guilty of such improper and unprofessional conduct, the Council may reprimand and caution such person in writing, under the hand of the president or chairman, and if such improper or unprofessional conduct be persisted in by such person after due receipt of such reprimand or caution, the Governor may, if he see fit, direct that the name of such person be erased from the register, and that his licence be withdrawn and cancelled. At such inquiries, evidence upon oath is to be taken by the Council. The Council is, therefore, invested with important judicial functions, and their inquiries may result in serious consequences to any practitioner against whom charges of improper or unprofessional conduct are substantiated. In the course of their statutory duties the Council was called upon to inquire into charges made against Dr. Crozier-Durham, and at the sittings of Council held for the purpose the plaintiff acted as chairman. The proceedings ended in a reprimand being administered to Dr. Durham by the Council through their chairman. This is the matter of great public interest and importance upon which the defendant says the publication in question forms a fair and bona fide comment. Nothing has appeared in evidence to prove that any objection could be taken to any of the proceedings carried on in the case by the Council, or to their determination of the questions raised in the matter. The publication does not deal with the merits of the case or call in question the decision of the Council, but proceeds to fasten upon certain words used by the chairman in delivering the ruling of the Court, in order to make strictures upon the Council generally, and upon some members of the medical profession by name. Amongst other things, it accuses them of failing to be guided by the spirit of their regulations. This is not a question which this Court has now to go into, but I must point out that there is a great difference between a fair and bona fide comment upon the proceedings of the Council, and a justifiable charge apart from such proceedings against public men, conveying imputations of dishonourable conduct. In the one case the facts elicited during the judicial inquiry are put before the public as they appeared, and the comments are confined to such facts. In the other case the person seeking to justify charges made against public men in the public interest must prove the truth of these charges. The charges conveyed in the publication are not based upon anything elicited at the inquiry, but have regard to the conduct at other times of the members of the Council. I do not say that to say of such members that they do not act in the spirit of their regulations is libellous, nor do I say that if some serious charges are made against them acting in their public capacity that such charges if proved to be true cannot be justified in a court of justice upon being properly pleaded. However, the words used by the defendant with regard to the plaintiff are of a different and more serious import than the rest of the paragraph. They amount to this that the plaintiff as chairman of the Medical Council condemned advertising by medical men, and in so doing was guilty of effrontery, seeing that he himself advertises, but he does his advertising through skilfully engineered paragraphs in the local press, and for such conduct he should be the first proceeded against. I think, in justice to the defendant Palmer, the words must be taken to mean that if advertising is regarded by the Medical Council, under its professional rules of etiquette, as improper and liable to punishment, then the plaintiff has himself been guilty of conduct rendering him liable to proceedings under the rules. The defendant himself does not describe such conduct as dishonourable. But the question remains, has he attributed to the plaintiff conduct, which will bring him into contempt, disrepute, and dishonour, under circumstances which afford the defendant no justification or privilege. It is pleaded that the words used are a fair comment upon the proceedings at the inquiry, but nothing transpired at the inquiry to show that the plaintiff had improperly advertised by skilfully engineered paragraphs in the local press. A charge is made questioning his fitness to sit in a judicial inquiry like the one in question, and virtually stating that instead of sitting as Judge, he should be upon his trial at the bar of that tribunal. I do not hold that such a charge cannot be made under circumstances which would justify the person making the charge, and who justifies the charge by suitable pleadings, but the least that will be required of him would be proof of the truth of his accusation. Now the question arises whether the words in question impute to the plaintiff dishonourable conduct, which will bring him into contempt and disgrace, and are injurious to his character. The medical profession possess a code of morals, or rules of professional etiquette either expressly enacted or tacitly understood. A breach of these rules brings the delinquent into disgrace with his fellows, and it is only natural that a person disgraced in his own class or profession should become degraded in the eyes of the people generally, and such breach also subjects him to severe penalties. One of the rules of the medical profession forbids public advertisement for the purpose of professional gain. Whatever laymen may think of this rule, it is regarded in the profession as of serious import, and a breach of it, as proved by professional evidence, would lead in the first instance to a reprimand of the delinquent, and, if persisted in, may result in his being disqualified from practice. Now, the defendant charges the plaintiff with advertising, not openly, but in a mean, underhand manner. Such conduct, in the opinion of the medical witnesses, would constitute a breach of their rules, is regarded as improper and unprofessional; and would entail, if a definite charge is made, an inquiry which might in case of proof result in injurious consequences to the plaintiff. We have here, therefore, all the elements of a defamatory publication, that is, words defamatory of the plaintiff, uttered under circumstances which establish neither privilege, fair comment, nor justification. The truth of the words has not been pleaded in this case, and it would, therefore, not be necessary for the Court to decide upon that point. But I must say that in my opinion nothing has been proved to justify the statement that the plaintiff used skilfully engineered paragraphs in the newspapers for the purpose of advertising. The only newspaper referred to in this connection in the evidence is the plaintiff's own paper called the "South African Medical Record." It was contended that the bare fact of editing this paper is itself a species of advertisement, and publishing in the paper an election manifesto as candidate for membership of the Medical Council also amounts to advertisement. It is enough to say that it is not regarded as such by those best able to judge as representative and guardians of the medical profession, who recognise the "Medical Record" as an authorised medium of communication, and are fully aware of its contents. In considering the measure of damages regard must be had not only to the probable loss to the plaintiff, but the degree of malice in the defendant. When the plaintiff asked for redress in respect of the injury done him by the publication in the paper of the 21st of September, the defendant wrote on the 25th of September that he had nothing to withdraw, or to apologise for, and he proceeds in the paper of the 28th of September to ridicule the plaintiff's claim, and virtually repeats the charge of underhand advertising by saying that the paragraphs forming such advertisements are based upon information supplied in many cases by the medico himself. Considering that the defendant was unable, with the exception of the "Medical Journal," to lay his finger upon a single paragraph to support his charge as against the plaintiff personally, it proves malice on his part to persist in the charge after the complaint was made by the plaintiff, and in the conduct of his case the defendant cross-examined the plaintiff, in a way which could only have for its object the establishment of the truth of his charge. If he had succeeded in that object the measure of damages might have been reduced. But an unsuccessful attempt of this kind has the effect of aggravating the damages. Before deciding upon the damages as against Palmer, I shall now turn to the case of the other defendants. As the publishers of what they themselves admit to be defamatory matter, they are also liable in damages to the plaintiff. But, considering that the degree of malice forms an element in assessing the damages, they might have been regarded as having participated in a slight degree in the wrong done to the plaintiff, had they acted otherwise than they did when they discovered that they had done the plaintiff an injury. When the plaintiff made his complaint to them and demanded redress, they answered in a very proper spirit expressing regret, and promising to stop further circulation of the injurious publication. But while their reply was apparently still forming a subject of deliberation on the part of the plaintiff, they join in publishing the second article mentioned above, which I have characterised as a repetition of the charge of unprofessional conduct. Thereafter, upon the plaintiff issuing summonses against them, they write treating the whole matter slightly; pronounce the business a trifling one, which would be covered by the sum of £5, seeing that the plaintiff wanted some remuneration for having issued summonses. An apology operates in mitigation of damages, but subsequent conduct may neutralise the effect of the apology in this respect. Some difficulty on the point of awarding damages has arisen from the course adopted by the plaintiff of suing the two defendants in two separate actions. It has also been contended that this action on his part has unnecessarily increased the costs. I do not think that much practical difference has been occasioned in the costs in this matter. The position taken up by the defendants prevented their combining in defence, and rendered two sets of pleadings necessary, while the joint hearing of the case has obviated double costs on that ground. But the ordinary rule of awarding damages against the defendants jointly and severally is somewhat interfered with by the state of the pleadings in this double suit. In assessing damages I bear in mind the principle that an injured person should not be twice compensated for the same wrong, and, without deciding that there may not be cases where by way of penalty for injuries marked by bitter malice, several persons may be mulcted in heavy damages, I am of opinion that in this case the Court should estimate the damages suffered by the plaintiff and adjudge the payment thereof by both the defendants in different proportions. It was argued that the weight of the liability should fall on the first defendant, and the second defendants should be treated as being only technically wrongdoers. I do not quite take that view, but even if that were so, the second defendants may make what use they can of the contract of indemnity they obtained from the first defendant to transfer the penalty from themselves to him. I award as against the first defendant damages in the sum of £30, with costs, and as the second defendant in the sum of £20, with costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: W. K. Baxter. First defendant, in person. Second Defendant's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buisinné.]

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ADMISSION. § 1907.
{ Apr. 18th.

Mr. Swift moved for the admission of Johan D. G. Fouche as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of Prieska.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

STRANGMAN V. PALMER.

Mr. Louwrens moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £432 3s. 2d., with interest from the 17th July, 1906, and costs, the note being payable at the Standard Bank, Worcester.

Order granted.

BOTHA V. COETSE.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds for £250 and £150, with interest from the 1st July, 1906, bonds due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

S.A. MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY
V. FILLIS.

Mr. Toms moved for provisional sentence for £3,300, balance of a mortgage bond for £3,500, due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

In re CLARKE AND CO., LTD. § 1907.
(IN LIQUIDATION). { Apr. 18th.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan presented the second report and account of the official liquidators, and applied for the usual order as to lying for inspection.

Ordered that the report lie as usual.

TRANSVAAL MINES LABOUR CO. V.
FECHTER; FECHTER V. TRANSVAAL
MINES LABOUR CO.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan appeared for Alfred Ernest Wilson, trading as the Transvaal Mines Labour Co.; Mr. Swift appeared for Fechter (plaintiff in the action).

The former application was for a commission de bene esse to take the evidence of Wilson and his witnesses in Johannesburg.

The latter application was for the attachment of certain books, etc., ad fundandum jurisdictionem.

It appeared that Fechter had brought an action against the Transvaal Mines Labour Co. to recover £24 for rations supplied to certain labourers prior to their despatch to the Rand to the company. The defendant denied that at any time material to the suit he had been domiciled or resident in this colony, or that he had traded in his own behalf in this colony. He had entered into a contract with one Paul Scott to send up labourers from the Cape at so much per head, and he denied any liability for the rations alleged to have been supplied by plaintiff. Defendant further said that the books which the plaintiff proposed to attach did not belong to him but to the said Paul Scott. It was stated for plaintiff that the books were called the Transvaal Mines Labour Co.'s books.

As it appeared that certain affidavits were expected from Johannesburg in reference to the second application, both matters were ordered to stand over until the 26th April.

Ex parte BAILEY.

Mr. Howes moved under section 4 of Act 11, 1903, for the removal of petitioner's name from the roll of advocates. Petitioner was admitted and enrolled as an advocate on the 13th March, 1906, and he was now desirous of being articles as an attorney at law practising in this colony, and serving in that capacity.

Order granted as prayed.

STENGEL AND CO. V. SCHAEFER AND CO. AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Dr. Greer), moved for leave to sue the second-named defendant, Georg Selle, of Berlin, Germany, by edictal citation, and to attach a certain notarial general bond ad fundandam jurisdictionem. Mr. Searle, having read an affidavit by C. Friedlander, plaintiff's attorney, stated that in June, 1906, Schaefer had passed a general bond in favour of Selle, who no doubt was supporting the firm of Schaefer and Co. Schaefer also owed the plaintiffs a sum of £961. Stengel objected to the bond, and the parties then came together, and it was arranged that Selle should settle Schaefer's debt to Stengel, and that another bond should be passed by Schaefer to Selle. The agreed amount was then raised to £2,222 9s. 7d. Schaefer did not owe that amount to Selle, but Selle was going to pay off Schaefer's debt. This bond was passed by Mr. Friedlander, who was acting for plaintiffs, but though Selle had not paid Stengel, the bond remained in Selle's favour against Schaefer and Co. The petitioners wished either to get the money from Selle, or to have the bond set aside, because as long as the bond stood against Schaefer they had no protection for their claim. On the question of attachment, counsel cited Wright, Crossley and Co. v. Royal Baking Powder Co., of New York (17 Sup. Ct. Repts., 366).

Ordered that the bond registered on October 30, 1906, in favour of the second respondent, or his interest therein, be attached ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and that plaintiffs have leave to sue the second respondent by edict, process returnable on June 18, personal service to be effected.

Ex parte ESTATE PIET.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the appointment of petitioner as curator ad litem to represent certain two minors in the partition of a certain farm in the district of Uitenhage. Petitioner is guardian of the minors under the will.

Order granted as prayed, save that any scheme of partition or transfer arrived at shall be submitted to the Master for his approval before being finally carried out.

Ex parte KUUN.

Mr. Howes moved for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent petitioner's sister, Cornelia Kuun, in an action to have the latter's sanity inquired into.

Ordered that a commission issue, and that Mr. Advocate Louwrens be appointed curator ad litem of the alleged lunatic, summons returnable on April 30.

Ex parte JARMAN AND WIFE.

Mr. Philipson Stow moved for an order authorising an amendment of the marriage register, and certain birth certificates, altering the second named petitioner's name to "Mary Ellen," instead of "Mary Britmart." It appeared that Mrs. Jarman had been known from babyhood as "Mary Britmart," though she was registered in the births' registry as "Mary Ellen."

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte VAN SCHALKWYK AND WIFE.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for an order authorising the registration of a certain ante-nuptial contract, and the mortgage bond executed on December 10. The parties appeared before an attorney at Fraserberg, and executed the documents, but through an omission by a clerk in his employ the contract and bond were not forwarded to Cape Town for registration within 14 days, as stipulated by the Ordinance.

Order granted as prayed, saving any rights of parties which may have arisen in the interim.

Ex parte ESTATE BROOK.

Mr. Toms moved for an order authorising the curator of W. A. Brook, a patient in the Pretoria Asylum, to sell certain shares in order to provide for necessary outgoings. The matter had been ordered by the Court to be referred to the Master for report upon certain expenditure set out in the account appended to the application, and counsel now read a report by the Master, who said that the expenses seemed to have been properly incurred. Order granted as prayed.

VAN ZYL AND BUISSINNE V. OLIFF AND INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

Enrolled agent—Articled clerk.

O., an agent, enrolled under Act 20 of 1856, Sec. 38, had entered into articles of clerkship with applicants. The Law Society now objected to his acting as an agent in Magistrates' Courts during his service of articles.

Held, that he was entitled to devote a reasonable portion of his time to such agent's duties.

This was an application upon notice calling upon respondents to show cause (a) why it shall not be declared that the respondent, John Frederick Oliff, an enrolled agent, does not prejudice his service under articles of clerkship with one of the partners in the applicant firm of attorneys by appearing in any R.M.'s Court in this colony under the provisions of section 36 of Act 20, 1856, when specially ordered thereto by applicants and conducting cases on behalf of the clients of the applicant firm upon a power of substitution in his (the said Oliff's) favour from his principals (applicants), and (b) why it shall not be declared, further, that the respondent Oliff is entitled for and on behalf and on account of his principals to recover the prescribed fees and charges payable for the services so rendered by him as an enrolled agent, in like manner as if one of the members of or any attorney employed by the applicant firm had personally appeared and conducted such cases.

Mr. Searle read an affidavit by C. H. van Zyl, senior partner in the firm of Van Zyl and Buissinne, who stated that respondent Oliff had been in practice for several years as an enrolled agent at various Courts of the R.M.'s of this colony, including Beaufort West, Caledon, Worcester, etc. Oliff, about eighteen months ago, signed articles of clerkship with an attorney at the Paarl, and had approached deponent's firm for a cession of his articles. In view of the fact that respondent was an enrolled agent, and in consideration of his experience in conducting cases in the Magistrates' Courts, deponent had agreed to take cession of his articles, and to pay him a salary. It was never contemplated by him that he would be required to devote more than a portion of his attention to work in the R.M.'s Court. The applicants proposed to depose Oliff to conduct a case in the Magistrate's Court at Robertson. Oliff raised difficulties when asked to go, and produced certain correspondence that he had had with the Law Society, who had expressed the opinion "that an enrolled agent cannot avail himself of his privileges as such while serving under articles of clerkship."

Mr. Searle, K.C., was for applicants; Dr. Greer was for the first respondent; Mr. McGregor was for the second respondents.

Mr. Searle said that before rule of Court 413 was promulgated articled clerks were allowed to appear in Magistrates' Courts under the power of substitution included in the original power and they were allowed to charge fees for their principals. The rule was somewhat altered last year, and it was now a question whether that prevented articled clerks from appearing and charging. Up to last year the practice was regulated by section 13 of schedule B of Act 20 of 1856, which provided that the only people who could recover fees in Magistrates' Courts were advocates, attorneys and enrolled agents, although any person authorised in writing to do so could appear for another in a Magistrate's Court. Articled clerks were allowed to appear and to charge. He cited Cronje v. Hulse and Hudson (Buch. 1869, p. 170). He also cited Rundies v. Truter and Another (3 H.C., 451) and ex parte Haw (1 Searle, 22). This case was not likely to arise again as Oliff was enrolled in 1882 and one of the few agents entitled to appear in any Magistrate's Court in the Colony.

[Hopley, J.: Is not the whole application a bit academic and premature, because it is asking me to say that Oliff may go about the country conducting cases in Magistrates' Courts?]

Mr. Searle: The Court has on various occasions assisted articled clerks, as also in the case of Smith (4 Juta, 170).

[Hopley, J.: In Smith's case the Court knew exactly what it was doing, but I do not know what service Oliff will have rendered as an articled clerk.]

Mr. Searle went on to say that the mere fact of Oliff's appearing should not disqualify him.

[Hopley, J.: I do not think it would.]

Mr. Searle said that that was the attitude the Law Society took up. Under the new rule (413) litigants in Magistrates' Courts are allowed to appear in person, by duly enrolled law agent, by attorney and by advocate, and the only alteration was that he might not appear by a friend. Under the old rule, if an articulated clerk was allowed to charge he was allowed to do so as attorney, because the friend who appeared could not charge. Counsel cited Longdon's case (14 S.C., 335), and said that there was nothing inconsistent in an enrolled agent being an articulated clerk.

Hopley, J., said that an ordinary articulated clerk would only appear in the Magistrate's Court where the principal appeared himself, but a man like Oliff could go all over the country.

Mr. Searle said that applicants wished the Court to say that the mere fact of Oliff's appearing in the Magistrates' Courts did not vitiate his articles. He referred to the cases of Lance (Buch. 187, p. 78) and Johnson (1 Juta, 40).

Dr. Greer said that Mr. Oliff was willing to accept any order the Court made. He considered that by reason of his being an enrolled agent he was entitled to appear in the Magistrate's Court, although he was an articulated clerk. Section 41 of the Magistrate's Court Act seemed to regard the enrolled law agent as the normal practitioner of the Magistrate's Court.

[Hopley, J.: Probably he was the normal practitioner in 1856.]

Dr. Greer argued that that Act provided that an attorney should be considered as an enrolled agent, and there was therefore no inconsistency in an enrolled agent being an articulated clerk. If Oliff were to cancel his articles to-morrow it could not be contended that he had ceased to be a law agent. Oliff was entitled to a declaration that the mere fact of his appearing would not vitiate his articles.

Mr. McGregor said that an attorney's Magistrate's Court practice was a subsidiary matter. However able an enrolled agent might be, he could not be said to be in pari materia with an attorney. He was not concerned with the question of whether an ex-articled clerk could resume his practice as a law agent. The present motion came before the Court in a wrong form, and at a time when it was not ripe for judicial determination. It was quite novel for two gentlemen to drag a third into Court to have his status determined. Van Zyl and Buissinne had no such pecuniary interest in the matter as would entitle them to a judgment in this Court.

[Hopley, J.: But then no interest can arise until Mr. Oliff applies for his admission.]

Mr. McGregor: Just so, and they are now asking the Court to place itself in an awkward position.

Hopley, J., said that he would not make an order on the second prayer, which seemed to be academic, and he was not going to give any ruling as to fees.

Mr. McGregor said that that was going to be his submission. The Court could not be used as a Court of first instance to determine whether fees in Magistrates' Courts were payable or not. Hard cases made bad law, and it did not tally with the position of an articulated clerk that Mr. Oliff should appear in Magistrates' Courts all over the Colony.

Mr. Searle in reply.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (April 19th).

Hopley, J.: In this matter I am of opinion that the appearance of Mr. Oliff in Magistrates' Courts in his capacity as an enrolled law agent is not in itself an act calculated to interfere with the course of his instruction as an attorney. In fact, the class of work which he would at such a time have to do is of such a nature that it would be beneficial and helpful to anyone pursuing his studies as an articulated clerk. It has indeed been argued that a person should not be at the same time an articulated clerk and a practising law agent, and there can be no doubt that the two capacities might be combined in a manner which would be objectionable. But there is nothing in any of the Statutes or Rules of Court or decided cases which prohibits the combination; and in the absence of express prohibition there seems to be no reason to hold that the exercise of the functions of an enrolled law agent in an honourable way should invalidate the articles of clerkship entered into by such agent with an attorney. I may add that I have consulted the other members of the Bench and that we are all of the same opinion on the point. It does not necessarily follow that a too extensive use of such services as an agent may be made, and I think that it would be open to the Incorporated Law Society to appear to oppose Mr. Oliff's admission as an attorney if they could show, for instance, that during a very substantial portion of the time during which he ought to have been serving the applicants under articles he was engaged in travelling to and from various Magistrates' Courts in the country. In such case an additional term of service might possibly be ordered by the Court. . . . This is merely, however, an expression of opinion by way of an obiter dictum which I throw out as a warning to the parties concerned. With regard to the other point raised concerning any fees earned by Mr. Oliff in Magistrates' Courts and their disposition, I do not feel called upon to express any opinion on an application like the present. The matter is one of some importance, and I think that the Law Society was justified in appearing and placing its view before the Court. There will be no order as to costs.

S.A. NEWSPAPER CO., LTD., AND OTHERS
V. S.A. GENERAL WORKERS' UNION
LOCKED OUT CIGARETTE WORKERS'
CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD.

Dr. Greer moved to make final a provisional order granted for the winding-up of the respondent company, under the Companies' Act, 1892, the appointment of Mr. Levy as official liquidator, with powers under section 143.

Rule absolute.

In re THE GOLDEN MILE GOLD MINING AND DEVELOPING SYNDICATE, LTD.

Mr. Roux presented the first and final report of the liquidators. Counsel said that there were no assets to realise and no funds to distribute, and he suggested that the Court should grant a final order at once, without any directions as to the report lying for inspection.

[Hopley, J.: I think it would be much better that it should lie in the ordinary way, as there may be some person who objects to the report.]

Report ordered to lie for inspection; one publication in the "Cape Times."

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ROWAN V. ESTATE LOUW { 1907.
AND OTHERS. { Apr. 19th.

Will (joint)—Massing—Intestacy
Fidei-commissum.

R. and his wife, married in community executed a mutual will containing special bequests of their landed property to their sons, and then instituting each other, together with their children, heirs of the first dying. The respective inheritances of the sons were burthened with fidei-commissum to the extent of £1,000 each: that of the daughter was burthened to its full amount. The children were not to receive their respective inheritances until the death of the survivor. The sons and the Board of Executors were appointed as executors. R. predeceased his wife, and neither of them made any subsequent testamentary disposition. On the death of R., the said executors took out letters of administration, and on the death of his wife similar letters were taken out in respect of her estate.

The plaintiff, the daughter, contended that, as there had been no massing of the joint estate under this will, it could be regarded only as that of the first dying, that, therefore, the surviving spouse had died intestate as to the institution of heirs, that the fidei-commissum on her inheritance applied only to such inheritance from the paternal estate, and that, as to the maternal, she was entitled as heir, ab intestato, to receive the same free and unencumbered, and that the administration by the executors testamentary was, in respect of such maternal inheritance, illegal.

The defendants denied, either wholly or in part, these several contentions.

Held, that the mutual will must be regarded as the separate testament of both R. and his wife: that as she had not died intestate the appointment of executors testamentary was good and valid, and that plaintiff's maternal inheritance was subject to the fidei-commissum imposed by the joint will.

This was a special case, stated in the following terms: (1) The plaintiff is Elizabeth Johanna Rowan (born Louw), married without community of property to Floris Pieter Rowan, of Durbanville, by whom she is assisted in this action. The plaintiff is the daughter of Abraham Andries Louw and Elizabeth Johanna Louw, both deceased; (2) the defendants are: Johannes Henoch Neethling Roos, in his capacity as the secretary of the Board of Executors, Cape Town; Petrus Adriaan Wynand Louw, Andries Abraham Louw, all in their capacities as executors testamentary of the estate of the plaintiff's father, and also as the executors appointed by the Master in the estate of the plaintiff's mother; and Louis Edmund Benjamin, in his capacity as the curator ad litem of William Archibald Brown Rowan, the plaintiff's minor son and sole living issue; (3) on the 24th May, 1900, at Durbanville, the plaintiff's parents, being married in community of goods, executed a will (whereof a codicil was subsequently added); (4) the will so translated contains, inter alia, the following dispositions and directions.

Clause 7: We stipulate that all debts of our children shall be brought into account and deducted from their inheritances, and any debt of our son-in-law, Rowan, shall be brought against his wife as if it were her own.

Clause 8: We appoint each other, together with our children (and one or more of the latter predeceasing, then their descendants), to be heirs of the first-dying, to be effective after the death of both of us, and not sooner.

Clause 10: The whole inheritance of our daughter, married to Floris P. Rowan, we burden with fidei-commissum. She shall enjoy the interest during her lifetime, and shall receive the same without the intervention of her husband. Should this interest at any time be interdicted, or should she pledge or dispose of this right, which she possesses for life, then and in that case we revoke this disposition and appoint our executors to be the heirs of the interest, who then shall receive the interest and give it to our daughter, if they think fit. At the death of our daughter her inheritance shall pass over to her child or children, but again burdened with fidei-commissum, so that such child or children, whilst being below thirty years of age, shall receive no inheritance, only the interest; and should the child or children die in the meantime, the capital reverts to our estate for the benefit of our other heirs, unless such deceased child shall leave lawful descendants, in which case it shall pass to them.

(5) On the 9th February, 1901, the plaintiff's father died without making any other will or codicil, and on the 25th February, 1901, the first three defendants were appointed executors testamentary to his estate; (6) the plaintiff's mother, after the testator's death, remained in the possession and enjoyment of the entire estate until the 21st June, 1906, when she died, without having at any time made any other testamentary disposition, and on the 5th July, 1906, the Master of the Supreme Court, purporting to act under the terms of the will, appointed the first three defendants as executors testamentary of the estate of the plaintiff's mother; (7) in April, 1900, the plaintiff and her husband became indebted to the plaintiff's father in the sum of £600 by virtue of a certain acknowledgment of debt stipulating for the payment of interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on the sum. The said sum and interest had not been repaid at the death of the plaintiff's father, and has not since been repaid, but is to be deducted in such manner as the Court may decide. The inheritance coming to the plaintiff out of her father's estate exceeds this sum of £600, together with interest.

The plaintiff contends: (8) That the will does not effect a massing of the joint estate of the plaintiff's parents, and in respect of the appointment of heirs the will is according to the true intent and meaning thereof the will of the first dying only, to wit, of the plaintiff's father; that the plaintiff's mother has died intestate in respect of the appointment of heirs, and that the inheritance coming to the plaintiff from the estate of her father is alone subject to the provisions of clauses 7 and 10 of the will, and only the balance of the inheritance from her father's estate is burdened with any fidei-commissum, and that the plaintiff is entitled to claim immediate payment of her inheritance as an heir ab intestato of her mother. (9) That the appointment by the Master of the first three defendants as executors testamentary of the estate of the plaintiff's mother is invalid, and that the plaintiff is entitled to claim either that the appointment be set aside or, as an alternative, that the first three defendants be ordered to administer the estate as an intestate estate in so far as the appointment of heirs is concerned. (10) That the aforesaid sum of £600, together with the interest thereon to February 9, 1901, is to be brought into account as against the inheritance of the plaintiff, as heir under her father's will, and deducted solely from the inheritance coming to the plaintiff from the estate of her father.

The defendants contend: (11) That the said will does effect a "massing" of the joint estate of plaintiff's parents and is according to the true intent and meaning thereof the joint will of both. (12) They deny that plaintiff's mother has died intestate in respect of the appointment of heirs, and say that according to the true intent and meaning of the will the children of the testators are appointed heirs to the joint estate of testator and testatrix. (13) They contend that whether or not plaintiff's mother be held by the Court to have died intestate in respect of the appointment of heirs, the entire inheritance coming to plaintiff, whether ex testamento from the estate of her father, or ab intestato from the estate of her mother or from the joint estate, is subject to the provisions of clauses 7 and 10 of the will. (14) They contend that in any event plaintiff's mother died testate as to the appointment of executors and that their appointment by the Master as testamentary executors of the estate of plaintiff's mother is a legal and valid appointment. (15) They contend that the aforesaid sum of £600, together with the interest thereon to the 21st June, 1906, is to be brought into account as against the entire inheritance accruing to plaintiff from the estate of both her parents, whether accruing ex testamento or ab intestato, and is to be deducted from such entire inheritance.

Wherefore the parties pray for judgment upon their respective contentions, and pray that the costs of this action may be ordered to come in equal portions out of each of the said estates.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers), for plaintiff. Mr. Bisset for the first three defendants. Mr. Benjamin as curator ad litem for the fourth defendant.

Mr. Searle, in argument, said he would submit that it was pretty clear that there was no massing of the whole estate because there was no joint disposition of the estate after the death of the survivor, and that was what massing was. The parties did not purport even to appoint heirs to the joint estate, much less to make a disposition of the joint estate after the death of the survivor. In these circumstances, he contended that half of the estate would go according to the will, and the other half would go according to the law of intestacy. Counsel quoted the case of Barry v. Kunhardt's Executors (2 Juta, 89), and referred to Maasdorp's "Institutes of Cape Law," vol. 1, 291, Voet, 36, 1, 7, and to Fisser v. Baker (15 C.T.R., 437), Du Plessis v. Smallberger (3 Searle, 383), Laing v. Laing's Executors (7 Juta, 85), Lint v. Zipp (Buch., 1876, 181).

[Buchanan, J.: I think all those cases may be tersely summed up in the expression that fidei-commissum is not to be presumed; that the presumption is against it.]

Mr. Searle: Yes, my lord. I have a number of other cases on the point. Counsel said he did not know of any case in point so much as that of Barry v. Kunhardt's Executors (2 Juta, 89). He submitted, in view of these cases, that the first contention of the plaintiff was a sound one, and that the will did not affect the massing of the estates.

Mr. Bisset said that since his learned friend had intimated that he would not contest the question of the appointment of the executors, he did not think he need argue the case.

Mr. Searle said he did not admit the appointment was valid, but in the circumstances it would perhaps be of no use to set aside the appointment.

Mr. Benjamin said that for the purposes of the case of the minor, he did not think it was necessary to contend there was a massing. That did not affect the present case, because there was no question raised here with regard to a subsequent will revoking the testatrix's portion of the mutual will. The only question which arose was as to the applicability of these particular clauses—seven to ten—of the will to the testatrix's portion of the estate. It was perfectly clear this was a mutual will, and as a mutual will it was to be regarded as two separate wills of the testator and the testatrix. Counsel quoted Mostert's case (Buch., 1873, 40), Dantu v. Hart (Buch., 1868, 64), Van der Kessel, Thesis, 290, Voet, 28, 1, 1, and 2 Menzies, 408. On the question of the imposition of a fidei-commissum on an inheritance in an intestate estate, counsel quoted Grotius, 2, 20, 3, and Voet, 36, 1, 6, and 30, 31, 32, 16, 11, and, proceeding, said it would have been perfectly competent for Mrs. Louw to make a will which would have provided that the 10th clause of this mutual will should not apply to her daughter's inheritance, or any other inheritance; but his (counsel's) contention was that if she did not do so then the clauses of the mutual will remained in force and operated on her half of the estate, every clause which possibly could apply.

Mr. Searle, in reply, quoted the cases of Morrison v. Morrison (1879, Buch., 24), Kruger v. Kruger (15 Cape Times, 316), Klopper v. Smit (9 Juta, 167).

Buchanan, J.: In this case, Mr. and Mrs. Louw, husband and wife, married in community of property, made a joint will. By this will, they first bequeathed certain landed property to their sons, and made several other bequests. Then in the 8th clause, they appoint each other, together with their children, to be the heirs of the first dying. Then they go further and put a certain burden of fidei-commissum upon portions of the inheritance taken by their sons, and upon the whole inheritance taken by their daughter, the children of the marriage. They then mutually appoint their sons and the Board of Executors executors of this testament. The principles of our law, which have been laid down ever since the case of Mostert, regard wills of this kind, though, in form, mutual, as being separate testaments made by both parties, and it is also recognised by our law that a will so made may be revoked, so far as concerns one-half of the estate by either the testator or the testatrix during the lifetime of both, and also, after the death of the one, by the survivor, in so far as regards his or her estate, providing, however, that such survivor shall not make any fresh disposition antagonistic to the provisions of the mutual will, if he or she has taken the benefits of the mutual will.

In most of the cases that have come before the Court, the survivor has made a subsequent will, and the question at issue in these cases has been, how far the provisions of the subsequent will conflict with the mutual will. In the present case, the husband died first, and the wife afterwards, and neither has revoked any disposition. Consequently, there is no case of a conflict with the mutual will. In the case when such a matter comes before the Court. Applying the first principle which I have referred to, to this will, it must speak, firstly, as to the will of the first dying, and secondly it must speak to the will of the survivor. It has been customary in these mutual wills, to make provision that the survivor shall remain in possession of the estate, and that there is a direct institution of the heirs of the survivor. This will only by inference allows the survivor to remain in possession, because it says that the legacies and bequests shall not come into force until the death of both and also as to the bequests in the 8th clause, these bequests are not to be made effective until the death of both. In consequence of these provisions in the will, the survivor remains in possession of the whole estate until her death. She has now died, and under this will the executors have taken out letters of administration, first, as executors of the husband, and secondly, as executors of the wife. The first matter that is in issue is: Is this appointment of the executors of the wife a valid appointment? I think this will, reading it as a will of the wife, authorises the appointment of executors, and consequently the contention of the defendants in paragraph 14 that the appointment is a legal and valid one must be answered in the affirmative. Now, when we come to consider the will as a will of the wife, it is not in dispute that the bequests made in the will by the wife, and to the other people, are good and valid and binding. Looking at this will as a will of the wife only, it must be admitted that there is no specific disposition of the remainder of the estate which is not specifically disposed of. In the husband's will there is such a disposition, but there is no such disposition in the wife's case. It is not now alleged that the wife's will is altogether invalid. On the contrary, the plaintiff's contention in this case is rather based on the idea that there is no will at all made by the wife. If there were no will made at all by the wife in this case, several of the contentions of the plaintiff would require further consideration, and some of them probably might be sustained. But there is a will of the mother, and consequently the estate must be distributed according to this will. Though there is no institution directly of the sons and of the daughter to the survivor's portion of the estate, still, it was evidently the intention of the parties that the sons and daughter should step in after the specific bequests have been dealt with, and what the Court always tries to do in these cases is to carry out the intention of the parties. But, as summing that the residue of the estate is not specifically disposed of, disposition is provided for by law, and disposition by law would take effect in this case. But then we come to this—that when the disposition by law takes effect, the question is, does the wife's will impose a burden of fidei-commissum on the inheritance? There is no doubt there have been repeated decisions of this Court that fidei-commissum should not be lightly presumed, and that if there is any doubt at all in the will the doubt should be given against the burden rather than in favour of it. But that generally arises in construing the terms of a will. In this case, looking at the terms of the will, there is clearly absolutely no doubt that a fidei-commissum is imposed, and, if the will is valid at all, this fidei-commissum, as expressly imposed, must take effect. I think that the inheritance taken out of the wife's estate must be subject to the provisions of the wife's will, and it had imposed fidei-commissum to the extent of £1,000 on each of the sons, and on the whole of the inheritance of the daughter. I think that was the intention of the parties, and I think that the facts of this case distinguish it from others decided, and do not make it conflict with previous decisions. This is rather a case of first impression, and I think my decision is quite consistent with previous decisions of the Court. The defendants' contention (14) will be sustained—that the executors have been properly appointed, and the decision of the Court is that the inheritance of the plaintiff out of the estate of her mother is subject to the provisions of seventh and tenth clauses of the mutual will. The costs will come in equal portions out of each of the estates, as prayed.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: G. J. R. D'Oliviera. Defendants' Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné, T. P. Peters.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ODENDALL V. VAN DER BERG } 1907.
AND ANOTHER. } Apr. 19th.

Exceptions—Plea in abatement.

This was an argument on exceptions. The declaration set out that the parties resided at Loskoppen, in the division of Philip's Town. The defendants were sued jointly and severally under the joint will of the late R. H. Zwiegers and his wife, C. S. Zwiegers. The survivor was entitled to the life usufruct in the farm Loskoppen. The testatrix survived the testator, and became and was the person entitled to the life interest at the date hereinafter mentioned. About 23rd December, 1905, C. S. Zwiegers assigned and ceded her life interest unconditionally to the defendants' two sons, J. P. and R. A. van der Berg. About 10th January, 1906, J. P. and R. A. van der Berg ceded their interest in so far as it affected a certain portion of the farm to the plaintiff. About 22nd May, 1906, R. A. van der Berg confirmed in writing a previous verbal cession to his brother J. P. van der Berg, and all his interest in the farm which he had by virtue of the cession dated 23rd December, 1905. About 19th March, 1906, J. P. van der Berg made over to plaintiff the entire interest which he and his brother had in the farm by virtue of the cession to them by the widow C. S. Zwiegers, so that the plaintiff was entitled to possession of portion of the farm from 10th January, 1906, and of the whole from 19th March, 1906. The several cessions were all made by written agreements. The defendants had been living on the farm since 2nd March, 1906, together with their stock, and though plaintiff had frequently requested them to quit the property they refused to do so. Plaintiff claimed an order declaring him entitled to the occupation of the farm and declaring the defendants to have no lawful right of occupation thereto; an order ejecting defendants, and £50 damages for trespass.

The defendants' exception and plea in abatement was that the declaration was vague, embarrassing, and bad in law, and disclosed no cause of action, because it was not alleged that C. S. Zwiegers, being the usufructuary, gave her consent to the assignment and cession of their rights by J. P. and R. A. van der Berg, nor were the rights which the two last named were said to have assigned and ceded capable of being so assigned and ceded, nor could there in law be any unconditional cession of a usufructuary's life interest in a praedium rusticum. It was not alleged at the time of the cession, 19th March, J. P. van der Berg had any title or authority to dispose of the rights still subsisting in his brother in respect of the farm. No consideration or jura causa was shown for the alleged cessions, especially that of May 22, 1906. It was not alleged that plaintiff was the registered owner of the farm, or that plaintiff sued by authority of the owner or usufructuary, or that defendants held or occupied under plaintiff. Defendants prayed that the declaration be set aside, and the claim dismissed, with costs. For a plea in abatement, defendants said it was not competent for plaintiff to sue without joining the usufructuary.

Mr. McGregor was for the excipient (defendant in the case), and Mr. Burton was for the respondent.

Counsel, in the course of his argument, cited Grotius (2.39.4), Van Leeuwen (2.9.14) (Kotze), Eastern Rand Exploration Company v. Nel (T.R., 1903, p. 42), Voet (7.6.2), Donellus (Comm. on C.L., 10.12.3), De Vries v. Alexander (Foord, p. 43).

Mr. Burton, on the question of the right of the usufructuary, briefly referred to the case of Purkin v. Lippert (5 C.T.R., 710).

Maasdorp, J.: In this case it is alleged in the summons that Mr. Zwiegers is entitled to the life usufruct of the farm of Loskoppen, under the will made by herself and her husband. It is alleged that she ceded this right to J. P. and R. A. van der Berg, and they either directly or through intermediate cession, passed on their rights to the plaintiff in this case. The right that was so ceded is a right to the use and occupation of the farm Loskoppen. The plaintiff now upon his cession wishes to take possession of this farm for the purpose of using it, and finds it is occupied by the defendants, and by virtue of his rights, as cessionary, he claims possession of the farm, and that the defendants be ejected. The defendants take exception to this declaration upon the ground that the Van der Bergs could not, without the consent of Mrs. Zwiegers, cede any rights and enjoyment of this property which they might possess. That ground of objection is one, to my mind, which cannot be raised by the defendant in this case. It does not follow that cessions made without the consent of Mrs. Zwiegers are necessarily null and void. They hold good until the parties who are entitled to object raise objections. The only parties who could raise objections to the action of the Van der Bergs in ceding to the plaintiff might be Mrs. Zwiegers, or might be the heirs, who are ultimately entitled to the property. They may take steps to have this cession declared null and void, if under the law they are entitled to do so, but until they take such steps they may be reasonably taken to be consenting parties to the enjoyment of the rights by the cessionaries. That, I think, is sufficient ground for holding that it is no good ground of exception that Mrs. Zwiegers has not actually given her express consent to the cession of these rights. I do not hold that such express consent was absolutely necessary.

That question may still be raised upon the pleadings, because it may appear that the defendants have certain rights which they hold from the cessionaries, and they may insist that the cessionary should assert her rights in order to protect them. And they may be able to show that the usufructuary had a right to insist upon the consent before taking these steps, on the assumption that Mrs. Zwiegiers could have objected to this cession, that she is the only person who could object to a cession being made without her consent. The further ground of exception is that there is no allegation that the one cessionary had a right to cede his interests to his brother cessionary. Now the other allegation is on the grounds that the rights were ceded in the first instance by the usufructuary to him. A further point raised is that there is no allegation that any consideration passed between the cessionaries themselves. That is not a question which any third party can raise. Any cessionary has a right to part with his rights without any consideration at all. If it should appear that the cessionary insists upon a contract with the person from whom the cession comes, then the question of consideration can arise between them. The fourth ground set up as showing that this declaration is vague and embarrassing is that it is not alleged that the plaintiff himself is the owner of the farm. In the ordinary course, he is supposed to have all the rights in himself, and he sues upon his rights as cessionary. It may be that all these allegations may hereafter be a question of the position in law occupied by these parties, and it may be found that the plaintiff cannot establish the validity of all these cessions, but that question can only arise as between the defendant and the plaintiff when the defendant himself can set up some legal right vested in him which enables him to question what has taken place between the plaintiff and the cedents of this property. Upon these grounds I must overrule this exception. Then there is a plea in abatement to the effect that it is not competent for the plaintiff to sue in this action without joining in the usufructuary, and in order to support this plea certain cessions have been put in evidence. Now, I see nothing in the cessions which makes it necessary for the cessionary in this case, who holds these rights under these documents to compel him to join the cedent, as well as the parties and apart from these documents there is nothing to support this plea in abatement. The plea in abatement must be overruled, with costs.

[Excipient's Attorney: G. Trollip.
Respondents' Attorneys: Mostert and Son.]

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

MALMESBURY BOARD OF EX-
ECUTORS AND TRUST CO. { 1907.
V. DE JONGH. { Apr. 19th.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on four mortgage bonds for £100, with interest from April 16, 1904; £250, with interest from April 1, 1904; £100, with interest from October 3, 1905; and £150, with interest from October 1, 1905; less £20 17s. 11d. received on account, bonds due by reason of three months' notice having been given; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Defendant appeared, and admitted liability.

Mr. Buchanan thereupon applied for final judgment.

Final judgment granted, with costs, property executable.

HOFMEYER AND SON V. ROSS.

Mr. Van der Byl moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Final order granted.

KEMP V. ENGELBRECHT.

Mr. Lewis moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £350, less £25 paid on account, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

WEBER V. BAUSDORF.

This was an application for judgment under Rule 329d, directing defendant to give transfer of certain property, or, in the alternative, refund the purchase price, and for damages and costs.

Mr. Gutsche moved. Counsel said that since issue of summons, transfer had been passed, and he had now to ask for costs and for interest on the purchase price for three years, viz., since April, 1904.

The Court declined to grant an order for interest, but ordered defendant to pay the costs as prayed.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Lewis moved, under section 14, of Act 38, 1884, for the rehabilitation of Marks Rappeport.
Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ADAMS. { 1907.
{ Apr. 19th.

Mr. Lewis moved for leave to applicant to sue in forma pauperis. Counsel said that he had not read the papers, and was, therefore, unable to certify at present.

Referred to Mr. Lewis for certificate.

Ex parte GREEVE.

Mr. Roux moved, on the petition of Magdalena Greeve, of Mount Currie, East Griqualand, for the appointment of a curator ad litem to represent one Sydney Herbert Keal, late of Mount Currie, in an action to be instituted by petitioner to recover damages in the sum of £100 for alleged seduction, and for leave to attach a certain inheritance and to sue respondent by edictal citation. Petitioner alleged that the acts complained of took place between April and August, 1905, and that on the 21st February, 1906, she gave birth to a child, of which Keal was the father. On the 1st October he promised, in writing, to marry her when he returned from the Argentine, after five years. Petitioner was a major, and respondent was 19 years of age. Under the will of his late mother he was entitled to an inheritance of £108 12s. 2d. His father, who had married a second time, had since died. No tutor testamentary to the respondent had been appointed. Petitioner was unaware whether respondent had proceeded to the Argentine, or where he was at present.

Hopley, J., said that these two young people seemed to have made fools of themselves, and now one wanted to get money out of the other's estate during his supposed absence from the country.

Mr. Roux said that petitioner could not prevent respondent from going away. It was suggested that John Bernard Keal, brother of respondent, should be appointed curator. He submitted that the case was one in which the Court would grant relief.

Hopley, J.: This is a very unusual application. I suppose that for a tort of this sort a minor would be liable, but I should think that the Court would want extremely strong proof that he alone was responsible for what happened. He seems to have been about 16 or 17 years of age at the time, and about two years junior to the petitioner. I do not think that, considering his age, very heavy damages would be given against him. It is just a question for petitioner whether it is worth her while going on with the case. However, I will grant an order, but I think it would be a good thing if the curator thinks that his ward is the father of this child, for him to try to compromise the matter so as to save the expense of the edictal process and the other formalities. Before the citation is issued I should like to know from the curator or the friends of this boy whether they do not know where he is, so as to save the expenses of publication.

Ordered that John Bernard Keal be appointed curator ad litem to respondent, and that the sum of £108 12s. 2d. be attached, leave granted to sue edictally, if necessary, and service of citation, intendit, etc., to be appointed in Chambers at a later date upon further information.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

IMPERIAL GOLD STORAGE V. { 1907.
CIVIL COMMISSIONER, CAPE. { Apr. 22nd.

Transfer duty—Valuator—Civil Commissioner.

The applicant Company purchased all the assets of another Company for a fixed price, and included among such assets, there was certain land reclaimed from the sea as to which no specific price was mentioned in the contract of sale. In order to ascertain the value, the applicant Company appointed an appraiser and applied to the Court for an order on the Civil Commissioner to issue a transfer duty receipt for the duty tendered upon the basis of such appraiser's valuation.

Held, that in the absence of proof that the parties to the sale had valued the reclaimed land at a higher price than that found by such appraiser, it was the duty of the Civil Commissioner, if he considered the amount so found to be less than the just and fair value, to appoint a valuator in terms of the 14th Sec. of Act 5 of 1884.

This was an application on notice of motion brought by the Imperial Supply and Cold Storage Company against the Civil Commissioner, calling on him to show cause why he should not be ordered to issue the usual transfer duty receipt for £1,772 18s. 5d. paid in connection with certain property on the Dock-road. There was subsequently another notice given, which stood over from time to time, an alternative notice that the Court would be asked for alternative relief, and direction as to the manner in which the duty payable was to be assessed in the event it be held that the applicant was not entitled to the order in terms of the original notice. The matter had been before the Court in other forms. The land was reclaimed from the sea under an arrangement with the Government in 1895, which was entered into with Combrinck and Co., the latter undertaking to reclaim a certain portion of land, and the Government undertaking, if Combrinck complied with certain conditions, they would at the end of ten years issue title to the lands reclaimed. A large portion of this land belonged to Combrinck and Co., and a certain strip of this land was in question in this case. Combrinck and Co. got their title in 1905, when the ten years had elapsed. The Government then said they would issue title to Combrinck and Co. At that time Combrinck had sold the rights to a portion of this land to other companies. The Government in 1905 took up the position, although they consented to these different alienations, they would issue to Combrinck and Co. title to the whole and, in consequence of that, title to the whole of the ground was issued to Combrinck and Co. In July, 1905, it became necessary for the last of the companies to apply under the Derelict Lands Act for a vesting of a portion of the land, inasmuch as the previous company which had alienated the ground had been dissolved and the other companies could not give transfer. In July, 1895, there was an agreement between the Government and Combrinck and Co. as to the reclamation of the land, certain conditions as to the Harbour Board getting a certain portion of it. In May, 1899, there was an agreement whereby Combrinck sold to the S.A. Supply and Cold Storage Company their general business, and their property, including the right to a certain portion of this reclaimed land. They sold the whole of their business for £272,000, and then by subsequent arrangement of the 5th August, 1899, there was an agreement whereby the Government agreed to accept this S.A. Supply and Cold Storage Company as grantee under the agreement of 1895 of the reclaimed land. Then on February 27, 1902, there was an agreement whereby the S.A. Supply Company sold their undertaking, including the portion of the reclaimed land, to the S.A. and Australasian Company. On the 5th November, 1902, there was an agreement with the Government, the Government recognising the South African and Australasian Company in respect of the reclaimed land. On 28th May, 1903, an agreement was entered into whereby the South African and Australasian Company disposed of their undertaking and this property to the Imperial Cold Storage and Supply Company. They said they sold, but no sum of money was mentioned in cash. The amount was £1,650,000, of which £500,000 was in debentures and £1,150,000 as shares in the Australasian Company. In July, 1903, the South African Supply Company went into liquidation. The Australasian Company went into liquidation also and was dissolved. The South African Supply was not yet dissolved, although it was in liquidation. On February 18, 1904, there was an agreement whereby the Government agreed to recognise the Imperial Company in respect of this land. In July, 1905, the Government issued to Combrinck and Company a grant of the whole of the reclaimed land. At that time it was pointed out on behalf of the Imperial Company that the company took up the position that this was not the proper procedure, as the Government, recognising their rights in respect of this matter, they should have a grant. The Government took up the position that they were going to issue grant of the whole of the land to Combrinck and Company, and that grant was issued. Combrinck and Company paid no transfer duty. It was a direct grant. In effect Mr. Justice Maasdorp's judgment was that May 28, 1903, was the date of sale and purchase. On the 26th February, 1906, there was a rule nisi granted under the Derelict Lands Act, the Imperial Company pointing out that they could not get declarations of seller and purchaser signed in the ordinary course, because this Australasian Company was dissolved. They asked for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act that they were entitled to the title of this portion of ground. That was granted, and on March 13 the rule was made absolute for transfer of the reclaimed land along the Dock-road, and on the same date a rule nisi was granted calling on the Treasury to show cause why applicant should not be allowed to declare July 8, 1905, as the date of alienation, the value of the land to be ascertained by the valuation of a referee. Applicants took up the position that the land had not been fully reclaimed in 1903, the whole of the land was not reclaimed until 1905. They took over the rights, and the Government recognised these rights, and until the Government was in a position to make a grant of the land transfer duty should not be paid. The point was the applicants were not entitled to this land until it had been reclaimed, though they bought the rights.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Burton), was for the applicant, and Mr. Howel Jones was for the respondent.

Counsel referred to the judgment of Mr. Justice Maasdorp in the previous application (16 C.T.R., 276), which, however, did not decide the question of how the transfer duty had to be paid. On the 31st May, 1906, the liquidator of the Australasian Company (Mr. Reid) made a declaration in regard to the property, stating that he could not actually know the purchase price of this particular portion of land. It seemed pretty clear that the effect of the transaction was a reconstruction of the Australasian Company under another name. Now, they had tendered upon a valuation, and it was pointed out to the Civil Commissioner's Chief Clerk it was impossible for them to do otherwise. The Government took up the position that they would have no valuation of this land, and that there must be a declaration as to what it was sold for, and the applicants said no price was mentioned. It was impossible for the applicants to comply with the request, and the Government would not accept their valuation. The Chief Clerk of the Civil Commissioner said there must be a valuation whereupon they got a valuation made for £68,000, and the duty, £1,772 18s. 5d., had been in the hands of the Government since June, 1906. Counsel submitted the valuation should be accepted in terms of the Act.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The point is whether you are content to accept the valuation?]

Mr. Jones: The main objection is that the valuator was never appointed by the Civil Commissioner at all.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Supposing the Court orders that the valuation should be made on the basis of 1903, is it not possible that another valuation may make it much less?]

Mr. Jones: That I cannot say.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The question for the Government is whether it is not better to accept the valuation.]

Mr. Jones: I might point out that this land was valued at £188,000 when Combrinck sold in 1899. I should like to put a few questions to Mr. Reid as to the value of the property, and also ask him to produce his books.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I do not think the Court is in a position to fix the amount. The question is whether you are bound to accept the valuation. If not then it is competent for the Civil Commissioner to appoint a valuator.]

Mr. Searle, in further argument, urged it was the intention of the Act that there should be a valuation in the circumstances present in this case.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The Act requires that the Civil Commissioner should appoint a valuator, and the Civil Commissioner would not be justified in saying, "You appoint your own valuator."]

Mr. Searle: Supposing he says: "Any sworn appraiser will do"; I submit then that the Civil Commissioner would not be committing a breach of duty. We would never have got Mr. Hablutzel unless we were under the impression that that was what the Civil Commissioner wanted. Counsel read sections 13, 14, and 15 of the Transfer Duties' Act, and said that if this were called a sale and purchase, then it was not a sale and purchase for any price at all. The particular properties were not valued specifically; there was no allocation of the purchase price to the particular properties.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What would have been the position if the Civil Commissioner had said: "I shall now have a separate valuation and appoint my own valuator"? Would you have objected to that?]

Mr. Searle: No, my lord. I am not prepared to object now.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That is the ultimate course which must be adopted, I think..]

Mr. Searle: It seems to me the only way out of it. I am now prepared to consent to that course, and I cannot see any possible objection.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But in your motion you insisted upon having your own valuator.]

Mr. Searle: We did take up that attitude, but we said we were misled. Counsel contended that, reading sections 14, 15, and 16, this was a case where there must be a valuation. That was the only possible construction of the Act.

De Villiers, C.J., said the Court would hear Mr. Jones on the point.

After hearing Mr. Jones in argument,

De Villiers, C.J., said that if there were any doubt, the Court would allow Mr. Reid to be called.

John G. Reid was then called. He said he was the liquidator of the Australasian Company. The property taken over from Combrinck was transferred to the Imperial from the Australasian.

Witness did not know whether the property was taken over at the prices scheduled in the transaction with Combrinck. Witness was in London at the time. In arriving at the £1,650,000 purchase price, no items were fixed; that was specifically avoided.

Mr. Jones pointed out that in the report of the Imperial Company it was stated that the property was taken over at "cost."

The witness said that this should have been "book value," not "cost."

Mr. Jones asked the Court to make an order for the production by Mr. Reid of the books.

De Villiers, C.J., said there appeared to be no necessity to order the production of the books.

Mr. Jones said there were necessarily negotiations in the matter, and there must have been an understanding as to the basis on which the property was taken over. The whole of the circumstances showed that the companies acted on the same basis as was laid down in the schedules in the transaction with Combrinck.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The written agreement before the Court doesn't specify any price. You want to go behind that written agreement.]

Mr. Jones contended it was quite improbable that in a transaction of this sort no price was fixed. There must have been a schedule of properties with the prices attached. It was quite certain that the properties were valued in the books, and for this reason he urged that the books should be produced. Only in the event that the Court considered it impossible for the company to fix the value could a valuator be appointed.

After hearing Mr. Searle in reply, the Court refused the application.

De Villiers, C.J.: The notice of motion served in the first instance upon the respondent, the Civil Commissioner of the Cape, called upon him to show cause why he should not be ordered to issue the usual transfer duty receipt for the sum of £1,772, being the amount due and owing in connection with the alienation to the Imperial Cold Storage and Supply Company, Limited, of certain premises and so on. The ground upon which this amount is fixed as the transfer duty payable by the applicant company is that this amount is based upon a valuation made by the valuator, Hablutzel. He was appointed by the applicant company, and there is no evidence, in my opinion—not sufficient evidence—that the respondent had consented to accept Mr. Hablutzel as valuator, in terms of the Act. The terms of the Act are clear that if a valuator is to be appointed, the appointment is to be made by the Civil Commissioner, and not by anyone else, and it would require the clearest proof possible that the Civil Commissioner has consented to appoint as valuator the person appointed by the applicant company before an order can be made such as is now claimed. But I suppose that the applicant saw it would be impossible to succeed on the original application, and he gave notice that the Court would be asked for alternative relief, and for directions regarding the manner in which the duty payable is to be assessed. But this is a most unusual form of notice. It is usual when a person seeks relief to state to the opposite side and to the Court what the relief sought is. In the present case there is no such statement, and therefore the Court is unable to give directions in terms of the application. But I am quite prepared to express the opinion which I entertain in the matter for what it is worth, and possibly it may prevent any further litigation in the matter. It appears to me we must look at the terms of this agreement between the Australasian Company and the Imperial Company. There was a purchase there of assets en bloc, and the specific value of each of these assets was not stated. When it came to the payment of the transfer duty it appears that the purchasers were able to state the price paid for certain properties in Aliwal North and elsewhere, but were unable to state the amount which they had agreed upon as the purchase price of the property now in question. The agreement itself does not specify the amount, and it therefore, in my opinion, now would lie upon the Civil Commissioner to show that there was an agreement between the parties, by which the price was fixed at a higher sum than that upon which the amount of transfer duty is now offered. If the Civil Commissioner has no proof to that effect he should treat that amount as being the price, and it then will become competent for him to cause a valuation to be made in terms of the 14th section of Act 5 of 1884. Then all these facts which have been brought to the notice of the Court by Mr. Jones would be brought before the valuator. The valuator, in appraising this property, would consider all the circumstances of the case. He would consider what was stated in the report which has been read. He would consider also what the Australasian Company paid for this property, and then he will make his own appraisal; and if the applicant is dissatisfied with the appraisal, he has his remedy under the Act. But at present it seems to me this Court is not in a position to fix the amount of duty payable by the applicant. My opinion is, therefore, that the applicant should fail, that there should be no order upon the application, and that, inasmuch as the applicant has not indicated in his second notice, the directions which he wishes the Court to issue, he is not entitled to his costs. On the contrary, the costs of this application should be paid by the applicant.

Buchanan, J., concurred.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné. Respondents' Attorneys: Reid and Nephew.]

Ex parte BEARD AND OTHERS.

Mr. Gardiner, for the petitioners, said this matter came before the Hon. Mr. Justice Maasdorp, in Chambers, under the Derelict Lands Act, and his lordship made no order, but granted leave to the petitioners to take the petition into court for argument and decision if they desired to do so, with leave to give fuller information if they were so advised. Since then a number of affidavits had been filed, which had not been before his lordship on the previous occasion, and which counsel read. The petitioners prayed that their lordships might, in terms of section 2 of Act 28, of 1881, order the registration of title to a certain roadway at Wynberg in their names, subject to certain conditions to be inserted in the respective transfers of the land to petitioners, or to grant such other order as to their lordships seemed meet.

De Villiers, C.J., said ample notice would have to be given to any persons interested. The widow of one of the heirs was alive, and she, at all events, should have notice. A rule would be issued calling on all concerned to show cause on the 14th July why an order should not be made as prayed on the conditions mentioned in the letter written by the Colonial Secretary to Messrs. Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton, on the 11th March, 1905, the rule to be served on the Wynberg Municipality, to be forwarded by registered letter to Mrs. Stewart, and to be published once in two Cape Town newspapers.

Buchanan, J., concurred.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

REX v. ANGELL. { 1907.
 { Apr. 22nd.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of the Cape, who had convicted the appellant (Edward Angell) of a charge of indecently assaulting a child of six years, residing in Grey's Pass, Cape Town, and sentenced him to pay a fine of £10, or to be imprisoned for three months with hard labour.

The grounds of the appeal were (1) that the judgment was not supported by the evidence given before the Court, and (2) that it was contrary to law.

Dr. Greer was for appellant; Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Dr. Greer said that he proposed to rely on the first ground only. He submitted that the Magistrate, sitting as a juror, had not sufficient evidence on which to found the conviction. It was important to note that professional assistance had been engaged to represent the accused, but, for some reason or other, that assistance was not forthcoming at the trial. The whole of the case rested on the mother's evidence, and arose out of her suspicions. There was, he submitted, such an element of doubt in the matter that the accused ought to have been acquitted.

Hopley, J.: It is unnecessary, in my opinion, to call upon Mr. Nightingale for the Crown in this matter, as nothing that Mr. Greer has said has in the least tended to make me think that the Magistrate has come to anything like a doubtful or wrong decision. One must bear in mind that the stigma which attaches to such a crime and the infamy attaching to the conviction must have been points which would be before an experienced Magistrate like the one who tried this case. He would not lightly or upon doubtful evidence convict a man of such a crime as this. The evidence seems to me to be really all one way. The accused went up a lane with this little girl, and the circumstances were favourable to the commission of such a crime. When the child came out of the lane she forthwith made the charge against the accused. She repeated the story before the Magistrate, and it can hardly be said that her evidence was given in order to confirm the mother's suspicions. The Magistrate saw the witnesses, and he was in a better position to weigh the evidence than this Court can be. The appeal will be dismissed.

THURNAU v. PICARD.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Mount Fletcher in an action brought against appellant by respondent to recover £30 damages for alleged breach of contract.

From the record it appeared that respondent advertised in the "East London Dispatch" for a situation as assistant in a country store, and that appellant replied, and stated that he required an assistant to take sole management of an out-station, 2½ hours' ride from Mount Fletcher. Correspondence ensued, and respondent went up to the defendant's place and presented himself. He then proceeded with defendant to the out-station, and after their return to Mount Fletcher defendant dispensed with plain-tiff's services, saying that he (Picard) was not sufficiently well up in the Kafir language. Plaintiff alleged that defendant had summarily dismissed him without reasonable or just cause. Defendant said that he found plaintiff would not suit his requirements and advised him accordingly. He had never considered that plaintiff had been engaged by him. Plaintiff said defendant had engaged him outright on his credentials at £6 per month and board and lodging, and his claim for £30 damages was made up of one month's salary, expenses of travelling from Port Elizabeth to Mount Fletcher and back again, and subsistence allowance during the dispute. Defendant said the correspondence was a swindle, because he had found that plaintiff could not speak Kafir and was not fitted by business capacity for the position.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said he found that defendant entered into a contract with plaintiff to engage his services, and that plaintiff's intention to act bona-fide was manifest throughout. He also commented upon the unsatisfactory manner in which defendant had given his evidence and said he placed very little credence upon Thurnau's statements. He gave judgment for plaintiff for £25 15s.

Mr. Long was for appellant, Henry Charles Thurnau, storekeeper, Mount Fletcher; Mr. Benjamin was for respondent, Clifford Richard Picard, late of Port Elizabeth.

Mr. Long said that the sole question was whether upon the correspondence a contract had been entered into between the parties. Defendant in his letter offered the post to plaintiff, and said that the reply must be sent by return post. The reply was not sent by return post, and counsel contended that ipso facto the offer lapsed. He cited Kirby v. Trotter (1 Foster and Emleyson's Reports, 544). Furthermore, plaintiff, when he did reply, stipulated that his expenses from Port Elizabeth to Mount Fletcher should be paid, and counsel submitted that this conditional acceptance by plaintiff could not be held to have clinched the matter between the parties. Defendant had not written to plaintiff agreeing to the stipulation. Counsel quoted Anson on Contracts (p. 51). This contract must, he urged, be decided upon the correspondence, and the Magistrate was wrong in allowing the subsequent conduct of the parties to influence him on the construction of the contract. Not only so, but the conduct of the parties did not even justify the interpretation put upon it by the Magistrate. In further argument, Mr. Long submitted that, even supposing there had been a breach of contract, the Magistrate was wrong in allowing respondent his expenses back to Port Elizabeth.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the Magistrate was justified on the documentary evidence in coming to the conclusion that there was a contract between the parties. The conduct of the parties subsequently was such that one could reasonably infer the existence of a contract. Appellant, in his offer of the post, added "Let me know per return of post if you accept this offer, and oblige." This could not be regarded as a conditional offer. The parties arrived at a contract, and there was no repudiation by appellant. Even though respondent telegraphed three days before he left Port Elizabeth that he was coming via Maclear, appellant did not reply.

Hopley, J., said he was with respondent as to a contract having been entered into. A question remained as to the amount of damages.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the Magistrate had gone on right and equitable principles in allowing respondent's expenses of returning to Port Elizabeth from Mount Fletcher.

Hopley, J., said: In this matter the plaintiff, now respondent, had advertised in a newspaper that a young man of 26 was willing to take the position of manager in an up-country business, and could speak Kafir. To this advertisement defendant, now appellant, replied asking him to enclose testimonials, and telling him that Sesuto would be required in the district where he wanted him to take charge of his business. The plaintiff thereafter telegraphed on the 21st December: "Reply just received, writing you. Wire me if too late." This was after a letter which he had written to defendant on the 20th telling him that he would be ready to come at any salary which the defendant considering the position to be worth. On the 2nd January the defendant wrote to the plaintiff as follows: "In reply to yours of the 12th ult., I am prepared to give you £6 per month, with board and lodging, to take sole management of my out-station, with a prospect of rise should business warrant it. Will you please arrange to be here to take up the situation on the 1st February?" That, in itself, is a concluded contract, and it does not seem to be dependent upon any other term or condition. Then the appellant added, as a sort of after-thought: "Let me know by return of post if you accept this offer, and oblige." I do not know that there was no reply by return of post, because there seems to be no evidence on the point in this rather lengthy record. If very strong reliance were placed, as has been done in the argument to-day, on the fact that this letter was not replied to by return of post, one would have expected to find some evidence on the record to show that it was not replied to by return of post. All we know about the course of post between Mount Fletcher and Port Elizabeth comes from instructions to the appellant's counsel from his legal adviser here. From what I can gather, if the letter of the 2nd January was written some little time before the post left Mount Fletcher and reached Port Elizabeth just in time to miss the return post, the letter of the 13th might really be an answer by return of post. I can, however, dismiss this point from my mind, the more easily because it does not seem to be at all relied upon in the defendant's plea. In his plea he mentions that he asked the plaintiff to inform him by return of post, but does not say that he did not do so, but says "on the contrary, the plaintiff did not accept, but stipulated that the defendant should undertake to pay his expenses from Port Elizabeth . . . and that on receipt of this letter the defendant considered that he was free to negotiate with others, and did so accordingly." The defence to that portion of the case is not that the terms in the letter of the 2nd January were not accepted by return of post, but that an additional stipulation was imported that he (defendant) should pay plaintiff's expenses from Port Elizabeth to Mount Fletcher. In any case the plaintiff replied on the 13th: "Yours of the 2nd to hand. I am willing to accept your offer, providing you refund my expenses in getting up to your place. I shall arrange to leave here so as to arrive and take over on the 1st February." It is perfectly clear that when plaintiff had written that letter he was bound to go up if he heard nothing to the contrary. It seems to me that he had committed himself, and that he could not in fairness get out of going. It may be that had the present plaintiff been the defendant in a case brought by the present defendant for a breach of contract he might have set up the plea: "As I did not hear whether or not he would pay my expenses I did not complete my contract." Still, I doubt very much whether the present defendant's plea can be upheld under the circumstances, because he must have received that letter in plenty of time to have stopped the plaintiff from starting from Port Elizabeth. He took no steps. He left the matter exactly where it was, leaving the plaintiff to infer that the stipulation as to expenses had been accepted. Now, to make matters certain the plaintiff telegraphed on the 24th January, before leaving Port Elizabeth: "Leaving here to-morrow via Maclear." Even then there would have been time to have communicated with plaintiff, because the telegram reached Mount Fletcher at midday. The defendant took no notice of the telegram. He received it and produced it at the trial, but he wishes the Court to believe that he did not think that the plaintiff was coming to him in pursuance of the correspondence which had passed between them.

It seems to me that no honest man could have any doubt that this man was coming to him in pursuance of the correspondence which had passed between them as to the plaintiff's services. His attempted explanation that he thought the defendant might have been passing along to Natal and had decided to come that way, although he knew that there was no engagement waiting for him, but in the hope that he might still pick up the engagement seems to me incredible. The Magistrate, I think rightly, took no particular notice of the explanation. The defendant sent no telegram in reply, but allowed the plaintiff to proceed on his journey.

I think that any Court would be perfectly justified in holding, upon the correspondence and the telegrams, which were left unanswered, that there was such a concluded contract that neither side could get out of. If that is so, there is no plea that there was dismissal for good and just cause.

The defendant relies wholly upon the contention that there was no concluded contract. I think that the Magistrate was right and, therefore, I must hold that the plaintiff was properly engaged. As there was no plea of dismissal for good cause before the Magistrate I cannot now consider that question, therefore all the allegations which the defendant indulged in in the Court below as to the unbusinesslike way in which the plaintiff went about managing the branch store, and his inability to speak Kafir, must be disregarded entirely in the consideration of this case. He seems to have got upon the nerves of the defendant after a few days, and he sent him about his business, but he does not plead that he did this justifiably, and the Magistrate is right in holding that it was an unjustifiable dismissal.

The only question that remains is as to the question of damages. I do not think that it was necessary for the Magistrate to go into details as to how he arrived at the amount of the damages, but he says that he took a fair and equitable view of the matter. He considered that the plaintiff had been allowed to incur considerable expense in travelling all that long distance from his home at Port Elizabeth, and that he had to get back before he could be put in statu quo. His finding of a lump sum would have been equally satisfactory, but I cannot say that there is any particular exception to his having done what he did on an arithmetical basis. Plaintiff, in his summons, claims these damages, the Magistrate considers that they were fair damages, and I do not consider that it was wrong or inequitable on the part of the Magistrate to arrive at that decision.

To bring a man, or to allow him to come, from the coast to Kafirland and then turn him adrift without any consideration whatsoever seems, on the other hand, to be a highly inequitable thing, not resting, as far as I can see, on any sound legal basis.

The appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

[Appellant's Attorney: G. Trollip.
Respondent's: Dold and Van Breda.]

LATEGAN V. BRINK.

Magistrate's jurisdiction—Amount
—Claim in reconvention.

L. claimed £16 10s. in a Magistrate's Court on a liquid document. Defendant counter-claimed £53: an illiquid claim. He set off L.'s claim and abandoned £15 to bring his counter-claim within the jurisdiction (£20). The Magistrate gave judgment for plaintiff and for defendant according to their respective claims.

Held, on appeal, that as the Magistrate tried, in point of fact, an illiquid counter-claim amounting to £35 10s. (even after the set-off of plaintiff's claim, he had exceeded his jurisdiction.

Colonial Government v. Stevens and Hollingsworth (10 Juta, 140) followed.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Worcester in an action brought by appellant against respondent to recover £16 10s. and interest upon a certain promissory note.

Plaintiff claimed £17 10s., less £1 paid on account, and interest from the 2nd January, 1906, on a promissory note signed on the 2nd September, 1905, and due on the 2nd January, 1906. The claim was admitted, but defendant set up a counter-claim for £53, and said that, after deducting the amount of the plaintiff's claim and abandoning £15 10s., there was a balance of £20, which he (Brink) claimed in reconvention, with costs. Exception was taken by plaintiff to the counterclaim that it was beyond the Magistrate's jurisdiction. The exception was overruled. The counter-claim was accordingly tried. The Magistrate gave judgment for plaintiff for £16 10s. and interest, and for defendant for £20, each party to pay his own costs.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers was for appellant; respondent did not appear.

Mr. De Villiers submitted that the defendant, having waived £15 10s. only of his claim, his counter-claim was for £37 10s. The claim was unliquidated, and it was, therefore, beyond the Magistrate's jurisdiction. He cited Colonial Government v. Stevens and Hollingsworth (10 Juta, 140). The Magistrate's judgment certainly did not go beyond his jurisdiction, but he had no right to try the case at all, and plaintiff took exception to his jurisdiction at the outset.

Hopley, J.: It seems to me, on the principles laid down in the case of Colonial Government v. Stevens and Hollingsworth, that in this case the Magistrate has gone wrong. A claim for £17 10s. on a liquid document was brought before the Magistrate by the plaintiff (now appellant). The defendant admitted that he owed £17 10s. on this liquid liability, but he said that he had a claim in reconvention for £53 for certain wire, posts, gates, and a certain plough, unjustly kept from him by plaintiff, or used and broken by plaintiff, so that they were no longer serviceable to him (defendant), and he proceeded then to take from this amount of £53 an amount of £17 10s., and so brought this unliquidated counter-claim to £35 10s., by compensating this liquid claim of the plaintiff's; and, the amount of £35 10s. being still too large for the Magistrate's Court to have jurisdiction, he further says: "I now drop my so reduced claim by £15 10s., and I bring it to £20, and that will give the Magistrate jurisdiction." But it is obvious that this is exactly the same thing as was done by Stevens and Hollingsworth in the Magistrate's Court at Kimberley in the case to which I have referred, and it is perfectly obvious also that the Magistrate in this particular case now under consideration was trying a counter claim to the extent of £37 10s. on an unliquidated account, and that was beyond his jurisdiction. The £17 10s. was not disputed by the defendant, but on the other side there was a disputed amount of £53, and from that disputed amount he dropped £15 10s., but that still left the counter-claim at £37 10s., and the defendant could not bring that within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate by writing off the £17 10s. which he admitted was owing by him. The Magistrate has, in effect, had before him, even after the amount of £15 10s. was dropped, an unliquidated counter claim of £37 10s., and for that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction. It seems a pity, from the finding of the Magistrate, that the defendant did not at once drop the whole of the claim from £53 to £20, and let the case proceed on that basis, and the result might then have been the same as the Magistrate has found for. The exception of want of jurisdiction on the claim in reconvention will be sustained, and the judgment of the Magistrate must, therefore, be changed to one for £17 10s. for the plaintiff (now appellant). The appeal will be allowed, with costs. [Appellant's attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn. Respondent in default.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

URMANN V. URMANN. { 1907.
Apr. 23rd.

This was an action for judicial separation.

Mr. Lewis was for the plaintiff; Mr. W. P. Buchanan was for the defendant.

Mr. Lewis applied for judgment in terms of a consent paper filed, by which the parties agreed to a separation, the plaintiff to have the custody of the minor child, and the defendant to contribute £10 per month.

Judgment was given in terms of the consent paper filed.

LOUW V. DAWOOD AND ABDURAMAN.

This was an action for the recovery of money alleged to be due in respect of the purchase of certain stock.

The action was brought by William Petrus Louw, a farmer, against Mahomet Dawood and Mahomet Abduraman, trading in partnership as butchers in Cape Town and Claremont, to recover a sum of £112 16s. 11d., being balance due on an account for sheep, lambs, and goats sold by the plaintiff to the partnership. One of the defendants had filed a plea, but it appeared that the men had since left the country, and the action was now undefended.

Mr. Louwrens appeared for the plaintiff; the defendants were not represented.

Formal evidence as to the debt was given, and the Court gave judgment for the plaintiff, as prayed, with costs.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1907.
Apr. 23rd.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for the admission of Cecil Francis Hopestill Heathcote as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of Um-tata.

Mr. Struben moved for the admission of Ockert Johannes Meintjes as an attorney.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of Barkly East.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

MALING V. SCHAFF.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Final order granted.

HOLMES V. ODENDAL AND VAN SCHALKWYK.

Mr. Swift moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £305 12s. 2d., with interest from 22nd July, 1905, and costs.

Order granted.

S.A. LIFE ASSOCIATION V. MASTERTON.

Mr. Marais moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,000, with interest from the 1st June, 1906; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

WIID V. VAN DER MERWE.

Mr. Marais moved for provisional sentence on two promissory notes for £87, less a certain amount paid on account, with interest from 28th September, 1906, and £805, less £287 10s. paid, with interest from the 16th November, 1906.

Ordered to stand over until translations of the notes have been put in.

Later, Mr. Marais stated that the notes had been translated and copies put in.

Order granted.

CREAGHE V. JONES.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £400, with interest from 18th June, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable. Mr. De Waal said that the summons was served on Mr. Stephan, who said he held defendant's power of attorney.

Order granted.

WALKER V. JANUARY.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £50, less £2 paid on account, with interest from 1st January, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

MAKAAB AND CO. V. { 1907.
SHAMMA. { Apr. 23rd.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for judgment, under Rule 319, for £41 10s., for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae, and costs. Counsel said that defendant had been placed under arrest, under Rule 8, by reason of the fact that he intended to leave the Colony. There was a danger that when judgment had been given, and defendant had been released, he would take his departure for Lobito Bay.

Buchanan, J.: The application before the Court is for judgment on a declaration to which no plea has been filed. Plaintiff, therefore, is entitled to judgment as prayed. Defendant was arrested, and on the writ of arrest he was lodged in gaol. Now judgment has been given against him and he is entitled to his release. If plaintiffs wish to take any further proceedings they must do so as properly advised. I cannot make any order to detain him in gaol now without an application in proper form. Judgment as prayed and defendant ordered to be released.

CUNNINGHAM AND GEARING V. KLIP-HEUVEL FARMERS' DAIRY CO., LTD.

Mr. Swift moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £59 10s. 1d., work and labour done, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

Order granted.

MOORREES V. VISSER.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £312 0s. 8d., for certain articles bought at public auction and commission, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

IMPERIAL COLD STORAGE AND SUPPLY
CO., LTD. V. ROSENBERG.

Mr. Roux moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £187 15s. 10d. goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

DE WIT V. DE WIT.

This was an action to have Maria Petronella de Wit, of Prince Albert, widow of Johannes Frederick de Wit, declared of unsound mind, and a curator appointed of her person and property.

Mr. Upton was for plaintiff; Mr. De Waal appeared as curator ad litem; Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers appeared on behalf of certain parties interested in the property.

Dr. Luttig gave evidence with regard to the respondent's condition. He said that defendant would be 92 years of age next October. She was not competent to attend to her own affairs.

Frederick F. de Wit, a farmer, Oudtshoorn division (son of the respondent), said that he proposed Mr. Jan Haak, of Prince Albert, as the curator. He objected to the appointment of Mr. Luttig, as he was over 80 years of age.

Mrs. Jacob Malan (daughter of the respondent) said she preferred that Mr. Haak should be appointed.

Mr. De Waal reported that a curator should be appointed to look after Mrs. De Wit, and suggested the named of Mr. Haak.

Pieter de Wit (called by Mr. De Villiers) said that he was the respondent's grandson. He had held the farm in the estate under lease for some years, and had made several improvements upon it. Mr. Luttig, whom he nominated as curator, was well-known in the district and held several public offices. Witness had no personal objection to Mr. Haak, but he knew that when the lease expired, Mr. Haak would want to change the lease-holder. Witness wished to have a fair opportunity of bidding for the lease in open market.

Counsel having been heard on the question of the curatorship,

An order was granted declaring respondent to be of unsound mind, and appointing Mr. Jan Haak as curator of her person and property, costs of this action and of all parties to come out of the estate.

GROBBELAAR V. GROBBELAAR.

This was an action brought by Margaretha Grobbelaar, of Graaff-Reinet, against her husband, Johannes J. Grobbelaar, of Clanwilliam, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Mr. Howes was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage register, gave formal evidence of the registration of the marriage, which took place at Somerset East on the 9th April, 1888.

Margaretha Grobbelaar said that she was the defendant's wife, and resided at Graaff-Reinet. There were three children of the marriage surviving. In March, 1889, her husband was convicted of theft at Clanwilliam and sentenced to six months' hard labour. Defendant had not returned to her since then, nor had he contributed anything towards her support.

By the Court: Witness was informed that defendant, who was a farmer, was still in the district of Clanwilliam.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive plaintiff on or before the 1st June, failing which a rule to issue calling on defendant to show cause on the 11th June why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with custody of the children and costs.

SILBERMAN V. SILBERMAN.

This was an action brought by Mary Silberman, of Waterkant-street, Cape Town, against her husband, Iser Silberman, whose address is unknown, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce and custody of the child of the marriage.

Mr. Lewis was for plaintiff; defendant, who was sued by edictal citation, did not appear. Substituted service had been given.

The plaintiff said that she was married to defendant in Russia on the 25th February, 1897. They lived together in Russia for three years. In 1900 defendant left her, without stating where he was going. She had not seen him since. Hearing that defendant was in Cape Town, she came out here in 1906. She had made inquiries as to defendant's whereabouts, but had been unable to discover any trace of him.

The Rev. Mr. Lyons, a minister at the Synagogue, said that he had known the defendant while he was in Cape Town. He believed that defendant, when he came out, intended to stay here. Witness obtained work for him at the Plague Camp.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive plaintiff on or before 1st June, failing which rule to issue calling on defendant to show cause on the 11th June why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with custody of the child, service as before.

ROWE V. ROWE.

This was an action brought by Arthur Edwards Rowe, of Cape Town, against his wife, Alice Rowe, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Mr. Struben was for plaintiff; defendant, who was sued by edictal citation, did not appear.

Mr. Struben read an affidavit by an agent, who had served the citation upon defendant at MacArthur, in the State of Victoria, and who stated that defendant was living at a certain address with a butcher named Charles Burke. The pair appeared to have lived together as man and wife. Defendant declared that if her husband sued her on the ground of adultery she would make counter accusations against him.

W. T. Birch (clerk in charge of the marriage register) gave evidence as to the marriage.

The plaintiff said he was married to defendant in Cape Town on February 3, 1897. He was then a lighthouse-keeper at Green Point. In 1902 he bought a butcher's business for his wife. He was then transferred to Cape Point. Subsequently he was transferred to the Customs. On October 20, 1903, witness told his wife that he was going to look into the books of the business. On the following day, however, his wife disappeared. He had had no suspicion that she was going away. Witness had known nothing about misconduct on her part with Charles Burke. Burke had been in his (witness's) employ in the butcher's business. Witness had to get rid of the man because he came to the shop under the influence of liquor the day after his wife had disappeared. His wife had written saying that she did not intend to return to him. The accusations contained in her letter were untrue.

By the Court: Witness had not turned his wife out of doors, and told her to get her living as best she could. It was not true that he was the father of an illegitimate child.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to the plaintiff on or before August 1, failing which, rule to issue calling upon her to show cause on August 13 why a decree of divorce should not be granted, personal service, failing which service by registered letter, and one publication in the "Melbourne Argus."

TOWNSEND V. TOWNSEND.

This was an action brought by Emily Kate Townsend, of Cape Town, against her husband, Samuel Robinson Tall Townsend, whose address is unknown, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Dr. Rainsford was for plaintiff; defendant, who was sued by edictal citation, did not appear.

Plaintiff said that she was married to defendant in October, 1882, at Kingston-upon-Hull, England. In 1890 they came together to this country, intending to live here. Witness went to England in 1898 on a visit. On her return, in October, 1899, she found that her husband had left Cape Town three days prior to her arrival to join Rimington's Guides. He sent her about £5 a month until September, 1900. The last letter that she received from him was dated Pretoria, August, 1901.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to, or receive, the plaintiff on or before June 1, failing which, to show cause on June 11 why a decree of divorce should not be granted, service as before.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Howes moved, under Act 38 of 1884, for the discharge from insolvency of Percival Lennox Birt.
Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

ABRAHAMS V. ABRAHAMS { 1907.
{ Apr. 23rd.

Dr. Greer moved for a decree of divorce in default of defendant's compliance with an order of restitution of conjugal rights.
Rule absolute.

EVANS V. EVANS.

Mr. Roux moved for an extension of the return day of a certain rule calling upon defendant to restore conjugal rights to plaintiff.

Return day extended, defendant to return to, or receive plaintiff, on or before July 1, failing which to show cause on July 12; personal service, failing which, one publication in the "Victoria West Messenger."

Ex parte LIEBENBERG.

Mr. Pohl moved for a certain rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.
Rule absolute.

Ex parte STEVENS.

Mr. Van der Byl moved for a certain rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.
Rule absolute.

Ex parte ESTATE DU PREZ.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved, on the petition of the surviving spouse and executor testamentary, for the appointment of a curator ad litem to her minor children to enable them to receive transfer of certain property in the estate of their grandparents.

Order granted appointing Johannes Carolus du Prez as curator ad litem, with full power to pass transfers.

Ex parte COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Louwrens moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds at King William's Town to amend a certain deed of transfer of two pieces of land in the division of Komgha.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ESTATE MULDER.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for an order sanctioning a certain agreement in which minors are interested.

Order granted as prayed.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY V. PRETORIUS.

This was an application upon notice to respondent to show cause why his articles of clerkship should not be cancelled by reason (1) of his having entered into articles of clerkship while he was still on the roll of advocates, and (2) having appeared as an advocate in the R.M.'s Court at Steynsburg while serving under articles of clerkship.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for applicants; Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Pohl) was for respondent.

It appeared from the affidavits that the respondent made application on the 1st February last to be removed from the roll of advocates, and to count the service that he had already given under his articles. The Law Society said that under a misapprehension at the time they did not appear to oppose the application. The Chief Justice allowed the applicant to be removed from the roll of advocates, and directed the service that he had given to count.

[Buchanan, J.: I think, under these circumstances, the matter had better be referred to the Chief Justice to hear. The matter will be referred accordingly.]

DREYFUS AND CO. V. ESTATE { 1907.
NAPIER. { Apr. 23rd.

Pledge—Cession—Insolvency—Proof of debt—Master and trustee—Sec. 108 of Ordinance.

D. & Co. had proved upon the insolvent estate of N., and stated that they had security, viz.: a certain "pledge." This "pledge" was an order from N. on the Town Clerk of the Municipality of C. to pay to D. & Co. a certain sum from moneys alleged to be due to him from the Town Council for work and labour done. D. & Co. obtained judgment against the estate of N., but, on taking out execution, were informed by the Town Clerk that there was no money due and payable from the Council to N. The Master had meanwhile admitted the proof of debt; but the trustee refused to recognize the claim of D. & Co. as preferent.

Held, that as the authority given by N. to D. & Co. to draw the money from the Town Council might have been revoked at any time, such authority was neither a pledge nor a cession, and hence gave no preference in insolvency; and that the trustee had acted rightly in refusing to recognize the claim of D. & Co. as preferent, the Master's decision notwithstanding.

In re Brink (1. Rose, 305) followed.

This was an application upon notice to the trustee in the respondent estate to show cause why the distribution account should not be amended, and why applicants' claim should not be brought up as preferent.

The affidavit of applicants stated that Napier's estate was sequestrated on 24th November, 1905, and that they had duly proved against the estate for their claim of £253 4s. 10d. Prior to the insolvency of Napier, the Cathcart Municipality were indebted to him in certain sums in connection with the erection of the Town Hall. On the 7th October, 1905, Napier was indebted to applicants in the sum of £210 19s. 8d., and thereupon Napier signed an order in their favour authorising the Town Clerk of Cathcart to retain this sum. Thereafter the applicants obtained an interdict in the E.D. Court restraining the Municipality from parting with the money to Napier pending judgment being obtained by applicants against Napier. Judgment was obtained on the 15th November, 1905, against the said Napier. Subsequent to the order given in their favour by Napier, applicants had incurred costs which brought their claim to £253 4s. 10d. Applicants said that they claimed as preferent by virtue of the order of the 7th October, 1905, and no objection was taken to their proof of debt. In the distribution account framed by the trustee applicants were only awarded a dividend of £24 0s. 11d.

The trustees, in an answering affidavit, said that when the alleged order was obtained the said George Napier was in a hopeless state of insolvency, and applicants must have been aware of this fact. The sole asset in the estate was the claim against the Municipality. The applicants, in a replying affidavit, said that they believed Napier was solvent when they obtained the order from him, and that after that time they supplied him with goods.

Mr. Upington was for applicants; Mr. Benjamin was for respondent.

Mr. Upington submitted that the document gave Dreyfus and Co. a hypothec over against the claim of Napier against the Cathcart Municipality. The document, combined with the action of the Municipality, constituted a valid pledge against the retention money. The trustee was wrong in his distribution account, more particularly as the proof of debt as a preferent debt was accepted until the distribution account should be amended so as to make the claim of Dreyfus and Co. preferent upon the moneys received from the Cathcart Municipality.

[Buchanan, J.: Is this document from Napier in any better position than a cheque upon a bank which the bank does not pay?]

Mr. Upington submitted that it was, and pointed out that the document authorised the Municipality to retain the money on behalf of Dreyfus and Co.

Mr. Benjamin said that his learned friend had argued that this document was a pledge, and he had advanced the alternative view that it should be regarded as an out and out cession. But the position taken up on the application was not that it was a cession, but a pledge. Before the Magistrate a proof was put in of this debt, accompanied by what was represented to be a pledge. When the trustee looked into the document he found that it was not a pledge at all, and he could not bring it up as preferent in the distribution account. Dreyfus and Co. claimed a preference upon what did not even purport to be a pledge. The trustee could only rank them as concurrent creditors, and this he had done under the 108th section of the Ordinance. All the elements of undue preference were present in this case.

[Buchanan, J.: I don't think that question arises now.]

Mr. Benjamin said that the document was not a pledge, and if it were anything it was an out and out cession, and this was not the procedure for establishing a claim of that kind.

Mr. Upington, in reply, cited In re Bannan (1 Roscoe, 369).

Buchanan, J.: The applicants, Dreyfus and Co., proved upon the insolvent estate of Napier for £250 odd. The affidavit for the proof of debt is in the form of a proof for an unsecured debt, but in this affidavit they say they have no security except the right to prove by virtue of a certain pledge annexed thereto. When we look at the pledge, which is annexed to the proof of debt, we find that it is in the form of an order by Napier on the Town Clerk of Cathcart, authorising him to Court does not compel him so to do. In a case under the same section of the Insolvent Ordinance, I see that the Court allowed a trustee to reduce the dividend on a proof of debt, where it was found that the creditor, though he had proved for a larger amount had received from another estate a dividend on account of the same debt. He was there, without coming to the Court at all, allowed to reduce the proof of debt in accordance with the actual facts of the case. I do not think, therefore, that I am bound to hold that the trustee in this matter should have applied to the Court. The question comes back, has there been a pledge or a cession of action? There clearly has been no cession of a claim of Napier upon the Municipal Council to Dreyfus accepted by the Council. If there had been such a cession, then the Council would be liable on the acceptance of such cession to have paid the claim of Dreyfus and Co. When we come to look at this document, it amounts to my mind to a cheque upon the bank. The bank may have money, belonging to the debtor, and the debtor gives the creditor a cheque. In this case, as far as I can see, the funds in the hands of the Cathcart Municipality remained in their hands on behalf of Napier, and never on behalf of Dreyfus and Co., and I think I must refuse this application, with costs.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton. Respondent's Attorneys: Wahl, Fuller and Le Klerk.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

MDLAZULWANA V. WADE. { 1907.
Apr. 24th.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of St. Mark's, sitting at Coimbatore, in an action brought by appellant (Mdasulwana) against respondent (Frederick Albert Wade) for delivery of a certain cow, or payment of its value (£6) and 30s. damages for trespass.

From the record, it appeared that there had been a previous case between the parties and that in consideration of the present appellant agreeing to give up and relinquish his claim to a certain piece of ground, defendant was to give him a beast. Defendant said he caused a beast to be delivered at plaintiff's kraal, and otherwise denied liability.

The Magistrate elected to believe the evidence of defendant's witnesses in preference to those of plaintiff, and gave judgment for defendant, with costs on the first part of the claim and absolution from the instance on the second.

Mr. Louwrens was for appellant; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for respondent.

Mr. Louwrens having been heard in argument on the facts,

De Villiers, C.J.: The decision of this case depends entirely upon the question as to which witnesses in the case should be believed. It is quite clear that if the defendant's witnesses speak truthfully, the plaintiff had no case against the defendant. According to these witnesses, the black cow now in question was delivered at the kraal of the plaintiff to the wife of the plaintiff. It is said she wished to consult some other persons, but afterwards they say she said the cow might be left at the kraal. Then subsequently the plaintiff came to the defendant and asked for the beast, which had gone away from the place, and later the plaintiff was seen driving this very beast away towards his place, and afterwards his son was seen driving it. Now, if these are facts, there can be no doubt that there has been an acceptance by the plaintiff of this particular cow, which he now refuses to accept. It is said that the cow is both blind and lame, but the witnesses who took the cow to the plaintiff's kraal say that she was not either lame or blind at the time when the delivery was accepted, and the Magistrate thinks that if she were lame at all, although he doubts the lameness, it must have originated after the delivery. The blindness seems to be only a discolouration of the eye, and no such actual blindness as would justify the plaintiff now in rejecting this cow. In any case he had an opportunity, when he was driving this cow, of inspecting it, and if he exercised ownership by actually driving her towards his own house and instructing his son to do so, then it may be taken that he accepted the cow. Then with regard to the trespass, the only particular beast that can be said to have trespassed was this black cow, which had been left by the defendant's servants upon the plaintiff's property, and which remained there. Well, that is not a trespass. If there was a delivery of the cow for the purpose of fulfilment of the contract, there cannot be said to have been a trespass. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Buchanan, J.: I concur. Upon the record there is ample evidence to justify the Magistrate's finding on the facts.

GREEN AND SEA POINT } 1907.
MUNICIPALITY V. BECKER. } Apr. 24th.
" " } 30th.

Municipal Acts—Owners' rate—Occupier's liability.

In Dec., 1905, the plaintiff Municipal Council levied an owners' rate for 1906, payable on Jan. 16th, 1906. On May 1st the defendant became the occupier of certain premises within the Municipality, and on Dec., 1906, the plaintiff demanded from the defendant, who was still the occupier, payment of the owners' rate which had not been paid by the owner.

Held, that under the 135th section of Act 45 of 1882, the defendant, as occupier for the time being, was liable.

Held further, that the 12th section of Act 41 of 1899 did not relieve the defendant from such liability.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court of the Cape, in an action brought by the Green and Sea Point Municipality against Charles Francis J. Becker, to recover £14 6s. 5d., owners' rate for the year 1906.

The appellants sued respondent for £14 6s. 5d., with interest, being the amount of an owner's rate at 2s. 6d. in the £ on Firmount House, Firmount-road, Sea Point, for the year 1906, due and payable on the 16th January, 1906. The owners of the property, Keyzer Bros., had not paid the rate, and the Municipality sought to recover from the respondent, who had been occupier of the house since the 1st May, 1906.

The Magistrate gave judgment of absolution from the instance, and, in his reasons, said that the action was to recover an unpaid landlord's rate duly assessed for the amount of £14 6s. 5d., due and payable on the 16th January on a property named Firmount, in Sea Point. It was sought to recover the sum from the defendant by reason of his being the occupier of the property since the 1st May, 1906. The defendant did not deny the assessment or other allegations of fact, but demurred to the claim, on the ground that the premises were not occupied by him until the 1st May, 1906, and that, therefore, he was not liable for the rate due on the 16th January of that year. It was admitted that the case had been brought under Act 45, 1882. The provisions of the 128th section did not apply, because of the terms of Act 41, 1899, Section 12. The sections appeared to him (the Magistrate) to refer to the person who was occupier for the time being. He was of opinion that, inasmuch as the occupier's responsibility or liability was fixed as from the 15th January each year, any person who was not proved to be the occupier on that date would not be held liable. He held that the defendant was not liable for the amount claimed.

Mr. Louwrens was for appellants; Mr. Gutsche was for respondent.

Mr. Louwrens (in answer to the Court) said that section 128 of the Act 45, 1882, did not apply to the Sea Point Municipality, section 12, of Act 41, 1899, being substituted. The rate in question was levied for the whole of the year 1906, and became payable on the 16th January. Proceeding, counsel quoted sections 125, 127, 135, and 134, of Act 45, 1882, and submitted that section 135 applied to the present case, and that respondent was liable under that section for the rate.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I suppose you rely upon the words "for the time being"?]

Mr. Louwrens: That is so. The Magistrate has held that these words must apply only to a tenant who has been in occupation for the whole period. Counsel went on to say that recourse was had to the tenant when the rates were three months in arrear, and the tenant had the power to deduct from the rent.

De Villiers, C.J., pointed out that that might operate somewhat unfortunately for a man who took a house for a month at Kalk Bay, for which the rates had not been paid, as the rates due may be a good deal more than the rent.

Mr. Louwrens, in further argument, cited Human v. Barkly East Municipality (16 C.T.R., 1,114), and quoted Stroud's Judicial Dictionary for a definition of "for the time being."

Mr. Gutsche said that the difficulty arose in this case, because of the conflict between the words "the occupier for the time being" in the 135th section of Act 45, 1882, and the words "occupier on the 15th January" under the later Act. The case cited by his learned friend was not apropos. Very wide powers were given to Municipalities under the Act, and if there were any question of conflict the Act should be construed rather in favour of the respondent than the Municipality. Counsel cited Mossel Bay Municipality v. Holloway's Trustee (3 Juta, 52).

Mr. Louwrens was heard in reply.

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (April 30th).

De Villiers, C.J.: This appeal raises a very important question as to the nature and degree of a tenant's liability to the payment of the owner's municipal rates in failure of the owner to pay the same. The defendant became the occupier on the 1st of May, 1906, of the property known as Firmount House, belonging to Kaiser Brothers, and situated within the jurisdiction of the plaintiff Municipality. In the month of December of the previous year the plaintiff had levied an owner's rate of 2½d. in the pound, payable on the 16th of January, 1906, but when the defendant took occupation Kaiser Brothers had failed in the payment of the rate. On the 18th of December, 1906, the plaintiff demanded from the defendant the amount of the rate, namely, £14 6s. 5d., and upon his refusing to pay the same the present action was brought two months afterwards in the Court of the Resident Magistrate of Cape Town. The Court below held that, as the defendant was not the occupier on the 15th of January, 1906, he was relieved by the 12th section of Act 41 of 1899 from liability for the payment of the rate. In support of its claim, the plaintiff Municipality relies upon the provisions of the 135th section of Act 45 of 1882, which reads as follows: "When the owner of any rateable property has been rated in respect thereof and the rate remains unpaid for three months, the Council, or their collector, may, at any time within twelve months after the making of the rate, demand the amount of such rate or any part thereof from the occupier for the time being of such rateable property, and on non-payment thereof, may, after one month from the date of such demand, recover the same in like manner as rates may be recovered from any occupier liable to be rated. And every such occupier shall be entitled, subject to any agreement to the contrary, to deduct from any rent payable by him to such owner so much as was so paid by or recovered from him." The decision of this case must depend upon the meaning and effect of the words "for the time being" in the section just read. The Magistrate, in his reasons, says: "The section appears to me to deal with the person who is occupier for the time being, that is, throughout the whole period for which the rate is levied," but, however equitable such a construction might be, it would hardly carry out the intention of the Legislature as expressed in the language actually used. The Council may demand the amount of the rate from the occupier for the time being, and this can only mean the occupier at the time of the demand, whether he has been sued for the whole year or for part of the year. If it meant the occupier for the whole period for which the rate is levied, it would in every case be necessary for the Council to delay making its demand until after that period, for until the expiration of the year for which the rate was levied it could not be known whether he had been an occupier throughout the whole period. In support, however, of his judgment, the Magistrate relied mainly upon the 12th section of Act 41 of 1899, an Act which has admittedly been extended to the plaintiff municipality. That section reads as follows: "Section 128 of Act 45 of 1882 shall not apply to any municipality coming under the operation of this Act, and in lieu thereof the following shall be substituted: The Council shall have power by its officers to require owners of property within its municipality to furnish the names of the tenants at least once a year, and oftener if required, and the person or persons, company or companies, in whom shall be vested the legal title in or the occupier or occupiers of any immovable property on the 15th January of each year shall be liable to the said Council for the rates for the whole year or period for which such rates are levied." The 128th section of Act 45 of 1882 deals only with the owners' rates due by owners, and with the tenants' rates due by the occupiers, and not with the owners' rates, which might, under the 135th section, be demanded from the occupier on failure by the owner to pay. The effect of the fresh enactment is that the person who is the owner on the 15th January of any year is liable for the owners' rates for the period for which they are levied, and the person who is the occupier on the 15th of January is liable for the tenants' rates for that period, but it leaves untouched the nature and degree of the occupier's liability for the owner's rates, which his landlord has failed to pay. For the reasons already stated, I am of opinion that if, in any case, the owner of property fails to pay the owner's rate three months after he has been rated, the Council may lawfully demand the rate from the person who is the occupier at the time of such demand, provided that such demand be made within twelve months after the making of the rate. It does appear to be in the highest degree inequitable that a person who becomes a temporary occupier during the year should take upon himself the liability for the payment of the owner's rate during that year, but that is a matter in which the Legislature and not the Court must be asked for relief. It should be observed that even if the 12th section of the Act of 1899 had the meaning applied to it in the Court below, it would still be most unreasonable that a temporary tenant should take upon himself the liability for the owner's rate for the whole year, merely because such occupier happened to be in occupation on the 15th of January. In the face of the provisions of the Municipal Acts, the safest course for an intending tenant is not to take occupation of premises unless his landlord is prepared to hold him harmless in respect of any owner's rates which might accrue during his tenancy. It does not appear that such a precaution was taken by the defendant, who could have ascertained before taking occupation that the owner's rate had remained unpaid for more than three months. Whether or not he has been secured by his landlords he is, in my opinion, liable to pay the rate sued for. The appeal must therefore be allowed, and judgment entered for the plaintiff, as prayed, with costs in this Court and in the Court below.

The Chief Justice added that Mr. Justice Buchanan, who heard the case with him, agreed with the judgment.

Mr. Louwrens (for appellants) applied for interest.

The Chief Justice said that the notice asked for interest from April 17, 1906, but, inasmuch as the summons was silent about it, he could not allow interest.

Mr. Louwrens then applied for costs on a higher scale, so far as the Magistrate's Court was concerned. He said that the new rule provided for costs on a higher scale.

The Chief Justice: I know it does, but it is a case of very great hardship upon respondent, I am bound to say.

Mr. Louwrens said that he would not press his application.

The Chief Justice: It is a very hard case. I certainly think the Legislature ought to be approached to amend the law, because if Municipalities are going to take advantage of the 135th section, it would be very difficult for the landlords themselves to find tenants.

[Appellant's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné; Respondents' Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton.]

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

MARSH V. ESTATE VILLA. { 1907.
Apr. 24th.

Mr. Inchbold moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £4,000, with interest and costs, less £64 19s. 6d. paid on account.

Order granted.

STEYTLER AND CO. V. OPLAND.

Mr. Howes moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte STEYTLER AND CO.

Mr. Howes moved for the appointment of Mr. H. A. Fagan as trustee in the estate of J. Opland, of Somerset Strand.

Order granted.

In re THE ECLIPSE MINERAL WATER COMPANY (IN LIQUIDATION).

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for the confirmation of the receiver's first report.

Order granted.

Ex parte ROSENBLATT AND DE BEER.

Mr. Benjamin moved for leave to sue one Venter by edictal citation on certain promissory notes, and to attach certain money in the hands of Wessels and Co., pendente lite.

Leave was granted, the citation being made returnable on May 14, personal service to be effected. Leave was also granted to attach the sum of £100 or less in the hands of Wessels and Co., ad fundandam jurisdictionem.

Ex parte LAWRENCE, LTD.

This was an application for leave to reduce the capital of the petitioning company.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the petitioners.

The application was made under sections 35 and 37 of Act 25 of 1902. The company, who carry on business as manufacturers of confectionery and preserves, was formed in 1902 with a capital of £50,000. It was now sought to reduce the capital to £36,930, in terms of resolutions duly passed by meetings of shareholders. It was stated on affidavit that of that capital of the company, £13,000 had been lost, or was unrepresented by available assets. Only £26,930 of the ordinary shares were subscribed for, while £10,000 preference shares were issued. The memorandum of association of the company provided that reduction of capital might be effected by special resolution.

[Hopley, J.: How are the £10,000 preference shares affected by this?]

Mr. Jones: They are not touched; it is only proposed to reduce the ordinary shares.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte JANSEN.

Mr. Toms moved for leave to sue by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights. The petitioner was the husband, and he alleged desertion on the part of his wife, Sarah Margaretta Jansen (born Felanda). She was last seen six years ago in Cape Town, and her present whereabouts were unknown.

Hopley, J., said that he was not quite satisfied about this woman suddenly vanishing without anyone knowing anything about her. People who had lived for so many years in a place didn't usually go away without leaving some trace. It was desirable that there should be further inquiry, or that there should be some further proof of diligent inquiry.

Mr. Toms said he understood that a private detective had been employed without avail.

Hopley, J., said that was not before him.

Leave was granted to sue by edictal citation, the Court directing that inquiries be instituted and efforts made to serve the papers personally, failing which a further order might be applied for in Chambers as to substituted service.

Ex parte ESTATE CAMPBELL.

Mr. Howes moved for authority to the Registrar of Deeds to register a new bond for £500 on property in the estate of the late Pieter Campbell. Authority was asked in order that a new bond should be raised to pay off the old one.

Order granted.

FINKELSTEIN V. FINKELSTEIN.

This was an application made by the wife for (1) an interdict, and (2) for payment of money to enable applicant to institute an action for a decree of separation.

A rule nisi had previously been issued restraining the respondent from alienating certain property at Oudtshoorn pending action. The wife alleged drunkenness and cruelty on the part of respondent, that he had driven her and their five minor children from home, and that he had failed to support her.

Respondent, in a replying affidavit, denied all these allegations, and alleged that he was assaulted by his wife and eldest son. He had tendered his wife food and provisions. He declared he had no intention of alienating property; on the contrary, he had acquired more recently. If his wife refused to return to him, he was prepared to pay his wife such sum as she was entitled to under the contract entered into under a certain deed.

In the second case, the applicant asked for an order on the respondent for the payment to her of £50 to enable her to institute an action for judicial separation, and for the payment of £15 a month towards the support of herself and minor children during the pendency of the action.

Mr. Benjamin was for the applicant; Mr. Howes was for respondent.

Mr. Benjamin said the parties were before the Court in 1903. That case was reported in 1903 (13 C.T.R., 16). After that case, there was a reconciliation between the parties. It was not admitted by the husband that the parties were legally married.

Hopley, J.: In the applications before the Court, there are two matters to consider. The first is whether the rule nisi granted by me in Chambers at the beginning of this month should be made absolute or should be varied or set aside. In granting the rule on the original petition, I took into consideration the fact that if the respondent were entirely interdicted from dealing with any of his property, he might be deprived of his means of livelihood, and, of course, the petitioner's whole object would then be defeated, because he would not be able to make the money to supply her with alimony or with funds for the prosecution of this suit. I consequently interdicted the immovable property and also the movable property, save only as to that which may be necessary to deal with in the ordinary course of the respondent's business; and it seems to me he is protected by that same clause from any hardship. Nor does he, in his present affidavit, allege that any hardship has arisen or that his business will be hampered. In the absence of any allegation of hardship, I think this is a case in which one must assume that the parties are married, and that the woman has left her husband, not on any frivolous ground, but for good cause, and that she should be protected against possible absconding or chicanery of any kind on her husband's part. On these assumptions, it seems to me that the woman should be protected and that the only way to do this is to make the rule absolute. The other application is one made also by the wife for maintenance for herself and children, and for a certain amount of money from what she alleges to be their common estate for the purpose of instituting an action for separation which she wishes to bring. The amount of £50 asked for seems to me to be rather large, but it is obvious from one of her affidavits, that she contemplates, in fixing this amount, the possibility of having to bring witnesses to Cape Town from Oudtshoorn to prove her case. If that were so, £50 would not be too much, but I see no reason why the case should not be settled at the next Circuit Court at Oudtshoorn. In that event, I think a sum of £30 would be sufficient, and the Court will, therefore order that the respondent pay to the applicant the sum of £30. A further amount may be necessary, if on the advice of counsel, it is essential to prove, on foreign commission, the state of the marriage laws in that part of Russia from which these people came and were married. In that case, when an application for a commission is made, this matter of special costs may be again referred to, and possibly a further amount for the purpose of carrying on this part of the case may then be ordered to be paid. As to the payment of money for the maintenance of the wife and the children pending action, the Court will order that the respondent pay a sum of £10 per month. His Lordship added that he would suggest that the case be tried at the next Circuit Court at Oudtshoorn. Leave would be granted to move for payment of a further amount, if special expenditure were necessary, in order to prove the marriage. Costs of this application would be costs in the cause.

COMBRINK V. HASSPOTTER.

This was an application for the appointment of a third arbitrator under Act 6 of 1882.

It appeared that the parties live in the Vryburg district, and a dispute had arisen concerning the construction of a sentence in the award as between the properties of the parties. Each of the parties had appointed an arbitrator, and petitioner now desired the Court to appoint either the Resident Magistrate of Vryburg or Mr. William Crosbie, M.L.A., as third arbitrator.

Mr. Benjamin was for the applicant; Mr. Burton was for the respondent.

Mr. Burton said that the parties both agreed to the appointment of the Resident Magistrate. The respondent's contention was that this was agreed to in ample time to have obviated the necessity of coming to the Court. The issue was therefore one of costs.

Mr. Benjamin said that notice of motion was given before the respondent agreed to the appointment.

Affidavits were read embodying the correspondence between the parties on the point. The respondent agreed to the question of the costs up to the notice of motion being left to the arbitrator's judgment, providing that no further proceedings were taken and no further costs incurred in going to Court. Applicant took up the position that there should be a formal signature by respondent to documents agreeing to the appointment of the Resident Magistrate of Vryburg, and agreeing to the costs being left to the arbitrator. Unless this were done, the applicant said he feared that further trouble would ensue.

Mr. Benjamin, in argument, referred to section 3 of Act 30 of 1883, and urged that the respondent's delay in agreeing to accept the Resident Magistrate as the third arbitrator forced the applicant to take these proceedings. It was, he contended, perfectly reasonable for the applicant's attorney to ask the respondent to sign a consent paper, in which event the matter could have been brought formally before the Court and an order obtained for the appointment. It was not until all the papers were down here and were ready to be placed before the Judge in Chambers that the respondent agreed to the appointment. He submitted that in the circumstances the respondent should be ordered to pay the costs of this application.

Without calling upon Mr. Burton, Hopley, J., said that after the position which was arrived at on the 19th of April, there was no necessity to come to the Court at all in the matter. At that time the parties had agreed upon the appointment of Mr. Roberts, the Resident Magistrate, as a third arbitrator, and they had agreed also that the costs which had been incurred up to that time should be left to the discretion of the arbitrators. There was, therefore, no need to have forced the matter to the point of coming to the Court, but that had been done, and the Court had now to make an order for the appointment of the third arbitrator, and also an order as to costs. The Court would order that Mr. Roberts be appointed the third arbitrator. With regard to the costs, it appeared that up to the 19th April there were negotiations by both sides, and it seemed to him that up to that time each party was equally responsible for not having brought matters to a head. As to the costs up to that period, therefore, he thought each party should pay his own costs. After the 19th April there was no necessity to go any further. If, after that, the position having been arrived at which was arrived at on the 19th April, the arbitrators already appointed had neglected or refused to appoint Mr. Roberts, then there might have been cause for the parties to go to a Judge in Chambers, and ask him to appoint Mr. Roberts. But apparently it was thought better by the applicant to come to the Court. He saw no reason for such application to the Court, and it would therefore be ordered that the applicant pay the costs subsequent to the 19th April.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN and a Jury.]

REID AND CO. V. LOGAN. { 1907.
Apr. 25th.
" 26th.
" 27th.

Building contract—Building proprietor's responsibility for "extras"—Quality of work—"Retention money."

This was an action brought by A. B. Reid and Co., of Cape Town, against the Hon. J. D. Logan, M.L.C., to recover £500, being retention money under a certain building contract, and £59 4s. 3d., being the balance of certain extra work.

The plaintiffs' declaration set out that in April, 1905, the plaintiffs and defendant entered into a contract in writing whereby the plaintiff, as contractor, undertook to erect the Masonic Hotel, at Beaufort West, for the defendant as employer for the sum of £8,000, and a copy of the contract was annexed. The defendant agreed to make payments to the plaintiffs from time to time upon the certificate of the architects, Parker and Forsyth, who were engaged for the supervision of the work, and payments were made from time to time upon their certificates, amounting to £6,250. Thereafter, the last of the certificates by the architects was granted on the 7th February, 1906. The defendant, after action was brought against him, paid the amount of the certificate, but, at or about the time of payment, he terminated the engagement of the architects. On the 11th February, 1906, the work was completed, and the premises were handed over to the defendant, and had since been in his occupation for more than four months. In accordance with the contract, the defendant was entitled to retain 5 per cent. on the contract sum, that was £400, until the expiration of four months after completion, and the defendant retained and held, in fact, £500, being the balance of the agreed contract sum of £8,000, after deducting the payments amounting to £7,500, and the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £500. The defendant was also indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £59 4s. 3d. for extra work done in connection with the contract.

The defendant, in his plea, denied that the contract was in writing, and said that it was verbally made. Long after the contract had been completed, and when the work was well advanced, plaintiffs, for the first time, submitted for defendant's signature a document as being the contract between the parties, but the defendant refused to sign this. He denied that the annexure to the declaration correctly set forth the terms of the contract. Many of the provisions in the annexure were never discussed between the parties. It was part of the contract that there should be no variations, omissions, or additions made to the specifications without the written authority of the architect, with the approval and consent of the defendant, and he specially denied that it was any part of the contract that there was to be any reference to arbitration. It was part of the contract that the work should be completed by the 31st December, 1906, and that the plaintiffs were to pay the defendant the sum of £10 per week as liquidated damages for all time taken to complete the work after that period. The work was to be done upon the conditions stated, and in accordance with the plans and specifications prepared by the architects, Parker and Forsyth, with a special exception as to the clause in the specifications relative to old materials, which clause was by mutual consent deemed not to be in the specifications. He admitted that it was agreed, and that it was a term and condition precedent of the contract, that all payments should be made upon architects' certificate, and that no payment could be claimed until production of such certificate; and defendant further admitted that Parker and Forsyth were originally engaged by him for the supervision of the work, and that £6,250 was paid upon the certificates of the said architects. It was a term of the agreement that the building should be handed over to him complete on the 31st December, 1906. Prior to the said date defendant and the clerk of the works repeatedly complained of the class of work being done, and of the negligence and delay of the plaintiffs in and about the execution of the contract. Owing to the defendant's reasonable dissatisfaction with the manner in which the architects had discharged their duties in connection with the supervision under the contract, the defendant, on the 25th April, 1906, with the acquiescence of the architects, cancelled their agreement in connection with the contract. Thereupon the defendant forthwith appointed another architect, one A. T. O'Brien, in the place of the said architects, for the purposes of this contract, and gave due notice thereof to plaintiffs. Under the agreement, the plaintiffs had first to proceed with the alteration of certain portion of the old premises, and that after making certain temporary arrangements such portion had to be, and was, handed over to the defendant to enable him to carry on business therein while plaintiffs proceeded with the main work of the alterations. Prior to action brought, the work under the contract had not been completed, nor had the buildings been handed over, nor had he been in occupation of any portions thereof, save as stated. He denied that he was indebted to plaintiffs in the sum of £500 or any portion thereof. No authority of the defendant and no written authority of the architects had been given to plaintiff in respect of the alleged extras. Defendant did not admit that the plaintiffs called upon him to comply with the provisions of the alleged clause 22 of the contract as pleaded in the declaration, but admitted that a suggestion was made by plaintiffs and refused by defendant relative to the appointment of an architect to settle certain matters in dispute. The defendant further said that he was not in law bound to submit the matters in dispute herein to the decision therein suggested. He had repeatedly, without success, endeavoured to arrange for a joint inspection of the work by plaintiffs, defendant, and an architect with a view to settling the differences. The action was premature, as the condition precedent referred to had not been complied with. The plaintiff had not received the necessary certificate in respect of either of the amounts claimed in the declaration, and no final certificate had been made. The action was premature in that plaintiff had not tendered and did not tender to hand over the premises, and according to the contract the balance now claimed was not due or payable until four months after the completion of the work. Such balance the defendant was entitled to under the contract to hold as retention money, it being an obligation on the plaintiff under the contract to make good and rectify any defects, shrinkage, and faults which should appear during this period. The work was not completed, and such defaults, shrinkage, and defects had appeared during the period since the date when plaintiffs allege the contract was completed, and they had not since been rectified. The defendant was entitled to a reduction of £1,000 from the contract price in respect of materials and work badly done, or omitted, or not done or provided in accordance with the contract, and this amount far exceeded any amount to which plaintiffs might be entitled in this suit. For a claim in reconvention the defendant said it was agreed between the parties under the contract, that in case the work was not completed on or before the 31st December, 1906, the defendants in reconvention should pay or allow to plaintiff in reconvention as and by way of liquidated and agreed damages, the sum of £10 per week until the premises were duly handed over. The plaintiff in reconvention suffered, and is suffering, damages at the rate of £10 per week, and is entitled to such damages up to the date upon which he shall receive the premises. He claimed: (a) An order requiring the defendants in reconvention to hand over as soon as possible the said buildings and premises duly completed according to contract; (b) payment of £10 per week as and for damages as aforesaid up to the date of such handing over; (c) payment of the balance left after taking from the sum which plaintiff in reconvention is entitled to for deductions (as in paragraph 14 of the plea set forth) such portion of the contract price as defendants in reconvention are (if at all) otherwise entitled to; (d) alternative relief; and (e) costs.

The replication was general.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Swift) for plaintiffs. Mr. Close (with him Mr. Bisset) for defendant.

A. B. Reid, of the firm of A. B. Reid and Co., said that he tendered £8,449 for rebuilding the Masonic Hotel, Beaufort West. He reduced this to £8,000 by making a few alterations. Arrangements were made with Parker and Forsyth, not with defendant. The contract with the architect was left with the latter; the terms of the contract were never disclosed to Logan. Eventually defendant refused to pay £1,250 on the last certificate of the architects, and action had to be taken. It was then plaintiff found that Mr. Logan had not signed the contract. No complaints had ever been made about any defective work, delay, or anything of the kind. At length an inspection of the building was made, when Mr. Logan made no complaint with regard to delay in building. A couple of little objections were raised by Mr. Logan, but he said that he was very well satisfied with the appearance of the place. In January a complete inspection was made by witness and Mr. Forsyth. He was quite prepared to have all the matters in dispute referred to any impartial architect or referee to be agreed upon or appointed by the Court. Witness was not prepared to accept any architect whom Mr. Logan wished to appoint. He was never consulted as to the appointment of Mr. O'Brien.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: The tender was sent in on plans and specifications which he saw at the architects' office. He did not remember any interview with the defendant after he sent in the amended tender. At the interview which he believed was prior to this, he did not remember the date of completion being fixed. The defendant was emphatic that the price should not exceed £8,000. There was no reservation that the contract should be reduced to writing. He was aware that clauses put in by the architects varied very much as to the duty of the builder to have written orders for extras.

X

John Parker, architect, practising with Mr. Forsyth, and who was appointed to superintend the work, stated that Mr. Wilkie was employed some two years before by witness as clerk of works. At the time in question Wilkie was out of employment, and witness recommended to Mr. Logan that Wilkie was a good man—he was a relative of Mr. Logan's—and that he should be sent to Beaufort West to superintend this work, and that witness and Mr. Logan should pay the salary between them. At the interview Mr. Reid agreed to let Mr. Logan have the old material if he took it down himself. If anything else had been discussed at the interview he would have noted it down. Reports were furnished by Mr. Wilkie that the matters which witness required to be adjusted at the beginning of February were done. On the 14th February the work was completed according to contract, and witness was prepared, if he had not been superseded, to certify to that effect. The building was carried out in a very speedy manner indeed. Some of the extras were authorised after instructions from Mr. Logan and some were carried out by Wilkie upon instructions by Mr. Logan on the spot. On the 16th August he wrote to A. B. Reid and Co., ordering certain extras which had been authorised by the defendant. The builder carried out the steel work according to the plan. Generally speaking, the building was a good one for the money.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: He took up the position that it was his duty to interpret the contract. The defendant refused to sign the contract because there was nothing down in black and white that he would get the old material, although witness offered to insert a clause to that effect.

At this stage, on the question of whom Wilkie represented, Mr. Close asked leave to call the defendant.

Mr. J. D. Logan stated that Wilkie got all his instructions from the architect.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He paid Wilkie because he wanted to see the work carried out. Wilkie was a relative of his, and he tried to assist him. There was a good deal of charity in the matter.

Buchanan, J., held that any communication between Wilkie and Logan was evidence.

Alexander Forsyth, partner with John Parker, also gave evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs.

Walter Harold Leach, master carpenter, stated that from November, 1906, until the middle of February, 1906, he was foreman in the employ of the plaintiffs in charge of the job. Up to the 21st December there was no complaint made by anyone. On that date certain matters were remedied at the request of Mr. Parker and Mr. Reid. Subsequently other matters were remedied at the request of Mr. Forsyth. On the 14th February witness was the last man to leave the job, and then he handed the key of the front door to the clerk of works. From the early part of October the manager was in occupation of portion of the building. There was some delay in the work, caused by the removal of the bar from the old place to the new. The defendant took a week to take down the old woodwork, which could have been done in a few days.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: When Mr. Logan wanted anything altered, or expressed his views on any matter, he expressed them to Mr. Wilkie, and Mr. Wilkie informed witness, and in the cases of the flag pole and the shelves in the sample room witness took instructions alone from Wilkie. He had no idea whether these were communicated to the architect. The key was handed over to Wilkie, as representing the defendant and the architect.

At this stage Mr. Upington closed his case, subject to the right to call rebutting evidence on the claim in reconviction, if his lordship should think necessary.

Hon. J. D. Logan, defendant, stated that the interview referred to between him and Messrs. Parker and Reid took place on the 4th April. At the meeting witness stipulated that the building, which was to cost no more than £8,000, without any extras, was to be finished by the 31st December. A penalty for non-completion was fixed at £10 a week, and witness agreed to pay portions of the £8,000 on the architect's certificate as the work progressed. He could not say whether anything was said about defects showing themselves after the period of completion. At that meeting everything was completed.

At this stage Mr. Upington wished to know what the witness was giving his evidence from.

Witness: Only the dates—my secretary's record of the dates.

May I look at it?—Yes.

Mr. Upington, after glancing at the document, asked his lordship to look at what the witness called a memorandum of dates. Counsel said it was a long statement.

[Buchanan, J.: You are really giving your private secretary's evidence.]

Mr. Upington: I will ask the jury to look at the memorandum of dates.

[Buchanan, J.: Do not show it to the jury. It is a statement by the private secretary.]

Witness: I cannot recollect the dates.

[Buchanan, J.: Refer to your secretary for dates.]

On the 2nd September, witness sent a wire complaining of the delay, to Messrs. Parker and Forsyth. A couple of days later he made a further complaint at the office of the architects. He had said that he was satisfied with the stone-work, but he altered his mind when the weight went on. He had never seen such a wretched job as the cement work. It was a disgrace to any white man. If anyone walked over the stoep the cement crumbled like dust. He expressed his disgust at the way in which the work had been carried out. As to the plastering, the wall in the morning had the appearance of a person with a bad attack of small-pox. The building was not finished yet. Witness notified Messrs. Parker and Forsyth that he was appointing another architect, because they had not inspected the work. He endeavoured to get the plaintiff and the architects to go up to Beaufort West with him when he finally brought Mr. O'Brien. The building was more like a flour mill than a hotel. When he visited the place he found workmen chopping off plaster off the walls in the bedrooms with spades, and putting wedges in each side to prevent the building from falling. The tiles, which were of indifferent material, were badly laid. It would have been absolutely impossible to carry on business there on the 7th May. Wilkie had no authority to receive the keys for him, and he had no communication from the contractor or architects that this was done. Witness had called for tenders for the furnishing, which had to stand over on account of the delay in completing the building.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness had not got his back up, he wanted his hotel up. It was not his idea to put the plaintiffs to as much expense as possible. So long as a person was appointed by the court he had no objection to a reference in the matter. He could not recollect whether the period of maintenance was mentioned at the interview. He did not remember any reference to the interest to be paid to the contractors at the interview. He refused to pay on the certificate for £1,250, because in his opinion the building was not going on satisfactorily.

Do you contend that Messrs. Parker and Forsyth acted in bad faith toward you?—I cannot say what the faith was.

Do you say they made an honest mistake?—I say the building has never been finished. It was their duty to see it was finished.

Through whom was the key of the Ceres Hotel handed over to you?—We are not discussing the Ceres Hotel now.

Did you receive the key from Messrs. Parker and Forsyth?—I do not know.

Who keeps the notes?—My secretary.

Oh! the secretary, he keeps the notes?

Witness: I should like to explain that I did everything I could to assist Mr. Reid. I gave him four rooms and a large store, and never charged him a penny for it.

Herbert Kitson, private secretary to the defendant, said he arranged the meeting between Messrs. Parker, Reid, and defendant, to settle the contract. When he entered the room Mr. Logan was explaining that he wanted the old iron and timber for the erection of some native location, and Mr. Reid agreed to this. He heard it stipulated that the job was to be a first-class one, and was to cost £8,000. There were to be no extras. Mr. Logan was very emphatic about this. Witness understood the tender was accepted that morning. On the 2nd September witness and Mr. Logan went to Beaufort West, and the latter, finding the carpenters idle, complained bitterly, and wired to Messrs. Parker and Mcsryth. Witness gave evidence as to the defective nature of the work. He had trouble in getting the architects to go up and view the work, and, finally, Mr. O'Brien was appointed. On the 6th November the concrete was worse than before. The front stoep had been relaid, even the new stoep was much cracked. The tiled floor in the front hall was badly laid. From the time of the architects' letter that the work was practically completed, it was not in his opinion satisfactorily completed. The objections, to his mind, were substantial.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: About the end of October the defendant moved into the place. In his opinion the hotel was the best one in Beaufort West, but the price was a big one. Nothing had been done to remedy the defects. The hotel business was going on. Witness did not purport to give evidence as to the actual agreement, as he was not present all the time at the interview between the defendant, Mr. Parker, and Mr. Reid. The contract for the Ceres-road Hotel was signed by the contractors, but not by the defendant. Witness could not explain why the defendant did not sign that contract, and he was not very much surprised when the defendant did not sign A. B. Reid's contract. The only extras which Mr. Logan did not authorise were the tanks. The defendant at the interview said the old material was to belong to him, but he said nothing of the date of completion, the penalty, or the period of maintenance. On account of Mr. Parker's refusal to go up to Beaufort West, Mr. O'Brien was brought up with the defendant and witness. All he knew was the cement was cracked.

Re-examined by Mr. Close: Witness had no idea that the contract was to be reduced to writing. The visit was not made to Beaufort West for the express purpose of finding fault with the building. The tone of the defendant's letters right through was to get representatives of the architects and builder on the spot. Out of twenty-two, seven rooms had to be re-plastered, re-painted, and re-tinted.

Arthur T. O'Brien, architect, of Cape Town, who at the request of the defendant went to Beaufort West to inspect the premises, stated the premises generally were not fitted for an hotel. The concrete and cement work was badly cracked. To put the cement work in a proper state would be a serious interference with the occupation of the hotel. With the exception of upstairs, and in the bath-rooms the tiling seemed to buckle up a good deal. Witness made a report of several defects, and he forwarded a copy of it to the architects and at the same time informed the plaintiff that he had done so. He proceeded to give evidence on the several items he complained of.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: In June Mr. Wilkie was the defendant's representative as clerk of works. On the 17th March the defendant instructed Wilkie to remain on the work.

Mr. Truter, J.P., stated when he visited the premises in May he saw workmen taking plaster off the walls with spades. The cement floors were badly cracked, and the stoep was crumbling. Generally speaking, the cement was bad work. The walls shook when a person walked across the floor. There was blistering all over the building. When he re-visited the building in September he noticed the stoep had been re-laid, but it was again crumbling. There was no improvement in the other cement work, and the building was in a general mess.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He did not know of a single visitor being scared away from the hotel through the cracks in the walls.

Mr. G. Ransome, architect, who at the request of the defendant made an examination of the building, stated the cement floors were very much broken and cracked. To fulfil the requirements of the specifications the floors would have to be taken up and re-laid. Witness in detail specified the various defects.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Cement was liable to crack in hot climates.

G. W. Payne, formerly manager at the Masonic Hotel, also gave evidence as to the state of the building.

Mr. Close closed his case.

On the claim in reconvention,

Mr. Upington called,

John Glasgow, painter and decorator, who had been in the service of the plaintiffs since October, 1903, and who was in charge of the painting and decorating of the building. What the clerk of works requested him to do he did. The clerk of works raised no objection to witness's work.

Counsel having addressed the jury on the facts, and His Lordship summed up.

The jury retired at 4.20 p.m., and returned seven minutes afterwards with a verdict for the plaintiffs in the amount claimed, £559 4s. 3d., with interest and costs.

Judgment was entered accordingly.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: G. Trollip. Defendant's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buisinnie.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

OTTERSTROM V. ESTATE { 1907.
STEPHAN BROB. { Apr. 25th.

Negligence—Duty of shipowner—Injury—Fall of derrick.

The plaintiff, being coxswain of a lighter into which a cargo was being unloaded from a ship belonging to the defendant, stood underneath a derrick which was being used on the ship to unload the cargo and which fell on his head, causing considerable injury. The strap which attached the derrick to the mast was found to be rotten, and there was sufficient evidence that its bad condition was the cause of the fall of the derrick.

Held, that it was the duty of the shipowner to keep the derrick in proper condition, and that as the plaintiff had been lawfully standing on his lighter under the derrick, he was entitled to recover damages for the injury.

This was an action for damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff as a result of the defendants' negligence.

The declaration set forth that the plaintiff was a lighterman by occupation, and was formerly a coxswain on a lighter at Port Nolloth, belonging to the Cape Copper Company. On the 10th April, 1905, the plaintiff, while employed to assist in unloading and removing certain cargo from the steamship Aurora, belonging to the defendants, was struck down by a derrick, which became unfastened and fell down owing to the carelessness and negligence of the defendants or their servants in not having properly secured it to the mast. Plaintiff claimed £1,000 damages.

Defendants, in their plea, alleged that whatever injuries were sustained were due to the plaintiff's own carelessness in standing under the derrick, where he had no right to be. The derrick was properly secured before the work was commenced, and its fall was the result of an accident, and was not due to the negligence of the defendants or their servants. The defendants further pleaded that the plaintiff was, on the occasion referred to, in the employ of the Cape Copper Company, and that even if he sustained any damages, such damages were recoverable, if from anyone, only from his said employers and not from the defendants. It was denied that the plaintiff had suffered any damages for which the defendants were liable.

Dr. Greor (with him Mr. Van der Byl) was for the plaintiff; Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Gardiner) was for the defendants.

Henning Otterstrom, the plaintiff, said he was thirty-one years of age, and lived at Newlands. He was coxswain of a lighter in the employ of the Cape Copper Company at Port Nolloth, and was landing cargo from the defendants' boat, the Aurora, in April, 1905, when the accident occurred. He was rendered unconscious and woke up in hospital, where he spent thirty-one days, and was altogether eighty-four days away from work. The medical fees were £47. Witness was receiving 7s. 6d. a day, and although the Cape Copper Company had given him light work, his wages were now only 6s. a day. His strength was gone, and he had great pains in the back, while his memory had been affected, all as the result of the accident. He was originally a sailor and had been employed at the Pier Head, Cape Town, and on Robben Island.

In cross-examination by Mr. Burton, plaintiff said his capacity for lifting heavy weights had been affected. As far as witness knew he was going back as foreman. He was walking about, unable to work, for a long time subsequent to the accident. He always had a pain in his back.

Mr. Burton: You have always got it?

Witness: Always.

A bad pain?—Yes.

Is your back stiff?—Yes; I have a funny feeling. Sometimes I feel I don't care what happens to me.

In further cross-examination, the witness said the derrick was too short; he could not say by how much it was too short. If the derrick had been long enough, he would not have stood where he did.

Mr. Burton was proceeding to cross-examine the plaintiff as to whether he did not consider it unsafe to stand where he did—under the derrick.

De Villiers, C.J., said it seemed to him that the main question was whether the derrick was safe or not. Surely counsel was not going to contend that because he stood where he did it was negligence?

Mr. Burton: Well, in view of what your lordship says, I don't feel able to contend that the mere standing there was contributory negligence.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You see, he is on his own lighter, and he is entitled to be on any part he likes. The main question is whether the derrick was in safe condition or not.]

Mr. Burton: The defence was raised in the plea, but in view of your lordship's expression of opinion I don't press it.

In answer to further questions by Mr. Burton, plaintiff said that defendants made him an offer of £125 and costs before coming into court.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You don't tender that in your plea?]

Mr. Burton: No, my lord.

Dr. F. H. Wessels, of Cape Town, deposed to having made an examination of plaintiff. He described the tests made to ascertain the plaintiff's condition, and detailed the results. There was, he said, a danger of an aggravation of the present symptoms. At the present time, the plaintiff, in witness's opinion, had not the brains for hard work. Witness did not think there was much chance of the plaintiff being restored to the condition in which he was prior to the accident.

Dr. Griffin, who examined the plaintiff immediately after the accident, also gave evidence. He said he would be very greatly surprised if the man got right.

Evidence was given bearing out the allegation on behalf of the plaintiff that a wire rope attached to the derrick was unfit for its work, and consequently broke. Defendants ought to have seen that it was serviceable. It should have been examined about every two months.

The plaintiff was given the character by several witnesses of being a first-class workman before the accident, while it was stated in evidence that he could no longer be employed as a lighterman. One of the witnesses described the present condition of the derrick in question as rotten. It must, said the witness, have been also rotten when it broke.

Dr. Groer closed his case.

Carl Kuriending, mate of the Aurora at the time of the accident, was called. He said he was standing under the derrick when it fell. It did not strike him. The gear of the Aurora was overhauled at Table Bay before the accident, and the service of the strop was then all right. A couple of incisions were made in the service, and the metal inside looked bright and in good order. Witness was satisfied by this examination that the derrick was safe, and that he could stand under it, as he was in the habit of doing. This was about a month before the accident. Witness's theory was that the derrick might have been broken by a jerk. The derrick had decayed with rust since it was taken from the ship.

Mr. Burton said it might save time if he now said that during the interval he had discussed the case with his clients. His lordship would doubtless see the position in which the defendants were placed. They were the executors of an estate, and, of course, they were not in a position simply to accept any claim upon the estate; but they fully recognised that in the circumstances the burden of disproving negligence in the claim rested upon them. They had considered their position, and had come to the conclusion that the wisest course now would be to say they did not propose to contest further the question of liability. It was not, of course, admitted that there was any gross negligence.

Evidence was then led on behalf of the defendants on the question of the amount of damages.

Dr. Eric France gave it as his opinion that the plaintiff's memory was not bad, and that he was an intelligent man. There was no sign of mental weakness. Witness did not think that the plaintiff was voluntarily malingering when he came to see him. At first, plaintiff professed to be unable to stoop, but on witness distracting his attention and telling him suddenly to take off his boots he bent down and did so without difficulty. This did not convey to the witness that the man was deliberately malingering; it might be that the man really believed he was stiff, and that he did this subconsciously. Plaintiff was not so bad as he thought he was, and witness considered he could throw off this belief in his weakness. Witness saw no reason to anticipate permanent injury, nor to think that plaintiff's capacity for the work he had done previously would be permanently impaired. He thought plaintiff could shake off the obsession and gradually become as able-bodied and minded as before.

After having heard counsel in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff in this case sues the defendant for the sum of £1,000 for damages sustained by reason of injury done to the plaintiff, by the alleged carelessness of the defendant. The accident happened in this way: The plaintiff was coxswain on board a lighter, and the lighter was lying alongside the ship Aurora, of which the defendant was the owner, and while some grain was being unloaded from the Aurora on to the lighter, a strop to which the derrick was attached gave way, and the derrick fell on the plaintiff's head, causing him to lose consciousness and inflicting, in my opinion, very serious injury upon the plaintiff. The defence raised by the plea was to the effect that whatever damage was suffered by the plaintiff was due to his own carelessness and negligence in standing under the said derrick, where he had no right or duty to be. In the course of the case, I pointed out to learned counsel for the defendant that the plaintiff at all events had a right to stand on the lighter, of which he was the coxswain, and he was justified in assuming that the derrick which was being used on board the Aurora for the purpose of unloading the cargo on to the lighter would be sufficiently strong as not to come down upon his head; and it appeared to me a most extraordinary defence to set up that, because this man was under the derrick, which he was entitled to believe was secure, he is not entitled to recover by reason of contributory negligence. And, strangely enough, the very first witness called for the defendant was the mate of the Aurora, and one of the first questions asked of him was whether he stood under the derrick; and he said he stood under the derrick, and had done so all along, because he believed it was perfectly safe. Well, counsel saw this defence could not be maintained, and he very properly abandoned it. Then the next question which arose in the case was whether the fall of the derrick was occasioned by the negligence of the defendant. When I speak of the defendant I mean the original defendant. He has died, and it is the executor the Court now has to deal with. Well, the strop itself was produced, and it required no further evidence than the production of the strop to satisfy the Court that there must have been negligence on the part of the defendant to cause the derrick to give way. Expert witnesses have been called who have examined this strop, and they are quite satisfied that, even allowing for the two years' rusting and standing exposed to wind and weather, this strop must have been, two years ago, in a perfectly worthless condition. I am quite convinced that if the defendant had done his duty properly, and examined the strop from time to time, this accident would not have occurred. The mate says he examined it about a month before the accident, but he is not sure of the date, and it may have been considerably more than a month before; and my opinion is that if this strop had been examined within a fortnight before the accident occurred, the defendant would not have continued to use it for the purposes of a derrick which was to hoist great weights. It seems to me that of all parts of the ship this was one of the most important and necessary to keep in order. Continually persons are exposed to the danger of this derrick falling upon them, and I should think it must be clearly the duty of the shipowner to see that the derrick and the appliances to which it is fastened are in such condition as to involve no danger to the lives or limbs of persons who have to work in the neighbourhood of the ship. In my opinion, this strop was in an wholly inefficient condition, and it was due to the negligence of the defendant in not keeping the strop in proper condition that the accident happened to the plaintiff. That, also, was admitted by counsel for the defence, after he had heard what an intelligent expert witness for the plaintiff had to say upon the question, and the case ultimately resolved itself into a question of damages. On this question, the evidence of the medical men must of course have considerable weight with the Court. Now, it does not seem to me that there is a very serious difference between the doctors who have been called on behalf of the plaintiff and the doctor who has been called on behalf of the defendant. Dr. France admits that the nervous condition of the plaintiff has been considerably weakened by reason of this accident. He candidly admitted that an accident of this kind, causing concussion of the brain and causing a very serious shock to the nervous system at the time when it happened, might, for a time at all events, considerably weaken the nervous condition of the patient, and might also considerably affect his will-power. Now, if before the accident the man possessed will power, and if, afterwards, he ceased to possess that will power, then I say there is a weakened condition in that man which considerably impairs his physical condition, and which would prevent him thereafter from earning his livelihood as readily as he would have done before. I need not go into the whole of the conflicting evidence given by the doctors, but I am satisfied that the man's condition after the accident is considerably worse than it was before. I do not believe myself there is any organic disease, nor is Dr. Wesels prepared to say there is. He says it is possible further results may follow, but in regard to these possible results one must bear in mind that two years have elapsed since the accident, and if, after two years, these very serious organic troubles have not arisen which might be anticipated, it is fair to conclude that they are not likely to follow now. But at the same time there has been a very great nervous shock to the plaintiff. He has suffered considerable pain; he has not in the interval been able to earn his salary, as before; and it is quite possible in the future he may not be the strong, healthy man he was before. The defendant's counsel takes very great credit to the defendant for having tendered £125, with costs, but the credit would have been greater if the defendant had tendered the amount in his plea, or if he had applied for leave to amend his plea by inserting the tender. Defendant did not bind himself by this tender, as the plea is to the effect that there is no negligence, and that there is no liability at all. And I cannot lose sight of the fact, because it appears on these papers, that, when this unfortunate plaintiff made application for a commission, every difficulty was thrown in the way to prevent this commission from being appointed. Of course, reasons were given for the opposition, but to my mind they were wholly inadequate reasons. I do not think this is a case for heavy damages, because as I said before, I do not believe there is any organic disease. Now, that this case is settled the plaintiff will have less anxiety, and I think it probable that he will gradually recover, that his nervous condition will improve, and that ultimately he will be able to work. But, at the same time, the plaintiff has suffered considerably, and I think the least the Court should award is £250. Judgment will, therefore, be for the plaintiff for granted to the plaintiff to sue in forma pauperis.

£250, with costs.

Dr. Greer mentioned the matter of the costs of an application made by the assumed executor to withdraw the leave.

The Chief Justice said he was not aware of this application. It seemed that when the poor plaintiff sought for redress he found every possible difficulty thrown in his path. An application of that kind did not go very well with the tender of £125. In the circumstances, he would order that the costs of that application be paid by the assumed executor de bonis propriis. Plaintiff would be given his costs as a necessary witness.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: E. J. Sydney.
Defendants' Attorneys: Van der Byl and De Villiers.]

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1907.
 { Apr. 25th.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the admission of Cecil Romaine Atherstone as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Registrar of the Eastern Districts Court.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Charles Keler as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Peter John Hodgson as an attorney and notary.

Application granted and oaths administered.

Mr. Roux moved for the admission of Pieter Jacobus Potgieter as an attorney.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of Aliwal North.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

HIDDINGH V. COHEN.

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,600, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent., from January 1, 1907, bond due by reason of notice having been given in terms thereof; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable, and the rents attached.

Mr. Roux appeared for defendant, and read an affidavit by his client, who said that he raised a bond hypothecating certain property at Simon's Town. He had paid the interest regularly, and plaintiff had now called up the bond. He asked for a postponement so as to enable him to raise a fresh bond, and said that a forced sale of his property in the present state of the market would inflict great hardship upon him.

Mr. Gutsche said that his client did not desire to be hard upon the defendant.

Maasdorp, J.: There is no ground for thinking that the plaintiff is acting unreasonably in this matter, and no ground has been shown why the Court should force any contract upon the plaintiff that he is unwilling to enter into. From what has been said, it would seem that the plaintiff himself is prepared to grant some indulgence when the judgment is given. Under the circumstances of the case, plaintiff is entitled to provisional sentence. Provisional sentence will be granted as prayed, with costs.

STEVENS AND ANOTHER V. ESTATE VILLA.

Mr. Pyemont moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £700, with interest from July 1, 1905, less £19 6s. 9d. paid on account, and for £4 8s. premiums of insurance and interest thereon, paid on behalf of defendants; counsel applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable, and rents accruing to be attached.

Order granted.

GENERAL ESTATE AND ORPHAN CHAMBER V. SAFIERDIEN.

Mr. Toms moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £200, with interest from January 1, 1906, and 14s., insurance premiums, less £1 12s., paid on account, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

IMPERIAL COLD STORAGE AND SUPPLY CO. V. ARCHER.

Mr. Roux moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £126 11s., for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

Order granted.

SHAPIRO V. LEVEN AND BUTLER. { 1907.
Apr. 25th.
May 2nd.

Landlord's lien—Interdict.

Where a landlord applied for an interdict to restrain certain tenants from removing their goods; the Court, in the absence of any allegation that the tenants were about to remove the goods, refused the interdict, but granted a rule nisi.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, as a matter of urgency, for an interdict restraining the respondents from alienating, or disposing of, the goods in premises at Huguenot, Paarl, pending an action to be brought by applicant against respondents for £35 12s. 4d., rent owing in respect of the premises.

Maasdorp, J.: The Court cannot grant an interdict seeing that there is no allegation that the respondents are about to remove the goods. A rule nisi will be granted, returnable on Thursday next, rule to operate as an interim interdict, with leave to applicant to telegraph terms of the order.

Pontru (May 2nd). The rule was made absolute.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Gutsche moved, under the 117th section of the Insolvent Ordinance, for the rehabilitation of Petrus Jacobus Jansen van Rensburg.

Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

KELLY V. B.M., WOODSTOCK. { 1907.
Apr. 25th.

Withdrawal of set down—Special counsel.

The Court allowed a set down of an important appeal to be withdrawn, on the ground that appellant wished the appeal to be argued by a certain counsel now absent in Europe, and respondent had shown no reason for refusing the application.

This was an application calling upon respondent to show cause why the hearing of the appeal brought by applicant should not be postponed until the return of Mr. Schreiner, K.C., who had been retained as leader by the appellant.

It appeared that applicant had set down for Monday next an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Maasdorp in an application which he had made for an order for admission as an enrolled agent in the Resident Magistrate's Court, Woodstock (17 C.T.R., 48). Mr. Schreiner, K.C., had gone away to Europe on private business, and probably would not return for at least another month. Applicant specially desired that Mr. Schreiner should argue his case before the Appeal Court.

Dr. Greer was for applicant; Mr. Douglas Buchanan was for respondent. Affidavits having been read, and counsel having been heard,

Maasdorp, J.: It seems that this appeal was set down by the applicant for Monday next, and he now wishes to withdraw the setting down and to have the appeal heard on a later date. If any ground had been shown by the respondent upon which he would be prejudiced if the matter was allowed to stand over, then the Court would have required some very good reasons from the applicant for this postponement, but there is absolutely no ground for thinking that there would be any prejudice to the respondent if the matter did not come on on Monday, or if the matter does not come on at all. The law has been set in action by the applicant, and the question is now whether the applicant has given some reason showing that he might suffer some prejudice. I cannot say that the ground given by the applicant is a very strong one, but, at least, it is based upon some slight foundation. The point raised before the Court is of great importance to the applicant, and there is a great deal to be said in support of the contention that was raised by him when the matter was first heard. He now wishes to have the services of a particular counsel to argue those points before the Court of Appeal. If there had been any reason on the part of the respondent for opposing such a postponement, I would have come to the conclusion that the mere desire to have the services of a special counsel would not be sufficient for a postponement, but, considering that there is some slight ground alleged by the applicant and none at all by the respondent, I think that the wishes of the party who set the law in motion ought to be taken into consideration, and a postponement ought to be allowed.

Mr. Buchanan asked if his Lordship would fix a time within which the matter should be set down?

Maasdorp, J.: I cannot understand what importance it is to the respondent. I can understand that it may be of some importance to certain practitioners. The matter must stand over, and if, according to any Rule, you are entitled to force it on, you can take advantage of that Rule, but from what I understand no such Rule has come into operation yet. It now stands over indefinitely as if it had not been set down at all. The applicant is allowed to withdraw the set-down of the case, question of costs to stand over. If the matter does not come on again, the respondent may move for his costs if he thinks he has any ground.

STEWART V. INSOLVENT { 1907.
ESTATE HYLAND AND { Apr. 25th.
ANOTHER. " 30th.

Last illness—Medical fees—Costs of execution—Preference.

Plaintiff, a medical practitioner, had attended the late H. in his last illness. H.'s estate was heavily bonded, and there was not sufficient in it to pay off the bonds. The trustee had awarded all the proceeds to the bond-holders and ranked plaintiff merely as a concurrent creditor.

Held, that plaintiff's claim was preferent to that of the bond-holders.

Plaintiff had attached certain of the property in the estate, and asked that his costs of attachment should have the same preference as his medical fees.

Held, that these costs must rank as preferent after prior preferent claims.

This was an application calling upon Mr. Roos, as trustee in the insolvent estate of the late Henry Thomas Hyland, and also as executor in the estate of William Hiddingh, to show cause why the liquidation and distribution account in the estate Hyland should not be amended by admitting the applicant's claim as preferent.

It appeared that this matter had already been before the Court during the February term (17 C.T.R., 112), and was standing over for argument. Applicant was a medical practitioner who attended the deceased during this last illness, and he claimed a preference in the estate Hyland in respect of his medical fees and of certain costs incurred in taking out a writ of execution against the immovable property. There was also a claim for preference for costs incurred in respect of a writ against the movables. The respondent framed a distribution account in which he brought up the proceeds realised by the sale of immovable property, which was the only asset in the estate, and distributed the proceeds entirely to the bond-holders. The net amount available for distribution was £9,167 lls. 11d., and the trustee awarded the whole amount to the estate Hiddingh in respect of a bond of £8,967 10s. 9d., with interest, leaving a deficiency of about £130 due to the bondholder. The applicant was brought up among the concurrent creditors with regard to a claim of £51 3s. for medical services and costs. The respondent opposed on the ground that the applicant had not annexed a specified account of his charges, that the proof of debt did not state that the deceased died of the same cause of illness for which the applicant had attended him from the beginning, and that applicant, in his proof of debt, did not state that the claim was preferent.

Mr. Benjamin was for applicant, Dr. R. A. Stewart; Mr. Howes was for respondent.

In argument, Mr. Benjamin submitted that the proof of debt was strictly in accordance with the requirements of the 27th section of the Insolvent Ordinance. The 106th section provided that the trustee should decide the question of preference. The applicant claimed a preference and specifically stated that the fees were for professional services during the last illness of the deceased. A writ was issued attaching the movables, the movables had been sold, and the proceeds paid over to applicant. As to the right of applicant to recover costs of the writ of execution against the immovable property, counsel quoted Buchanan's "Decisions in Insolvency" as to section 22 of the Ordinance. As to the doctor's fees, which in this case amounted to £44, he submitted that a medical man enjoyed a preference for professional fees for services during the last illness over a bondholder. He cited In re Wolff (6 Juta, 127), Burton on Insolvency (pp. 143-9), Van der Kessel, Thesis (418), Burge (vol. 3, p. 211), Voet (11, 7, 15), Van Leeuwen's Cens. Forensis (1, 4, 9, 8, and 9), Grotius (2, 48, 14), Schorer (2, 48, 14), Holl. Consult. (6, p. 327), Digest (11, 7, 45), Van der Linden (1, 12, 4), and Bell's Law of Scotland (sec. 1,403). It was clear that according to the law of Holland a doctor had a preference over a mortgage bondholder. As to the objection that respondent had not said that these charges referred to the last illness, this was specifically stated in the summons on which judgment was obtained, and again in the judgment. Counsel also cited McNulty v. Estate Wigget (15 C.T.R., 1,020).

Mr. Howes submitted that there should have been annexed to the proof a specified account of the charges and the several dates and times of applicant's attendance on the deceased. It must be clear that not only was it the last illness, but also the last illness which caused the death of the deceased, in order that the claim should be preferent. The Master classified this as a concurrent claim, and no objection was taken until the present application was made. With regard to costs, he referred to section 8 of the Ordinance. Costs of execution would be costs of administration, and did not fall on the mortgagee but on the other creditors proving. He cited Zuyphé, Neder. Prac. (5, p. 255). The whole question seemed to depend upon what sort of priority doctors' expenses had. If the privilege claimed in this case was admitted, it might lead to great abuse. The tendency of the law was to make ordinary mortgages as safe as possible, and do away as far as possible with tacit hypothecs. The last five or six days was the utmost period to which the applicant could have any preference. He had already been paid £8 11s. 10d. by sale on the writ attaching the movables. This amount, which he had appropriated the capital, would amply cover any specially privileged portion of the claim. Respondent did not admit that this preference entitled applicant to be preferred with regard to the property mortgaged to the mortgagee. The debt was proved as a judgment debt; applicant claimed on a judgment debt, and it was a well-known rule of law that a judgment had no preference. Counsel cited on the question of the costs of execution Van der Byl and Co. v. Langford's Trustee (7 Juta, 235).

Mr. Benjamin, in reply, submitted that the procedure taken in this matter was correct, and quoted sections 110 and 111 of the Ordinance. The 8th section of the Ordinance mentioned by his learned friend only applied to costs of sequestration, and did not touch the point in this case.

(Cur. Adr. Fult.)

Postea (April 30th).

Maasdorp, J.: Upon the liquidation of the insolvent estate of Hyland it was found that the only asset of value consisted of land and buildings situate off Dock-road, Cape Town. This property was mortgaged to the estate of Hiddingh for £8,967, increased by interest and insurance to £9,298, and realised a sum of £9,750, which, after deducting expenses of administration, left £9,167 available for creditors. The amount was awarded to the bondholder. The applicant now moves to have the liquidation and distribution account, upon which the award is made, amended by ranking his claim for medical fees for attendance during the last illness of the insolvent, who is now deceased, as preferent over the debt of the bondholder. It appears that the estate was surrendered by the executrix after the death of Hyland. The applicant states that he attended the deceased during his last illness when he was suffering from eczema, resulting in coma, and causing death. His claim is for fees due for such attendance. It appears that under our law, where the estate of a deceased person happens to be insolvent, the medical fees accruing during the last illness are ranked in order of preference with the funeral expenses. This is laid down in Grotius, 2, 48, 4; Van der Kessel, 418, 466, Schorer 245, and Van Leeuwen 4, 13, 9. Voet (11, 7, 15) points out that this arose from a mistaken interpretation of the passage in the Digest, which took the ointments, used for the preservation of the corpse, to be medicines administered before death. But, he adds, it is too late now to alter the position after the law has been adopted in the Courts and established by a long series of uniform judicial decisions. Medical fees during last illness must therefore be taken to rank with funeral expenses, and the question arises, what preference was accorded to funeral expenses. It is laid down in the Digest (11, 7, 14) that funeral expenses are always deducted from the estate, and in case of insolvency are preferred to all other debts. A great deal of discussion took place among the jurists upon the question, whether it was intended by this passage to prefer the funeral expenses to mortgages. Faber, in his commentary on the passage, enters fully into the argument, where he refers to the hardship upon a mortgagee who, after doing everything he can to secure himself, finds his security depreciated by a debt of later date. But he thinks a much worse evil would arise if, through want of the necessary means, corpses should remain unburied, to the injury of public health and decency, and he comes to the conclusion that funeral expenses are preferred not only to debts upon liquid documents, but to all hypothecs and mortgages, whether tacit or conventional. Voet (11. 7, 9) is of the same opinion, and he regards the funeral expenses as being in a way costs of administration, which may be deducted before the estate becomes available for the payment of debts. The funeral expenses are treated by Van der Kessel (Thesis 418) as possessing a special privilege under the law, not derived from any tacit hypothec attaching to them, which should take preference in order of time with other tacit and special hypothecs. It may be pointed out, however, that Grotius (2. 4. 11) uses the term tacit hypothec as applicable to these claims for funeral expenses. It follows, therefore, that medical fees during last illness, which rank with funeral expenses, must be preferred to mortgages, and consequently the applicant's claim must rank before that of the estate of Hiddingh. It was contended that the applicant lost his right of preference because he did not allege in his proof of debt that he claimed such preference. In his proof of debt the applicant described his debt as an amount due to him for medical services rendered during the last illness of Hyland. This is a sufficient indication that the debt was proved as a preferent claim; but the applicant says that he intimated as much when he put in his claim. Before the surrender of the estate the applicant sued and got judgment for the amount of his debt, for which the property in question was attached in execution, and he now claims to be preferred for the costs of attachment in execution before the mortgagee. He relies upon the following words in section 22 of the Insolvent Ordinance: "The person holding such judgment (i.e., a judgment for satisfaction of which property has been attached before sequestration) shall on the distribution of the said estate be entitled to be preferred over the proceeds of the property attached for the costs incurred by him in respect of the writ of execution and the execution of the same." It was contended, on behalf of the applicant, that he should be preferred to the bondholder for the costs of execution. Undoubtedly a preference is here given, but it is one which must take rank in order of time with other preferent claims, in conformity with the well-known rule on the subject. All prior mortgages, which also enjoy rights of preference, must rank before the later preferent claim created by this section as a sort of pignus pratorium. The applicant's claim for costs of execution must therefore be postponed to the claim of the mortgagee. There being no free residue in this case out of the proceeds of this property, after the payment of the bond, there is nothing for the applicant's claim to rank upon. It appears from what is said by Voet (20. 4. 28) that the pignus judiciale must take rank according to time with other hypothecs and mortgages, whether tacit or special. The preference allowed for costs of execution under section 22, seems to be a relic of the larger right which formerly existed in the shape of a pignus pratorium, and which was reduced by the Insolvent Ordinance. A larger right existed under the old Ordinance No. 64, where a creditor who had attached property in execution before the sequestration "was entitled to such preference over the proceeds of the property so attached, as by law is created over such property, in virtue of the legal attachment thereof." Under the present Ordinance he is preferred over the proceeds of the property for the costs of execution, but not for the judgment debt or costs of suit. The larger right of the old Ordinance was clearly the pignus pratorium, which ranked after prior special mortgages, and the reduced right of the later Ordinance is in no more favourable position. The applicant must fail on his second claim. An order will be granted directing the trustee to amend the account by awarding to applicant a preference before the claim of the estate of Hiddingh in respect of his medical fees. Respondents are ordered to pay costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

OFFICIAL LIQUIDATORS OF	} 1907. Apr. 26th. " 29th.
THE BUFFALO SUPPLY AND COLD STORAGE CO., LTD.
(IN LIQUIDATION) V. THE FEDERAL SUPPLY AND COLD STORAGE CO. OF SOUTH AFRICA, LTD.

Award—Rule of Court—Judgment—debt—Interest—Execution.

An award whereby the plaintiff Company was adjudged to pay a sum of money to the defendant Company, which was to be entitled to retain certain shares in the plaintiff Company as security, was made a Rule of the Supreme Court, but nothing was said in the award or in the Judgment of the Court as to the payment of interest. At the time when the judgment was given, the plaintiff Company applied for a stay of execution, which was refused by the Court.

Held, that the defendant Company was not entitled thereafter to charge interest on the amount of the judgment debt.

The plaintiffs' declaration was in the following terms: (1) The plaintiffs are the official liquidators of the Buffalo Supply and Cold Storage Company, Ltd., having been duly appointed as such on the 20th October, 1904, and they sue in their said capacity. The defendant is a company with limited liability, registered in London, where its head office is, but carrying on business in this colony, where its chief office is in Cape Town. (2) On or about the 21st April, 1903, the said Buffalo Supply and Cold Storage Company, Ltd., which was then not yet in liquidation, entered into a certain deed of submission with the defendant company, whereby it was agreed to submit certain differences which had arisen between the said companies to arbitration. (3) In or about May, 1903, the said Buffalo Supply and Cold Storage Company, Ltd., went into voluntary liquidation, and on or about the 14th July, 1904, it was ordered by this Court to be wound up under the provisions of the Companies Act, 1892. (4) During the latter part of 1903 the differences above referred to were submitted to arbitration in accordance with and under the provisions of the said deed, and thereafter, on or about the 21st January, 1904, the arbitrators and umpire appointed under the said deed delivered an award. (5) Under the said award there was declared to be due to the defendant company by the said Buffalo Supply and Cold Storage Company, Ltd., a certain balance of cash amounting to £21,763 17s. 6d. (which sum was thereafter reduced to £19,302 0s. 3d. by certain liquidators of the said Buffalo Supply Ltd., was declared entitled to receive from the defendant company 35,000 fully paid up shares to be delivered to the Supply and Cold Storage Company, credits which were allowed by the defendant company) and the said Buffalo and Cold Storage Company, Ltd., upon payment of the said balance of cash. The defendant company was, under the said award, to pay the taxed costs of the said arbitration. (6) On or about the 29th of February, 1904, the said award was, at the instance of the defendant company, made a rule of this honourable Court, and the plaintiffs crave leave to refer to the terms of the said order. (7) The defendant company did not, however, issue a writ of execution under the said order, but whilst it retained possession of the 35,000 shares above referred to, allowed the matter to remain in abeyance until on or about the 14th of July, 1904, when it applied to this honourable Court to be allowed to issue execution under its said judgment, and failing a sufficient levy, to be allowed to sell and dispose of the said 35,000 shares from time to time in parcels, and to devote the proceeds thereof to the discharge of its said claim and interest. Thereupon the defendant company was authorised by this Honourable Court to sell the said shares in parcels after due notice to the liquidators of the said Buffalo Supply and Cold Storage Company, Limited, until the defendant company's claim and the costs of its said application were liquidated. The plaintiffs crave leave to refer to the records of the said proceedings. (8) Thereafter the defendant company proceeded, after some further delay, to sell certain of the said shares in parcels from time to time, and it has received the proceeds of such sales, as also certain dividends paid out upon the said shares from time to time. On or about the 25th of January, 1906, the defendant company had sold all but 3,010 of the said 35,000 shares, and had realised more than sufficient from such sales, together with the dividends received as aforesaid, to cover the said indebtedness of the said Buffalo Supply and Cold Storage Company, Limited, to the defendant company. The plaintiffs annex hereto copy of an account duly rendered to the defendant company, setting forth details of the moneys received as aforesaid by the defendant company up to the said date, and also of the taxed costs of the said arbitration, and showing a balance after deduction of the said sum of £19,302 0s. 3d., as well as certain charges and costs due by the said Buffalo Supply and Cold Storage Company, Limited, of £1,635 8s. 7d. in its favour. The said balance is slightly inaccurate owing to a clerical error, and should actually be £1,635 9s. 3d., which amount the plaintiffs are entitled to, but which or any part of which the defendant company refuses to pay. (9) The plaintiffs were entitled also after the sale of all but the said balance of 3,010 shares, to receive the said balance of shares, but the defendant company wrongfully and unlawfully retained possession thereof, and thereafter, as the said shares were selling at a fair price, it was arranged between the parties that the said 3,010 shares should be sold, and they were accordingly sold by the defendant company, which received the proceeds, and which, on or about the 26th of March, 1906, rendered an account of such sale to the plaintiffs, showing the net proceeds of the said shares to be £1,931 7s. 2d. (10) The plaintiffs are entitled to payment of the said sum of £1,931 7s. 2d., which, however, or any part of which, the defendant company refuses to pay. The plaintiffs claim: (a) The said sum of £1,635 9s. 3d., together with interest a tempore moræ; (b) the said sum of £1,931 7s. 2d., with interest a tempore moræ; (c) alternative relief; (d) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows: (1) Paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the declaration are admitted. (2) As to paragraph 7, the defendants admit that they did not issue a writ under the said order, and they say that they filed their petition in the paragraph referred to on 31st May, 1904, though it did not come on for hearing until the 14th July, 1904, and they say that the delay, if any, in taking action was owing to the acts of the plaintiffs and at their instigation and request, and for the benefit and in the interests of the said company in liquidation, and in order to realise the shares in the best interests of both parties. (3) As to paragraph 8 of the declaration, the defendants say that, if there was any delay in the sale of the shares, it was owing to the acts of the plaintiffs, and at their instigation and request, and for the benefit and in the interests of the said company in liquidation, and the defendants exercised a due and proper discretion in placing the shares on the market as quotations from time to time justified, and in order to obtain the best price. The dividends received were credited to account of the plaintiffs. The defendants admit that, on or about the 25th January, 1906, they had sold all but 3,010 of the said shares, but they deny that the proceeds and the dividends were sufficient to cover the indebtedness of the said Buffalo Company to them and they deny the other allegations in the said paragraph contained. The defendants annex a true and correct account of the said indebtedness. The said account shows an item of £4 14s. 7d. which had been credited in error to the said Buffalo Company and paid to them by the defendants in error and under a mistake of fact and which the defendants are entitled to receive payment of from the said Buffalo Company. (4) The defendants deny that the plaintiffs were entitled to receive the said 3,010 shares and that the defendants wrongfully and unlawfully retained possession thereof; they admit that the parties agreed that the said shares should be sold and that they were sold and realised net £1,931 7s. 2d. Save as above defendants deny paragraphs 9 and 10. (4a) The defendants say that there were no funds belonging to the Buffalo Company out of which their indebtedness could be paid, and that the realisation of the shares was a matter which required time and care, all of which was recognized by the plaintiffs, and that any attempt to sell all the shares together or to force the sales would have been greatly to the prejudice of the said Buffalo Company in liquidation, and the latter would not have had the benefit of the dividends upon the said shares which have gone in reduction of their said indebtedness, and that by virtue of the premises the defendants were and are entitled to the payment of interest upon their said indebtedness while the same remained unpaid and during which time the defendants were realising the said shares to the best advantage of both parties and during which the aforesaid dividends so credited to the plaintiffs, as aforesaid accrued and were paid. (5) There is due and owing to the plaintiffs after deduction of the indebtedness of the Buffalo Company to the defendants, the sum of £1,707 17s. 6d. which the defendants hereby tender with taxed costs to date. Wherefore the defendants pray that, subject to the said tender, the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

The plaintiffs' replication was as follows: (1) As to paragraph 2 of the plea, the plaintiffs admit that the defendants filed their said petition on the 31st May, 1904, and they admit that they requested the defendants to delay in taking action, but they say that the said delay was as much in the interest and for the benefit of the defendants as of themselves. (2) As to paragraph 3, they admit that they requested delay to some extent in the selling of the said shares, and they say that such delay was as much to the advantage of the defendants as of the plaintiffs. Considerable delay was caused by the defendants in connection with the giving of notice to the liquidators of the plaintiff company of the sales of parcels of the said shares. The plaintiffs admit that the said dividends received were credited to their account, and also they admit that the defendants are entitled to be credited with the said sum of £4 14s. 7d. (3) As to paragraph 4a, the plaintiffs say that the plaintiff company did have certain funds, but they admit that such funds were not sufficient to pay the said indebtedness. Save as herein above admitted, they deny the rest of the said paragraph, and they specially deny that the defendants were or are entitled to payment of any interest upon the plaintiffs' said indebtedness. (4) Save as above set forth, and save as to the admissions contained in the plea, the plaintiffs join issue with the defendants thereon. They say that the tender therein made is wholly inadequate, and they pray for judgment as in their declaration, less the sum of £4 14s. 7d., referred to in paragraph 2 of this replication.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) was for the plaintiffs; Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones) was for the defendants.

Mr. Burton said that in the award nothing was said about interest, nor in the subsequent proceedings was any reference made to it. The question now was as to the effect of the judgment regarding interest.

Mr. McGregor said that his case was that they were entitled to interest from the date of the award.

De Villiers, C.J., remarked that, judging from the statements of counsel, the question was one which could be decided without going into the voluminous correspondence and evidence.

Mr. Burton: There is a commission about a mile long from England—a tremendous thing.

Mr. McGregor said that it was necessary to have the surrounding circumstances stated. He proposed that he should be allowed to call the secretary of the defendant company, and it could then be seen whether it was necessary to go into further evidence and through the correspondence. Mr. McGregor then called Alfred Johnson, local secretary of the defendant company in Cape Town. He said that after the award, his firm pressed for payment. Mr. Fleming was appointed liquidator in October, 1904. Witness had several interviews with Mr. Fleming. The effect of these interviews was that Mr. Fleming wished to delay the sale of the shares pending some arrangement by the Buffalo Company to raise a loan to take over the shares. At the beginning of 1905, Mr. Fleming told witness that Mr. McGregor was going to England with a power of attorney to raise a loan. The dividends paid to the Buffalo since the award exceeded the interest claimed by over £1,000.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Since January, 1903, the company had been in possession of all of the assets of the Buffalo Company.

Mr. Burton, in argument, said that the matter practically resolved itself into a legal question as to whether on an award like this, followed by a Rule of Court, where no interest was claimed either in the award or the Rule of Court, interest was claimable simply because there had been a delay in the payment of the amount. Here the Federal Company had the benefit of holding the whole of the Buffalo Company's assets. The crisp question was whether on a judgment which did not give interest, a person was entitled, under our law, to claim interest. Counsel quoted the case of Kenrick v. Central Diamond Mining Company (4 H.C., p. 36), and referred to 1 and 2 Vict. ch. 110, sect. 17, to Voet, 1-8-4, Groenewegen on the Code, 7-54, Voet 22-1-10 and 11, and to the case of Greeff v. Colonial Government (15 C.T.R., 20).

Mr. McGregor said that in the present case there was insistence throughout by the Buffalo Company that there should be no forced realisation. It was to the advantage of both that there should not be hurried realisation. The defendants held their hand from time to time because of the representations of the liquidators of the Buffalo Company.

[De Villiers, C.J.: They did not stand in the way of your selling.]

Mr. McGregor said his point was that the defendants were working, not perhaps at the mercy of the Buffalo Company, but subject to the co-operation of the Buffalo Company.

After further argument, Mr. McGregor said he would, if necessary, apply for an amendment of the plea, so as to include a claim in reconvention for the interest. Continuing, counsel quoted Van der Kessel, 483, Domat, 1948, 1859, and Van Leeuwen, 1-4, and referred to the case of Greeff v. Colonial Government (15 C.T.R., 20).

Mr. Burton having been heard in reply.

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (April 29th).

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiffs, who are the official liquidators of the Buffalo Supply and Cold Storage Company, seek by this action to recover from the Federal Company the sums of £1,635 9s. 3d. and £1,931 7s. 2d., being the balance alleged to be in the hands of the defendants of the proceeds of 35,000 shares in the defendant company. Under an award of arbitrators, made by virtue of a deed of submission between the parties, it had been adjudged that there was due by the Buffalo Company to the defendants the sum of £19,302 0s. 2d., and that the Buffalo Company was entitled to receive the said shares from the defendants, to be delivered upon the payment of the sum owing by the Buffalo Company. The award was silent as to the payment of interest by either party, and in the judgment delivered on February 29, 1904, by which the award was made a Rule of Court, nothing was said about interest. The defendants would have been entitled, after the judgment of the Court, to issue execution for the amount of the judgment, and an application was made by the plaintiffs at the time when the award was made a Rule of Court for a stay of execution, but this application was refused. At a later date, namely on July 14, 1804, an application was made to the Court by the defendants for an order authorising them to issue execution under their judgment, and failing a levy for a sufficient sum that they be authorised to sell the 35,000 shares from time to time in such parcels as they may deem best, and to devote the proceeds thereof to the discharge of their claims and interest. The Court, by its order, authorised the defendants to sell the shares mentioned in their petition in parcels after due notice to the plaintiffs until the applicants' claim and costs be liquidated. The defendants accordingly proceeded to realise the shares, and to credit the plaintiffs with the proceeds as well as with such dividends as were from time to time received. Before each parcel was sold notice was given to the plaintiffs, and a mass of correspondence in regard to the sales has been put in, which does not offer much assistance in the decision of the present case. In a letter written by the secretary in England of the defendant company to one of the plaintiffs, the latter was informed that the dividend in respect of the 35,000 shares of the Buffalo Company had been credited to the account of the Buffalo Company, the writer adding: "Against this, of course, we have to make an entry for interest on the amount outstanding." There is no evidence whether such an entry was made or to what extent it was acquiesced in, and there is no plea on the record that by agreement between the parties subsequent to the Order of Court the defendants were to be allowed to charge such interest. Although the declaration makes no point of the defendants' delay in realising the shares, the defendants' plea is almost wholly confined to an explanation of the delay in such realisation. The plea alleges that if there was any delay in the sale of the shares it was owing to the acts of the plaintiffs and at their instigation and request and for the benefit and in the interests of the Buffalo Company. The plaintiffs, by their replication admitted that they had requested the defendants to delay in the sales of the shares, but say that such delay was as much in the interest and for the benefit of the defendants as of themselves. Notwithstanding this admission, a mass of evidence was given on behalf of the defendants before the Commissioner appointed by the Court to take evidence in England to prove that the delay was justifiable and in the interest of both parties. I have carefully read that evidence and cannot discover what bearing it has upon the real question at issue between the parties. That question, according to the statements of counsel on both sides, is whether the defendants are entitled to charge the plaintiffs with interest on the amount awarded to the defendants. The defendants' counsel has asked for leave to amend his plea or to file a claim in reconvention in order to raise the question whether, in consequence of the dealings between the parties after the date of the judgment, the defendants are not entitled to such interest; but it is obvious that such a plea or claim in reconvention would raise an entirely new question, for the consideration of which the plaintiffs are wholly unprepared. It is, in my opinion, too late to raise the question, and the only point to be decided is whether, by our law, the defendants, not having obtained any order as to interest at the time when the award was made a rule of Court are entitled, without obtaining an amendment of the order of Court or a fresh order, to charge interest on the amount awarded to them.

Under the Roman Law a party who was in default for a period of four months after judgment had been given against him for payment of a sum of money became liable to the payment of interest, even if the judgment was silent on the matter of interest. The Dutch law, however, at an early period, departed from this practice and only allowed interest where there was a delay after the judgment had been revived. On the expiration of a year from the date of judgment the party in whose favour the judgment had been given was entitled to have the judgment revived, and, without any fresh order as to the payment of interest, became entitled to interest from the date of such revivor. A decision to that effect of the Supreme Court of Holland and Friesland is reported by Neostand Dec., 38, and cited with approval by Van Leeuwen (Cens. For. 2 1, 33, 5) who, upon a matter of practice in his time, is an unrivalled authority. Groenewegen, in his comments upon the passages of the Code (7, 54), where the Roman Law is laid down also, refers to the departure of the Dutch practice from that of Rome and Voet (22, 1, 11), following these authors lays it down as clear law that, where the judgment is silent on the point, interest does not begin to run from the date of the judgment or from a date four months later, but only when after a delay of execution beyond a year, the party condemned to pay has again been summoned to show cause why a fresh writ of execution should not be issued. Under our practice there exists no necessity for reviving a judgment until the lapse of six years from its delivery, and the practice of summoning the party in default to show cause has wholly fallen into desuetude. The reason given by some of the Dutch authors why interest is not chargeable is because it is competent for the party who has obtained the judgment to proceed forthwith to execution, and if this was a valid reason under the Dutch cumbrous practice, it is at least an equally valid reason under the expedition practice which exists in this Court for the sale in execution of the personal property of the judgment debtor. In the case of Kenrick v. Central D.M. Co. (4 H.C., 36), the High Court gave effect to the Dutch practice as to interest, and I see no reason for departing from it in the present case. It may well be that if the defendants had asked for interest at the time when the award was made a Rule of Court, the Court would have adjudged the payment of interest a tempore moræ, but no explanation has been given as to why such interest was not then applied for. The subsequent order, authorising the sale of the shares in payment of the defendants' claim and costs, does not assist the defendants, because although the interest, as well as the claim, was mentioned in the petition, the order, whether intentionally or not, was also silent as to interest. If, instead of applying for an order for the gradual realisation of the shares the defendant had obtained a writ of execution, there would have been no difficulty in realising all the shares at once to satisfy the amount of the judgment. It is quite true that the gradual realisation was effected at the instance of the plaintiffs, but it was done for the advantage of both parties, and there is no evidence whatever that the gradual realisation was substituted for a sale in execution in consideration of the payment by the plaintiffs of interest on the debt owing by the Buffalo Company. The defendants' counsel has referred to a passage in Van der Keessel's Theses (483) in support of the view that interest always becomes payable from the time of litis contestatio, but it is clear from that passage and from the passage in Grotius Introd. (3.1.46), on which it comments, that Van der Keessel was here only referring to the interest which can lawfully be claimed in the action for the original debt or demand. Interest, he states, is claimable upon delay in a contract bonæ fidei, as distinguished from a contract stricti juris, whereas Voet is of opinion that the minute distinctions between contracts bonæ fidei and contracts stricti juris had not been preserved in the Dutch law, and that in both classes of contracts interest should be allowed after litis contestatio, but as a general rule, not by reason of extra-judicial delay. Later on, however, he mentions several exceptions to the general rule, but upon the question now under consideration, there exists no difference between Voet and the passage quoted from Van der Keessel. As I have already remarked, it may well be that the Court would have ordered the payment of interest if such an order had been applied for, but in the absence of such an order the defendants are not entitled, as a matter of right, to charge interest in the amount of the judgment. The result is that there must be judgment for the plaintiffs for the amounts as prayed (less £4 14s. 7d., which they admit should be deducted), with costs and with interest a tempore moræ as prayed.

Hopley, J.: I concur in the judgment which has just been delivered, and which I have had the opportunity of seeing and considering.

[Plaintiffs' Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn. Defendants' Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton.]

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

SELLAR BROS. V. KERBEL { 1907.
AND SHER, TRADING AS { Apr. 26th.
H. D. SHER AND CO.

Mr. Sutton moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

ESTATE BADENHORST V. PULA AND SMILE.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £30 and £1 10s., one paying the other to be absolved, with interest from the 27th August, 1903, and costs.

Order granted.

E TATE BADENHORST V. SMILE.

Mr. Payne moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £78 4s., with interest from the 19th February, 1904; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable, except property mentioned in paragraph 1 of the summons, and the rents to be attached.

Order granted.

ESTATE REID V. SAUNDERS.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence for £106 16s., being interest due on certain six mortgage bonds, and for £2 odd, premiums of insurance.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

DUMINY V. MASTERTON.

Mr. Russell moved for judgment under Rule 32nd for £22 10s., for water supplied, with interest a tempore moræ and costs.

Order granted.

DUMINY V. IMPERIAL BRICK AND TILE CO.

Mr. Russell moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £60 for water supplied, with interest a tempore moræ and costs.

Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

FECHTER V. TRANSVAAL
MINES LABOUR CO. } 1907.
TRANSVAAL MINES LABOUR } Apr. 26th.
CO. V. FECHTER.

Attachment ad fundandam jurisdictionem—Procedure—Rules of Court.

Applicant had brought an action in the Supreme Court against respondents, who were not subject to the jurisdiction. After the pleadings had been closed, he asked for the attachment of certain of respondent's property ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and further that the pleadings might be allowed to stand and that either the original summons or the notice of motion should be taken as edictal citation of the respondents.

Held, that as applicant had not followed the process prescribed by the Rules of Court for bringing respondents within the jurisdiction, and as his application was virtually for a summons after pleadings had been closed, the application must be refused.

The first application was for leave to attach certain books, etc., alleged to belong to defendants ad fundandam jurisdictionem.

The second application was for a commission de bene esse to take the evidence of Wilson (the defendant) and his witnesses in Johannesburg.

It appeared that Fechter had brought an action against the Transvaal Mines Labour Co. to recover £84 for rations supplied to certain labourers prior to their despatch to the Rand to the company. The defendant had filed a plea in abatement, in which he denied that at any time material to the suit he had been domiciled or resident in this colony, or that he had traded in his own behalf in this colony. He said that he was domiciled and resident in Johannesburg, Transvaal. He had entered into a contract with one Paul Scott to send up labourers from the Cape at so much per head, and he denied any liability for the rations alleged to have been supplied by plaintiff. Defendant further said that the books which the plaintiff proposed to attach did not belong to him, but to the said Paul Scott. It was stated for plaintiff that the books were called the Transvaal Mines Labour Co.'s books.

Mr. Russell was for Fechter; Mr. Roux was for Mr. A. E. Wilson, trading as the Transvaal Mines Labour Company.

Mr. Russell said that the matter came before Mr. Justice Hopley last week, and was ordered to stand over to enable the respondent to file certain replying affidavits. Those affidavits, he understood, had not been put in.

Mr. Roux said that the affidavits had not yet come to hand from Johannesburg. He would ask for a postponement, but he felt that he could not do so in view of the fact that the respondent had been allowed a week in which to file the affidavits.

Mr. Russell said that he could not consent to a further postponement. The applicant asked that the books and other documents now produced in Court should be attached to found jurisdiction against the defendant. Counsel added that the case was brought in this Court because the locus of the contract was in this colony. He cited Ohlsson's Breweries v. Bradshaw (22 S.C.R., 251). He asked that, if possible, the pleadings might be allowed to stand, but that the procedure should be altered so that either the original summons or the notice of motion should be allowed to stand as an edict to the defendant, and that the books of the company should be attached. Applicant would be prepared to pay wasted costs.

Mr. Roux submitted that, where there was nothing to attach in the jurisdiction, the Court would not grant leave to sue a peregrinus. The Court, before giving leave, must be satisfied that there was a good cause of action. Applicant had not shown that he had a good cause of action against respondent. There was no allegation in the affidavits that Beddowes, who was alleged to have supplied the rations to the labourers, was the agent of the respondent. If the Court thought the applicant had a good cause of action and assumed jurisdiction against respondent, then applicant must pay the respondent's wasted costs, in view of the way in which the proceedings had been brought.

Mr. Russell suggested that the order might be given subject to the withdrawal of the summons. If it lay in his power as counsel, he would withdraw the summons.

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff in this case sues the defendant, whom he describes as a person carrying on business in Cape Town, under the style of the Transvaal Mines Labour Co., for the payment of a certain sum of money for goods supplied to the agent of the defendant. To the declaration the defendant has raised a plea in abatement, alleging that he is domiciled and resident in the Transvaal, that he was never domiciled or resident in this colony, and never carried on business in this country, and he, therefore, takes exception to the jurisdiction of the Court in a matter appertaining to him. The plaintiff, being apprehensive that the defendant might be successful in establishing his plea in abatement, when the matter comes before the Court, seeks to meet the difficulty by at this stage of the proceedings establishing some jurisdiction over the defendant. He seeks to do that by obtaining an order of Court attaching some property of the defendant in this colony. Now, very elaborate procedure is provided by the law of this colony, and by the Rules of Court, which any plaintiff desiring to bring a person domiciled in a foreign country within the jurisdiction of the Court, must make use of. The plaintiff has not availed himself of the machinery provided in that respect, but he now seeks to have all the benefits of it by an order of Court granted after different steps have been taken, which are not available for the purpose of bringing the defendant within the jurisdiction. To meet that difficulty to some extent, he prays that when the order is granted for the attachment of the property, which might establish the jurisdiction of the Court such order might then be regarded as the summons in the suit, and that the further proceedings as they stand upon the order may be allowed to stand. If that were done, the Court would be virtually allowing a summons to be issued now in proceedings which have already reached the stage of a replication on the part of the plaintiff, and not only have the pleadings been completed but the case has actually been set down for hearing. Now, it seems to me that the plaintiff in this case has adopted the wrong course. If he is satisfied now that he has sued in the Supreme Court a person not subject to the jurisdiction, but whom he may bring under the jurisdiction by availing himself of the Rules of Court, he must have recourse to those rules, for the purpose of establishing such jurisdiction. It is said it may be that costs may be unnecessarily incurred in this case, unless the Court grant the indulgence now asked for, but it is impossible for the Court to disregard the rules which govern matters of this kind, and the application must be refused, with costs.

In reference to the application by the Labour Company for leave to take the evidence of Mr. Wilson and his witnesses in Johannesburg, an opportunity was given Mr. Russell to consult his attorney as to the position in view of the decision of the Court on the first motion.

At a later stage, Mr. Russell informed the Court that he had seen his attorney, who, however, was not at present prepared to withdraw the case, but the case set down for Wednesday next would be withdrawn.

The Labour Company's application was ordered to stand over in the meantime, with leave to the company, when the case comes on for hearing, to mention the costs of the second application.

Ex parte PRETORIUS.

Mr. Watermeyer moved, on behalf of petitioner, as executor in the joint estate of his deceased wife and himself, for leave to complete the sale of the farm Valschfontein, in the division of Colesberg, in accordance with an agreement entered into between petitioner and one Ed. Parker on the 22nd October last. Petitioner appeared to have thought that he was entitled to dispose of the property, whereas, by the terms of a codicil to the will, he was not vested with such authority. The property was bequeathed to his three sons, who consented to the sale, subject to the bond being paid off and the balance of the proceeds being paid into a trust company in Cape Town, and the interest therefrom being paid to their father during his lifetime. The Master thought that, under all the circumstances, it would be in the interests of the estate to accept the offer, and he recommended that the purchase price, after the bond had been paid off, be deposited with a trust company for administration in terms of the codicil to the will. Mr. Watermeyer mentioned that the youngest daughter, who was still alive, appeared to have an interest in the farm, there being a bequest over to her in case one of the three sons died without issue before the father.

Order granted in terms of Master's report, subject to the consent of the surviving daughter being filed with the Registrar.

Ex parte ESTATE KELLERMAN.

Mr. Pohl moved, on the petition of the executor dative of the estate of Jacobus Stephanus Kellerman, for leave to raise a loan of £500, and pay off existing bond and debts on security of the landed property in the division of Piquetberg. The Master reported favourably.

Order in term of Master's report.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice LAURENCE.]

(IN CHAMBERS.)

Ex parte ESTATE ERLANK. { 1907.
Apr. 27th.

This was an application by Marius E. Zylstra, senior, of Rouxville, O.R.C., as sole executor testamentary in the estate of Alida Hendrina Margaretha Erlank for leave to surrender the estate as insolvent.

It appeared that some time ago, A. G. Erlank brought an action against his wife to recover a sum of £500 upon an antenuptial contract. Mr. Erlank was residing in the Barkly East district, where his wife formerly lived, but for some time past she had been living at Looskop, Rouxville, Orange River Colony. While the action was pending Mrs. Erlank died, and the case was defended by Mr. Zylstra, who was her executor under the will and who, also, acted as Mrs. Erlank's agent during her lifetime. Mr. Erlank obtained judgment for the amount claimed with interest and costs, and he thereupon issued a writ against the property in the Colony, which consisted of certain sheep and money due under a sheep lease in the division of Aliwal North, and which had been attached prior to the action to found jurisdiction. The sheep had since been sold, and the proceeds were lying in the hands of the Sheriff pending further proceedings. Mr. Zylstra now petitioned the Court for leave to surrender the estate as insolvent, and brought up in the schedule the claim of the plaintiff and also that of Mr. D. Tennant, attorney, Cape Town, who had acted as the Cape Town attorney of defendant in the matter, and who claimed £205 as costs.

Mr. Burton was for petitioner; Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan) appeared on behalf of the judgment creditor in A. G. Erlank v. Estate Erlank to show cause against the application.

Mr. Upington took objection that proper notice had not been given in the "Government Gazette" of the intention to surrender the estate. The notice stated that this was a Barkly West estate whereas it was a Barkly East estate. An endeavour had been made to rectify the mistake by putting a slip in some copies of the "Gazette," but not in others. That, he submitted, was not sufficient publication. Counsel went on to argue that there was not sufficient proof before the Court on affidavit that the estate was insolvent and that, as regards the Colonial estate, it would be to the benefit of creditors that it should be sequestrated.

He contended that Mr. Tennant, the Cape Town attorney, should look, not to the estate, but to the local agent at Rouxville, Orange River Colony (Mr. Zylstra), who had instructed him, for his reimbursement. He was not a creditor of the estate, but of the local agent, and he was not entitled to prove against the Colonial assets. If that view were correct then there was no claim against the Colonial assets. Counsel referred to the recent case of Estate Ross v. Trollip (17 C.T.R., 153), which was standing over for judgment. In the present case the judgment creditor said that the object of the application was to defeat his claim. He cited Bowstead on Agency, 2nd Ed., p. 170). At p. 105. Bowstead dealt with the relations of country solicitors and their town agents.

Mr. De Kock, of Mr. Tennant's staff (in reply to the Court), said that the figure of £205 which appeared in the schedule as due to Mr. Tennant, was erroneous, £50 having been paid off by Mr. Zylstra, as agent of Mrs. Erlank, in connection with disbursements in the first case.

Mr. Upington said that the evidence as to Mr. Tennant being a creditor was altogether unsatisfactory.

Laurence, J., asked what was the amount of the funds belonging to the estate in the hands of the Sheriff?

Mr. Upington said that the amount was £480.

Mr. Burton submitted that there was prima facie evidence that the Colonial estate was insolvent, and that it would be for the benefit of the creditors that it should be surrendered. Various allegations of fraud, etc., were made against the executor, which it would be impossible to decide on affidavit.

Laurence, J., observed that he noticed a most improper expression used in one of the affidavits, viz., that the schedules were "faked." He did not know whether the word "faked" appeared in any English dictionary; it would probably appear in a slang dictionary.

Mr. Upington explained that the affidavit was not drawn in Cape Town, but in Lady Grey.

Laurence, J., refused the application with costs, and costs of the previous motion, and directed the rule interdicting the Sheriff from parting with the proceeds of the sale to be discharged. He said that it seemed to him, in all the circumstances of the case, very difficult to hold that it would be for the benefit of the creditors that the surrender of the estate should be accepted, and on the facts, as they were now presented to the Court, it appeared that Mr. Tennant would not be seriously prejudiced with regard to the small sum of £50, which was the most that he would be able to realise in insolvency proceedings, by being left to pursue other remedies.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Mr. Justice LAURENCE and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

PEEL V. NATIONAL BANK { 1907.
OF S.A. { Apr. 29th.
May 6th.

Letter of credit—Surety—Freight
Lien—Pledgee.

The plaintiff made certain advances to W., for the due repayment of which the defendant became surety and co-principal debtor. The Bank held as security for such advances the bills of lading in respect of a cargo of timber consigned to W. at East London, and finding on the arrival of the ship that W. was wholly unable to pay the freight and that demurrage would become payable, the plaintiff Bank paid the freight and other charges and landed the goods. Upon a realization of the timber, the proceeds were found to be insufficient to pay the amount of the advances, and the plaintiff claimed the amount of the deficiency from the defendant as surety. Among the charges made by the plaintiff was the amount paid for freight.

Held, that the payment was an expense necessarily incurred which could be properly charged by the plaintiff as the holder of the bills of lading and pledgee of the timber.

This was an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Maasdoorp, sitting as a Divisional Court of the Supreme Court, in an action brought against appellant by respondents to recover £5,601 18s. 5d. upon a guarantee (16 C.T.R., 940).

On the 1st December, 1903, Whitworth and Co., of East London, obtained from plaintiffs a letter of credit in favour of Enhornung and Co., of Sundsvall, Sweden, authorising them to draw on the London office of the bank up to £10,000 for the purchase of timber to Whitworth's account. Peel signed the letter as surety in solidum and joint principal debtor. The ship arrived with a cargo of timber, and it was then found that Whitworths were in financial difficulties and later on went into liquidation. The bank took up the matter, paid the freight and other charges, and realised the cargo. After paying various charges there was a shortfall of £5,601 18s. 5d., which amount the bank claimed with interest and costs. The Divisional Court gave judgment for plaintiffs as prayed with costs.

Mr. Burton (with him Dr. Rainsford) was for appellant; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Louwrens), was for respondents.

Mr. Burton said the first question was as to the exact nature of the contract by which the defendant bound himself to guarantee the letter of credit. As the document of the 1st December stood in itself it was a guarantee for the payment of £10,000, and he put it to the Court that defendant's liability could in no circumstances exceed the amount of £10,000. He guaranteed a letter of credit which made no reference to freight, landing charges, and so on, but only to £10,000 for the purchase of certain timber. His position was that the bank, when it went down to the wharf and released cargo on the ship, acted in excess of its rights and prematurely, and, inasmuch as there had been upon the realisation of the cargo a shortfall amounting, defendant said, to £2,000, the bank, unless it could clearly show that it did everything it possibly could to protect the guarantor, must be held liable for the shortfall. The bank's duty at the time the cargo arrived was to notify the defendant so that he could have gone and dealt with it as a business man. The bank did not do all it might have done to protect the guarantor's interest.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What amount do you say he is liable for?]

Mr. Burton said that defendant should be held liable for the shortfall, less the amount which the evidence showed represented the reduced value owing to the deterioration due to the bank's handling of the timber. If defendant had been given an opportunity by the bank to protect his interests, then, of course, he would have been liable for any loss that accrued, but, apart from the fall in timber, there was clear evidence of depreciation in value owing to negligent stacking. It was clear from the evidence that the manager (Mr. Friend) did not, on behalf of the bank, act under clause 5 of the agreement, and make a demand upon Whitworths. By the admission of the bank manager, there had been no failure up to the 2nd February to fulfil the conditions. At that stage Whitworth could not pay the freight. Friend's view all along was that the bill did not become due until April. What happened was that Whitworth and Co. were regarded as so sound that it never struck the parties that there would be any bother about the freight. Counsel quoted from the evidence to show neglect in not having protected the timber. The bank acted prematurely, and their duty was to take the greatest possible care of the timber, but instead of that they neglected the most ordinary precautions. On the question of interest, counsel contended that the bank was not entitled to more than the legal rate of interest, viz., 6 per cent., instead of the rate allowed, viz., 7 per cent.

Mr. Searle submitted that under the letter of credit it was clear that Whitworth could have been asked to pay the £10,000 when the ship arrived. It was not denied that the money was demanded, and it was notorious, according to the evidence, that Whitworths were in difficulties. Peel interested himself in the matter all through. He recognised his position as a principal debtor, and knew what the bank was doing all along. It was clear that he took an active part in the matter from the outset, recognising that he was really in the same position as Whitworths. Counsel submitted that the learned Judge was justified in coming to the conclusion that, on the evidence, no loss had been proved in the realisation of this cargo. Counsel quoted the case of Colonial Government v. Smith and Co., (18 S.C.R., 380, and submitted that Peel could not be in any better position than Whitworths, and that he himself brought about the whole condition of things at the time. Mr. Searle also referred to Voet, 13-7-10, and Grotius, 3-8-7 and on the matter of the commission, urged that the bank was entitled to claim commission according to the terms of the guarantee. The question of interest was not raised in the plea, and it was quite a new point.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Which condition of the letter of credit do you say there has been a failure to fulfil?]

Mr. Searle: There has been a failure to pay. I submit it is a fair reading of the letter of credit that the bill was to be paid within a reasonable time, and seeing that the ship made a good voyage, it was to be paid on the arrival of the ship. Counsel said that the appellant had himself put the Bank in the position of having to realise the cargo. There was no evidence that the cargo was not realised with due care and despatch. On the question of surety's liability, he cited Van der Vyver v. De Weyer (4 Searle, 27), Colonial Government v. Edenborough (4 Juta, 280), and Priest v. Stegmann (15 C.T.R., 407).

Mr. Burton replied.

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (May 6th).

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an appeal by the defendant against the judgment of a Divisional Court in an action against the defendant as surety for the due fulfilment of an agreement between the plaintiff bank and the firm of Whitworth and Co., of East London. By that agreement the firm, in consideration of the bank issuing a letter of credit in favour of certain merchants in Sweden authorising them to draw on the bank's London offices to the extent of £10,000 for the purchase of timber to be shipped to East London, gave the following undertakings, amongst others, to the bank: "3. We engage that all drafts drawn on and accepted by your London office under the said letter of credit shall be paid to you by us at the latest on such a date as will enable you to place the money in the hands of your said office on the day their acceptances fall due, or at such earlier date as the vessel carrying the shipment may arrive at East London. . . . 5. Failing the fulfilment by us of any of the foregoing conditions, you are authorised and empowered, if you should think fit to do so, but not otherwise, and without prejudice to the rights conferred on you by clause 3, to insure, land, and receive and sell, by public auction or otherwise, as you may deem proper, the entire shipment for our account and risk, and in the event of such sale we engage to allow you a commission of 2½ per cent. on the gross proceeds. . . . and make good any deficiency on demand." After the signature of the firm appears the following: "I, Thomas Peel (the defendant), hereby bind myself as surety in solidum and joint principal debtor to the said National Bank for the due fulfilment of the foregoing agreement in respect of this letter of credit, No. 3-1, for £10,000.—T. Peel." The London office made advances of money amounting to £9,978 17s 8d, to the merchants in Sweden, for which amount the latter drew upon the firm by a bill payable after ninety days' sight, which was duly accepted by the firm on 18th January, 1904, but dishonoured at the due date. Four days after such acceptance the ship arrived in East London with the cargo of timber, but the firm was wholly unable to pay the freight, and when demurrage became payable the plaintiff bank, acting in the interest of all parties concerned, paid the freight, demurrage, landing charges, duty, and insurance due in respect of the cargo, and caused the same to be landed at East London, pursuant to the bills of lading, and other documents, of which the bank was the legal holder. Early in February, 1904, communications passed between the bank and the defendant, but as there is a controversy between the parties as to the exact nature of those communications, I shall only refer to matters as to which there exists no doubt. On the 10th of February the bank, referring to an interview of that day, wrote: "We hold instructions from our head office by which we have to consult you in all matters appertaining to the cargo ex Atbara, and to exercise the greatest care to release no goods without your written sanction unless cash is received by us in exchange for same." From time to time the bank effected sales of part of the timber, and on the 9th of March the bank, with the written consent of the defendant, allowed the firm which was then in liquidation to dispose of some of the timber. On the 7th of April the bank gave notice to the defendant that the draft for £9,798 17s. 8d. had been dishonoured, and fell due on that day. On the following day his attorneys replied that he was quite prepared to pay the amount of the draft in exchange for the necessary papers to enable him to receive delivery of the timber. He was not, however, prepared to repay the amount which the bank had paid for freight demurrage, insurance, etc., in respect of which the bank claimed to hold a lien on the cargo. The bank accordingly continued to realise the rest of the cargo as best it could, and ultimately instituted the present action to recover the deficiency as well as the commission and interest due.

The first defence raised by the plea relies upon a collateral agreement between the defendant and the firm, that the firm were to pay the freight and other charges themselves. The manager of the bank stated that he had not seen the document until it was produced in court, but even if he had been aware of the contents, it does not follow that the bank would have been bound by it, and the learned counsel for the defendant properly abandoned this defence on the hearing in appeal.

The only defence relied on in appeal is that there had not been a failure on the part of the firm of any of the conditions of the agreement in question, and consequently the bank was not entitled to take advantage of the 5th clause of the agreement, that the bank would only claim, as the holder of the bills of lading, to protect itself by dealing with the cargo, but that in so dealing with the cargo it acted with great negligence, causing loss to the extent of about £1,500, that if the 5th clause of the agreement did not apply the bank was not entitled to charge a commission of 2½ per cent. on the gross proceeds, and that in any case the bank was not justified in charging 7 per cent. instead of 6 per cent. as interest. No point was made by counsel of the fact that there is no evidence of any drafts having been drawn on and accepted by the London office of the bank in terms of the first portion of the 3rd clause of the agreement, and it was admitted that on the arrival of the ship in East London the bank was entitled either to claim immediate payment of the amount of the advances, or to retain the drafts and postpone the claim until the maturity of the draft. There is no sufficient evidence of any demand having been made for payment on the firm, but it is obvious that the firm which was wholly unable to pay the freight was equally unable to pay the amount of the draft. The difficulty, however, in this case, to my mind, arises, not from the fact that no such demand was made, but from the fact that the bank precluded itself from making such a demand by retaining the draft, accepted by the firm, and not payable until the 7th of April. It was not until that date that there was a failure on the part of the firm to fulfil any of the conditions, but from that date, at all events, the bank was fully justified in putting into operation the powers conferred on it by the 5th clause. I quite concur in the view that before that date the bank was justified in protecting the interests of all concerned by landing the cargo and thus preventing a ruinous demurrage from becoming payable. This right the bank possessed as being the holder of the bills of lading as security for the debt owing by the firm. The debtor was wholly unable to pay the freight and it was for his interest as well as for the interest of his surety that the cargo should be landed. It was for the interest of the bank as creditor also, for by landing the goods it would strengthen its security by taking actual possession of the goods. As the pledgee of these goods the bank was entitled to be recouped for all expenses necessarily incurred in regard to the cargo (Voet 13, 7, 10) and, in my opinion, the payment of the freight, etc., for the purpose of obtaining possession of the cargo formed part of such necessary expenses. As pledgees of the goods the bank may not, under the common law, have been entitled to sell them, but seeing that, after the 7th of April, at all events, the bank could, under the 5th article of the agreement, sell the goods, and that the bulk of the cargo was only sold after that date, I consider that the bank is entitled to charge the 2½ per cent. commission. In regard to the claim for a reduction of the bank's claim on account of its negligence, the learned judge in the court below found that the bank had done all in its power to realise the cargo to the best advantage, and that any damage which was suffered was caused by unavoidable circumstances, and I am not prepared to dissent from this finding. The witness William Tickle, who was called for the defendant, admitted that the bank had not failed to do anything it could have done, and he ascribed the great shortfall to a slump in the timber market. The defendant's counsel strenuously contended that if the defendant had been called upon to pay the draft on the arrival of the ship he would have done so, and would have been able to realise the cargo at much greater advantage than was done by the bank. I am not by any means satisfied that the defendant would have paid the draft or that, if he had done so he would have preferred to realise the cargo himself instead of leaving the realisation with the bank. According to the defendant, Tickle was to have been his agent for the sale of the timber under the collateral agreement relied upon in the plea. But Tickle was employed by the bank itself to realise the cargo, and it was in the course of such realization that the shortfall occurred. The only other questions raised on appeal is as to the rate of interest which the plaintiff bank was entitled to charge, but there is no evidence whatever as to the rate actually charged or as to the rate which had been previously charged by the bank in its dealings with the firm. If the defendant had intended to raise the point that the rate of interest charged by the bank was excessive, he should have done it in the Court below, and should have given the requisite evidence to enable that Court to decide the point. With the information before this Court I am wholly unable to say that the proper rate of interest has not been charged. The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Hopley, J.: I also am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed.

De Villiers, C.J.: The order is that the appeal be dismissed, with costs.

Lawrence, J.: I have felt, and still feel, a good deal of difficulty about this case, and regret that, while the opportunities for consultation have been very limited, I have myself, owing to the constant pressure of other work, scarcely been able to consider the matter as fully as I could have wished. The main question turns on the construction of a certain agreement, dated December 1, 1903, between the firm of Whitworths, of East London, the insolvent, and the respondent bank, for the fulfilment of which the appellant bound himself to the respondent as surety in solidum and co-principal debtor. In part 2 of his plea he alleges that this obligation was subject to certain conditions, embodied in an undertaking in writing of even date, given by Whitworths to himself with the full knowledge and consent of the plaintiff Bank. This document, after considerable argument, was admitted in evidence at the trial, and Mr. Justice Maasdorp, in his judgment, describes it as "the principal ground of defence." I am not sure that I quite follow the meaning of the learned judge as to the admissibility of that evidence, but I agree in the conclusion at which he ultimately arrived, that "there is no proof that the bank was a party to this agreement," and on this simple point it appears to me that counsel exercised a wise discretion in not attempting to rely upon it, or the other point as to the insolvency proceedings, in arguing the appeal. By the agreement between the parties, the Bank agreed to issue to Whitworths a letter of credit for £10,000, payable at their London office, for the purchase of certain timber in Sweden, to be shipped thence to East London. By clause 3 of the agreement, Whitworths "engage that all drafts drawn on and accepted by your London office under the said letter of credit shall be paid to you by us at the latest on such a date as will enable you to place the money in the hands of your said office on the day their acceptances fall due, or at such earlier date as the vessel carrying the shipment may arrive at East London . . . all such payments to be made at the then current rate of exchange for bills on London of a currency to admit of their maturing on the day the acceptances fall due." Clause 5 runs as follows: "Failing the fulfilment by us of any of the foregoing conditions, you are authorised and empowered . . . without prejudice to the rights conferred on you under clause 3, to insure, land, receive and sell by auction or otherwise, as you may deem proper, the entire shipment for our account and risk; and in the event of such sale we engage to allow you a commission of 2½ per cent. on the gross proceeds, over and above the aforesaid commission and exchange, and make good any deficiency on demand." That appears to hit only portions of the agreement now mentioned. The plaintiffs say in substance that Whitworths failed to meet their obligations under clause 3, that they then proceeded to exercise their rights under clause 5, and that the result was a net deficiency of the amount claimed by them against the defendant as security and co-principal debtor, and recovered by the judgment under appeal.

The first question appears to be, what was the date when the amount advanced in London under the letter of credit, which was slightly under £10,000, fell due? Provision under clause 3 was to be made for its payment at the due date of certain acceptances which it was then anticipated would be made by the London office of the Bank. The agreement is described in the evidence as being a "printed form," and it appears to have been anticipated, and to have been presumably in the ordinary course in such arrangements, that a bill would be drawn by the consignors in Sweden on the London office, and then accepted by the Bank. But there is no evidence that a bill was ever presented and accepted, or if so, as to what was the due date. The only document put in is a bill drawn by the Swedish consignors, on December 7, 1903, not on the London bank, but on Whitworths, at East London, payable to their own order at ninety days after sight, and purporting to be "payable in London." That was accepted on January 18, payable at the National Bank at East London, where it was finally presented and dishonoured on April 7, which is described in the letter from the Bank to the appellant as the due date. I do not understand how this was arrived at. April 7, as I calculate, was 121 days after the bill was drawn, and 79 after the acceptance. Possibly, however, it was seen by Whitworths, of East London, on or about January 7. No point, however, has been raised as to the effect of this apparent discrepancy. The bill had been endorsed by the drawers, in their capacity as payees, on December 11, to the London office of the Bank "without recovery," and the inference appears to be that on that date it was discounted by the Bank under the audit which had been cabled. The agreement, however, went on to provide that the amount should be payable not only on the due date, whatever that may have been, of the Bank's acceptances, but on "such earlier date as the vessel carrying the shipment may arrive at East London." The ship in fact arrived on January 22, the bill having been accepted four days previously. Did that acceptance vary the original agreement, so as to postpone the liability to pay till the bill matured, as the defendant pleaded in paragraph 5, or did the liability to pay on the earlier arrival of the vessel still remain, as counsel was understood to admit in argument? On the latter assumption, it is clear that Whitworths did not fulfil, and were quite unable to fulfil, the conditions of their agreement, and the Bank was therefore prima facie entitled to exercise, as and when they did exercise, their rights under clause 5. The important matter of the payment of the freight is not expressly mentioned either in this clause or elsewhere in the agreement. From the correspondence with the head office at Pretoria, it would seem, strangely enough, that, in authorising the credit, they had not understood "that the freight and charges would have to be paid at this end," and they assert that "Whitworths misled the Bank in this respect." However, the right to land seems clearly to imply that to pay the freight, if, as I presume would be the ordinary course, it was payable on arrival of the cargo at its destination. The fact seems to be that all the parties were satisfied, when the credit was arranged, that the value of the cargo would afford an ample margin of security to cover both the original advance and all subsequent expenses. The main difficulty I have felt is as to whether it was not the duty of the Bank, before exercising their right under clause 5, to give Peel, as surety and co-principal debtor, an opportunity of meeting his original liability. That such an opportunity was actually given is indeed imputed, but the evidence, especially with regard to the alleged letter of February 2, which he strenuously denies having received, is somewhat unsatisfactory. Then, had such opportunity been given to him, is it clear that he would not have availed himself of it. Mr. Justice Maasodorp says in his judgment: "The plaintiff was aware that when Friend spoke to him about the freight the ship was commencing to incur demurrage, and he says, 'If I had received a letter on that date that Whitworth was not able to pay the freight, I would have paid it, and taken delivery of the cargo.'" He seemed to forget that there was something more to do than pay the freight and take the cargo, and that was to pay the amount of the bill. The expression quoted was in answer to a question in cross-examination, but the learned judge seems to have overlooked the very explicit assertion on the subject which Peel made in chief, when he said: "I never received a letter on February 2nd. If I had received such a letter, I would have paid up at once, and been glad to do so. I would have been able to pay the amount of the bill at that date, and would have done so, together with the freight charges, if I had received information from Whitworths that they were unable to do so. I would have paid my total of guarantee and taken the freight off Whitworth's hands. I never heard of any dispute about the freight charges till two months afterwards. I had no demand made upon me until I got a letter in April." It is true, then, when the ship arrived, and before the alleged demand of February 2, relying on his agreement with Whitworths, he used the expression that he would rather let the ship rot than pay the freight, and Treble, Whitworth's manager, then assured him, in the presence of Friend, the manager of the Bank, that Whitworths would effect this payment. How far Peel was then aware of Whitworths' real position may be open to doubt. Had he received a specific demand, it seems to me at all events possible that he might have consulted Wakefield, and, on his advice, take up much the same position as on the advice of his then attorneys, he took up when he was called upon in April to pay the amount of the disbursement bill, especially as according to all the estimates made at the time, the cargo showed a clear surplus of value over the amount of the advance, and all the charges which he would have had to repay. It is, however, at least equally possible that, relying on his indemnity for Whitworths, he would have declined to pay the amount unless against delivery of the cargo free of freight and other charges. Mr. Burton, however, did not ask the Court to hold that the appellant was free from all liability on the ground that he was not called upon to pay the amount due on the arrival of the ship; and there is certainly some evidence that he was not disposed to take over the risk. There is also a good deal to be said for the view that, stricto jure, on the failure of Whitworths to pay the amount when due the bank became ipso facto entitled to exercise their rights under clause 5, without consulting Peel, and without thereby releasing him from his liability from any ultimate deficiency not exceeding the original guarantee. That the bank was bound, on or within a reasonable time of the arrival of the vessel, before exercising their rights under clause 5, formally to call on the appellants to pay the amount due under clause 3, that as a matter of fact no such demand was made, and that, had it been made, he would have been both willing and able to take such steps as would have obviated or diminished the net loss on the venture, a proposition which, when taken separately, and still more when taken collectively, I feel unable, in the evidence before us, confidently to answer in the affirmative. The next question is, whether there was any obligation at all at this period, or whether the course taken with regard to the bill did not amount to something in the nature of a novation, by which the right to payment was postponed till the maturity of the instrument. A novation, however, is not to be presumed unless it is either expressed or clearly intended by the parties, and on the whole I think that, in the first place, it could scarcely have been the intention of the bank, whose methods seem to have been wanting in more than one respect in business-like precision, to relieve the parties from their liability to repay the advance on the arrival of the goods; and in the second place, if this was intended, they must be regarded, holding as they did the shipping documents, as being substantially in the position of pledgees, and as therefore in duty bound to protect the subject of the pledge from depreciation or loss. Had they deferred taking any steps till the bill fell due, there would have been crushing charges for demurrage, while the value of the cargo, in a falling market and with falling freights, might have been seriously reduced. All that is now in substance contended on behalf of the appellant is that had the bank taken better care and more precautions against deterioration, the timber might have been realised to greater advantage. As to this the learned Judge says: "I am of opinion that the Bank did all in their power to realise it to the best advantage, and that any damage that was suffered was from unavoidable circumstances." I will content myself with saying on this branch of the case, that there appears on the whole to be sufficient evidence to support this finding. The Bank having been justified in acting under clause 5, the charge for commission or sales, expressly stipulated for therein, does not seem disputable. As to the rate of interest charged, if that was to be challenged, the question should have been raised specifically either in the pleadings, or at the trial. I find nothing in the plea on the subject except a general denial of liability in para. 9, and there is no indication either in the evidence, the judgment, or in the report of the argument, that the question was argued in the Court below. On the whole, therefore, though not without some hesitation, I concur in thinking that sufficient ground has not been shown for disturbing the decision of the Divisional Court.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Syfret, Godlonton and Low; Respondent's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné.]

GAGELA V. GANCA.

Res judicata—Party to a Crown prosecution.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court sitting at Cala.

From the record it appeared that on the 29th September, 1904, an assault was committed by appellant upon respondent. Appellant was tried in October, 1904, under the provisions of section 150 of the Transkeian Penal Code (No. 24, 1886), and fined £6, and the Magistrate awarded the respondent half the fine as compensation in terms of section 17 of the Act. At the hearing complainant was represented by an attorney, although the prosecution was by the Crown. Two years afterwards an action was brought in the Circuit Court by the present respondent for £100 damages for this same assault, and a plea of res judicata was set up. Mr. Justice Shiel, before whom the action was heard, awarded Ganca £25 damage, less £3 paid under order of the Magistrate, and Magistrate's Court costs. Against that judgment the present appeal was brought.

Mr. Gardiner was for appellant: respondent did not appear.

Counsel submitted that the matter was res judicata, seeing that Ganca had made himself a party to the criminal case and had accepted the amount awarded by the Magistrate. The Magistrate gave Ganca's attorney leave to watch the criminal proceedings, and the attorney cross-examined a witness. The claim was, counsel contended, submitted to the Magistrate under section 17 of the Act. He cited Bertram v. Wood (10 Juta, 177), Fetter v. Beale (1 Raymond, 339), Umlongo v. Nmgondo (6 E.D.C., 211), Van der Westhuizen v. Raubenheimer (1876 Buchanan, 37), Rusouw v. Sturt (1 Menzies, 378), Eaton v. Moller (2 Roscoe, 85), Fischer v. Geurichs (4 Juta, 31), De Villiers on Injuries (pp. 250-1), and Voot (47, 10, 84).

De Villiers, C.J.: According to the record, the defendant was prosecuted in the Court of the Resident Magistrate of Cala for contravening section 150 of Act 24, 1886, in that he did wrongfully and unlawfully assault the complainant by striking him with a stick with intent to do him harm. The case is headed "The King v. John Gagela." It then appeared, in the course of the proceedings, that Attorney Turvey was given leave to watch the case for complainant. Complainant was not on that account a party to the suit. Defendant was sentenced to pay a fine of £6, or, in default, imprisonment with hard labour for six weeks; half the fine, if paid, was awarded to complainant as compensation for his injuries. It does not appear that the money was asked for, nor can I see that, if it were asked for, it would make any difference in the case. Subsequently, the present action was brought before the Circuit Court for £100 damages, and the learned Judge was satisfied that the £3 which had been paid to the complainant was not a sufficient compensation for the serious assault which had been committed upon him, and then awarded £25, less £3, which had already been received under the Magistrate's order. Now, in appeal, the learned counsel for the appellant relies mainly upon the words of the 17th section of the Act 24, 1886, which says that "any Court empowered to pass sentence under the provisions of this code may . . . in passing sentence include therein, under the punishment of fine, a sufficient amount to cover reasonable compensation for loss, costs, damages, or injury caused by the offence for which the offender shall have been convicted." Well, that is reasonable compensation, in the opinion of the Magistrate or the Judge who awards that compensation, but if the plaintiff was not a party to that suit it cannot be held to have been reasonable compensation as against him. He is not a party to the suit, and therefore there is no res judicata as against him. The authorities are perfectly clear that there can be no res judicata except as against one of the parties to the suit, and if the plaintiff was not a party to the suit, there can be no res judicata as against him. But, then, it is contended that he did not protest at the time, and that, by accepting the amount awarded by the Magistrate, he had practically become a party to the suit. Now, it would be unheard of to give an acceptance of this kind a retroactive effect, and to hold that an acceptance of this kind makes him a party. In my opinion, there is no authority for such a view, nor am I prepared to establish a precedent such as is contended for. If the complainant had refused to accept the £3 awarded by the Magistrate, that portion of the fine would have gone to the Crown. In my opinion, therefore, there was no such privity between plaintiff and defendant as to establish a contract by which plaintiff is debarred afterwards from suing the defendant for the amount of compensation which the Court which gives its full mind to it should hold to be the amount which he has suffered in damages. For these simple reasons, I am of opinion that the learned Judge has properly held that it was not a case of res judicata, and, as he was satisfied that the plaintiff had, in fact, sustained more damages than the £3 awarded to him, he is quite justified in holding a different view from the Magistrate who tried the criminal case, and awarding sufficient damages as would, in his opinion, do justice in the case.

Laurence, J.: I concur.

Hopley, J.: I concur. It does not follow that the Judge held a different view from the Magistrate, because I do not think the Magistrate necessarily had before him the full consideration of the amount of actual injuries sustained by the then complainant, and if he had had to determine that particular question, it does not follow that he would not have come to the same conclusion as the Circuit Judge. What the Magistrate was really considering was the criminal case, and any heat of blood and aggravation that there might have been in connection with the assault.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ESTATE ROSS V. TROLLIP. { 1907.
Feb. 21st.
Apr. 30th.

Town attorney acting as agent for country agent—Liability of town agent to client—
Insolvency of country agent.

W., a country enrolled agent, instructed defendant, a town attorney, to recover certain moneys due to the estate of the late R. Defendant did so, and, after deducting his own fees, handed over the balance to W., who, unknown to him, was insolvent. Plaintiff had signed a power of attorney, authorizing defendant to draw the money on his behalf.

Held, that defendant should have paid over the money, less his own fees, direct to plaintiff, and was responsible to him for the same.

Held further, that plaintiff was not estopped from claiming the money from defendant by the fact that plaintiff's attorneys had already endeavoured to recover it from W.

Held further, that this money paid over to W. formed no part of his estate.

Martin v. Robertson (17, C.T.R., 216) followed.

This was an action brought by James Henry Ross, in his capacity as executor dative in the estate of the late Edward Ross, against Gustavus Trollip, attorney, Cape Town, to recover the balance of proceeds of a certain life insurance policy.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that the late Edward Ross was insured with the South African Mutual Life Assurance Society, and that at his death a sum of £206 5s. became payable under the policy, with bonuses. On or about the 25th July, plaintiff, in his capacity of executor dative, executed a power of attorney authorising defendant or one J. B. Cleghorn to receive the money from the society, and on the 17th August the said Cleghorn, a clerk in defendant's employ, received the money from the society. Thereupon it became and was the duty of defendant to pay over the said sum to the plaintiff or some person duly and specially authorised by him to receive the said amount, but, neglecting his duty in that behalf, defendant on the 17th August wrongfully and unlawfully through one J. C. Winterbach, a law agent, paid over to plaintiff a sum of £100 and no more, plaintiff not being then aware that the said Winterbach was insolvent. The said Winterbach was an uncertificated insolvent, his estate having been provisionally sequestrated on the 17th July and finally adjudicated on the 16th August, 1906. The said sum of £100 was paid to and by the said insolvent without the latter being authorised by him to act as mandatory in terms of section 49 of the Insolvent Ordinance (No. 6, 1843). Defendant acted wrongfully and unlawfully and contrary to the provisions of section 49 of the Insolvent Ordinance in handing over to the said insolvent such sum for payment by him, having had notice of the said insolvency. Plaintiff was now entitled to be paid by defendant the balance of the sum of £206 5s., less defendant's charges for professional work done and the disbursements expended for plaintiff in his said capacity. Plaintiff, for a further claim, said that he was entitled to claim from defendant an indemnity against any claim or pretension that might be made against him by the insolvent estate in respect of the aforesaid sum of £100. The plaintiff's claim was for: (1) Judgment for £206 5s. 9d., less £100 and less the proper charges referred to in paragraph 6; and (2) an order that defendant do in writing indemnify plaintiff against any claim that might be made against him by the insolvent estate in respect of the said sum of £100.

Defendant, in his plea, said that Winterbach was a law agent practising at Worcester, where plaintiff also resided. In March, 1906, Winterbach instructed the defendant as his Cape Town attorney to act in various matters in connection with the estate of the late E. Ross. In July, 1906, the said Winterbach obtained from plaintiff a power of attorney, and forwarded same to the defendant, but the defendant had not then, nor at any other time, in connection with the said estate, received instructions from or communicated with the plaintiff or any other person than Winterbach. On the 16th August Winterbach, being in Cape Town in connection with a Supreme Court action, instructed defendant to press on the matter of the insurance money in order to avoid an execution sale under a judgment debt against plaintiff. On the 17th August last the insurance money referred to in paragraph 2 of the declaration was paid to defendant, who, forthwith, after deducting, as he was duly entitled to do, £17 7s. as costs, paid over to Winterbach the balance, to wit £188 12s. 4d. Winterbach paid to plaintiff £100 on the 17th August, and thereby a sale in execution was averted. He (defendant) admitted that he was aware, and said that plaintiff was also aware, prior to the said payment that Winterbach was in embarrassed circumstances, but he denied the relevancy of such allegation in this suit. He admitted having had notice of the insolvency, and that Winterbach had no authority in writing from plaintiff, but he said that he was in law entitled to make the payment to Winterbach, and that he had duly accounted to the proper person, to whom he had in law to account, to wit Winterbach, for any moneys he received. He specially denied that he had acted wrongfully or unlawfully in the matter, or that section 49 of the Ordinance, No. 6 of 1843, applied to this case, or that such section bore the construction put upon it by plaintiff, and he said that plaintiff was in any case estopped from making the claim, and that he had accepted and taken considerable benefits effected by the payment by Winterbach, and that by his conduct he had ratified, so far as the law may require, the action of the defendant in paying the moneys to Winterbach as aforesaid. He therefore prayed that the claim may be dismissed with costs.

Mr. McGregor was for plaintiff; Mr. Close was for respondent.

Mr. McGregor submitted that the onus was upon defendant to show why he had not paid the balance of the money owing to plaintiff.

Hopley, J., however, ruled that plaintiff must open the case.

James Henry Ross (the plaintiff) said that he was a harness-maker, living at Worcester. He was executor dative in the estate of his late brother, Edward Ross. On the 23rd July last he signed a power of attorney authorising payment of the proceeds of the policy of insurance to Mr. Trollip or Mr. Cleg-horn. On the 4th August last his goods were attached under a writ issued out of the Magistrate's Court. A law agent named Winterbach, who was at his place at the time, suggested that he should go and see Mr. Lindenberg, who was the Deputy Sheriff, and that he (Winterbach) should also communicate with Mr. Trollip as to the proceeds of the insurance policy. Mr. Lindenberg was seen by Winterbach, who reported to witness that he had agreed to stop the sale pending the receipt of the insurance money. Winterbach told him that a letter would come to him (Winterbach) from Cape Town, and that the cheque would be made payable to witness. Witness, on the 18th August, received a draft for £100 by telegraph from Winterbach, and his goods were released. Winterbach asked him for a loan of £40 to enable him to carry on Miss Loubser's case against Botha's estate. Witness gave Winterbach £25, his idea being that this money was owing in order to pay Mr. Trollip's costs. He first heard of Winterbach's insolvency on the 20th August. He had never given any instructions that Winterbach was to receive the money on his behalf.

Cross-examined: The matter of the insurance money took a good deal of settling. His late brother was drowned at Hoetjes Bay on the 30th January last. Witness claimed the money by virtue of a cession. He had not given instructions at the outset to Mr. Winterbach to draw the money on his behalf. He did not remember having given a form of receipt to Mr. Winterbach. He had only signed papers in favour of Mr. Trollip. He had not communicated directly with Mr. Trollip at any stage of the matter.

[Hopley, J.: Why didn't you have Winterbach arrested if, as you say, he had received £190 from Mr. Trollip, and only accounted to you for £100?]

Witness: I left everything in the hands of my attorney.

[Hopley, J.: They take no steps against Winterbach to make him disgorge the money, and now you want to get it a second time out of Mr. Trollip. Where is Winterbach now?]

Witness: He is at present at Worcester.

Margaretha Ross (plaintiff's wife), James C. Hoole, cashier in the S.A. Mutual Society's employ, and Alex. Mann, of the Telegraph Department, also gave evidence.

Mr. Hoole stated that the society had received documents from Winterbach in connection with the policy.

Mr. McGregor closed his case.

James Bruce Cleg-horn, attorney, employed by the defendant, said that the Mutual, when Mr. Trollip came into the matter, returned all the documents in their hands. There was a power from plaintiff in favour of Mr. Winterbach. Witness described the steps which had to be taken to produce proof of death, and have an executor dative appointed in the late E. W. Ross's estate. All through they had not known the plaintiff in the matter; all their correspondence had been through Winterbach. Winterbach subsequently called at Mr. Trollip's office about the insurance money. A cheque was received from the S.A. Mutual, and cash was handed over to Winterbach.

Cross-examined: On the 17th August, when they paid over to Winterbach, the latter did not produce any authority from the plaintiff or from the Master. They knew that they had to be very careful in their transactions with Winterbach, and they had demanded from him a deposit preparatory to the trial of Loubser v. Estate Botha.

By the Court: They knew at that time that Winterbach was hard up, but they did not know that he was dishonest. They had no idea that Winterbach was going to appropriate the funds to his own purposes. They just treated him as an ordinary country correspondent. Witness was aware that Winterbach's estate had been adjudicated insolvent. He paid cash to Winterbach at the latter's request.

Further cross-examined: Witness did not know whether Miss Loubser herself brought in the funds towards carrying on her action.

Mr. Close closed his case.

Mr. McGregor said that the point really was, whether Winterbach was an agent to receive money. It was admitted that the power of attorney was given to Trollip, that Winterbach was an insolvent, and that the £100 was paid to the insolvent. Defendant said that he was entitled to pay Winterbach, but he based that on an interesting narrative of facts which could not be reduced to a head-note. On the high degree of diligence required from a professional man, he would refer to Voet (17, 1, 9), to Van Leeuwen Cens. For. (4, 24, 8 and 10), and to Thomas v. Benning (8 B, 16). The duty of the agent was to account to his principal. He quoted Voet (46, 3, 3). Payment could not be made to a man merely appointed ad litem or to sell a thing. Apart from the general rule, that an agent had to have specific authority to receive money, there was here the point that any authority was revoked by the insolvency of the agent. He cited Story on Agency (section 486), Story on Bailments (section 211), Kent's Commentaries on American Law (vol. ii., p. 645), Robson (7 ed., p. 684a), and Voet (17, 1, 17). Section 49 of Ordinance 6 of 1843 was our local Legislative enactment; it recognised that after the insolvency the creditors had some say in the matter, and fenced it in with precautions. There had to be a power in writing for the insolvent to receive the money, and in the interest of the creditors, the permission of the person in whom, for the time being, the estate was vested. It was clear that the payment was made in forgetfulness of the Ordinance. As to the defence of estoppel, there had to be some representation on the part of the man estopped. He cited Freeman v. Cook (2 Ex., 654), Van Blommestein v. Holliday (21, S.C.), and Ford v. Williams (Ford's Rep.). The doctrine of estoppel was not quite so dead as that of constitutio possessorium, but one only relied on it in times of stress. As to ratification he cited Story on Agency (sections 239 and 242). The plaintiff had no knowledge of the facts; he did not know how earnestly Winterbach was put to it to get the deposit demanded by Mr. Trollip in connection with Loubser's case. Story said that ratification had to be made deliberately and with knowledge of all the circumstances.

Mr. Close said that on the facts it did not matter whether Winterbach was an agent or a principal. Trollip was accountable to Winterbach only, from whom all the instructions were received. If he were a principal then radit questio, because the matter after the insolvency would be one for the trustee, and if he was acting as agent for plaintiff at Worcester, then the instructions coming only through Winterbach, Trollip would only be guided by those instructions. Trollip was a sub-agent, and on that there were several English cases, in which was discussed the position of a London attorney towards his country attorney and country client. He referred to Blackwood Wright on Principal and Agent (Ed. 2, p. 170). Bowstead (p. 107), Robins v. Fennell (11 Q.B., 254), and Cobb v. Beck (6 Q.B.). Trollip in this case could not have looked to the plaintiff for any reward. There was no privity of contract between the town attorney and the country client whose work came through a country agent. Trollip could not know what the state of accounts between Ross and Winterbach was. Whatever lack of authority there might have been was cured when plaintiff knew that the £100 had come through Winterbach, and took no steps against defendant. He cited Bowstead (p. 55). It was not necessary that the ratification should be in writing. Plaintiff had not to this day repudiated the payment of the £100 through Winterbach; he followed up the receipt of the £100 by a demand for the balance. As to bankruptcy terminating the agency, Voet and Story used about the same phraseology, but they did not state clearly that bankruptcy terminated agency. Story said "it is said," and Voet "it seems to be laid down." Here the revocation was cancelled by the ratification. Section 49 of the Insolvent Ordinance was really for the protection of the trustee; all the incapacities were as against the man in whom the insolvent estate was vested up to the proviso. Insolvency did not incapacitate the agent in the case of a trustee in insolvency (section 52 of the Ordinance), or in the case of an executor (Maasdorp's Inst., Vol. I., p. 225), and trustees and executors were the highest kind of agents known. On section 49 of the Insolvent Ordinance, he cited De Witte v. New Transvaal Co., Ltd. (1902, T.S. 56), as the Transvaal section was even more stringent than ours.

Mr. McGregor in reply, said that he did not intend to follow his learned friend into the analogies made use of by him, as that was a fanciful, though dangerous, mode of reasoning. Voet, when he said that bankruptcy terminated mandate, cited Pothier contrat de mandat, who was a great authority in our courts. The "it is said" of Story was strengthened by Robson. Pothier, Voet, Story, and Robson were on one side, and on the other nothing but a strenuous and interesting argument. Executors and trustees in insolvency were in peculiar positions, and under the supervision of the Master. The proviso to section 49 had to be construed ut magis valeat quam pereat. Of course, Trollip could have sued Ross on the power of attorney.

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (April 30th).

Hopley, J.: The plaintiff sues in his capacity as the executor of the estate of his late brother, Edward William Ross, and the defendant is an attorney of this Court. Edward Ross, in June, 1903, insured his life in the South African Mutual Society for the sum of £200, and ceded the policy to his brother, the plaintiff, but no notification of the cession was made to the said insurance society. Thereafter, in January, 1906, Edward Ross was accidentally drowned at Saldanha Bay. There was some difficulty in proving his death, as his body was never found. There was also difficulty in recovering the amount of the policy by the plaintiff, in his capacity as cessionary thereof, owing to the absence of notification to the society of the cession. In consequence of these complications, the plaintiff, who is an illiterate man in poor circumstances, resident at Worcester, was obliged to obtain professional assistance, and he accordingly employed one Winterbach, a law agent practising at Worcester. Winterbach seems to have done a considerable amount of work, and to have taken some trouble to obtain the money for Ross, but for a long time was unsuccessful, owing to the complications above set forth. For the work which it was necessary to do in Cape Town, the defendant was engaged through Winterbach. Eventually the difficulties were overcome by obtaining an order of Court on July 5, 1906, to presume the death of Edward Ross, and to appoint the plaintiff executor dative of the deceased, in whose estate the said life policy was practically the sole asset. This removal of the impediments to a settlement between the plaintiff and the insurance company had been brought about by the efforts of the defendant, aided by Winterbach, who was also at the time interesting himself on behalf of Ross in getting a pressing creditor, who had recovered judgment against him in the Magistrate's Court, at Worcester, to stay his hand pending a settlement of his client's claim on the policy. When matters in connection with the policy had reached the stage that payment would be made to the executor, it became necessary to produce to the insurance company a power of attorney to receive payment on behalf of the executor, and a power was for that purpose prepared in the defendant's office authorising him or Mr. Cleghorn (an attorney of this Court, in the employ of the defendant) to receive the money from the company, to give valid receipts therefor, and, if necessary, to endorse any cheque made payable to the plaintiff in his capacity as executor. This power was sent by Cleghorn, who had charge of the matter, to Winterbach, to obtain the signature of the plaintiff, and on July 25, 1906, the plaintiff duly signed the document, which was thereupon posted by Winterbach to the defendant. At this time the plaintiff, in his individual capacity, was very much pressed for a settlement by his creditor, who, however, was staying his hand on promises of a speedy settlement. At this time, too, Winterbach was on the verge of insolvency. He was in want of funds, especially in connection with a suit in forma pauperis which the defendant, instructed by him, was carrying on in the Supreme Court on behalf of a Miss Loubser against the executor of the estate of one Botha. By August 17 he was actually an insolvent, and this fact was known to Mr. Cleghorn, though apparently the plaintiff did not know of the insolvency until August 20. On August 17, 1906, Mr. Cleghorn, under the power of attorney, signed by the plaintiff, as executor of his late brother, received from the Insurance Society the sum of £206 5s. 9d. Winterbach was at that date in Cape Town in connection with the case of Miss Loubser, and at his request Mr. Cleghorn, after deducting the amount due to the defendant from the plaintiff on account of work done in connection with obtaining the amount of the policy, handed over the balance of £189 odd to Winterbach. Of this sum, Winterbach sent £100 by telegraph to Worcester to the plaintiff, and appropriated the balance to his own use. The sum of £100 was sent by Winterbach in his own name, and was naturally thankfully received by the plaintiff, who was in want of ready money. There was, however, no account sent with the money, nor any explanation of how Winterbach had come to have the handling of it. The plaintiff apparently consulted an attorney at Worcester on the 18th, who must have written to the plaintiff's attorneys of record, Messrs. Walker and Jacobsohn, as they wrote on August 20 to Winterbach, then in Cape Town, addressing their letter to the care of the defendant. That letter is annexed to the defendant's plea, and in it the writers, on behalf of the plaintiff, demand the balance of the money received by him from the defendant, who is described as Winterbach's "Cape Town representative." To this letter Winterbach replied on the following day, setting forth his grounds for retaining the money, and promising to account to plaintiff on his return to Worcester. The plaintiff had, however, on the previous day, heard of Winterbach's insolvency, and on August 21 he came to Cape Town, where he first saw the nature of the two letters just referred to. He then left the matter in the hands of his Cape Town attorneys, who, on August 29, made a definite demand on the defendant for the balance of the £206 5s. 9d. received by him, or his representative, Mr. Cleghorn. The defendant denied liability, and the present action is brought by the plaintiff to establish his claim. The defendant pleads that he was throughout the matter in which he acted for the plaintiff about the recovery of the insurance money instructed by Wintertach, and that he was consequently entitled to make the payment to Winterbach, who was the proper person for him to account to. The defendant further pleads that the plaintiff by accepting the £100 from Winterbach and by subsequently demanding the balance from him, ratified the defendant's action in paying over to Winterbach. With regard to the first of those defences, it appears to me that though Winterbach was undoubtedly the means of getting this work into the hands of the defendant, and though a considerable amount of correspondence took place between him and the defendant, still the defendant knew perfectly well all along for whom he was in reality acting, and that before the money for obtaining which he had worked could be received, it was actually necessary to get a direct authority from the plaintiff to himself. That authority established an immediate and direct privity between him and the plaintiff. It was plain and explicit in its terms, authorising the defendant to receive on behalf of the plaintiff the sum of money due from the Society. There was nothing in that mandate which justified the payment over of the money to any third person, and Mr. Cleghorn seems to have been betrayed into an act of confidence in Winterbach, which was, it is perhaps not too much to say, somewhat surprising, in view of his knowledge of Winterbach's insolvency, and of his pressing want of money for purposes not connected with the plaintiff. The fact that Winterbach asked for the money in cash was also a matter of significance which might have aroused suspicion. It was argued, however, that on the authority or analogy of cases in the English Courts the defendant was justified in law in paying over to the country practitioner, for whom he had been acting as town agent. I have not found any authority even in the English cases which would justify a payment to a country attorney where there was a direct privity with and a direct mandate from the client himself. In such case the mandatory must settle with his principal and with no one else. That, at all events, I conceive to be the law in this country—which I should be sorry to see disturbed by any custom or alleged custom between attorneys and their country correspondents. There was no proof of any such custom in this country as was relied upon in argument on behalf of the defendant, nor do I know of anything in our law which would justify an attorney practising in the superior Courts of this country in applying moneys recovered by him on behalf of a country client to a settlement of accounts between himself and the country practitioner, through whom the matter had been placed in his hands. In the recent case of Martin v. Robertson (17 C.T.R., 216), Maasdorp,

J., said upon the same point: "If any custom did exist in this colony as between country attorneys and those practising in the seats of the Higher Courts, it would have to be established by evidence, or judicial decision," and I entirely concur in that view. Of course, if there were any justification for thinking that the plaintiff had authorised Winterbach to receive payment from the defendant, then the action of Mr. Cleghorn might be upheld. But I can find nothing in the evidence to support the idea that the plaintiff had ever authorised Winterbach to receive the money from defendant, and the defendant if he was deceived by Winterbach has only his own overconfidence in that individual to blame. As to the second line of defence it was strenuously argued on behalf of defendant that plaintiff was estopped from claiming the money from defendant because his attorneys had in the first instance written endeavouring to recover it from Winterbach, and that by their so doing plaintiff had ratified the payment to Winterbach and acknowledged his agency. I cannot see how the action of the plaintiff or his attorneys can bear such a construction. It seems to me only to amount to an attempt to reclaim as soon as possible the moneys from the wrong hands into which they had been paid. Nor can I see that because the defendant is in the attorney's letter described as "your" (i.e., Winterbach's) "Cape Town representative," he is thereby released from his duty of accounting to his principal for the execution of the duty entrusted to him. It is clear also that the defendant has not made out that his position was made any worse by the slight delay which ensued, and I do not think that the plaintiff should be debarred from his rights by reason of anything which happened, as far as the evidence in the case discloses the facts. The plaintiff, in his declaration, further claims an indemnity as against Winterbach's trustee in insolvency for any claim for a refund of the £100 paid over by Winterbach during his insolvency to the plaintiff. It is, however, clear that the money never was Winterbach's, and that he must be regarded simply as a conduit-pipe to convey the money from the defendant to the plaintiff. The money never formed part of his estate, and the trustee would have no right to demand it. There is, therefore, no necessity for such an indemnity. The defendant received on behalf of the plaintiff £206 5s. 8d., and there were fees due to him from the plaintiff amounting to £17 3s. 5d. He deducted this amount from the amount received, and a balance remains of £189 2s. 4d., for which he is accountable to the plaintiff. The person to whom defendant entrusted the money has accounted for £100, and there remains a balance due to the plaintiff of £89 2s. 4d., for which sum there must be judgment in his favour, with costs of suit, together with interest thereon from August 18, 1906.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn. Defendant's Attorney: G. Trollip.]

INSOLVENT ESTATE STEVENS (1907.
V. GILCHRIST AND POWELL. (Apr. 30th.

This was an action brought by the trustee in the insolvent estate of Charles Henry Stevens for the restoration of certain scrip for 45,000 shares in the concern known as "Sacco Limited," as the property of the insolvent prior to his insolvency.

The declaration was as follows: (1) The plaintiff is the trustee in the insolvent estate of one Charles Henry Stevens, and sues in his said capacity. The defendants are a limited liability company, duly incorporated under the Companies' Act of 1892, and carrying on business as advertising agents and contractors in Cape Town and elsewhere in South Africa. (2) The said insolvent was, up to the 1st of November, 1905, the sole proprietor of a business for the manufacture and sale of a patent alleged remedy for consumption, known as "Sacco." (3) On the 1st of November, 1905, a company was formed and registered with limited liability for the purpose of taking over and carrying on the said business of manufacturing and selling "Sacco," and the said company was registered under the name of "Sacco, Ltd." with a capital of £100,000 divided into 100,000 shares of £1 each, whereof 30,000 shares were held in reserve. The said insolvent held 70,000 fully paid-up shares in the said company. (4) On or about the 19th of January, 1906, while the said insolvent was being detained in gaol under writs of arrest, executed against him by sundry creditors of his for debts then due to them, the defendants or their agents, wrongfully and unlawfully obtained possession from the "Sacco Limited" of scrip, representing 45,000 shares in the said company, standing in the name of the said Stevens, without giving any just or valuable consideration to the said Stevens therefor. (5) If the said scrip was so obtained, as aforesaid, with the consent or by the authority of the said insolvent, then the plaintiff says that the transaction in question constituted an alienation of the said scrip, made by the said insolvent at a time when his liabilities, fairly calculated, exceeded his assets fairly valued, and that such delivery was not made bona fide or upon just and valuable consideration, and is therefore null and void under the provisions of section 83 of Ordinance 6 of 1843. (6) Alternatively to plaintiff says that, if the scrip was obtained with the consent of the insolvent, the said transaction was in fraud of the creditors of the insolvent and is null and void. (7) The estate of the said insolvent was provisionally sequestrated on the 22nd of January, 1906, and a final order of adjudication thereof was granted on the 1st of February, 1906. The plaintiff was duly appointed trustee in the said estate on the 22nd of February, 1906. (8) The defendants still retain possession of the said scrip and refuse to restore the same to the plaintiff, who is entitled thereto.

The plaintiff claims: (a) If this Honourable Court should find that the said scrip was obtained by the defendants with the consent of the insolvent, an order declaring the delivery of the said scrip to be null and void under paragraph 5 or paragraph 6 of this declaration. (b) In any event, the restoration to him of the said scrip, or in default of such restoration, payment of the sum of £45,000, the value of the said shares. (c) Interest a tempore morae. (d) Alternative relief. (e) Double costs of suit.

The defendants' plea was as follows: (1) Defendants admit the allegation in paragraphs (1) and (2) of the declaration; (2) defendants admit paragraph (3), save that they say—(a) None of the 30,000 reserve shares were issued to the public, (b) 70,000 fully paid up shares were issued to C. H. Stevens as vendors' shares in consideration of the sale to the company of all his right, title, and interest in the business referred to in paragraph (2) of the declaration, (c) of the vendors' shares, 10,000, or the greater portion of this number, were given by the said Stevens to certain gentlemen (his nominees), in order to induce them to become signatories of the company's memorandum of association, and to qualify them as co-directors of the said company with the said Stevens, (d) it was agreed between the said Stevens and the company, or the directors thereof, that he would not, without their concurrence, alienate or deal with his remaining 60,000 vendors' shares; (3) the said company, "Sacco, Ltd.," had no working capital, and soon after its incorporation was unable to pay its debts, or to obtain credit, while its shares had no appreciable value; (4) negotiations were then opened by the said Stevens with the defendants with a view to their acquiring 45,000 of the 60,000 shares held by him in consideration of defendants paying the then existing debts of the company, and thereby enabling the company to continue to carry on business by obtaining fresh credit, and otherwise, and by this means also to make the remaining 15,000 shares of the said Stevens obtain an appreciable value; (5) thereafter on or about January 19, 1906, the said Stevens and the defendants entered into an agreement to the above-stated effect, and in compliance therewith the said

Stevens ceded, and caused to be delivered, to defendants 45,000 of the said shares, with the concurrence of the said company, and defendants have since paid debts of the company to the extent of £1,045, and have moreover contributed about £600 to the current expenses of the company; (6) save as above, and that they admit that on January 19 the said Stevens was being detained in gaol under writ of arrest, executed against him by sundry creditors of his for certain inconsiderable debts then due to them, defendants deny all and singular the allegations in paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) of the declaration; (7) defendants admit paragraphs (7) and (8), save that they deny that plaintiff is entitled to the said shares.

Wherefore defendants pray that the claim of plaintiff be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. D. Buchanan for plaintiff. Mr. W. P. Buchanan (with him Mr. Gutehe) for defendant.

Evidence having been heard,

His Lordship said, in the view he took of the case, it was not necessary to hear Mr. Buchanan, and granted absolute from the instance, with costs.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ADMISSIONS. { 1907.
 { Apr. 20th.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Petrus Johannes du Plessis as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

Mr. Sutton moved for the admission of Alexander Peter Dallas as a conveyancer.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the Resident Magistrate of East London.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. Howes moved for the discharge from insolvency of Daniel Christian Luyt.

Granted.

MARCUS V. MARCUS.

This was an action brought by Lena Marcus, of Cape Town, against her husband, Wolfe Marcus, whose present address is unknown, for a decree of divorce on the ground of defendant's adultery with some woman or women unknown.

Mr. Lewis was for plaintiff; defendant, who was sued by edictal citation, did not appear. Substituted service had been made.

Plaintiff said she was married to defendant in Russia in January, 1897. They lived together in Russia, and defendant left for South Africa in 1899. Witness came out to Cape Town to join him in 1903. In 1905 defendant went to Johannesburg. Witness desired to have the custody of the child of the marriage.

J. Goldstein, a bill poster, living at William-street, Cape Town, said that one night in April last year he saw defendant in Loveday-street, Johannesburg. Defendant was in a brothel in company with a woman of ill-fame.

By the Court: Witness had seen the plaintiff and defendant together in Cape Town. He was quite sure of the identity of the man.

Decree granted, with costs, plaintiff to have custody of the child.

ESTERHUIZEN V. ESTERHUIZEN.

This was an action brought by Maria Elizabeth W. Esterhuizen, of Cape Town, against her husband, Samuel Jacobus Esterhuizen, formerly of Carnarvon, and subsequently of Fordsburg, Transvaal, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Mr. Toms was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear. Substituted service had been given.

De Villiers, C.J., pointed out that there was an irregularity in the publication in the "Gazette." Rule 273 said that there must be publication in the "Gazette" at least one calendar month before the day fixed for the appearance of the defendant. The citation was published on the 26th March for appearance on the 16th April.

Mr. Toms said that, under the circumstances, he should have to apply for an extension of the return day, but he asked the Court to allow the publication to stand.

[De Villiers, C.J.: No final order can be made, until there has been a default on the part of the defendant. Care should be taken in the further service that every Rule of Court is strictly complied with. You may proceed with the case.]

Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage register, Colonial Secretary's Office, gave evidence as to registration of the marriage.

Plaintiff said she was married to defendant in community of property at Carnarvon on the 6th January, 1896. Afterwards they lived at Victoria West. Subsequently her husband went to the Transvaal, and for some years he had not contributed to her support. She did not know where defendant was now. Defendant fought in the war, but witness did not know whether he survived.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive plaintiff on or before the 30th September, failing which rule to issue calling upon defendant to show cause on the 15th October why a decree of divorce should not be granted and plaintiff declared entitled to custody of the child, rule to be served in the same manner as directed in regard to the interdict.

De Villiers, C.J., said that inquiries must be made as to the whereabouts of the defendant and the possibility of his having been killed during the war. Information on the point should be given when the rule was made returnable.

CROZIER V. CROZIER.

This was an action brought by Johanna Wilhelmina Crozier against her husband, James Crozier, formerly of Woodstock, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

Dr. Greer was for plaintiff; defendant, who was sued by edictal citation, did not appear.

Dr. Greer explained that defendant was sued by edictal citation and substituted service was allowed to be made in the "Scotaman," but Mr. Anderson, a friend of the defendant's, had given information that the defendant had gone to Montreal, Canada, and that it was very unlikely that the citation would come under his notice. Instructions had accordingly been sent to an attorney in Canada to serve defendant, but no paper had so far been received from him.

W. T. Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage register, Colonial Office, gave evidence as to registration of the marriage.

Plaintiff said that she was married to defendant at the Presbyterian Church, Woodstock, on the 16th April, 1900. They lived happily for four years, but afterwards their relationships changed, because of defendant's temper and violence and intemperate habits. There were two children of the marriage. One night last year he turned her out of doors in her nightdress. She went to her mother's and defendant refused to have her back. In July last he said that he was going to leave this country and would disappear. Mr. James Anderson had made payments towards the support of the children. There had been an interval in the payments.

By the Court: Witness did not know what Mr. Anderson meant when he gave up the payment because of her conduct.

Anderson appeared, and said that the misbehaviour he had to complain of was that plaintiff went to balls and dances with another man while her husband had gone away to Scotland on a holiday. Witness stopped the payments for a while from the money left by defendant to assist the children. The plaintiff had been of intemperate habits and witness had repeatedly had to pay debts she had contracted in consequence. He had never seen defendant the worse for liquor, though he was somewhat hot-tempered.

Plaintiff said she was not aware that she had been intemperate.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 30th September, failing which rule to issue calling upon defendant to show cause on the 15th October why a divorce shall not be granted, with custody to plaintiff of the children of the marriage, personal service of the rule to be effected.

At a later stage, Dr. Greer informed the Court that word had been received by the mail that the citation had been served personally on defendant.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

WILPUTTE V. FAGAN. { 1907.
Apr. 30th.

This was an application for provisional sentence on a contract of sale for £350, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from the 1st January, 1907, plaintiff tendering transfer of the property, which is situate in the Market-square, Somerset Strand.

Mr. Benjamin was for applicant; Mr. Uppington was for respondent.

Affidavits having been read and counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

The Court granted provisional sentence, with costs of this action and the expenses of transfer, including surveyor's charges in connection with framing of second diagram attached to his affidavit, upon the plaintiff giving transfer to defendant in accordance with such diagram. If the defendant should desire to defend the action in the principal case the plaintiff will be at liberty to issue execution for the sum of £350 and costs on giving due security de restituendo.

CRUYWAGEN V. BRAND.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £750, with interest from the 9th October, 1906.

Order granted.

MARAIIS V. DREYER AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,150, with interest from the 1st January, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

W. AND G. SCOTT, LTD. V. IMPERIAL BRICK AND TILE CO., LTD.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £771
14s. 5d. with interest and costs.

Order granted.

BRUMELL V. WHEELER.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £37 10s., less £30 paid on account, leaving a balance owing of £7 10s., on the judgment and costs taxed at £70.

Defendant said that he was without means to meet the claim. He had a house, but it was mortgaged beyond its present market value. He was engaged on a tramway project from Salt River to Bellville, and was without any funds, owing to the expenses of promoting a Bill in Parliament. Owing to the depressed times one and another member of the syndicate had backed out.

No order, but leave granted to plaintiff to apply again upon giving proof that defendant had property to pay the debt or any part thereof.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

CROWTHER AND BOZZETT { 1907.
V. ELKON. { Apr. 30th.

Mr. Lewis moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £37 0s. 1d., balance of account for goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

KUHN V. KUHN.

This was an action to have respondent declared of unsound mind, and a curator appointed of her person and property.

Mr. Howes was for plaintiff; Mr.
Louwrens appeared as curator ad litem.

Dr. Black, acting medical superintendent at Valkenburg Asylum, gave evidence as to the respondent's condition.
She suffered from melancholia and de-lusions.

The respondent appeared under the care of a nurse, and answered a number of questions put by the Court. She said her sister had treated her kindly.
She wished to leave the asylum.

The nurse said that respondent had delusions both by night and day. She imagined that her brother was visiting her, and was continually getting ready to receive him.

[De Villiers, C.J. (to Mr. Louwrens):
I am afraid that she had better remain where she is.]

Order granted, declaring respondent of unsound mind, and appointing Pieter Gysbert Kuhn, of Worcester, as curator of her person and property, with power to remove her from the asylum, costs to come out of the estate.

De Villiers, C.J., said that if Mr.
Kuhn could make arrangements to remove respondent to a private asylum or keep her in a private house, he might do so.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ROODEBLOEM { 1907.
ESTATES, LTD. { Apr. 30th.

Mr. De Waal moved for a certain rule nisi, under the Derelict Lands Act, to be made absolute.

Eleanor Ohlsson and another lady appeared to oppose the application.

The former lady said that it was proposed to acquire title to land which was set apart as the family burial ground.

Mr. Roberts, surveyor, said there were no graves on the land in question.
There was a burial ground, about 40
ft. square, some little distance away.

De Villiers, C.J. (to the ladies): The Court has already heard your case in a former action. For more than 80 years this property has been out of your family. There has been an Act of Parliament giving the property away to others, and now you cannot come and claim it by virtue of being descended from the other people. You had better give up your claim now, and turn your hand to something better.

Rule absolute.

In re "EAST LONDON DAILY NEWS"
PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., LTD.
(IN LIQUIDATION).

Dr. Greer presented the second report of the official liquidators, and applied for the usual order as to lying for inspection and publication.

Ordered to lie for 14 days, publication as before in the "Cape Times," "South African News," and "East London Dispatch."

Ex parte WILLIAMS.

Mr. Sutton moved for leave to petitioner to sue his wife in forma pauperis for divorce. In 1905 petitioner was given leave to sue his wife, but afterwards condoned her misconduct, and resumed cohabitation. His wife, he said, had again left him, and was living in adultery.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the applicant had already had leave granted, and had taken his wife back again. He must now proceed in the ordinary way. He was an able-bodied man, he was able to work, and he must earn money to pay the necessary fees, etc. There would be no order upon this application.

Ex parte LEVING.

Dr. Greer moved for an extension of the return day of citation in certain divorce proceedings between petitioner and his wife.

Extended until the 30th July.

BLAINE AND CO. V. KRUGER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to sue the respondent, formerly of Vryburg, but now resident in the Transvaal, by edictal citation and for the attachment of certain farm property ad fundandam jurisdictionem.

De Villiers, C.J., suggested that the petitioner should write to respondent asking him to pay the debt, which only amounted to £11 14s. 6d. He would postpone the attachment so as to give the defendant an opportunity of paying.

Leave to sue by edict granted, citation returnable on the 15th June, and farm to be attached ad fundandam jurisdictionem, attachment to be postponed for three weeks from this date, to enable petitioner's attorneys to inform defendant of these proceedings and apply for payment of the account.

Ex parte GUNTHER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an order authorising the amendment of petitioner's name in a certain deed of transfer, etc.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte URQUHART.

Dr. Greer moved under section 110 of Ordinance 104 for an extension of time within which petitioner may file account as trustee of an insolvent estate for a further period of four months from this date.

The application was unopposed.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte ESTATE WATCHAM.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for leave to petitioners to enter into a certain lease of property in which minors were interested. The Master reported favourably.

Order in terms of Master's report.

AJAM V. TALBODIEN AND OTHERS.

This was an application to have certain proceedings set aside. The matter concerned the Moslem Cemetery Board.

Mr. Gardiner (with him Dr. Greer) was for applicant; Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones) was for respondents.

Mr. Gardiner suggested that the Court should follow the course adopted in Du Toit and Others v. Domingo (14 Juta, 126) and appoint an advocate to take a vote of the Moslems concerned.

Mr. McGregor said that he acquiesced in the suggestion, but he should like his clients to have some assurance that their costs would be paid. Voluminous affidavits had been filed. He understood that the applicant was the secretary of the Board.

Mr. Gardiner: We are the Board.

Order granted, appointing Mr. W. Porter Buchanan, or failing him Mr. Russell, to be presiding officer, to preside over a meeting to receive nominations for members of the Moslem Cemetery Board; such meeting to be held at such time and place as he may appoint; that before accepting any nomination he shall satisfy himself from the book called by the respondents the registration book, or from the books styled by the applicants the "Imams' Books," or from such other proof as may be laid before him, that the person so nominated is entitled to be registered as a registered Moslem in terms of the conditions annexed to the deed of transfer from C. D. G. Mostert and G. van R. Mostert to the trustees of the Moslem Cemetery Board (dated the 18th May, 1886), in that he has paid a subscription towards the purchase price of the ground transferred under the said deed, or is the descendant of a subscriber; the said presiding officer shall further appoint a time and place at which he shall take the votes of Moslems for the election of a Cemetery Board from among the persons whose nominations he has accepted. In ascertaining who are entitled to vote, he shall proceed in the like manner as hereinbefore provided in the case of nominations: the presiding officer shall give due notice by means of publication in the "Cape Times," "Cape Argus," and "South African News," of the time and place appointed by him for receiving nominations, and in like manner of the time and place appointed for taking votes. The presiding officer shall report to the Court the nominations he has accepted, and the votes given for the election of the Cemetery Board. Further order on the application to stand over until such report has been made. Costs of the application, the fees of the presiding officer, and costs connected with accepting the nominations and taking of votes reserved. Leave given to the attorneys on both sides to attend the meetings.

LAW SOCIETY V. JONES. { 1907
Apr. 30th.
May 4th.
, 17th.

Attorney — Unprofessional conduct—Suspension from practice.

The respondent, an attorney of the Supreme Court, having received £375 on behalf of a client, paid him only £250, and did not inform him that more had been received. The respondent having also received £5 on behalf of another client, gave him a cheque for the amount, but upon presentation at the Bank, there were found to be no funds.

Held, that it was the duty of the respondent to deposit trust funds to a separate account in the Bank, and, at all events, to take care that there shall be funds to meet the claims of his clients; and that he had been guilty of such improper conduct as to require his suspension from practice for a period.

This was an application to have respondent's name removed from the roll of attorneys.

Mr. Howes was for applicant; Mr. Upington was for respondent.

It appeared that the case could not be heard at present.

Mr. Upington, however, applied for definite particulars to be given of the second ground of the application, which now reads: "That while practising the said profession, you were charged with the crime of theft and committed for trial by the A.R.M. of Cape Town." Counsel said that the ground was so vague that respondent did not know what charges he was expected to meet.

The Court ordered the matter to stand over until Saturday next, the Law Society in the meantime to furnish particulars of the grounds of complaint in connection with the second charge.

Postea (May 4th).

The applicants, in response to a direction by the Court for more particulars under the second count, had filed the following: "(1) Respondent's unlawful and wrongful conduct in his dealings with the moneys collected on behalf of and received by him for William Gerecke; (2) respondent's conduct in his dealings with moneys handed to him by the said Gerecke for investment; (3) respondent's unlawful conduct in his monetary dealings with one Jacques Hau."

When the matter was last before the Court, counsel's argument had not been concluded, and De Villiers, C.J., asked Mr. Howes whether he thought there had been a sufficient compliance with the direction of the Court.

Mr. Howes submitted that there had been. He then proceeded to read the affidavit of Mr. Sanderson, which stated the grounds of complaint against the respondent.

The other affidavits were not read, having already been perused by the Court.

Mr. Howes contended that on the affidavits the probabilities were that the alleged partnership between respondent and one Collins did actually exist. Respondent in the case of Rez v. Collins admitted that he had entered into an arrangement with Collins that the latter should receive 50 per cent. of the net profits of the business.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The respondent's case is that Collins was to receive 50 per cent. only on such business as he introduced.]

Mr. Howes said that that was the case now set up by respondent. He understood that it was a fairly general custom for attorneys to allow a commission to unqualified persons. He had a case in which an attorney had been struck off for sharing fees in a case with an unqualified person.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I am afraid if that were generally carried out, we should have to strike off a good many attorneys.]

Mr. Howes quoted Law Society v. De Jong (1904, 19 T.S., 286).

Proceeding, counsel said there were other facts which went to show there really was a partnership between these two persons. Jones left the office on the 24th December and never went back again. At the same time he had an articulated clerk, and this clerk continued to go to the office, and carried on the business in exactly the same way. Surely Jones should have disqualified this clerk. On the question of partnership, counsel cited Van der Kessel (p. 599). As to whether a partnership of this sort was misconduct, there were several cases in the Transvaal (Transvaal Official Reports, 1894, p. 202), (1902, T.S. (p. 11)). If the charge of partnership had been the only one, counsel might not have pressed for a severe sentence from the Court, but there were two other charges arising out of a criminal procedure. Certain terms had not been settled until Jones had been placed under arrest, and on this point counsel referred his lordship to the case against Cairncross (Buch., 1877, p. 122). Counsel submitted the offences were just the same whether the matters had been settled or not.

Mr. Upington said the reason that the original agreement was not produced was that while his client was in gaol

Collins removed all the papers, and it would be seen by the evidence before the Magistrate that his client only got a large portion of the papers after he had obtained a search warrant, and a large number were missing. It was interesting to note that Collins in his defence, when on trial for a criminal charge in respect of misappropriation of money, did not set up the defence there was a partnership—a very good line of defence. In the matter of Coulton's case, his lordship, Mr. Justice Hopley, took judicial notice of what everyone knew, that attorneys did make allowance to unqualified persons all over the place. He felt that it was rather a hard thing to single out one man and bring him before the Court and ask to have him struck off the roll because he made an allowance to an unqualified person. He would not contend that a partnership could be entered into with an unqualified person to carry on business. Before bringing his client into court, it would have been better to administer some caution not to do such a thing, or to the profession generally that the Law Society regarded such conduct as unprofessional conduct.

Postea (May 17th).

Mr. Upington contended that the conduct of his client only deserved the smallest penalty and nothing like the heavy punishment which the applicants asked the Court to inflict.

De Villiers, C.J.: There are several charges made against the respondent, but I shall only deal with two of the more serious charges. The first of these is that the respondent, as attorney, employed by William Gerecke, recovered money from Mr. Stack, he received £370, and had paid over only £250. Now, what happened appears to me to be this: Money to the amount of £375 was received, and only £250 was paid over. In my opinion, it was clearly the duty of the respondent, when he received this money, to inform Gerecke exactly how much he had received, and I am satisfied that he left the Gereckes under the impression that he had received less than he actually received. At all events, he did not inform the Gereckes that he was retaining £125, which he had received for the purpose of meeting any costs that might be incurred in the three actions which he had instituted on behalf of Gerecke against Stack. When these costs were scrutinised, it was found that only £60 of costs were due, so that, according to his own statement, there was really retained by him to meet costs £65 more than he was justified in retaining. It appears to me that it was wholly improper conduct on the part of the respondent not to have informed the Gereckes of the exact amount which he had received, and not to have informed the Gereckes that he was retaining the sum of £125 for the purpose of meeting his fees, an amount wholly exceeding what an attorney in such circumstances would have been justified in retaining. The other serious charge is that relating to the respondent's dealing with Hau. The amount is small, but it is the principle adopted by the respondent that is bad. He had received an amount of £7—at all events, he had received £5 on behalf of Hau. There seems to have been due £7, but the remaining £2 probably was not for money professionally received on behalf of Hau, but the £5 at all events was received on behalf of Hau. Well, having received that money, it was his duty to have paid it into the bank, and kept a separate account of it as trust money. The Court has repeatedly said that that is the duty of an attorney, or any one who has trust moneys in his possession. If he deposits the money in the bank, he must keep a separate account, and he must take care that there are always sufficient funds to meet the trust debts, owing by him. It is not money of his; it is money belonging to his clients, and he must see that that money is set aside in the bank to meet the claim of his client, and it is breach of trust on his part if he deposits the money to his own account, then gives a cheque, and when the cheque is presented for payment it is found that there are no funds to meet the cheque. That in itself is also unprofessional conduct. The amount is small here, and I believe that there was a great deal of carelessness in the matter, and, seeing that there has been no conviction, I shall not visit the respondent with such a penalty as I otherwise would. But, at the same time, I think he should be suspended from practice for some period for these acts. The Court will order that the respondent be suspended from practice for twelve months, and that he pay the costs of this application.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné. Respondent's Attorney: C. Brady.]

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAANDORP.]

FRYER V. ESTATE LOUW, { 1907.
May 1st.

Mr. Roux was for the plaintiff, and there was no appearance for the defendants. Counsel moved for judgment in terms of the declaration, which claimed an order compelling the defendants to pass transfer to the plaintiff of certain land in the Calvinia district. The defence, he said, was vexatious in order to gain time, and he asked for costs as between attorney and client. There was really no defence disclosed.

His Lordship said there would be judgment in terms of prayers (a) and (c) of the declaration. There was no evidence to show vexatious conduct, consequently the Court would not go beyond the ordinary rule. There would be no order as to costs as between attorney and client against the defendant.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. AMALINDA VILLAGE MANAGEMENT BOARD AND ANOTHER.

Commonage — Village Management Board—Lease of commonage.

The Government had granted the use of a certain piece of land to the Village Management Board of A. for the purpose of a common, but the land had never been transferred to the Board. The Board had leased a plot of this land to R., and had allowed him to erect buildings thereon.

Held, that the Board had acted ultra vires. That plaintiff was entitled to an order declaring the lease null and void and ejecting R., but that R. could claim compensation for his improvements.

This was an action brought by the plaintiffs for a declaration of rights, to have a certain lease declared invalid, which was entered into between the defendants, for the ejectment of the second defendant, and for the removal of certain buildings.

The declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is Arthur John Fuller, who sues in his capacity as Secretary for Agriculture and as such representing the Colonial Government. The first-named defendant is the Board of Management of Amalinda, in the district of East London, and is constituted under the provisions of Act No. 29 of 1881. The second-named defendant resides in East London.

2. On the 16th April, 1903, the defendants mutually entered into a certain written agreement whereby the first-named defendant agreed to let, and the second-named defendant agreed to hire, for a period of five years, ending on the 31st March, 1908, a certain piece of land, situate at Green Point, in the Amalinda village area, and shown as marked in red on a plan annexed to the agreement.

3. The piece of land leased as aforesaid was at the date of the agreement and still is the property of the Colonial Government. The first-named defendant had no authority to enter into the agreement aforesaid or to let the land, and the Government at no time gave its consent thereto, and the plaintiff complains of the agreement that it was and is invalid and bad in law.

4. Notwithstanding the premises the second-named defendant has, under and by virtue of the agreement entered into occupation of the said land and erected certain buildings thereon, and occupies the same by himself, his servants, and agents.

5. The first-named defendant has been duly requested by the plaintiff to cause the agreement to be cancelled, and the second-named defendant has been duly requested to vacate the said land, and both defendants have been called upon to remove the buildings referred to, but the defendants decline, and refuse to comply with the said requests.

Wherefore the plaintiff prays for: (a) A declaration that the said agreement is invalid and of no legal force and effect; (b) an order for the immediate ejectment from the said lands of the second-named defendant, his agents, and servants; (c) an order to the defendants to remove forthwith the buildings erected upon the said land; (d) such other alternative relief as to this honourable Court may seem meet; (e) costs of suit.

The plea of the first defendant was as follows:

1. It admits paragraphs 1 and 2 of the declaration, and refers to clause 4 of the agreement whereby it is provided that the second defendant is bound and obliged to keep the ground in clean and proper order, and the use of the ground is strictly limited to the sale of refreshments, etc.; it says that the use of the ground is limited to the performance of matters conducive to the better enjoyment by the public of that portion of the Commonage; the said Commonage is within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the first defendant.

2. As to paragraph 3 thereof it does not admit that the land belongs to the Colonial Government as alleged. It says that having control of the Commonage, it (the first defendant) had a right to enter into the agreement so as to allow the said land to be used for the purposes therein mentioned, that the plaintiff and the Colonial Government raised no objection to the use thereof until on or about December 7, 1905, at which date the land had been so used for a number of years (since about the year 1901); that buildings had at that date been erected thereon and were in use as the plaintiff and the Government well knew; and that the granting of permission to occupy the site was a great public convenience, that a revenue to the first defendant was thereby derived, and that the defendant acted within the powers of general management and control vested in it (the first defendant), under the Act No. 29 of 1881 and the regulations thereunder.

3. It admits paragraph 4 thereof, but as to paragraph 5 it denies that it has been requested to cancel the agreement save in so far as the plaintiff suggested in the month of September, 1904, that the agreement should lapse, and in December, 1905, that the permissions granted to the second defendant should be withdrawn. That at the said date substantial buildings of considerable value had been erected, and the second defendant had been for a considerable time in possession, as the plaintiff well knew, in as much as a general dealer's licence in respect of the site, had been granted to him by the said Government since March, 1904: save as above, it denies the allegations in the declaration.

4. The defendant craves leave to refer to sections 19 and 23 of the Act No. 29 of 1891, and to the terms of regulation No. 16 of the defendant Board, which have been duly approved.

Wherefore it prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

The second defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant, Nicholas Alfred Ries, admits the allegations in paragraphs 1 and 2 of the declaration, and begs to refer to the terms of the agreement therein referred to.

2. As to paragraph 3, he denies that the said agreement is invalid and bad in law, and he does not admit the other allegations therein contained, especially the allegation that the Government at no time gave its consent to the agreement.

3. He says that under and by virtue of the agreement he duly received possession, entered into occupation of the land, and at great expense erected certain buildings thereon, and occupied the same by himself, his servants and agents for the purposes of the agreement, and more especially as duly licensed promises for the sale of liquor and other refreshments, of all which the Colonial Government and the plaintiff was aware, and in all which the Colonial Government and the plaintiff acquiesced, and he says specially that the Colonial Government and the plaintiff by such knowledge acquiesced, ratified, and consented to the said agreement in so far as such ratification or consent was necessary (which the said defendant does not admit).

4. He admits that thereafter he refused and still refuses, at the request of the plaintiff, to vacate the said land and the buildings thereon, whereof by virtue of the premises he is lawfully in possession, and is not liable to ejectment at the suit or instance of the plaintiff.

5. Save as aforesaid he denies the allegations in paragraphs 4 and 5 of the declaration.

Wherefore he prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. H. Jones (with him Mr. Nightingale) for plaintiff. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Gutsche) for the first defendant. Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Roux) for the second defendant.

Mr. Jones said that most of the evidence had been taken on commission.

Mr. Cornish Bowden produced a plan from his office showing the village of Cambridge and Amalinda. The land in question was Crown land, it had never been alienated, and the Government had never given consent to any alienation.

Arthur John Fuller, Secretary for Agriculture, stated he had no recollection of a conversation with Mr. J. Ries, who represented the second defendant, to the effect that he (witness) was ignorant of any objection, and the matter was then discussed. If there was a conversation there certainly was no consent.

This closed the evidence for the plaintiff.

Mr. Jones said the question was not whether there was a possibility of the Village Management Board having any use for this land. The Government had a right to object to Village Management Boards going beyond their powers and prerogatives. The correspondence would show that the Government, after writing many letters to the Board, were told by them that upon advice they (the Board) were not the persons to take action. Counsel cited sections 2, 3, and 29 of Act 29 of 1881. He could see nothing in any of the replications or the Act itself which authorised them to grant the lease for any period whatever.

Mr. Searle said that in the regulations which the Government had approved, the Board was empowered to enter into leases. The assignment of this commonage was in effect nothing more nor less than practically giving it over subject to a kind of servitude in favour of the inhabitants, which would not justify the Village Board in disposing of it or in interfering in any way with the dominium of the property. The question then arose whether anything had been done which affected the dominium, or whether there had been anything done to injure the property. Here, the evidence was that what had been done was for the benefit of the place. He contended that whatever was done on the area was in the right of the defendant's general control and management. On the question of the period of lease, which constitutes, in law, an alienation, counsel quoted the cases of Green v. Griffiths (4 Juta, 346), and Indre Municipality (16 C.T.R., 279).

Mr. Burton said it might be said that the second defendant's position was that of the lessor, but it was not altogether so in this case. Until the defendant erected his buildings, he never had notice of any objection. There was no doubt as to the bona fides of Rics. It was really a curious position for people to come to court to demand an order to eject a person whom they licensed to stay there.

Maasdorp, J., said it did not appear to him how this land became a commonage of the village of Amalinda, but it must be accepted upon the admissions made by the parties that this commonage did now exist, and then the position would be this, that there was Government land within the Amalinda area which was subject to a commonage, that was to say there was land still vested in the Government with a servitude over it for the benefit of the inhabitants of Amalinda. Taking the servitude in its widest sense it was land to which there is a common user in favour of all the inhabitants for the purpose of commonage. The Government discovered that the Village Management Board had entered into a lease with the second defendant, in which they had given a right to the second defendant to erect buildings on that land. Now, it is quite clear that the servitude of commonage could not possibly include in it the right to erect buildings upon land which is granted by the owner of it for the purposes of commonage. He was not at all satisfied that the quarrying referred to in the Act was a right which could be applied to land described as commonage or common pasturage. It specially referred to common lands, and by common lands he thought was intended lands that in common were actually vested as a matter of property in the inhabitants through the proper authority that represented them. He therefore came to the conclusion that the Village Management Board itself would have no right to use this land for the purposes of building, and they had got no power to give such right to any other person. His Lordship said he did not think that the defence that there was acquiescence or consent on the part of the Government to the action of the Village Management Board and of the second defendant had been proved. The plaintiff was therefore entitled to have this lease of his own property, which was arranged without his consent, declared null and void, and he was also entitled to an order of ejectment against the second defendant. The question might have been raised by the second defendant as to his rights to retain possession until he was compensated for the improvements he has made, but that defence has not been set up. The only ground against the order for ejectment which is raised by him is the alleged fact that the Government had consented to this lease going through. It appears, from the authorities cited by Mr. Burton, that a possessor who has improved property can either retain possession until he is compensated, or he can give up possession and claim compensation afterwards. It must be taken he has adopted the second course, because he has not claimed that he should be allowed to retain possession until compensation is paid. Whatever right he may have to compensation, he may raise hereafter. The agreement will be declared to be of no force or effect against the Government, and orders will be granted in terms of prayers B and C. the order in terms of prayer C to be suspended for six months, the defendants to pay costs.

[Attorneys for plaintiff: Reid and Nephew. For first defendants: Wahl, Fuller and De Klerk. For second defendant: Dold and Van Breda.]

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ILLIQUID ROLL.

LAWRENCE AND CO. V. { 1907.
POWELL, TRADING AS { May 1st.
UNION COLD STORES.

Mr. Gutsche moved for judgment under rule 329d for £53 6s. 7d., balance of account for goods sold, with interest à tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

HARVEY V. HARVEY.

This was an action brought by Violet Emily B. Harvey, of Cape Town, against her husband, Alfred Bridges Harvey, of London, England, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce.

The plaintiff's declaration alleged that the parties were married at Sea Point on the 31st January, 1894, without community of property. There were three children of the marriage, aged respectively 8, 7, and 2 years. In March, 1903, defendant deserted plaintiff, wherefore she claimed a decree of restitution, failing which a decree of divorce, with custody of the children and a declaration that defendant had forfeited any benefits under a certain marriage settlement.

Mr. Inchbold was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

W. T. Birch, officer in charge of the marriage register, Colonial Secretary's Office, gave evidence as to registration of the marriage.

The plaintiff said that she was married to defendant on the 31st January, 1894. After living together for fifteen months at Woodstock and Cape Town, they removed to Wellington. They had disagreements on account of defendant getting drunk and ill-treating her. In 1899 she left defendant and went to England, where she remained 2½ years. Her husband had been employed as a bank clerk up to about six years ago. Defendant visited her while she was in England. He returned to this country, and they again lived together at Calvinia, but a separation took place on account of his intemperate habits. In May, 1903, they again lived together until July, when she went to stay with friends in Cape Town. At this time defendant was employed on the railway. In 1904 they lived together again, but witness left him about the end of March on account of his intemperance and ill-treatment. She afterwards saw him at her registry office, but he had not visited her since 1904. She had received no support from him since that year.

By the Court: In June, 1905, she asked him to restore conjugal rights to her, and offered to make another home for him, but he said that he would not join her. Defendant was now in London. He had inherited some money, and had received about £200. He had gone home to make arrangements about receiving the inheritance. She believed he would have an income of £200 or £300 a year. There was only one of the children with witness, the other two being with her people in England.

[Hopley, J.: Do you want this man back?]

Witness: No.

[But are you asking that he should come back. Supposing he comes back?]

I suppose I must put up with it.

[Hopley, J.: Pis aller.]

A copy of the marriage settlement was produced, and formally proved.

Mr. Inchbold (in answer to the Court) said that the settlement was drawn in England, and was not registered in this colony, but he submitted that it was binding as between plaintiff and defendant.

Hopley, J., pointed out that the ground upon which plaintiff was proceeding in this colony would not have been a ground for divorce in England, and he had some doubt as to the effect of the present case, so far as the marriage settlement was concerned. That, however, was a point which could be raised on the application to make the rule absolute.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive plaintiff on or before the 1st September, failing which to show cause on the 15th October why a decree of divorce should not be granted, plaintiff to have custody of the children of the marriage, and an order declaring that defendant had forfeited all rights under the marriage settlement.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte VENTER. { 1907.
{ May 1st.

Mr. Benjamin moved for leave to petitioner to appeal in forma pauperis from a judgment of the R.M. of Tarkstad, by which petitioner had been adjudged to pay £2 0s. 9d. to the insolvent estate of S. M. D. Hammelford.

The matter was referred to counsel for inquiry and certificate.

Ex parte COETZER.

Mr. Louwrens moved for an order authorising the raising of a mortgage of £800 upon the farm Kempt, in the district of Victoria East, to enable petitioner and his six sons to pay the purchase price of the other heir's share of inheritance under the mutual will of petitioner and his late wife. The seventh son had become insolvent, and his share had been sold by public auction to petitioner and the other sons.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte COETZER.

Mr. Louwrens moved for an order authorising petitioner to transfer to the School Board of Victoria East a portion of the farm Kempt, in the estate of petitioner and his late wife.

Order granted as prayed.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

AFRICAN BANKING CORPORATION, LTD. V. OFFICIAL LIQUIDATOR OF THE GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS, LTD. { 1907. May 2nd. 6th.

Debentures — Negotiable instruments—Bona-fide holder.

The plaintiff Bank advanced moneys to a certain partnership, receiving as security certain debentures of the G. Company. The debentures, which had been issued under Act 43 of 1895, were payable at a certain date to the bearer or registered holder, and purported to be upon the security of a first bond, a copy of which was printed on the back of the debentures. The Bank, when it received the debentures knew, as the fact was, that before their issue the chief assets of the Company had been ceded to, and its liabilities taken over by certain persons, including the partnership, on condition that no further debentures should be issued without their consent. The Company was subsequently ordered to be wound up.

Held, that the debentures were negotiable instruments, and that the Bank was a bona-fide holder thereof, notwithstanding its knowledge of the cession, and was consequently entitled to prove for the amount of the debentures in the winding up of the Company.

This was an action brought by the African Banking Corporation against Edward Ridge Syfret, in his capacity as official liquidator of the Grand Junction Railways, Ltd., for an order declaring the plaintiffs entitled to prove and rank in the liquidation of the company in respect of certain debentures.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. Plaintiff is a duly incorporated company, carrying on business as bankers at London, Cape Town, and elsewhere; defendant is the official liquidator of the Grand Junction Railways, Limited (hereinafter called the company), which was placed under the operation of the winding-up provisions of "The Companies Act, 1892," on or about the 15th day of July, 1902.

2. At divers times prior to the aforesaid date, plaintiff advanced sums of money to a certain partnership known as The Grand Junction Railways, in security whereof the said partnership pledged and delivered to the plaintiff certain debentures issued by the company, which debentures are each for the sum of £100, together with interest, are payable to bearer, were signed by two directors and the secretary of the company, were sealed with the company's seal and were issued and registered in terms of the "The Company Debenture Act, 1895." (A specimen copy of one of the debentures was annexed to the declaration.)

3. The indebtedness of the said partnership to plaintiff has been admitted and ranked at the sum of £59,853 11s. 8d. by the duly appointed receivers of the said partnership, and in security thereof plaintiff holds 785 of the said debentures pledged and delivered to it as aforesaid.

4. Plaintiff is entitled to prove and to rank in the liquidation of the company in respect of the whole of the said 785 debentures, but defendant wrongfully and unlawfully refuses to recognise or rank more than 292 thereof.

Wherefore plaintiff prays: (a) An order declaring that it is entitled to prove and rank in respect of the whole of the said 785 debentures for the capital and the interest due thereon. (b) Such further and other relief as may seem meet. (c) Costs of suit.

The defendant's plea and claim in convention were as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraph 1 of the declaration.

2. He admits paragraphs 2 and 3, subject to the matters hereinafter set forth.

3. The Grand Junction Railways, Limited (hereinafter styled "the company") was incorporated for the purpose of constructing certain lines of railway in this colony, and thereafter entered into certain contracts with the Colonial Government and obtained certain powers by Acts of Parliament for such construction, to which defendant craves leave to refer at the trial.

4. On or about the 20th July, 1898, the company ceded and assigned all its right, title, and interest in and to the said contracts to the Thames Ironworks and Shipbuilding Company (hereinafter styled the Thames Company), whereof one Arnold Frank Hills was managing director, and the said Hills; the defendant craves leave to refer to the said document of cession when produced at the trial; the said Thames Company acted in the said matter for and on behalf of a partnership known as the Grand Junction Railways (hereinafter styled the partnership, and) consisting of (a) the said Hills and (b) John Walker, John Walker (junior), and Thomas Mouat Cameron Walker, trading as John Walker and Sons.

5. On the same date, to wit July 20, 1898, and in consideration of the aforesaid cession, the Thames Company, the said Hills, and the said firm of John Walker and Sons, agreed with the company in writing to pay all its debts, including the debentures theretofore issued by the company, and took over all the liabilities and engagements of the company, on condition that no debentures or shares should be issued after the said date without the sanction in writing of the Thames Company, the said Hills, and the said firm of John Walker and Sons; the defendant craves leave to refer to the said agreement when produced at the trial.

6. At the said date, July 20, 1898, work upon the said railways had been executed under a contract between the company and the said firm of John Walker and Sons as sub-contractors, which entitled the company, in terms of clause 1 of the debenture bond, annexed to the declaration, to issue debentures for the sum of £170,700, and no more, being in respect of the equivalent number of completed miles of railway under the aforesaid railway contracts; the company craves leave to refer to the said contract when produced at the trial; the company had no other assets save as above referred to, neither did the company thereafter do any work in connection with the said railway contracts or otherwise, or acquire any further assets.

7. Prior to the said date, July 20, 1898, the company had issued 1,700 debentures in all, of £100 each, whereby it had pledged its property and assets to the extent of £170,000.

8. Subsequent to the said date, July 20, 1898, the company issued further debentures of £100 each, numbering in all 1,000, whereof 500 have, since the liquidation of the company, been surrendered by the holders to the receivers of the partnership, and the other 500 are held by the plaintiff in pledge.

9. Of the said 1,000 debentures seven only were lawfully issued, representing £700, the balance of the aforesaid £170,700, and the remainder were, by reason of the premises, unlawfully issued, and are not binding on the defendant.

10. Of the 785 debentures held by the plaintiff in pledge, 285 were issued prior to the said date, July 20, 1898, being portion of the 1,700 as aforesaid, and 500 were issued thereafter, including the seven in paragraph 9 referred to.

11. At the same time the said 500 debentures were received in pledge by the plaintiff, the plaintiff had knowledge of the cession and agreement referred to in paragraphs 4 and 5 hereof, and of the terms of the aforesaid debenture bond, and of the fact that the company had on July 20, 1898, no assets save its right, title, and interest in, and to the said contracts which it ceded on that day, and the plaintiff, when it subsequently received the debentures issued, after that date took the same subject to any and all illegalities affecting them.

12. The defendant has been declared entitled by judgment of this Honourable Court to prove on the assets of the partnership in respect of the 1,700 debentures, and the seven debentures aforesaid, and no more; the defendant craves leave to refer to the proceedings in the said action and the judgment therein when produced at the trial.

13. As to paragraph 4 of the declaration, the defendant says that he has always been ready and willing, and before action brought, tendered, and hereby again tenders to admit to proof by the plaintiff 292 debentures, being the 285 and the seven aforesaid, and he admits that he refuses to recognise or to rank more than the said 292, save as above he denies the allegations in paragraph 4 thereof.

Wherefore, subject to the said tender, he prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs. And for a claim in reconvention the defendant (now plaintiff in reconvention) says: (1) He craves leave to refer to the matters above pleaded, and by reason thereof submits that he is entitled to have it declared that the said debentures issued after July 20, 1898, and which are now held by the defendant in reconvention, were illegally issued, save in respect of seven thereof, and are not binding upon the plaintiff in reconvention, and are not entitled to proof in competition with debentures lawfully issued, and other debts lawfully incurred.

Wherefore the plaintiff in reconvention prays: (a) That it be declared that the said 493 debentures are not legal and binding upon him, and cannot be proved in the liquidation; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. W. P. Buchanan) for plaintiffs. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner) for defendants.

Mr. Searle called Edward Ridge Syfret, who said he was the liquidator, and was also one of the receivers of the Grand Junction Railway, together with Mr. Close. He had prepared a statement showing what the effect would be if the bank were allowed to prove for the full value of the debentures against the liquidator. The company had no assets at the date of liquidation, except a claim against the partnership. Thereafter the liquidator and the receivers were unable to agree as to what debentures were properly issued, and an action was brought last October (16 C.T.R., 865). There were a number of creditors of the partnership who were not interested in the company, and they took no debentures, and these people had proved against the estate of the partnership. There were creditors to the receivers of the partnership estate, who held certain debentures, such as the London and Westminster Company and the plaintiff company. All these creditors held debentures of the original issue, excepting the African Banking Corporation. The remaining debentures of this original issue were surrendered to the receivers by the holders. The receivers now were actually holders of these to the extent of £500 on the same principle as the African Banking Corporation held theirs. The receivers now would be in the same position as the African Banking Corporation; if the claims were proved the receivers might also have a claim. They had recovered for the company by judgment of the Court a certain amount which they had got in hand for distribution. The liquidators' last report and account would show the whole amount had not been received. By an arrangement between the liquidator and the receivers, the liquidator had only received enough to pay the creditors, and under an order of Court he had authority to pay these. The liquidator only received from the receivers sufficient to cover these claims.

Cross-examined: A dividend of 11s. had been provided for in the partnership estate. The receivers would probably be able to pay more, but only 11s. had been provided for. Certain persons had been paid out on that basis. He believed nearly 2s. more might be recoverable.

Mr. Benjamin, in argument, submitted that the plaintiffs were entitled to prove against the liquidator for the full number of debentures which they held, viz., 785. The contract having been made in England, the holding of the debentures was to be construed according to the English law, though there was no substantial difference between the English law and our law. The authorities which he would quote showed it had been held in England that this debenture scrip payable to bearer was negotiable security. Counsel quoted the cases of the Bechuanaland Exploration Company and the London Trading Company (1898, 2 Queen's Bench Division, 658), and Eidelshteyn v. Schuler (1902, 2 King's Bench Division, 144).

De Villiers, C.J., said he did not know whether the other side would deny that these were negotiable securities, but, assuming that they were negotiable securities, the important point was whether the knowledge of the bank of the circumstances under which they were issued would not foreclose the bank from recovering.

Mr. Benjamin said the bank took the debentures without knowledge that no consideration had been given for them, and therefore the bank took them free from any blemish which might attach to them. The condition (1) in the bond did not, he contended, apply to the issue of the £500,000, but applied only to any subsequent issue—to the remaining £500,000. Even if the first provision in the mortgage bond applied to the whole of the debentures, he contended that the company had full authority to issue debentures to the extent of £750,000. Then, supposing they did not have such authority, he submitted there was clear authority in the English law, which would apply in our law also, that it was not incumbent upon persons taking a debenture bond to inquire whether the bond had been validly issued by the company, provided that the issue of the bond by the company was intra vires of the power of the company. If it were within the power of the company to issue, and they did issue, then what were called domestic irregularities did not entitle the company to take up the position that they were not liable for these bonds. If a debenture issued by the company was, on the face of it, in order, then the company could not take up the position against the debenture-holder that there had been some irregularity in the issue of it which would estop the debenture-holder from claiming. Counsel cited Lindley, p. 218, Royal British Bank v. Twickenham (5 Ellis and Blackburn, 248, and 6 Ellis and Blackburn, 222 and 237), Oreder v. Gurney and Co. (4 Chancery Appeals, 460), Duff v. Tower Galvanising Company (Law Reports, 1901, 2, King's Bench Division, 314). There was not a tittle of evidence, counsel urged, to show that the bank knew that the company had parted with all their assets. The onus lay strictly upon the defendant, even if it affected the case, of showing that the plaintiffs at the time had express knowledge. Whatever knowledge the manager in Cape Town may have had, it could not, he contended, affect the transaction between the branch in London and J. Walker and Co. In other words, he contended that in these circumstances the knowledge of the agent could not bind the principal. Upon this point he quoted Wright on the Law of Principal and Agent, p. 352.

Mr. Searle said that the main defence in the case was that the bank proving now against the company were not bona fide holders for value of these debentures at all, and from the record he would argue that it was abundantly clear that they knew that these debentures were not really payable by the company at all, but were practically in the position of accommodation papers as between the company and the partnership, that the company was merely a nominal thing at the time, and that they were looking to the partnership, and not to the company, in these circumstances. This was the main defence, but he must not be taken to admit that English law applied in this case, or that these debentures were negotiable instruments. On that point he quoted 1 Lindley, 1902, pp. 85 and 300, Venables v. Baring (3, Chancery Division, 1892, p. 527), and Van Blommestein v. Halliday (21 Supreme Court Reports, p. 11). In the present case, however, the liquidator relied on the bank's knowledge, so it was hardly necessary to the case to deal with the points mentioned. The defence the defendant took up was this: that this scrip was illegally issued. At that time not only had the assets been taken over by the partnership, but the obligations had also been taken over by the partnership to the knowledge of the bank. The company had then practically ceased to exist, and the debentures were really in the nature of accommodation notes.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Supposing the partnership had acquired the right to the debentures while the company was a going concern, but that the debentures had not been issued before it ceased to be a going concern?]

Mr. Searle: That would raise another point. It is not suggested that that is the case.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But couldn't they issue debentures in respect of claims which existed before?]

Mr. Searle: No: I submit not.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The partnership had a claim for the issue of debentures, and if the company had ceased to be a going concern, surely they could say: "We insist on the issue of the debentures"? Is it your case that the Bank knew everything?]

Mr. Searle: Yes, that the Bank knew everything. Mr. Littlejohn, the manager of the bank here, knew everything, and I contend that Mr. Littlejohn's knowledge is the knowledge of the Bank in England.

De Villiers, C.J., said that unless fraud were alleged and proved he could see no illegality. If the defendant relied on fraud, then the plea must be altered.

Mr. Searle submitted that it was not necessary to plead fraud. Supposing it were a fictitious arrangement?

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then it would be fraudulent.]

Mr. Searle urged it was sufficient to prove that the Bank had knowledge of all the circumstances. The Bank having proved against the partnership, with whom the transaction really was, could not now claim against the company.

De Villiers, C.J., said he could not see that anything short of fraud could relieve the defendant.

Mr. Searle, in further argument, referred to African Banking Corporation v. Hills and Another (20 S.C.R., 599), London and Westminster Bank v. Receivers Grand Junction Railways (21 S.C.R., 404), Mowatt v. Castle Steel and Ironworks Company (34, Chancery Division, 58), Rogers v. Ingham (3 Chancery Division, 355).

Mr. Benjamin having been heard in reply,

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (May 6th).

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff bank, as the lawful holder of 785 debentures issued by the Grand Junction Railways, Limited, prays by this action for an order that the bank is entitled to prove and rank against the company, which is being wound up, in respect of the whole of the debentures for the capital and interest due thereon. Each of the debentures certifies that the bearer or the registered holder is entitled to receive the sum of £100, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, from the company, upon the security, and in terms of the first mortgage bond, of which a copy is printed on the back of the debenture. Under the bond the company acknowledges that it is indebted to certain trustees for the debenture-holders in the sum of £500,000, being part of the debentures to be issued for £1,000,000, and one of the conditions is that the company may create a further issue of preference capital not exceeding, I take it, the sum of £1,000,000, to rank concurrently with the issue of £500,000, provided that the total issue of debentures shall, in no case, amount to a total sum exceeding £2,500 per mile of railway contracted for, after due notice to and with the consent of the trustees, for the debenture-holders. The plea admits that as to 292 of the debentures the bank is entitled to rank concurrently with other debenture-holders, but, as to the remaining 493 debentures, the plea denies their legality for the following reasons: The company had, on the 20th July, 1896, ceded all its right and title to and interest in the contracts, which it had made with the Government for the construction of certain lines of railway to another company, which, for briefness sake, may be called the Thames Company, and in consideration of such cession the Thames Company, one Hills, and the firm of John Walker and Co., had agreed with the company in writing to pay all its debts, including 1,700 debentures, which had been issued, and to undertake all the liabilities and engagements of the company, on the condition that no debentures or shares were issued after that date without their sanction in writing. Subsequently these contracts were ceded to a certain partnership, which pledged to the plaintiff bank 785 debentures in the company as security for advances, and the plaintiff now alleges that at the date of the cession of 20th July, 1898, the company had no assets, save its right and interest in and to the contracts, which it ceded on that day, that up to that date 1,707 debentures had been lawfully issued by the company, that thereafter 1,000 debentures were unlawfully issued, and that as the plaintiff bank had knowledge of the cession and agreement of 20th July, 1898, and of the terms of the bond, and of the fact that the company had on the 20th July, 1898, no assets save its interests in the ceded contracts, the bank was not entitled to prove in respect of such debentures pledged to it by the partnership as formed part of the issue after that date. The plea does not allege, nor is there any proof that any of the debentures had been issued in excess of the powers of the company. It was decided by this Court in an action instituted by the present defendant against the receivers of the partnership that the state of the accounts between the company and the partnership was such that there was not legally claimable in respect of debentures lawfully issued more than the amount of 1,707 debentures, but there is no proof whatever that the plaintiff bank was aware of the state of accounts between the company and the partnership. The advances made by the bank, for the security of which the debentures now in question were pledged, were made by the London office of the bank, and there is evidence that Mr. Littlejohn the Cape Town manager of the bank was aware of the cession of the contracts, and that he did not have any high opinion of the value of the debentures as security, but it is by no means clear that the London office, which dealt directly with the company, shared in the opinion held by the local manager here. For the purpose of my decision in the present case, however, I am prepared to assume that all the information possessed by Littlejohn was known to the London office. The question still remains whether the plaintiff bank, as the holder of the debentures, is debarred by reason of such knowledge from succeeding in the present case. The plaintiff's contention is that the debentures in question are negotiable instruments and if it be necessary for the decision of the present case to decide the point I am prepared to hold that the contention is right. In the case of Van Blommestein v. Halliday (21 S.C.C., 11), I stated that I was not prepared to lay down as a rule of law that share certificates endorsed in blank by the registered owner are negotiable instruments. I pointed out that the original transferor, who is entered as owner in the certificate and register, continues to be the only shareholder recognised by the company until the transferee or holder for the time being obtains registration in his own name. The holder of a share warrant payable to bearer stands on a different footing, for, under the 64th section of Act 25 of 1892, such a share warrant entitles the bearer to the shares specified in it, and such shares may be transferred by the delivery of the share warrant, but the question whether a share warrant is negotiable does not now arise. The debentures now in question entitle the bearer or registered holder to receive, at its due date, the amount thereof and interest due thereon. They were issued under the provisions of Act 45 of 1895, the 6th section of which entitles the holder of a debenture covered by a bond, as those in question were, to enforce his rights under the debenture, and dispenses with the necessity of giving notice to the debtor of the cession of any debenture as would be required in the case of an ordinary cession of debt in order to protect the cessionary against the payment of the debt by the debtor to the original creditor. The company is bound to pay the amount when due to the holder, and against him the company could not plead in compensation a debt due by a former holder, or claim the benefit of a payment made to such former holder. Of course, if the company had issued the debentures without authority, it would not be bound to pay, but if, while acting within the powers conferred on it by its memorandum of association, it had been over-reached by those who induced it to issue the debentures in favour of the original holders, a subsequent bona fide holder is entitled to claim the amount due on the face of the debenture. Having regard to commercial practice in England as evidenced by recent cases, such as that of Edelstein v. Schuler (87 L.T.R., 204), to the terms of the Act under which the debentures were issued, to the reasons for the judgment given in Van Blommestein v. Halliday, and to the commercial practice in this colony, so far as I am entitled to take judicial cognisance of it, I am of opinion that the debentures may be regarded as negotiable instruments. This Court cannot alter or modify the law, but must apply existing principles of the law to the decision of fresh cases as they arise which are not specifically provided for. The Act 43 of 1895 does not in terms declare that debentures payable to bearer issued thereunder shall be deemed to be negotiable instruments, but it endows them with some of the qualities which are peculiar to negotiable instruments. The third section provides that debentures may be executed in duplicate, and when so executed shall be produced for registration to the Registrar of Deeds, who shall effect registration in accordance with the regulations. Under the 4th section debentures may be executed singly but specially described in a bond in favour of persons in trust for the debenture holders, but the 6th section specially enacts that every holder of a debenture covered by a bond shall be entitled to enforce his rights under such debenture precisely as though such debenture had been issued under section 3. The debentures now in question were covered by a bond and were not registered under section 3, but the bank, as holder, is entitled to enforce its rights precisely as though they had been duly registered under section 3. They are payable to bearer, and every reason which originally existed for attaching the quality of negotiability to the recognised negotiable instruments would equally apply to the debentures in question.

Coming next to the knowledge which the bank had of the previous dealings between the company and the partnership. I am of opinion that the bank was a bona fide holder of the debentures. Such notice as it had could not possibly affect it with knowledge that the company had improperly issued any of the debentures. The very document, dated July 20, 1898, which is relied upon by the defendant as showing that the company had no right to issue further debentures, reserves the right to issue such debentures provided that the sanction of the signatories was given in writing. It has been contended by Mr. Searle, on behalf of the defendant, that as the bank knew that, after the date of that document, the company was no longer a going concern, inasmuch as all its assets were thereby ceded, and all its liabilities taken over, it must be taken to have had notice that the subsequent debentures were improperly issued. But although its concessions from the Government were ceded it might, for aught the bank knew, have had other assets, and in any case the company did not go into liquidation until much later. It is not suggested that the sanction of the signatories to the document was not given to the issue of the fresh debentures, or that the bank knew that John Walker, one of the signatories, had misled the company into making such issue for more than was actually due. It may well be that the bank is not entitled to claim from the partnership the full amount of the debentures pledged to the bank, but that is a matter between the bank and the partnership. As between the plaintiff and the defendant, the bank is, in my opinion, the lawful and bona fide holder of the debentures in question, and, as such, is entitled to prove in respect thereof, and the judgment must, therefore, be for the plaintiff bank, with costs.

[Plaintiff's attorneys: Findlay and Tait. Defendants': Moore and Son.]

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

	1907.
ENGELBRECHT AND ANOTHER V. ROSSOUW, SEN. AND OTHERS.	May 2nd.
ENGELBRECHT V. ROSSOUW, JUN. AND ANOTHER.	" 3rd.
	" 6th.
	" 7th.
	" 8th.
	" 10th.

The hearing of these actions was consolidated. The first action was for a declaration of rights with respect to a boundary line on a farm in Namaqualand, and £500 damages for trespass against Rossouw, and in the second action plaintiff claimed £1,000 damages for assault.

The declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiffs are Andries Francois Engelbrecht and Jacobus Adriaan Engelbrecht, farmers in the division of Namaqualand. The defendants are Gideon Joshua Rossouw, Johannes Jacobus Petrus Beukes, Meyer Kaplan, and Dirk Jacobus Kotze, farmers in the division of Namaqualand.

2. The plaintiffs are respectively owners of one-fourth and one-sixteenth undivided shares in the remaining extent of the farm Ezelsfontein. The first defendant is the owner of the adjoining farm now called Rheebofsfontein, formerly a part of the farm Ezelsfontein. The defendants Beukes, Kaplan, and Kotze are respectively owners of one-third, one-sixth, and one twelfth undivided shares in the remaining extent of the farm Ezelsfontein.

3. Prior to 1877 Ezelsfontein, together with certain other properties, were owned in undivided shares by defendant Rossouw, Andries Francois Engelbrecht, sen., the father of the plaintiffs, and one Hermanus Albertus Rossouw.

4. On or about 1877 the said owners agreed to sub-divide the properties, and in accordance with the agreement the farm now called Rheebofsfontein, part of the farm of Ezelsfontein, was allotted to the defendant Rossouw, and the remaining extent of the farm Ezelsfontein was allotted to Andries Francois Engelbrecht, sen.

5. Andries Francois Engelbrecht, sen., has since the sub-division from time to time transferred the remaining extent of the farm Ezelsfontein in undivided shares to the plaintiffs and to defendants Beukes, Kaplan, and Kotze.

7. One of the terms of the agreement of sub-division in or about 1877 was, that the boundary line between the farms Rheebofsfontein and the remaining extent of Ezelsfontein was to run in a straight line from the north-western corner of the said farm Ezelsfontein, marked "G" on the said plan, to a point marked "F" on the said plan, and a sub-divisional survey was accordingly made and a beacon erected at the point "F."

8. The boundary line "G F" was recognised and accepted as the boundary between Rheebofsfontein and the remaining extent of Ezelsfontein by the respective owners of the farm and their successors from the date of the sub-division until 1904, and Andries Francois Engelbrecht, sen., and plaintiffs did continuously and peaceably occupy and cultivate their lands right up to the boundary line without protest or let or hindrance whatsoever until the year 1904.

9. On 23rd November, 1904, defendant Rossouw wrongfully and unlawfully trespassed on the remaining extent of the farm Ezelsfontein, and caused a troop of about fifty horses and donkeys to be driven across the boundary line "G F" on to the plaintiffs' cultivated lands, and about November, 1905, defendant Rossouw by himself or his servants again crossed the boundary line "G F" and trespassed on the remaining extent of the farm Ezelsfontein and spanned a wire fence over a portion thereof.

10. By reason of the trespasses the plaintiffs' crops on the lands were destroyed, and the plaintiffs have been kept out of the use of the cultivated lands, and have suffered damage to the extent of £500.

11. The line "G F" is the true and proper boundary between the said farms, but the defendant Rossouw claims that the line "G Z" marked on the said plan, and not the line "G F," is the true boundary.

12. The defendants Beukes, Kaplan, and Kotze are joined in this suit in order that all parties interested may be before the Court, but no costs are claimed against any of these defendants who do not dispute the plaintiffs' claim.

Wherefore the plaintiffs claim: (a) A declaration of rights; (b) a declaration that the straight line "G F" is the true and proper boundary line between the farm Rheebofsfontein and the remaining extent of the farm Ezelsfontein; (c) £500 as damages for the trespasses against the defendant Rossouw; (d) an interdict restraining the defendant Rossouw from trespassing upon the plaintiffs' said property; (e) alternative relief; (f) costs of suit.

The defendants' plea was as follows: In 1875 an agreement to sub-divide the properties was come to between the owners according to which Rossouw was to get 3,000 morgen of Ezelsfontein, the remainder being allotted to A. Engelbrecht, sen. The surveyor employed did not cut off 3,000 morgen as agreed upon, but cut off only 2,641 morgen per diagram framed by him, but in order to save costs of a further survey the defendant in 1877, accepted transfer of the 2,641 morgen, as per the diagram. Defendants admit the remaining extent of Ezelsfontein is held in undivided shares by the plaintiffs and the defendants, Beukes, Kaplan, and Kotze, but they deny the correctness of the plan attached to the declaration and the rest of the paragraph. They attached a correct plan, and in reconvention to have "A X" on their plan declared to be the proper boundary line between the farms and £500 damages for trespass.

Plaintiffs filed a replication and a plea to the claim in reconvention.

The plaintiff's declaration in the second case was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is Andries Francois Engelbrecht, a farmer and part-owner of the farm Ezelsfontein, in the division of Namaqualand. The defendants are Gideon Joshua Russouw and Hermias Albertus Russouw, farmers residing on the farm of Wilgenhouarivier, which adjoins the farm of Ezelsfontein.

2. On or about the 2nd November, 1904, the defendants wrongfully and unlawfully entered and trespassed upon that portion of the said farm of Ezelsfontein in the occupation of the plaintiff, and drove a flock of sheep and goats on to certain cultivated lands thereon belonging to the plaintiff, thereby doing considerable damage to plaintiff's lands and crops.

3. On or about the 23rd November, 1904, the defendants again wrongfully and unlawfully entered upon the said farm Ezelsfontein and drove a number of horses and mules on to the said cultivated lands belonging to the plaintiff, thereby doing considerable damage to the plaintiff's land and crops.

4. The plaintiff attempted to drive the said horses and mules out of the said lands, whereupon the defendants set upon the plaintiff and violently assaulted him.

5. By reason of the said assault the plaintiff was seriously injured, and has suffered great pain and damage.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims: (a) £1,000 as damages sustained by reason of the said trespass and the said assault; (b) alternative relief; and (c) costs of suit.

The defendants' plea was as follows:

1. As to paragraph 1, the defendants say that the plaintiff is the registered proprietor in undivided shares with certain five others of the remaining extent of the said farm of Ezelsfontein by certain two deeds of transfer dated respectively the 5th day of October, 1899, and the 7th day of December, 1903.

2. On or about the said dates the defendants, acting lawfully and with the authority of the registered proprietor of the said farm of Wilgenhoutarivier, one Gideon Joshua Rossouw, entered upon certain portion of the said farm and pastured certain sheep and goats and drove certain horses and mules thereupon. On or about the 23rd day of November, 1904, the plaintiff wrongfully and unlawfully interfered with the defendants in their said lawful acts, trespassed upon the said farm and attempted to drive the said horses and mules out of the said land, and the defendants, acting lawfully, resisted the plaintiff in his said wrongfull and unlawful interference and endeavoured to prevent him from so driving out the said horses and mules.

Wherefore the defendants pray that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Watermeyer) for plaintiff. Mr. Upton (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) for defendants.

A clerk from the Deeds Office produced the title deeds, and stated that the four farms were sub-divided in 1877. Certain documents were put in containing two diagrams together with the transfer deeds.

Arthur C. G. Oakes, of the Surveyor-General's Office, produced the original grants to Hermanus Albertus Engelbrecht of the four farms, the first two in 1843 and the others in 1844.

Garwood Alston, Government Land Surveyor, who has been practising for some forty-two years, stated he knew Namaqualand for the last thirteen years. In April, 1905, he went up to make a survey of the property in dispute at the request of the two plaintiffs. He went into the history of the matter, and traced the property Ezelsfontein from the original grant, and made a compilation plan showing the sub-division made between the three owners of the four farms in 1877. The plan showed the relative position of the four farms when the sub-division was made in 1877. The material he worked upon was the diagram attached to the original grant. Witness gave evidence at some length on the plan he prepared.

Re-examined: Since 1878 the Surveyor-General's Office adopted the principle of the red line data, enabling a surveyor to know where the actual and proper line was.

Dr. Cowan, District Surgeon of Namaqualand, gave evidence on the question of assault. The defendant described to him the nature of the assault, and his condition bore out his statement.

Six months after the examination witness found the defendant in a bad state of health. Recently he had been examined in Cape Town, and witness found him in a better state of health than ever; there was no permanent injury, although the defendant still complained of a pain in the back.

Postea (May 10th.). The voluminous evidence having been concluded, and counsel heard in argument on the facts, Maasdorp, J., gave judgment for the plaintiffs on the first claim in the declaration, £20 damages in respect of the second, and £5 damages to the plaintiff in the second action, the defendants to pay costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorney: D. Tennant. Defendant's Attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ESTATE MARSH. } 1907.
} May 2nd.

Mr. Inchbold moved on the petition of the executor of estate Marsh for leave to sue one Susannah Jackson by edictal citation for provisional sentence on a certain mortgage bond for £500, and to attach the property hypothecated ad fundandum jurisdictionem. Defendant was stated to be now resident at Ilford, Essex, England. The bond had become due by reason of non-payment of interest as stipulated.

Leave to sue by edict granted, and property attached, citation returnable on the 2nd August, 1907, to be served personally on defendant and her agents in this colony.

In re RECREATION SYNDICATE, LTD.

Mr. Gutsche moved for confirmation of the third and final report of the liquidators. He stated that all the assets had been distributed, with the exception of £11 2s. 5d., reserved to cover the expenses of this application. The liquidator also applied for an order for dissolution of the company and destruction of the books.

The Court ordered that the report be confirmed, that the company be dissolved, and that the liquidator be granted permission to destroy the books.

Ex parte DANEMAN BROS.

Mr. Pymont moved on the petition of Daneman Bros., as creditors in the insolvent estate of A. P. Esterhuyzen, farmer, of Ceres, for the appointment of a new trustee, to take the place of Mr. Henry Carson, deceased.

Order granted, authorising the Master to call a meeting of creditors to elect a fresh trustee.

Ex parte SMIT.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for an interdict restraining one Wilfred Frewen, of Venterstad, as executor testamentary of the estate of the late Heinrich F. J. Stucke, from parting with the proceeds of certain insurance policies. Petitioner stated that on the 9th April he was appointed provisional trustee of Stucke's estate, which was surrendered as insolvent by respondent as executor testamentary. Frewen had obtained the proceeds of certain three policies of assurance effected on the life of Stucke, and in surrendering the estate he made a note on the schedule to the effect that the proceeds of certain life policies were not brought up, the same having to be dealt with under Act 13, 1891. Petitioner believed that Stucke was insolvent many years before his death, and that he used to pay the premiums of the said insurance policies at a time when his estate was insolvent, and the said payments were therefore made in fraud of the creditors. In terms of section 22 of Act 13, 1891, petitioner had a right of action against the executor in respect of the said policies. Shortly before his death Stucke promised in writing to cede one or more of the policies to his chief creditors (Blaine and Co.) as collateral security for the amount due to them, and petitioner verily believed that correspondence which has passed between deceased and his said creditors would constitute a valid cession, although such cession was not endorsed on the policy. After the third meeting of creditors, petitioner intended, if authorised by the creditors, to institute an action against Frewen to recover the proceeds, but he apprehended that unless interdicted, Frewen would in the meantime part with the said proceeds to the heirs, before petitioner was able to institute an action to have it declared that the policies formed part of the assets of the insolvent estate.

Rule nisi granted, to operate as an interim interdict, restraining respondent from parting with the moneys pending an action to be instituted, leave reserved to respondent, if so advised, to move to discharge the rule, action to be instituted before the 15th June next, otherwise the rule stands discharged.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

BERNING V. KUSWAYE. { 1907.
May 2nd.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £30, with interest from the 1st July, 1905, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable. Defendant was sued by edictal citation, and had been served personally.

Order granted.

JOOSTE V. JOOSTE

{ 1907.
May 2nd.
" 6th.
" 13th.

Restitution of conjugal rights—
Divorce—Malicious desertion —Sentence of imprisonment for life.

The defendant had been convicted of murder and sentenced to death, which sentence was lawfully commuted to imprisonment for life.

Held, that his wife, the plaintiff, was entitled to a decree of divorce.

Report of Corbeau v. Corbeau in 2 C.T.R., 208, corrected.

This was an action brought by Demona Anna Jooste, of Worcester, against her husband, Hendrik E. Jooste, for a decree of divorce by reason of his having been sentenced to imprisonment for life.

Mr. Russell was for plaintiff; defendant appeared under the charge of a warder.

Mr. Pohl said that he should like to appear on behalf of defendant, although the latter had been barred, to raise the question as to whether this was a good ground of divorce. He submitted that imprisonment for life did not necessarily mean that defendant would be kept in prison for life.

Buchanan, J., said that Mr. Pohl would be given leave to raise the legal defence, although defendant had been barred.

The declaration set out that the parties were married on the 28th December, 1903, at Cape Town, under ante-nuptial contract, and that the said marriage still subsisted. There was issue of the marriage one child, aged two years. After the marriage plaintiff and defendant lived together at Worcester until about September, 1905, when defendant left for a temporary purpose for German South-West Africa, and returned in September, 1906, and similarly again left for German South-West Africa in October, 1906. Thereafter, on or about the 20th February, 1907, defendant was tried, found guilty, and convicted of the crime of murder by the High Court of Griqualand, and duly and lawfully sentenced to death by the said Court,

The said sentence was thereafter, on or about the 15th March, 1907, lawfully commuted by His Excellency the Governor of this colony to imprisonment for life, with hard labour. Plaintiff prayed for a decree of divorce, with custody and maintenance of the child, and costs.

W. T. Birch, clerk in charge of the Marriage Register, Colonial Secretary's Office, gave formal evidence of registration of the marriage.

Plaintiff said that she was married to defendant on the 28th December, 1905. Afterwards they lived together at Worcester, but not on happy terms. In September, 1906, defendant went to German South-West Africa. She had letters from him while he was away. He returned about a year afterwards, and remained in Worcester about one month, at the end of which time he went back again. Witness knew that he was going away. She received four letters from him while he was away. Subsequently she had a letter from him while he was incarcerated in Upington Gaol. In this letter he spoke about the Ferreira raid. She also had letters from him after his conviction in Kimberley. Neither witness nor defendant had any property.

By the Court: The man in court (pointing to defendant) was her husband.

Defendant (in reply to the Court) said that he was convicted along with the Ferreira gang, and was afterwards reprieved.

Plaintiff (in answer to Mr. Pohl) said that she did not take any steps in connection with the petition for a reprieve of the defendant. No one in Worcester had been to consult her in the matter.

George C. S. Foster, superintendent of the Breakwater Convict Station, produced the warrant under which defendant had been sent to the Breakwater.

By Mr. Pohl: Witness had had no trouble with the defendant. The time that a life-sentence prisoner spent in gaol varied a good deal. The longest term he had known was 20 years and a few days, while the shortest was one year and two months. He had known several cases in which life-sentence prisoners had been imprisoned for two, three, or five years.

[Buchanan, J. (to Mr. Pohl): That does not affect the legal question one bit.]

By the Court: Witness had known prisoners die in gaol while undergoing a life sentence. They took the life sentence for purposes of classification as a term of 20 years.

This concluded the evidence.

Buchanan, J.: This is a matter of considerable importance, and I think it would be desirable, on first impression, to have it argued before a full Bench. There are a good many authorities on the legal question. The further hearing of the case will be postponed, and leave will be given to set it down for hearing before a full Bench in the First Division on Monday next. This is a matter in which the Crown is materially interested, and I think the Crown should be heard as amicus curiae.

Postea (May 6th).

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN, and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

Mr. Russell in argument, quoted Schorer's Note on Grotius, 1-5-18, Voet 24-2-13, and Gaill, 1-1-44.

De Villiers, C.J., said he supposed that in Holland perpetual imprisonment meant perpetual imprisonment. Was that so in this case?

Mr. Russell said he would submit that the Court really could not go into these points.

[Hopley, J.: You say it is because there is no possibility of marriage obligations being carried out for 20 years that she is entitled to a divorce?]

Mr. Russell: I don't know twenty years at all in this matter, my lord. It is a sentence of imprisonment for life. Counsel quoted Leyser, vol. 5, p. 266. Merula 4-2-8. Van der Keessel, Thesis 89, Van der Lindens Institutes (Juta's Translation 27), 1-3-9, Gewysden, 1-32-247, Van Zyl's Judicial Practice, 495, Maasdorp's Institutes, vol. 1, p. 81, and referred to the case of Neffler v. Neffler, heard in the High Court at Bloemfontein on July 25, 1906.

Mr. Pohl quoted from Van der Lindens's Institutes, 31, and said that in the times when the Courts of Holland decreed that imprisonment for life was a ground for divorce, the sentence really meant imprisonment for life, and he knew of no instance where there had been release.

Hopley, J., said that one had read of men sentenced to imprisonment for life under one sovereign being released and honoured upon another sovereign coming to the throne.

Mr. Pohl said that the prison records here did not disclose a case in which a person had been kept in imprisonment for over 20 years.

Mr. Russell, in reply, said that the rule was that the person sentenced to imprisonment for life died in prison, and it was, therefore, the exception for such a person to be released. He would not contend that the plaintiff was entitled to a divorce if a pardon and release were granted before action was brought.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (May 13th).

De Villiers, C.J.: The facts of this case are not in dispute. The plaintiff and defendant were married in Cape Town, with ante-nuptial contract, on the 28th of December, 1903. On the 20th of January, 1907, the defendant was convicted of the crime of murder, and sentenced to death by a competent Court, and thereafter the sentence was commuted by His Excellency the Governor to one of imprisonment for life, with hard labour. The defendant is now undergoing imprisonment, and the plaintiff claims that the existence of a sentence of imprisonment for life entitles her to obtain a decree of divorce against her husband, and the custody of the minor child of the marriage.

Before the end of the 18th century it was firmly established in the Netherlands that there are two grounds of divorce, and two grounds only, namely, adultery (including, according to some writers, sodomy) and malicious desertion, and I am not aware of any decision of this Court recognising any other ground of divorce as distinguished from a decree of nullity of marriage. As to malicious desertion the invariable practice of this Court long before I became Chief Justice was not to grant a decree of divorce unless there had been a previous disobedience of an order of the Court ordering the deserting spouse to return to or receive the plaintiff for the purpose of cohabitation. Another practice was not to grant such a decree of restitution of conjugal rights where the plaintiff deliberately declared, in an action for such restitution, that he or she would not take back or live with the deserting spouse should she or he obey the Order of Court. The only change made after I joined the Bench was that in 1885 a Rule of Court was framed dispensing with the necessity of two separate actions for restitution, and for divorce. Accordingly the practice now is that on granting a decree of restitution of conjugal rights a rule is made calling on the defendant to show cause why, failing compliance with the decree, a decree of divorce shall not be granted. It was considered at the time when the Rule of Court was framed that it was part of the substantive law of the land that no decree of divorce can be granted for malicious desertion unless there has been a disobedience of a prior judicial decree of restitution of conjugal rights, and that any alteration of the law in this respect, if desirable, should be made by the Legislature and not by Rule of Court. It appears from a note in the "South African Law Journal," of February, 1907, that at one time a different practice was allowed in the Transvaal, and that in Natal, at the present time, where the defendant had been guilty of cruelty to the plaintiff before the act of desertion the prior order of restitution is dispensed with. It does not appear from the note whether this alteration was made by Rule of Court or by Statute. In the case of Krantz v. Krantz (T. Rep.), according to the same note, the defendant in a suit for judicial separation asked in reconvention for a decree of divorce on the ground of the plaintiff's malicious desertion, but the Transvaal Supreme Court directed an amendment of the claim in reconvention so as to include a prayer for restitution with an alternative prayer for divorce in default of compliance. The Court thus reverted to the practice of this Court, but upon the other point of practice to which I have referred, it is not quite clear whether the Court intended to depart from our practice. The plaintiff in reconvention said in answer to the Court, that he had no desire to live with his wife again, and could not bring himself to do so. These words are somewhat indefinite, but certainly if the Court intended to lay down that a distinct notice given by the plaintiff that he would not give effect to the order which he himself prayed for should not debar him from relief, I fear that this Court, however desirous to assist in securing uniformity of practice, cannot accept the case as a precedent. The learned Chief Justice (Innes) is reported in the "Star" report to have said: "In Corbeau v. Corbeau (2 C.T.R., 208) the plaintiff said that if the Court made the order for restitution he would still not be inclined to take his wife back. The Chief Justice is reported to have said that that answer disposed of the matter, and that the order must be refused." On reference, however, to the record itself I find, in the handwriting of my brother Buchanan, that what was actually said by the plaintiff was: "If she will come, I will not receive her." That, of course, is a very different matter from merely expressing a disinclination to receive her. In refusing to grant the order I was supported by Buchanan, J., who had taken part in the case of Gibbon v. Gibbon, to which I shall presently refer, and by Upington, J., and our judgment proceeded not on the ground that the Court had a right to inquire into the mental attitude of the plaintiff, but on the ground that the Court should not knowingly allow its procedure to be completely stultified. In England, no doubt, it has been held in Scott v. Scott (34 L.J.P. and M., p. 23) that a decree of restitution should not be refused on the ground that the suit was instituted not that he might regain the society of his wife but for some collateral object, but there is nothing in the judgment of the Judge Ordinary from which it could be inferred that the decree would have been granted even if the petitioner had informed the Court that he would not perform his part in giving effect to the decree which he himself prayed for. So also in the case of Gibbon v. Gibbon (2 E.D.C., 280) it was held by the Eastern Districts Court that it is not a ground for refusing restitution that the suit is instituted for the ulterior object of obtaining a divorce. It is true that Shippard, J., in his judgment, says "the plaintiff's open avowal in court that the suit he is instituting for conjugal rights is a sham and that he would not under any circumstances receive his wife or return to cohabitation with her, ought not to be regarded as prejudicing his legal right to the formal decree which he now seeks." The other judges (Barry, J.-P., and Buchanan, J.) were more guarded in their utterances, and confined themselves to the case which they had actually to deal with. According to the report itself the plaintiff had admitted, in answer to the Court, that the proceedings were instituted for the purpose of obtaining a divorce, and that he did not wish his wife to return to him, but that is far from saying that "he would not, under any circumstances, receive his wife or return to cohabitation." I confess that the remarks of Bristowe, J., in Venter v. Venter (1903, T.H.C., 381) seem to me more in accordance with sound practice. The plaintiff in that case stated that she would not take her husband back even if he were willing to come, and the learned judge refused her relief, saying that "it would be turning the administration of justice into a farce to make an order which the person who asks for it openly states that he will not permit to be obeyed." Upon this remark the learned Chief Justice of the Transvaal made the following comment in Krantz v. Krantz: "The true position, with great respect, seems to me to be that an order for restitution does not command the plaintiff to do anything at all; it directs the defendant to restore conjugal rights, and the plaintiff cannot prevent the order being obeyed." It is quite true that the order does not command the plaintiff to do anything, but the plaintiff, by asking for a decree of restitution of conjugal rights impliedly undertakes, without any formal tender, that, whatever his own wishes or inclinations may be, he will in fact perform his part in making the order operative. Surely the direction to the defendant "to restore conjugal rights" cannot be carried out if the plaintiff himself actively prevents such restoration, and in that sense, Bristowe, J., seems to have been substantially correct in speaking of the plaintiff preventing the order from being obeyed. If instead of the word "obeyed" he had used the expression "made operative," his remark would have been literally, as well as substantially, correct. I quite agree in the view that in the great majority of cases the order for a restitution of conjugal rights is asked for with the object of obtaining a divorce, and that the mental attitude of the plaintiff cannot affect his or her right to relief. Cases have frequently occurred in this Court in which the plaintiff has candidly stated that she or he would rather not have the defendant return, but such a statement has never been taken to imply that if the defendant does return the plaintiff would not live with him or her. In the course of his daily duties every one has often to perform acts which he would rather not perform, but which as a matter of duty he does perform. But where a plaintiff, in asking this Court for relief, informs the Court at the same time that he will not avail himself of such relief if granted, but will, on the contrary, prevent the order for his relief from being carried into effect, it has hitherto been considered that there was but one course open to the Court, and that is to refuse such relief. Sooner than grant the relief under such circumstances I would prefer that the preliminary decree of restitution should be dispensed with altogether.

The question then arises whether, in the present case, where no such preliminary decree is asked for, the Court can grant a decree of divorce. Clearly, if the action were founded on malicious desertion such a previous decree would be necessary, but the action is founded on the defendant's condemnation to imprisonment for life as a separate and substantial ground of relief. Under the Roman law in Justinian's time, banishment for life did not put an end to the marriage, and Groenewegen in his Comment on the novel treating of this subject (Nov. 22, 13) does not mention this rule as having been abrogated in his time. Merula in his "Manner van Proceden" (4, 2, 9, 8) says that as a person who is sentenced to perpetual imprisonment thereby undergoes a civil death, a woman whose husband has been so sentenced is considered in law to be a widow, but if this doctrine be strictly correct, there would be no necessity whatever for a decree of divorce. Yet we find that continual applications were made, with varying success, to the Legislature by women whose husbands had been sentenced to life-long imprisonment for what we would now term a private act releasing them from the bonds of marriage. The Dutch writers continued to lay it down as undoubted law that there were only two grounds of divorce, namely, adultery and malicious desertion. In the year 1800, however, we find Van der Keesel referring with evident approval to a decision of the Supreme Court of Holland and Vriesland to the effect that a wife whose husband has been sentenced to lifelong imprisonment for a criminal offence is entitled to a decree of divorce. In his Dictata the same writer mentions several cases in which successful applications had previously been made to the States of Holland for divorce on the ground of imprisonment of the husband, but the case of Kalkman v. Kalkman, which he refers to as a celebrated case, was the first in which a judicial decree was granted on the ground of such imprisonment. It would appear from the report of the case in Van der Linden's "Collection of Remarkable Decisions" (No. 32) that the plaintiff first applied for relief to the States of Holland and West Vriesland, but they referred the matter to the ordinary jurisdiction. Thereupon she brought an action in the Court of Holland, which held that she was not entitled to a decree of divorce. On appeal, however, to the Supreme Court, she succeeded, on the 12th of November, 1793, in obtaining a decree of divorce, with leave to marry again. The grounds of the judgment are not stated, but Van der Linden supports the judgment mainly on the ground that the husband had by his own act deprived himself of the power to perform his marital duties, and that the Court, while not adhering to the strict letter of the law, gave effect to its true spirit by granting the decree. Whether this reasoning be good or bad, the case seems to have been accepted by him also as conclusive in regard to the state of the law in his time. In his Institutes (I, 3, 9) he mentions perpetual imprisonment as one of the legal grounds of divorce. The question has not arisen in this Court for decision, but on the 25th of July, 1906, a Full Court in the Orange River Colony, in the case of Neff v. Neff, granted a decree of divorce to the plaintiff, whose husband had been sentenced to lifelong imprisonment for a brutal assault which he had committed on her. The newspaper report does not state the grounds of the judgment, but as the only authorities cited were founded upon the case in the Supreme Court of Holland, I take it that the Court accepted it as establishing the later law of the Netherlands. The real difficulty, to my mind, in the present case, arises from the circumstance that a sentence of imprisonment for life is not in practice carried out in this colony to the letter where the prisoner survives the sentence for twenty years. Where, moreover, as in the present case, the crime partakes of a semi-political nature, the tendency always is considerably to curtail the period of imprisonment. After full consideration, however, I am of opinion that the humaner treatment which prisoners receive in modern times should not weigh with the Court in the decision of the present case. A wife who is truly attached to her husband would probably be strengthened in her attachment by misfortunes, which overtake him, even by his own fault, and would be content to remain his wife in the hope that the clemency of the Crown may still enable them to live together as husband and wife. If, however, she has lost her affection for him, it is too much to expect of her that she will continue to be the wife of a man sentenced to imprisonment for life in the vague belief that the clemency of the Crown may some day restore to her the society of the husband whom she has no desire to live with. In view, therefore, of the authorities which have been cited, I am quite prepared to follow the precedent established by the Supreme Court of the Orange River Colony. The Court will grant a decree of divorce, and declare the plaintiff to be entitled to the custody of the child of the marriage.

Buchanan, J., said: The object which this Court has in view in this case is to discover what is the law applicable thereto. The facts, as His Lordship has pointed out, are not in dispute. The question is, whether a sentence of imprisonment for life carries with it the right to the innocent spouse to claim a decree of divorce. We have no Statute on the subject, and therefore we have to go to the Common Law. The older authorities are unanimous that there are only two causes for which a divorce can be obtained, namely, adultery and malicious desertion. But as time progressed in Holland, there is no doubt that the Courts, with the sanction of the Legislature, extended the law to other causes founded on similar reasons. The decisions of the Dutch Courts before the cession of this Colony to Great Britain have frequently been recognised in this Court as declaring the common law which was introduced into this Colony. On the point under investigation, it has been shown before the cession of the Colony, after several statutory declarations applicable to special cases, the Legislature referred the matter to the Courts, whereupon the Supreme Court of Holland declared that a sentence of perpetual imprisonment did in law entitle the innocent spouse to claim a divorce. Van der Linden, in a collection made by him of special decisions, reports the judgment of the Courts of Holland, and in his subsequent book on the Institutes, states his view of the law to be that if the grounds of a claim can, by an extended interpretation, be brought within the reason of the first two causes I have mentioned, they are sufficient to support a claim to a divorce. He expressly states that the commission of an unnatural crime, or a sentence to perpetual imprisonment, etc., are good grounds for a divorce. The two causes he mentions are neither adultery nor malicious desertion, except by constructive or extended interpretation of those terms. In the adjoining colony of the Orange River Colony, in a recent case, the Supreme Court has recognised this extended interpretation of the law, and I find that on reference to the Transvaal Statutes that it is expressly enacted that the law-book of Van der Linden, in so far as it is not in conflict with the Grondwet, "shall remain the law book in this State." If that is so, it is an express recognition that the law of Holland as stated by Van der Linden in his Institutes, is the law in force in the adjoining Transvaal Colony also. That this provision of law is not repugnant to modern jurisprudence in other countries, I find that in Germany the Prussian Code provides for decrees of divorce being granted for opprobrious crimes for which a spouse has been sentenced to imprisonment or committed to the House of Correction. This code even goes further and says that if one spouse wilfully and falsely accuses the other of such a crime, such false accusation is of itself sufficient to justify the Court in granting a decree of divorce to the other spouse.

I am not prepared to adopt the German code in its entirety, but I mention this simply to show that the law recognised in Holland, and which has been recognised in the Orange River Colony and the Transvaal, is also recognised in other civilised countries. I think it is desirable, if we can find no good reason for differing with the decisions of other Courts in their declaration of what was the law of Holland which was introduced into South Africa, that we should, if possible, give decisions in the same tenor and spirit agreeing with the decisions of the other superior Courts of South Africa, in their construction of the common law. True we are not bound by decisions of the Orange River Colony and of the Transvaal Courts, but we may take them as aiding us. In this case I agree that the decree of divorce should be granted.

The Chief Justice added that Mr. Justice Hopley also concurred.

Mr. Russell (for plaintiff) raised the question of the claim for maintenance of the child.

The Chief Justice said that the Court would grant absolution from the instance on that part of the claim.

[Plaintiff's attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn. Defendant: In person.]

Er parte SPANGENBERG. { 1907.
May 3rd.

Intestate succession—Representation—Collaterals—Next of kin—Bona vacantia—Paternal and maternal line.

S. died, leaving no ascendants or descendants, or brothers or sisters, but leaving relatives, including the petitioner, on the mother's side, and one half of her inheritance was in the case of in re Stephens (16 S.C.R., 555) awarded to the maternal relatives. They did not in that case press for the paternal share, but the petitioner now applied for payment to them of the remaining half of the estate on the ground that there was a complete failure of relatives on the side of the father of the intestate.

Held, that on clear proof of such failure, the relatives on the maternal side would be entitled to the whole of the inheritance.

Dr. Greer moved for an order directing that the paternal portion of the estate of the late Mrs. Esther Stephens, amounting to £1,974 13s. 10d., should be distributed amongst the heirs on the maternal side. It appeared that Mrs. Stephens perished in the wreck of the Drummond Castle off Ushant, leaving no brothers or sisters, and both her parents being dead. In 1899, by order of the Court, in re Stephens (16 S.C., 555), half her estate was paid out to the maternal relatives and the other half was awarded to the paternal relatives, and paid into the hands of the Master. Frequent advertisements had been published by the Master, but no relatives on the paternal side had appeared to make claim. The maternal relatives now claimed that, the paternal relatives having failed, they were entitled to succeed to the whole inheritance. Mrs. Stephens was the daughter of one William Charles Roberts, who came to Cape Town from London in 1831, and died here in 1848 at the age of 33 years. He was described as a poor tradesman, of London. The affidavits showed that he came here as an immigrant from an orphanage, and that he never communicated with any relatives in England. Of his marriage, two children were born, namely, Esther, afterwards Mrs. Stephens, and a boy, who died at the age of ten years. The number of heirs now claiming was eight.

In argument, Dr. Greer submitted that where there was a total failure of relatives on one side, the other side was entitled to succeed, and that the fiscus only came in when there was a total failure of blood relations. He quoted Maasdorp's Institutes (Vol. I., p. 114), Nathan's Common Law (Vol. III., p. 1,959), Voet (38, 17, 27), Groenewegen (10, 10, 4), Grotius 2, 28, 6 (Maasdorp's Translation, p. 129), Schorer, Note 191 (Maasdorp's Translation, p. 494), ex parte Booysen (F. 188), ex parte Stephens (16 S.C., 555), Raubenheimer v. Van Breda's Executors (F. 119), ex parte Leeuw (22 S.C., 340), and Tenant's Notary's Manual (5th edition, p. 177).

De Villiers, C.J.: The Court has already decided in the case of in re Stephens (16 S.C.R. 555) that one-half of the estate of the late Mrs. Stephens, who was drowned in the wreck of the Drummond Castle, should be paid to her maternal relatives, and that the other half should go to her paternal relatives. There was a prayer in that case for the distribution of the unclaimed inheritance on the maternal side, but that part of the motion was not pressed. It now appears that no relatives are to be found of the father of the intestate, and the question must be definitely decided whether, failing such relatives, the maternal relatives should now receive the remaining half also of the intestate's estate. Under the Roman Law there would have been no doubt on the point, for it was expressly provided that the estates of deceased persons shall only be transferred to the fiscus as bona vacantia if the intestate has left no heir of either the paternal or maternal line (Cod. 10, 10-4). According to Grotius, however, the customs of Holland and Zeeland had departed from this practice, with the result that failing either line, the share which would otherwise devolve on the relatives of that line devolves on the Crown. This view he maintained in an opinion given by him in 1612 (De Bruyn's Opinions of Grotius, p. 351), as well as in two passages of his Introduction (2-28-6 and 2-30-3). Groenewegen, in his Comment on the Codo (10-10-4) does not agree with Grotius, but maintains that failing relatives of the one line, the relatives of the other line should take the whole inheritance. Voet also lays down that, seeing that under the Schependom's law as amended in 1580, one half of the inheritance goes to the paternal line, and the other half to the maternal line, the fiscus should not be allowed to take the half, but the whole should be awarded as by jus accrescendi to that line, which is alone in existence (Voet 38-27). According to Van der Kessel (Thes. 367) the Schependom's law, which in Zeeland admitted the fiscus to the share of the failing line, had even there been overruled in practice, and had since, under an Ordinance of December, 1786, ceased altogether to have operation. Chief Justice Maasdorp also in his Institutes of Cape Law (Vol. I., Book I., ch. 11, par. 5) says that "upon failure of all relations on one side the whole inheritance goes to the surviving side." The weight of authority therefore, is in favour of the view that the relatives on the maternal side should on failure of relatives on the paternal side be entitled to the whole of the inheritance. It is a view which is perfectly reasonable, and would, I feel confident, be shared in by the other South African Courts. In the present case, however, great care should be taken to ascertain whether paternal relatives may not still be forthcoming. The Court will grant a rule calling on all persons concerned to show cause on the 30th August next why the next of kin of the late Esther Stephens (born Roberts) on the maternal side shall not be declared to be entitled to a half share of the estate in addition to the half share which has already been paid to them. The rule must be published once in the "London Daily Telegraph" and once in the "Cape Times," "South African News," and "Cape Argus." It was in the interest of all concerned that the question should be decided, and the costs of this application will consequently be paid by the estate.

Ex parte DE DOUALIER. { 1907.
May 3rd.

Bequest—Restraint against mortgage—Minor.

Certain premises had been bequeathed to the petitioner, and after her death to her eldest child, on condition that she was not to mortgage or alienate the property. The petitioner was too poor to pay the costs of transfer or to repair the premises, which were fast becoming uninhabitable. The eldest child was a minor, and the Court, in the interest of the minor and in order to prevent the bequest from failing altogether, granted leave to mortgage the premises for such sum as would be sufficient to enable the petitioner to obtain transfer and place the premises in a habitable state of repair, and directed that the interest should be paid by petitioner during her life.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for leave to petitioner to mortgage a certain erf in the village of Sutherland. The matter had previously been before the Court on several occasions, and had been referred for further information. The petitioner asked leave to raise £250 for the following purposes: £150 to pay for immediately necessary repairs of the property, £50 to meet future repairs, £30 to pay costs of transfer, and £20 costs of bond. Under the will alienation or mortgaging the property was prohibited. Petitioner was in humble circumstances, and had no means with which to carry out necessary repairs. The rents had been utilised to meet the needs of the family. The father consented, on behalf of the minor heir. Counsel said that he could not press the application so far as future repairs were concerned.

De Villiers, C.J.: Under the special circumstances of this case, the Court will grant leave to execute a mortgage for £200 for the purpose of effecting the necessary transfers and for placing the property in a habitable state of repair, the interest to be paid by the petitioner during her life. The premises were bequeathed to the petitioner for life, and after her death to her eldest child, on condition that she was not to mortgage or alienate the property. The petitioner is too poor to pay the expenses of transfer or to repair the premises, which are fast becoming uninhabitable, and the eldest child is still a minor. The child's interest would suffer and the bequest would fail altogether if some means be not devised to assist the petitioner in preserving the property. The order will be granted, but the grounds should appear in the order.

OLIVIER V. ESTATE OLIVIER. { 1907.
May 3rd.

Will—Condition—Uncertainty—
Fidei-commissum—Restraint on alienation.

Testators by will bequeathed certain land to some of their children, on condition that "in case one or more of the said children shall desire to dispose of this ground which we here bequeath, he or they shall not have the right to sell it to a stranger, but shall dispose of it van stak tot staken."

Held, that as it is impossible to ascertain from these Dutch words to whom any legatee wishing to sell should offer his share, the condition is void for uncertainty.

This was a special case for an interpretation of a certain clause in the will of the late Andries Hermanus Olivier.

The special case was stated as follows:

1. The plaintiff is Jacobus Matthys Olivier of Armoed, in the division of Oudtshoorn, married in community of property to Catharina Andriesina Olivier.

2. The defendant is Jacomina Christina Olivier (born Du Toit), widow of the late Andries Hermanus Olivier, now married in community of property to Izak Daniel Wilhelm Bosman, by whom she is assisted as far as need be in this case, in her capacity as executrix testamentary in the estate of the said late Andries Hermanus Olivier, lately of Jan Fouries Kraal, in the division of Oudtshoorn, who died on May 31, 1905.

3. The said late Andries Hermanus Olivier was twice married; first to the late Catharina Andriesina Olivier (born Breytenbach), who died on or about September 13, 1889, and secondly to the defendant.

4. There were six children by the first marriage, of whom the said Catharina Andriesina Olivier married to the plaintiff is one; all the said children are alive and are majors; there are no children by the second marriage.

5. The said late Andries Hermanus Olivier and the late Catharina Andriesina Olivier (born Breytenbach) executed a joint will on November 16, 1891, whereby the testator appointed the testatrix and the children of the marriage joint heirs; and the testatrix appointed the testator and the children of the marriage joint heirs; to the survivor was reserved a life interest in the whole estate, amongst other provisions not necessary to refer to herein; a copy of the said will, which was in the Dutch language, together with an English translation thereof, is hereunto annexed, marked "A" and "B" respectively. The parties do not affirm the correctness of that portion of the said English translation which is set forth in paragraph 7 hereof.

6. The testators further specially bequeathed after the survivor's death to three of their children their share of the farm Armoed, situate on "the Island" on the further side of the Oliphants River, and to their other three children, of whom the plaintiff's wife was one, all the garden ground on the side of the said river where the testators' dwelling then was; they further directed that the dwelling and "opstal" should go to their youngest son; and they bequeathed the "weiveld" jointly to all their children.

7. The bequests of the said landed property are made subject to the following condition: "Voorts is het onze uiterste willen begeerte dat, zoo een of meer onzer kinderen van deze grond die wy hier vermaker zoude willen afstaan, geen recht hebben het aan eenen vreemden te verkoopen, maar van stak tot staken zal afstaand doen," that is to say: "Further, it is our last will and desire that, in case one or more of our children shall desire to dispose of this ground which we here bequeath (he or they shall) not have the right to sell it to a stranger, but shall dispose of it to each other in order of succession."

8. The plaintiff claims that the conditions above set forth, limiting and restricting the right of alienation are void by reason of vagueness and uncertainty, and that no fidei commissum is thereby imposed, and is desirous of obtaining transfer of the portion of the farm Armoed bequeathed to his wife as aforesaid, free from such conditions and stipulations; the plaintiff in or about September, 1906, sold a portion of the farm so bequeathed, and is desirous of giving transfer free and unencumbered to the purchaser.

9. The defendant contends that the conditions above set forth impose a restraint on alienation whereby a fidei commissum is constituted binding each of the said children not to alienate save to the other children and their descendants; and that the defendant is only entitled to obtain transfer subject to the said conditions.

10. The parties pray for such order as to costs as to this Honourable Court shall seem meet.

By consent paragraph 8 of the special case was amended by inserting after "sold" the words "to one Andries Hermanus Breytenbach, who is not a member of the family."

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. M. Bisset) was for plaintiff; Mr. McGregor was for defendant.

Mr. Searle said that the question in this case was whether the portion of the will mentioned was sufficient to constitute a fidei commissum. He submitted that it was not clear from the terms of the clause what was intended to be done, and that a fidei commissum must be clearly expressed. Counsel quoted Drex v. Drex's Executors (1876, Buch., 203), and Voet (36, 1, 27, McGregor's Translation).

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is it not a necessary inference that if it cannot be sold to a stranger it must be kept in the family?]

Mr. Searle: The Dutch authorities make a distinction between a prohibition as to whether it is real or whether it is personal. He quoted Van Leeuwen, Cens. For. (3, 7, 10), In re Carey (11, S.C. Cases, 123), In re Naude (1, C.T.R., 232), Lind v. Calitz (9, Juta, 268), Grotius (2, 20, 11), Van der Linden (1, 7, 8, Juta's Translation, p. 62), ex parte Botha and Standen (14, C.L.J., 299), Juta on Wils (p. 180, and Van Wyk's Case (13, S.C.R., 478).

Mr. McGregor submitted that it was clear from the will that the intention was that the family should deal with the property as a family. The only question was whether the testators had made their meaning sufficiently clear. On the meaning of "staaken" he cited Van Leeuwen, Commentaries (3, 15, 4), Leibrecht, Red. Prac. (178). There was clearly a prohibition in this clause. Strangers were specifically excluded. The will said the property must go from "staak to staaken." What was meant was from "staak to staak." Van Wyk's case was special in its terms, and did not apply to the present case. Counsel cited Sande (3, 1, 3, and 5, 2, 8), Voet (36, 1, 3, and end of 29, and 36, 1, 31), and Rykkliff's Case (13 S.C., 64).

Mr. Searle, in his reply, cited Joseph v. Mulder's Executors (18 S.C., 193, and 20 S.V., 144), and Burge (2, 112-114).

De Villiers, C.J.: The testators bequeathed the property in question to some of their children, on condition that "in case one or more of our children shall desire to dispose of this ground, which we here bequeath (he or they) shall not have the right to sell it to a stranger, but shall dispose of it "van staak tot staaken." The translation attached to the special case renders these Dutch words as meaning "to each other in order of succession," but that is, to say the least of it, an exceedingly free rendering. The more correct translation would be "from line to lines," or "from branch to branches," but it is difficult to know what the testators meant by directing that in case the legatees should desire to dispose of the land they shall dispose of it "from branch to branches." Probably they meant that each legatee shall sell only to his descendants, but it is also possible that the collateral branches were intended to have the benefit of the condition. If these doubtful words had not been added it would have been possible to give effect to the condition, but as the matter stands it would be impossible to ascertain to whom any legatee wishing to sell should offer his share. A condition that the property shall not be alienated out of the family would have a known meaning in law, but a condition that there shall be only alienation "van staak tot staaken" appears to me to be void for uncertainty. There is no clear indication in the will of the person or persons who are to succeed in case of alienation by any of the legatees or to whom the property should be offered by a legatee wishing to sell, and consequently the legatees must be held to have acquired the property free from fidei commissum. For these reasons, briefly stated, I am of opinion that the plaintiff's contention should be upheld. The costs will come out of the estate.

[Plaintiff's attorneys: Tredgold, McIntyre and Bisset. Defendant's attorneys: Walker and Jacobsohn.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLY.]

FRIEDBERG V. DEPUTY SHERIFF OF PRIESKA. { 1907.
{ May 3rd.

Attachment on Suspicion.

Plaintiff had purchased certain goods and stock at a fair price from one S., who shortly afterwards absconded. The attorney who acted for some of S.'s creditors, suspecting that the sale to plaintiff was collusive, induced defendant to attach all the goods in plaintiff's possession.

Held, that as defendant had neither proved that the goods were still the property of S., nor that plaintiff did not purchase from S. in good faith, he must restore the goods and pay damages and costs.

This was an action for the restoration of certain property, and for damages.

The plaintiff, in his declaration, stated that he was the owner of certain property which had been wrongfully seized by the defendant on a judgment obtained by the firm of Stephen, Fraser and Co. against one Sindler for £500. The plaintiff claimed that the goods so seized belonged to him. He valued them at £306, and he claimed the restoration of the goods, or, failing that, the payment of their value, together with £450 as damages caused by the alleged wrongful attachment. The goods were seized from a wagon at Prieska. Defendant pleaded that the goods in question were really Sindler's, and that they were wrongfully removed from Sindler's by plaintiff shortly before the execution of the writ. Defendant denied that plaintiff had suffered damages.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the plaintiff; Mr. Close (with him Mr. Pohl) was for the defendant.

Solomon Friedberg, the plaintiff, was called. He said he held a general hawker's licence. He used to go on trading trips with a wagon. Before he went on the last trip, he had goods over from a previous trip of the value of about £150, and he bought other goods amounting in value to about £130, which he also took with him on his last trip. He went from Strydomberg to Doornberg and elsewhere, buying goods and stock on the way, including about sixty sheep. He had only seen Sindler once before when he passed in a cart. He had never had any dealings previously with Sindler. On this trip, however, he bought from Sindler. Witness was in want of some stuff, and Sindler said he was selling up and going from the farm. Witness bought £95 worth of merchandise from Sindler; also forty sheep for £30, some skins and wool. He gave Sindler a cheque for £125 and £5 in cash. This was about August 27, on which day the cheque was dated. Some of the merchandise he bartered for sheep at the place, and he got about sixty sheep in this way. Witness left forty sheep there and went on. About eight days later he returned for his wagon, which he had left to be repaired. He then asked Sindler's brother for leave to store some of the goods in the place, and, obtaining permission, he did so. He went to Prieska for the Jewish New Year holidays, some time towards the end of September. Subsequently he went to fetch the goods and took them to Prieska. Meanwhile he had bought further goods in Prieska. The Deputy Sheriff seized everything of witness's in Prieska. He claimed that all the goods were his. The wagon and donkeys were eventually returned. Witness had tried to get goods from people he had dealt with before, but he could get none. Previous to this occurrence, he had made a profit of about £50 a month. The value of the goods seized was about £300—cost to witness. He would have made £150 profit out of these. Among the goods seized was about £50 or £60 worth, which he had bought from Sindler.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: He had lost his bankbook; he could not say when he lost it. He had only one book in which he recorded the sales. This was seized by the Sheriff. Sindler accepted witness's cheque, though they were almost strangers.

Evidence was given as to purchases of goods made by Friedberg. An inventory of the goods seized by the Sheriff was taken, and they were stated in evidence to be worth £300. They had greatly deteriorated in value. The plaintiff had obtained an interdict against the sale of the goods, and they were still in the Sheriff's custody.

Mr. Jones closed his case.

Henry D. Vos, law agent, of Prieska, was called. He said he acted for Messrs. Stephen, Fraser and Co. in the matter against Sindler. After the judgment, Sindler came to witness and an arrangement was made in terms of which Sindler paid an instalment of £50, which he was to continue paying monthly. On the 26th September, witness, having heard of a transaction between plaintiff and Sindler, went out to Sindler's place. He met a native driving some sheep, and in consequence of what the native said he saw Friedberg. The latter said he was a broker in the matter for the sale of the sheep. Witness told plaintiff he was acting for Stephen, Fraser and Co. After further inquiries witness went, on the 1st October, with his clerk to make an inventory of the goods at Sindler's place. He had a conversation with Friedberg and Sindler's brother. Plaintiff said the goods were his, and a receipt for £154 was produced. Witness asked for a specified account and plaintiff said he had not got it; that that was his business. Friedberg said he knew the law. Witness subsequently saw a boy driving more sheep. He had since tried to trace the boy so as to bring him as a witness, but he had failed. After what the boy said, a writ was issued and was held over for a time pending the arrival of the wagon with the goods. The Deputy Sheriff spent a good deal of time trying to find out which goods were Sindler's. He asked Friedberg to point out what goods were Sindler's. Finally, the goods were attached. Friedberg, when asked by the Sheriff what the value of the attached goods were, said they were worth £150. Sindler had absconded. A warrant was out for his apprehension for "obtaining credit under false pretences." Witness considered that if Sindler had been pressed, it would have been found he was insolvent at the time.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jones: Witness had not himself valued the goods.

Further evidence was called for the defendant, it being denied that the goods had deteriorated to any considerable extent. The goods had, since the seizure, been stored in a wagon house.

Counsel were heard in argument, Mr. Close contending that the Sheriff was justified in the seizure, and that plaintiff did not discharge the duty which lay upon him of giving all information in a frank manner to the Sheriff.

Hopley, J.: In this case the plaintiff sues the Deputy Sheriff of Prieska for the return of, or, alternatively the value of, certain goods seized by him in execution of a judgment at the suit of Stephen Fraser and Company against one Sindler. Plaintiff avers that the goods were wrongfully seized, and he also sues the defendant for £450 damages. He says that the goods seized were his property and that they were worth £306, so that altogether he is asking for the return of certain goods in exactly the same order as when they were seized, or their value—£306—and for £450 damages. To this the defendant pleads that the seizure was not wrongful or unlawful, and he denies that the goods were the property of the plaintiff. He then goes on boldly to aver that the property attached by him was and is the property of Sindler. And this is all that he says, excepting that he admits that the plaintiff has not been able to get his property since the seizure. He denies that the plaintiff has sustained any damages. Now, it will be seen from this plea that the defence is not taken by the defendant either that there was collusion or fraud or anything else of that sort between Sindler and the plaintiff, nor does he set up that even in the absence of such fraud, he himself, as Sheriff, acted bona fide and on reasonable and just cause, and without any negligence. He simply boldly takes the defence that these were Sindler's goods and that therefore he had a right to seize them. Now, he has been sued alone, without joining the judgment creditors—Stephen Fraser and Co.—in this suit, and I do not see any special objection to that course. It might sometimes be advisable to join the judgment creditors, but in a case like this that rests upon tort, it seems to me that a person injured by a tort might select any of the tort-feasors. A person like the Deputy Sheriff can always protect himself by getting the judgment creditor to indemnify him, as has been done in this case, and the plaintiff has always the right to sue both parties if their conduct has been such as to increase the damages. I do not see any reason why he should not sue either both or one or the other of them. The whole question for me to decide in the present case is whether the defendant's plea is established or not, because one must approach this case with this first cardinal fact in view: that the defendant took out of the possession of the plaintiff certain goods. He must therefore justify such action on his part, and it seems to me that the onus of proving that he took from this person goods belonging to somebody else rests upon him. The matter, however, is not altogether simply on that basis, because evidence has come from the other side establishing the plaintiff's position, and so one may take the history of the case as told by both sides, and taking it as a whole, it is necessary to pronounce whether there is anything so suspicious in the plaintiff's case or in the transaction as to make the Court doubt that in reality a bona fide transaction had taken place between plaintiff and Sindler. I said in the course of the case that one could not altogether exonerate merchants from blame in these circumstances. What I meant was that it was reasonable enough that they should choose to take ordinary commercial risks in order to push their trade, but that when a set of circumstances like this happens and they come to complain, one cannot altogether sympathise with or quite exonerate them, because they have put their goods, by their own election, in the hands of a person, who puts them to trouble by working fraud upon them or some other person. So that they must not be exonerated altogether from some blame for the embroglio which arises out of such a state of things.

The facts are that plaintiff, a hawker, was on one of his trading trips when he reached the farm on which Sindler carried on his business. The latter then told him that he wished to wind up the business as he was forced to leave the farm on account of its having been sold in such a way as to terminate his right to be on it. For this statement there seems to have been a good foundation in fact, and it was at all events a plausible and circumstantial story calculated to satisfy the mind of anyone with whom Sindler might wish to deal, as supplying a reason for his action. The plaintiff had not previously been acquainted with Sindler, though he knew of him as a business man in those parts, and there is no reason to suppose that plaintiff had any idea, or could have any idea, that Sindler was realising the assets of the business with the intention of absconding from his creditors. After some haggling as to prices, the plaintiff bought some produce, shop goods and sheep, and gave his cheque for their price on the Prieska branch of the Standard Bank. He then took away the goods, and his cheque was cashed a few days later by Sindler, who, shortly afterwards absconded. After trading for a short time, the plaintiff came back to the same farm and obtained leave to store his goods in Sindler's late store, then empty, while he went into Prieska for the Jewish holidays. Mr. Voss, who acted for Stephen, Fraser and Co., having heard something of the transaction, seems to have become suspicious, and made a journey to the farm, arriving there just about the same time as the plaintiff, whose conduct he also thought suspicious. The goods had then been re-loaded on plaintiff's wagon. Voss made certain enquiries, and, on his return to Prieska, instructed the defendant to attach the goods upon their arrival in Prieska, which was done.

Now to justify this act it must be proved by the defendant that the goods still belonged to Sindler, or that the sale to plaintiff had been a fraudulent and collusive one. It may be granted that, looking at the matter from Mr. Voss's point of view, there were suspicious circumstances, and Mr. Voss seems to have made up his mind that the plaintiff and Sindler had conspired to defeat the rights of his client. Suspicious, however, are not enough to justify the deputy sheriff, or this Court, in depriving a man of property in his possession, and which he holds by virtue of an apparently bona fide transaction. I do not think that there was anything unusual or suspicious in the sale of the stock, or in the way it was done. Sindler, no doubt, intended to defraud his creditors, but, as far as I can judge, the plaintiff knew nothing of that, and purchased the goods bona fide, paying a fair price for them.

With regard to damages, very little evidence has been brought forward of a satisfactory nature as to the value of the goods or their present condition.

The order will be that the goods be returned forthwith, and that the defendant pay £100 as damages, with costs of suit.

[Plaintiff's attorney: G. Trollip. Defendant's attorneys: Mostert and Son.]

In re THOMAS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an interdict restraining the transfer of certain property at George from one A. N. Robertson to F. G. Robertson. Petitioner claimed certain mineral rights over the property.

A rule nisi was granted, returnable on May 14, the rule to operate as a temporary interdict.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

ADMISSIONS. { 1907.
{ May 3rd.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for the admission of Francis William Walker as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of Butterworth.

Mr. Louwrens moved for the admission of Coenraad J. C. Gie as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of Worcester.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the admission of Louis Henri van Winsen as a conveyancer.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of East London.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

ORPHAN CHAMBER v. MASTERTON.

Mr. Payne moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,000, with interest from the 10th February, 1906, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable, together with the rents.

Order granted.

GRAY v. IMPERIAL BRICK AND TILE COMPANY.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £4,000, with interest from the 1st July, 1903; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable and the rents attached.

Order granted.

ESTATE KETS AND ANOTHER V. NORDEN.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest from the 1st January, 1907, bond due by reason of three months' notice having been given; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. LILIAN SYNDICATE, LIMITED.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £39 7s. 6d., mineral lease rent of certain properties in Namaqualand.

Order granted.

ESTATE WOOD V. NEEZER.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £48, rent due, with interest a tempore moræ and costs.

Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte SMITH. { 1907.
May 3rd.

Release from Sequestration —
Notice to Creditors.

Before an estate against which no creditors have proved can be released from sequestration, notice of the application must be given in the "Gazette" to creditors and an affidavit of full and fair surrender filed, unless all the creditors have consented to the release.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order authorising the release of petitioner's estate from sequestration. From the petition it appeared that the creditors had all agreed to release the estate from sequestration. No meeting of creditors had been held. After the order of sequestration had been granted by the Court, and before it had been taken out of the Registrar's Office, arrangements were made with the petitioning creditors, whose claims had been settled. The petitioning creditors and the other creditors all consented to the present application. Counsel cited ex parte Wolff (20 S.C.R., 200).

De Villiers, C.J., pointed out that in the case of Van Broemtsen the Crown said there should be a full and fair surrender and notice to creditors.

Mr. Benjamin: As a matter of fact, here all the creditors have had their claims satisfied, and have signed consent papers.

De Villiers, C.J.: You may take an order, but, of course, this is not intended in any way to alter the practice laid down in ex parte Van Broemtsen (12, S.C., 239) where it was held that there should be a notice published in the "Gazette" to creditors and an affidavit of full and fair surrender. In that case no creditors had proved their claims, but if all the creditors have consented, then, of course, the necessity of giving notice to creditors falls to the ground.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte VILLIERSDORP MUNICIPALITY

Dr. Greer moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

LAW SOCIETY V. PRETORIUS. { 1907.
May 4th.

Articled Clerk—Advocate—Cancelling Articles of Clerkship.

The respondent applied to the Court for leave to have his name struck off as one of its advocates and brought to the notice of the Court that, through a misapprehension, he had omitted to have his name so struck off before entering into certain Articles of Clerkship. No objection was taken by the applicant society, to whom notice of the application had been given. The applicant society now applied for an order to have the Articles of Clerkship cancelled, on the ground that he had appeared as an Advocate of the Supreme Court while serving his Articles of Clerkship. It was proved that he had been allowed by a Resident Magistrate to appear in his Court, on the ground that he was an Advocate of the Supreme Court, but that the fee for his so appearing was not paid to him but to the attorney to whom he had been articulated.

Held, that there was no ground for cancelling the Articles of Clerkship.

This was an application upon notice to respondent to show cause why his articles of clerkship should not be cancelled by reason (1) of his having entered into articles of clerkship with an attorney of this Court while he was still on the roll of advocates, and (2) having appeared as an advocate of this Court in the R.M.'s Court at Steynsburg while serving under articles of clerkship.

It appeared from the affidavits that the respondent made application on the 1st February last to be removed from the roll of advocates, and to count the service that he had already given under his articles. The Law Society said that under a misapprehension at the time they did not appear to oppose the application. The Chief Justice allowed the applicant to be removed from the roll of advocates, and directed the service that he had given to count.

Respondent had been admitted as an advocate of the Supreme Court on the 19th July last, and on the 13th August he entered into articles of clerkship with Attorney Du Plessis without first being disbarred as required by section 4, Act 11, 1903.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for applicants; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan (with him Mr. Pohl) was for respondent.

Mr. Jones argued that Section 4 of Act 11 of 1903 provided that no advocate could be articulated unless his name was struck off the roll of advocates, and the same Act provided that advocates need only serve 18 months. Respondent entered into articles for 18 months, and so must have known this Act. He (on February 1) informed the Court that he had not practised as an advocate, and yet there was an affidavit by the Magistrate of Steynsburg to the effect that when respondent appeared before him in a criminal case he refused to hear him. Respondent then said that he was advocate of the Supreme Court, when he was allowed to appear. Under rule of Court 413 respondent could only appear as attorney, agent or advocate, and as he was not an attorney nor an enrolled agent, he appeared as advocate.

Prior to the promulgation of rule 413 articulated clerks were allowed to appear in civil cases, but in criminal cases they were never allowed to appear under section 43 of Act 20 of 1856. Respondent still appeared regularly before the Magistrate, and if he did not appear as advocate he could not appear at all.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But that is a matter for the Magistrate, who might say to respondent, "As you are no longer an advocate I can't hear you any more."

Mr. Jones having been further heard,

De Villiers, C.J.: On the 1st February the respondent applied to this Court for leave to have his name struck off the list of advocates of the Supreme Court and for an order that the articles he had served to the date of the said order shall count as service. This notice was given to the secretary of the Incorporated Law Society, inquiries were made at the time as to whether any objection was raised by the Law Society, and none were raised.

It appears that some misapprehension had existed as to the terms of the 4th section of the Incorporated Law Society's Act (No. 11, 1903), and in consequence of that misapprehension the respondent had failed to apply for his name to be struck off the roll of advocates of this Court, and the Court then allowed the service to count as if the misapprehension had not occurred, and as if his name had been struck off at the time it ought to have been struck off. Against this judgment there was no appeal, and now application is made for an order which, in my opinion, would be wholly inconsistent with the order which has already been made without any objection on the part of the Law Society. The application now is to show cause why the articles of clerkship shall not be cancelled (1) by reason of the respondent having entered into articles of clerkship with an attorney of the Supreme Court whilst still on the roll of attorneys, and (2) "by reason of your having appeared as an advocate of the Supreme Court in the Court of the R.M. of Steynsburg, while still serving under articles of clerkship." As to the first objection, that has been condoned by reason of the judgment already given. But then it is contended that the judgment was given upon a concealment of facts, or such misstatement as should induce the Court now practically to set aside its previous order. Now, what had been stated to the Court on the previous occasion was that the respondent had not practised as an advocate of the Supreme Court, whereas it now appears that he had on one occasion applied to a Resident Magistrate for permission to conduct a case, and had then sworn that he was an advocate of the Supreme Court. Now, I think that when the respondent informed the Court that he had not practised as an advocate of the Supreme Court, what he clearly meant is that he had not appeared in the Supreme Court as an advocate. I do not think there was any desire on the part of the respondent to make any misstatement of the facts, because a man may well consider that if he appears in the Magistrate's Court by virtue of his being an advocate of the Supreme Court, he does not on that account practise as an advocate of the Supreme Court, which, in strictness, he could only do in the Supreme Court. I consider it was not such a misstatement as would justify the Court in setting aside its previous order. But then it is said that since the previous order was made the respondent has done acts which entitle the Law Society now to claim that his articles should be cancelled. What he has done is this, he continued to appear before the Magistrate's Court and conduct cases there. But he states that in the conduct of these cases he has appeared entirely on behalf of the attorney to whom he is articulated. Now, if the Magistrate wishes to allow him to appear as such, I do not know that it is such misconduct on his part as to justify the Court in interfering in the matter. On the contrary, I consider that is for the clerk's benefit; it is part of his legal education to appear before the Magistrate in these cases, because afterwards, as an attorney, he will have to practise in the Magistrate's Court. That is a matter for the Magistrate. If the Magistrate allows him, he takes advantage of it. If the Magistrate does not allow it, then the respondent will have to discontinue it for the future. At the same time, I do not consider that he is guilty of any misconduct which will entitle the Court to visit any punishment upon him. The application will be refused with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice, Sir John BUCHANAN, and Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

PENHALONGA PROPRIETARY MINES LTD., AND REZENDE LTD., V. STRICKLAND.	} 1907. May 6th. " 13th.
PENHALONGA PROPRIETARY MINES LTD., AND REZENDE LTD., V. COCKRELL.

Southern Rhodesia — Mines and Mineral's Ordinances — Expropriation of water—Arbitration—Act 6 of 1882.

B 1

The applicant Company having notified to the Secretary for Mines of Southern Rhodesia under the 7th Section of Ordinance 10 of 1894 of that territory that it is intended to expropriate all the water within the limits of the respondent's farm, the Secretary for Mines informed the respondent of this notification. The parties could not agree as to the amount of compensation and accordingly the applicant gave notice to the respondent in terms of Sub-section 2 of Section 1 of the Cape Act 6 of 1882, offering the sum of £500 for all the available water of the farm and requesting an answer in 15 days. The Respondent declined the offer and communications passed between the parties as to the appointment of arbitrators but before this matter was settled the applicant Company informed the respondent that it intended to take part only of the water.

Held, affirming the judgment of the High Court of Southern Rhodesia, that the notice under the Act of 1882 bound both parties to proceed to arbitration upon the basis of an expropriation of the whole of the water and that it was too late for the applicant to claim expropriation of part only.

These were appeals from a judgment of the High Court of S. Rhodesia. The cases were heard together, both in the Court below and also on appeal. The matter arose out of an expropriation of water by the mines under the provisions of Ordinance No. 10 (S. Rhodesia) of 1904. The facts sufficiently appear from the reasons for judgment given by Watermeyer, J., and from the judgment of the Court of Appeal.

The following were the sections of the Ordinance material to the cases.

2. Section 80 of the "Mines and Minerals Ordinance, 1903" (hereinafter referred to as "the said Ordinance"), shall be and the same is hereby repealed, provided that any rights which may have been affected by the said Section are re-instated save and in so far as they are inconsistent with or repugnant to the terms of this Ordinance.

3. (1) Except as to such water as is mentioned or referred to in Section 82 of the said Ordinance, the right to the expropriation of the water existing or flowing upon land held under grant from the British South Africa Company is vested in the Administrator of Southern Rhodesia.

(2) Such right of expropriation may in conformity with the provisions contained in this Ordinance be exercised by the Administrator through the Secretary for Mines, who shall exercise such right upon application being made to him under this Ordinance.

4. No expropriation of water shall be effected unless at the time of expropriation such water shall be actually and necessarily required for any mining purpose, except upon application duly made by a claim-holder and at the cost and expense of such claim-holder.

5. After a right to water upon land has been duly expropriated, such water shall be and hereby is vested in the Secretary for Mines, to be held in trust for the purposes and subject to the provisions of this Ordinance.

6. (1) The whole of the water flowing or existing upon any land may be expropriated, or only a portion thereof.

(2) As often as only a portion of the water flowing or existing on any land shall have been expropriated at the instance of one applicant, any surplus shall in turn be liable to further expropriation at the instance or request of such applicant or other applicants.

7. (1) Any claim-holder may by notice in writing intimate to the Secretary for Mines an intention to apply for the expropriation of water for the purposes of mining.

(2) Upon the arrival of any such notice as aforesaid a memorandum shall be made thereon showing the time of its having been received.

(3) Every such notice shall contain the following particulars:—

(a) The name of the farm or land from which water is desired to be obtained, and its situation, stating the district and the name of the proprietor on the Land Register.

(b) The names and situation of the claims or mine at which it is proposed to put the water to use for mining purposes.

(c) The extent or volume of water sought, whether all that may be available or a portion to be specified.

8. In case two or more notices as are referred to in Section 7 shall be given in respect to water required from the same land, the order in which the same shall have been received shall regulate the rights of the respective applicants—the earlier being preferred to the later: Provided that,

(1) In case any earlier applicant shall not within such time as may be determined by the Secretary for Mines, and duly notified in writing, elect to proceed to expropriate in terms of his notice any claim-holder who has given such notice as aforesaid shall have the first right of expropriation.

(2) All such notices shall lapse and be void unless the claimholders giving the same shall, within two years from the date thereof, proceed to take all requisite proceedings for obtaining the expropriation sought.

9. (1) The amount of compensation to be paid by a claim-holder to the owner of the land for or in respect to any water expropriated, shall in default of agreement be such as shall be determined by arbitration.

(2) For the purposes of every such arbitration the provisions of "The Lands and Arbitrations Clauses Act, 1882," of the Cape of Good Hope shall mutatis mutandis extend and apply.

10. In every such arbitration as aforesaid the following principles shall be observed:—

(1) The amount to be paid for and as compensation shall be based upon a consideration of the diminution in value of the land from which the water expropriated shall be taken, as upon the date of the service of the notice required by sub-section (2) of section 1 of "The Lands and Arbitrations Clauses Act, 1882."

(2) In estimating the amount to be paid for compensation no consideration shall be given to the circumstances that owing to the existence of a mine upon or in proximity to the land from which the water is taken the value of the land has been enhanced.

11. Any claim-holder who has given any such notice as is referred to in Section 7 shall before proceeding therewith be liable, if so required by the landowner, to provide due and proper security to the satisfaction of the Secretary for Mines for the due payment of the amount requisite to be paid to the owner of the land as and for compensation.

Mr. Justice Watermeyer, in his reasons for judgment, in the first case, said that the application raised the question when, under the Mines and Minerals Amendment Ordinance, No. 10, of 1904, the expropriation of water was completed. On the 5th December, 1904, applicant companies sent to the Secretary for Mines the notice required by section 7 of the Ordinance. This notice in the first instance mentioned the farm Inodzi only, but on December 10 an amended notice was sent, including the farms Mabords and The B. December 10 may be taken as the date when the notice was given to the Secretary for Mines, and this notice referred to "the whole of the available water flowing through" the said farms. On December 17 1904, the Secretary for Mines sent to respondent (Strickland) notice to the effect that the mining companies had applied for "all available water within the limits" of the said farms. As the Attorney-General pointed out, this was a slight alteration from the notice sent by the mining companies, but he (the learned Judge) did not think it was important, inasmuch as the companies adopted this variation in their letter—bearing no date, but alleged and admitted to have been despatched on February 16, 1905, in which they, in terms of sub-section 2 of section 1 of the Lands and Arbitration Clauses Act of 1882, offered respondent £500 for "all available water within the limits" of the farms. This offer was refused. After negotiations as to the appointment of arbitrators by the beginning of December, 1906, the matter was practically ready for arbitration on the basis of the letter of February 16, 1905. On December 5, 1906, the attorneys for the applicants wrote to respondent to the effect that their clients did not propose to take "all the available water," but were prepared to leave a certain amount for use on the farms. The only question before the Court was whether applicants were entitled to make this substantial variation of their original proposal. The answers seemed to depend solely on the interpretation of the Mines and Minerals Ordinance of 1904. The Ordinance incorporated the Lands and Arbitration Clauses Act, of 1882, of the Cape of Good Hope. As he read that Act, the expropriation was complete as soon as the notice required by section 1, sub-section 2, of that Act, had been sent. If that view were correct, the expropriation of this water was completed on February 16, 1905, and the fact that respondent was allowed to continue to use the water after that date did not affect the question. If that view were correct, the applicants bought all this water on February 16, 1905 and now wished to sell some of it back to respondent. The application was refused, with costs.

Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Sutton) was for appellants; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan), was for respondent Strickland; Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Pyemont) was for respondent Cockerell.

Mr. Benjamin said that the same point was raised in both matters. The appellants had given notice of expropriation of certain water under the provisions of the Southern Rhodesia Mines and Minerals Amendment Ordinance, No. 10, 1904. Application was made to the High Court of Southern Rhodesia for leave to amend the notice of expropriation. That was opposed by respondents and the Court dismissed the application, and from that decision of the High Court the present appeal was instituted. The Ordinance 10 of 1904 repealed the provisions of the Ordinance of 1903, the 80th section of which provided that the control of the flow, diversion, and use of all water flowing on any land in any mining district should be vested in the Mining Commissioner. There were other provisions in section 80 in respect of the apportionment of such water among the owners of the land and mining proprietors. Section 80 was repealed by section 2 of Ordinance 10, 1904, which provided "that any rights which may have been affected by the said section are reinstated." Section 4 of Ordinance 10, 1904, provided that "no expropriation shall be effected unless at the time of such expropriation such water shall be actually and necessarily required for any mining purpose . . . and at the cost and expense of such claimholder." Section 6 provided that the whole of the water flowing, or existing, upon any land may be expropriated, or only a portion thereof. The point in this case turned upon the construction of sub-section 2 of section 8, which read: "All such notices shall lapse and be void unless the claimholders giving the same shall, within two years from the date thereof, proceed to take all requisite proceedings for obtaining the expropriation sought." On the meaning of "expropriation" counsel quoted Sweet's Law Dictionary (p. 344) and also cited Grimbeek v. Colonial Government (17 S.C., 200). The learned judge, he said, seemed to think that expropriation took place at the date when the notice was given. He submitted that that view was incorrect.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Had two years elapsed?]

Mr. Benjamin: Two years have elapsed on the 16th February, this year, but the notice of motion was served for the 21st December last. Proceeding, counsel said that the respondents had not taken possession, and it was difficult to see how they could be prejudiced by the application to amend. They had not done any work, they had not expropriated, and, therefore, they could not be prejudiced by leave having been granted to amend this. And his lordship in the Court below said he would like to amend it, but he considered he was debarred by law for doing so.

[De Villiers, C.J.: When the judgment was given, had this lapsed?]

Mr. Benjamin: Yes; it had lapsed then.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then why didn't you, instead of appealing, let the thing rest, since it had lapsed?]

Mr. Benjamin said that had occurred to him as a possible way for the companies to solve their difficulties—that was, by treating the matter as having lapsed; but the present course had been chosen, and he submitted that the Court below should have allowed the amendment, and that, therefore the present appeal should succeed.

Mr. Searle said he would contend that the judgment could be supported whichever of three views was taken of the Ordinance, which, he admitted, was not so clear and definite in its terms as it might be. There were three views which he would advance. The first was that there was actual expropriation of this water which bound the parties as soon as application was made under section 4 of the Ordinance. He submitted that sections 7, 8, and 11 did not apply to this matter at all. These sections contemplated another state of affairs, and he thought that was the view that the parties themselves took, and argued the case upon: that sections 7, 8, and 11 did not apply, but that sections 3, 4, 5, and 6 applied to this state of things, and then, of course, sections 9 and 10 would apply to both states of things. He submitted that that was really the correct construction of the Ordinance. If the Court were not with him in this, then he submitted that the reasons for the judgment were sound on the second ground—that when the notice was given, then, at all events, the rights of the parties became fixed, and then there could be no alteration or amendment in them. It was never suggested to the Court below that there was any lapse, and that because there had been a lapse this amendment could be allowed. Then, in terms of sub-section 2 of section 3, he submitted that there was actually a submission to arbitration, so that, even in case the Court were against him on the other two points, he urged that the judgment was correct on this ground. The arbitrators were appointed within the two years, and if they took some time to consider the matter, it could not, he contended, be held that there had, for this reason, been a lapse. In further argument, counsel quoted 16 Law Journal, Chancery, p. 282.

Mr. Searle also quoted Russell on Arbitration (8th edition, pp. 56-57), section 25, of the English Land Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and section 8 of Ordinance 10, 1904. He submitted that the parties had now been placed in such a position that it would be most inequitable if the proceedings were ripped up.

Mr. Burton said that he had nothing to add to the legal argument, but there were a few circumstances peculiar to the case of Cockerell to which he drew the Court's attention. His client would suffer great prejudice if the amendment were now allowed.

Mr. Benjamin, in reply, pointed out that in the amended notice it was proposed to allow each of these farms a portion of the water. Counsel quoted Bell's Laws of Scotland (section 960, note H), and submitted that the cases quoted by his learned friend depended upon particular statutes. He cited Corporation of Parkdale v. West (12, A.C., 602).

Mr. Searle cited Tirerton Railway Company v. Loumoor (9 A.C., 480).

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (May 13th.)

De Villiers, C.J.: The third section of the Ordinance No. 10 of 1904 of Southern Rhodesia enacts that the right to the expropriation of water flowing upon land held under grant from the British South Africa Company is vested in the Administrator of Southern Rhodesia, and this right is exercised by him through the Secretary for Mines, who must exercise such right upon application being made to him under the Ordinance. The fourth section enacts that no expropriation of water shall be effected unless such water shall be actually and necessarily required for any mining purpose, and except upon application duly made by a claimholder and at the cost and expense of such claimholder. The ninth section enacts that the amount of compensation to be paid by a claimholder to the owner of the land shall in default of agreement be determined by arbitration, and that for the purposes of such arbitration the provisions of Act No. 6 of 1882 of this colony shall mutatis mutandis apply. The tenth section enacts that the amount to be paid as compensation shall be based upon a consideration of the diminution in the value of the land from which the water expropriated shall be taken as upon the date of the service of the notice required by sub-section 2 of section 1 of our Act 6 of 1882. That sub-section enacts that if a corporate body, authorised by Act to take land or materials for the taking of which the owner is entitled to compensation, does not agree with the owner upon the price, or recompense, such corporate body shall cause to be served upon the owner a written notice offering a sum as compensation and requiring such owner to state in writing, within a limited time to be specified in such notice, whether he is willing to accept the sum offered. Under the following sub-sections, if the owner refuses to accept the offer or does not answer within the specified time, the matter must be determined by arbitration under the provisions of the Act, but the corporate body may take the land or materials before any proceedings to settle the amount of compensation are taken. The third section provides for the manner in which arbitrators shall be appointed, and for the time and manner in which the award must be made. On the 15th of December, 1904, the applicant companies applied to the Secretary for Mines for the expropriation of all the available water flowing through the farm Inodzi, the property of the respondent, situated on the Umtali River, for the use of the companies' mines. This notice was in the form and contained all the details which are required by the Ordinance. On the 17th December, the Secretary for Mines by letter informed the respondent that, under the provisions of the Ordinance, the company had applied for the expropriation of all the available water within the limits of his farms for use in connection with the company's mining operations. The parties could not agree as to the amount of compensation to be paid, and accordingly, on the 15th February, 1905, the applicant companies sent a notice to the respondent in terms of sub-section 2 of section 1 of Act 6 of 1882, offering the sum of £500 for all the available water of the farms, and requesting an answer in 15 days. On the 3rd March, 1905, the respondent wrote declining the offer, and communications passed between the parties as to the appointment of arbitrators without any satisfactory result. In the meantime, the respondent continued to use part of the water for the ordinary uses of his farms, but, in consequence of the notice of expropriation which he had received, he refrained from making any improvements which he had contemplated. Objections having been taken by the applicant companies to the arbitration proposed by the respondent, he wrote to the companies on the 4th December, 1906, that he had appointed one Lionel Cripps. No objection was taken to Cripps, but on the following day the companies wrote to the respondent saying that it was not their intention to expropriate the whole of the water on the two farms, and proposing to take part only. The respondent objected to any alteration of the original notice, whereupon the present application was made to the High Court for leave to amend the original notice. This application was refused, and against the order refusing the application the applicant companies now appeal. The learned judge held that the expropriation was complete as soon as the notice required by Act 6 of 1882 was sent, but, although the term expropriation is used in different senses in the Act I am by no means satisfied that expropriation could be legally complete until actual possession was taken of the water. The question, however, still remains whether the applicant companies were entitled to withdraw their application after giving the notice under Act 6 of 1882. That Act provides that if the owner refuses to accept the sum offered or neglects to reply to such notice within the time specified therein, the matter in difference shall be decided by arbitration. This provision is imperative, and neither party can, in my opinion, after such notice, avoid having the matter decided by arbitration without the consent of the other party. The matter in difference in such a case is not whether the corporate body is entitled to expropriate the whole or the part, but whether the offer made by such body is a sufficient compensation for what it intended, according to its notice, to expropriate. The owner is powerless in the matter, for when once he has received notice under the Act he is bound to part with the property for such amount as the arbitrators shall decide. In strictness there is no contract between the parties, for the owner, however unwilling to part with the property, is bound by the notice. Even in the case of a contract for the sale of property it is laid down by Voet (18, 1, 23) that if the amount of the purchase price is left to the decision of a certain arbitrator who is able and willing to act, there is sufficient certainty as to price to constitute a valid sale. In the case of arbitrations under the Act, there are provisions to prevent any failure of arbitration. If one of the parties fails to appoint an arbitrator within the time allowed to him, the arbitrator appointed by the other party is deemed to be appointed by both parties. If an arbitrator dies or fails to perform his duty as such, the Act contains provisions for filling his place. I am satisfied that the Legislature did not intend to place the owner in a worse position than if he had agreed to sell the property at a price to be fixed under the provisions of the Act. After the making of such an agreement the person claiming to expropriate would not be entitled to claim that the price of other property, or less property than that sold, shall be decided upon by arbitration. If, therefore, the case depended entirely upon the meaning of the Cape Act, I should have no doubt as to the correctness of the judgment in the Court below. The applicants' counsel, however, relied upon the 2nd sub-section of section 8 of the Rhodesian Ordinance as showing that the owner is not bound by a notice under sub-section 2 of section 1 of our Act, and, therefore, not entitled to treat it as having the effect of a contract. The sub-section of the Ordinance provides that "all such notices shall lapse and be void unless the claimholders giving the same shall, within two years from the date thereof, proceed to take all requisite proceedings for obtaining the expropriation sought." The notices here referred to do not include the notice under the Cape Act 6 of 1882, the effect of which would appear to me to be the same under the law of Southern Rhodesia as under our law. In this view of the case it becomes unnecessary to inquire whether the notices mentioned in the second sub-section of the Rhodesian Ordinance should be confined to the case of two or more notices relating to the same land, or whether the claimholder has proceeded to take all requisite proceedings when once he has given notice under the Cape Act, or whether the sub-section is more than a provision for the benefit of the owner. The applicants having given notice under the 2nd sub-section of section 1 of our Act 6 of 1882, were not, in my opinion, entitled to claim an arbitration in respect of the taking of less water than was mentioned in such notice, and the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

Buchanan, J.: I fully concur.

De Villiers C.J., stated that the appeal of Penhalonga Proprietary Mines, Ltd., and Another v. Cockerell was also dismissed with costs, on the same ground. Mr. Justice Hopley, he added, concurred in the judgment.

[Appellants' Attorney: G. Trollip; Defendants': Van Zyl and Buissinne.]

SUPREME COURT

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1907.
{ May. 7th

Mr. De Waal moved for the admission of Nicolaas Theunissen Michau as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of Cradock.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

ARDERNE V. ABRAHAMSON.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £2,000, with interest from the 1st January, 1905, less £80 paid on account, and for £6 5s. 6d., insurance premium, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property hypothecated to be declared executable.

Dr. Greer (for defendant) produced an affidavit by his client, but

Mr. De Waal said that the affidavit had not been served upon his client and he had not previously been aware that there was any appearance for defendant.

The matter was ordered to stand over until Tuesday next, question of costs to be mentioned at the hearing.

PITTS AND THOM V. GERRYTN.

Dr. Greer moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court, upon which a balance of £50 12s. remained unpaid, and £9 9s. 2d. taxed costs.

Defendant did not appear.

Attachment granted as prayed.

GORDON MITCHELL AND CO. AND OTHERS
V. MILLSTEIN AND CO.

Mr. Inohbold moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

Mr. Inohbold moved for the appointment of Alfred Newton Foot as provisional trustee, with power to sell perishables and deal with live stock.

Order granted, with powers as prayed.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

HEPWORTHS LTD., V. MCGLASHAN.

Mr. Louwrens moved for judgment under rule 329d for £39 8s. 2d., moneys collected by defendant, and for goods sold and delivered, with interest and costs.

Order granted.

JOYCE AND MCGREGOR V. TORRIEN.

Dr. Rainsford moved for judgment under Rule 329d, for £55 18s., less £1 paid on account, being a sum of money advanced, with interest à tempore moræ, and costs.

Order granted.

REHABILITATION.

Dr. Rainsford moved, under the 117th section of the Ordinance, for the discharge from insolvency of James Patrick Boyle.

Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte ARDERNE AND { 1907.
OTHERS. { May 7th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on behalf of petitioners, as a syndicate owning certain land at Newlands, for an order authorising cancellation of certain sales to one John Talanda by reason of his failure to produce sureties or pay the purchase price, as stipulated in the conditions. Talanda had left the Colony, and was believed to have gone to German South-West Africa.

Buchanan, J., said that as the matter involved a question as to the payment of transfer duty, notice of the application should have been given to the Revenue officials.

Mr. Jones submitted that there was good evidence in the petition that the sale had been cancelled as between the petitioners and Talanda.

Buchanan, J.: The matter will be ordered to stand over until Friday next to enable notice to be given to the Registrar of Deeds, who may, if so advised, file a report.

Ex parte BHENISH MISSION SOCIETY (CARNARVON).

Mr. Marais moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to issue a certified copy of a certain mortgage bond, which had been erroneously and accidentally destroyed along with other papers by one Solomon Cornelius, in whose possession the bond had been. The Registrar of Deeds was of opinion that a rule should issue.

Order in terms of report of Registrar of Deeds, rule nisi to be published once in "Ons Land," and to be returnable on May 28.

Ex parte GOLIGHTLY.

Mr. Porter Buchanan moved, on behalf of George H. Golightly, of the Paarl and Carnarvon, for an order allowing a certain break in his service of articles to count as part of his service. Petitioner had been absent from his articles for a period of 122 days, owing to an attack of pleurisy, and he asked that 90 days should be allowed to count as service, and that he should be allowed to serve the balance of 32 days at the end of his articles. Counsel cited Fraser's case (14, C.T.R., 406).

Ordered that the break in the continuance of the service be condoned, and that 90 days' leave of absence be allowed to count as service.

PUXTY V. STREETER.

This was an application for suspension of execution of a certain decree of civil imprisonment granted against applicant at the instance of the respondent.

Applicant appeared in person; Mr. Benjamin was for respondent.

Affidavits having been read,

Charles Ivor Puxty (the applicant) went into the box and said that he had no means whatever to satisfy the judgment.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Witness was released from custody at Mossel Bay upon payment of £6 at the time and £6 a month afterwards. He paid £6 on his release, the money having been furnished to him by a friend in Mossel Bay. Witness had pointed out to Mr. Le Roux, attorney, certain movable property that he had in Cape Town. He had an iron shed in Roeland-street, and there were goods in the offices of "Acraum," in Long-street. The matter arose from the "Acraum" business, in which witness was a partner.

[Buchanan, J.: I suppose the Sheriff could sell "Acraum" without a special licence?]

Mr. Benjamin said that he did not know. He understood that "Acraum" was a rival of "Sacco."

Further cross-examined: Witness had been requested to surrender his estate and had been threatened that, unless he did so, his creditors would sequestrate his estate.

By the Court: Witness intended to surrender his estate. His schedules were now being prepared.

Buchanan, J.: Execution of the decree will be suspended for three weeks to enable applicant to surrender his estate. He should take steps at once, or he may be re-arrested.

RYNHOUD V. RYNHOUD AND ESTATE
J. F. RYNHOUD.

This was an application brought by Mary Ann Rynhoud upon notice to respondents to show cause why a sum of £30 should not be paid to enable applicant to proceed with her action against her husband, George W. Rynhoud, for divorce or judicial separation, or why an order should not be granted restraining the executors in the estate of his late father from paying over to him the amount of his inheritance pending result of the action.

Mr. Pohl was for applicant; there was no appearance for respondent.

Mr. Pohl read an affidavit by applicant, and intimated that certain affidavits had been filed by respondents.

Buchanan, J., said that the affidavits would be read.

Mr. Pohl proceeded to read the affidavits, from which it appeared that the respondent, George W. Rynhoud, had pledged his inheritance for the purpose of defending the action.

Ordered that the second respondents, the executor and executrix of the estate of the late J. F. Rynhoud, be interdicted from paying over the sum of £30, part of the inheritance owing to the respondent out of his father's estate, and authorising the second respondents to pay the said sum of £30 to the attorneys of applicant.

HICKSON V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT AND ANOTHER.

Costs—Taxing Master's allocatur
—Review.

H. had applied to the Court for leave to appear as curator ad litem on behalf of his minor son in an action instituted against the respondents jointly. The matter was settled out of Court, respondents agreeing to pay taxed costs. The Taxing Master refused to allow costs of H.'s application as between party and party on the ground that they ought to have been incurred before the issue of summons.

Held, on Review, that the said costs not being unnecessary they must be regarded as costs between party and party no matter when they were incurred.

This was an application calling upon the Colonial Government and the Woodstock Town Council to show cause why the taxation of plaintiff's bill of costs in the suit against respondents should not be reviewed.

It appeared from the affidavits that the Taxing Master had disallowed costs in respect of an application made by the present applicant for leave to him, as father and natural guardian of the interested minor, to carry on an action on behalf of the minor with others in an action against the present respondents. The action had been settled, defendants agreeing, inter alia, to pay taxed costs. The applicant claimed that the charges disallowed were necessary and reasonable, and should be allowed in taxation as between party and party. The Government contended that the charges should not be allowed, but the Municipality raised no objection to their being allowed, and tendered its moiety of the costs.

The report of the taxing officer was as follows: In this case summons was issued on the 9th October, 1906, the warrant to sue having been signed by the several plaintiffs, and also by R. W. Hickson as father and natural guardian of Harry Randolph Hickson, jun. On the 5th November, 1906, the said R. W. Hickson applied to the Court for leave to carry on and combine the action on behalf of the said minor, which was subsequently granted on his filing an indemnity guaranteeing the minor against any costs that may be incurred in the action on his behalf. On taxation of the costs as between party and party, the charges in connection with this application were objected to by the attorney representing the Colonial Government, but the attorney representing the Council of the Municipality of Woodstock raised no objection thereto, and in fact agreed to these charges. I, however, disallowed these charges, as I considered that everything that was necessary to be done to give each plaintiff his or her proper status should have been done before issue of summons. And the charges in connection with the application were therefore not properly included in the bill of costs as against the defendants. I was not at the time aware of the decision in the case of Van der Walt v. Hudson and Moore (4 Juta, 327), where it was laid down that as the father was the proper person to sue on behalf of his minor son, no objection could be taken by the defendant on the ground that no leave had been obtained from the Court.

Dr. Greer was for applicant; Mr. M. Bisset was for the Colonial Government; Mr. Struben was for the Woodstock Council.

Dr. Greer, in argument, said that the question was whether these were necessary costs. The costs, he urged, were in the same position as those incurred by a curator ad litem. He referred to Maasdorp's Institutes, 236, and contended that the father was compelled to come to Court to protect the interests of the minor, who, unless this was done or unless a curator was appointed, would be unprotected in the action. These costs were really part of the costs incurred in asserting the minor's rights. Counsel referred to ex parte Montmort (5 S.C.R., 118.) The applicant only came to the Court as father and natural guardian, and if he had not come the minor's interests might have suffered.

Buchanan, J., said that the whole issue seemed to him to be whether these were necessary costs.

Dr. Greer said that they were necessary costs. As to the position of the Woodstock Municipality, he contended that this being a joint and several liability, the tender of the Woodstock Municipality of half the costs was insufficient. On this point he quoted the case of the Metropolitan Tramway Company v. the Gas Company and the Cape Town Corporation (16, C.T.R., 445.)

Mr. Bisset said the position the Government took up was that these were wholly unnecessary costs, and that no one was benefited by the application except the plaintiff himself. Plaintiff should have waited to see if such application were necessary.

Mr. Struben urged that all that the plaintiff could ask of the Municipality was simply a moiety of the costs, and that the Municipality was entitled to deduct arrear rates and taxes from that moiety.

Buchanan, J.: No question has been raised as to whether this matter comes properly before the Court, and I assume that the Taxing Master, in the execution of his duty as Taxing Master, has authority to tax this bill of costs. The action between the parties was settled out of Court, and by that settlement the defendants undertook to pay the plaintiff's taxed costs. Before the action was ripe for hearing the father of the minor, who was interested in the matters in dispute, moved for authority to represent such minor as his curator ad litem. Such authority was not perhaps necessary, but it was necessary if the father wished to protect himself against personal liability for costs. The action was clearly in the interests of the minor. A question might be raised as to whether it was a successful motion, and on that ground possibly something might be said, as the order of the Court was granted on condition that the father found security, but the result was that the father agreeing to make himself responsible, received an order of Court authorising him to sue on behalf of the minor. Having received such an order, I think that the costs incurred in obtaining that order are fairly taxable as between party and party. The Taxing Master disallowed these costs on the ground, according to his report, that they should have been incurred before the issue of the summons. On that point I think the judgment of the taxing officer was not quite sound. Whether they were incurred before the issue of summons or after is not, I think, the true test. The issue rather is, whether or not they were wholly unnecessary to the action. I think, looking at the whole of the circumstances, these costs cannot be said to be wholly unnecessary, and that, therefore, they are taxable as between party and party. I have not gone into the different items charged. Some of them do not seem to me to be fairly chargeable; but that is a matter the taxing officer will decide upon. The Court will overrule the decision of the taxing officer, and will declare that the costs of the application were necessary costs, and are as such taxable as between party and party. As to the costs of this application, the Government alone raised this objection, and I think they should pay the costs of the application. As to the other respondents, it would seem that each defendant agreed to settle separately on the basis of each paying half the damages agreed upon, and I consider the attorney should have accepted the offer of the Municipality to pay their half of the costs, and therefore the applicants must pay the Municipality's costs.

[Attorney for applicant: A. W. Steer. Attorneys for Colonial Government: Reid and Nephew. Attorneys for Woodstock Council: Moore and Sou.]

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.)]

LOMBERTO V. BASSO. } 1907.
 } May 8th.

This was an action for damages for libel.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, stated that the defendant had on several occasions stated to other persons that he (the plaintiff) had stabbed a man in Italy, and had had to run away, and that that was the reason why he was in a foreign country. He alleged that thereby the defendant meant to signify and did signify that he had been guilty of assault with intent to murder, or with intent, to do grievous bodily harm. Plaintiff claimed that he had sustained damages on account of these false, scandalous, and defamatory statements, and he asked £250 as damages. Defendant, in his plea, denied having made the statements complained of.

Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff; defendant was not represented.

Among the witnesses called for the plaintiff was a boarding-house keeper, who said the plaintiff was formerly his partner in the business. On account of witness hearing from several customers that plaintiff had stabbed a man in Italy, witness paid him what was due to him and terminated the partnership, as provided for by the terms of the deed of partnership. Witness considered that plaintiff's association with the business was detrimental on account of these rumours.

Witnesses were called, who deposed that Basso had made the statements complained of. Defendant, it was stated, was "a dealer in Italian groceries," and it appeared from the evidence that he was not now in Cape Town. Defendant was asked to apologise, but he maintained that the accusation was true, and said that if he were taken to Court he would say things that plaintiff would not care to have said.

The plaintiff gave evidence. He said he had been in this country about ten years. He had always been on good terms with Basso until last December. Then there was a quarrel over an account, and Basso drew a knife. Afterwards witness heard of the statements Basso made concerning him. The statements were untrue. He had never stabbed a man, nor had he ever been charged with stabbing a man. People had changed in their behaviour towards him on account of these statements.

The defendant's wife, who was in court, stated, in answer to the Chief Justice that her husband was now at Lobito Bay. Her husband did not know the case was on, as matters were stopped for about three weeks, and he did not hear from the lawyers. She had not had an opportunity of writing to him, but she could do so now. Defendant left on the 19th April.

Dr. Greer said the notice of set-down was served on the 24th April on the defendant's attorneys.

The defendant's wife said it was she who made these statements. Plaintiff had slandered and assaulted witness and her husband.

Plaintiff, recalled, denied this.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You did not say anything to defendant affecting his or his wife's character?]

Plaintiff: No.

Llewellyn van Breda, the defendant's attorney, said there had been a misunderstanding between the attorneys in the matter. Witness had understood that the case would be set down next term; otherwise, counsel would have been instructed. About a week ago witness became aware that the plaintiff had gone to Lobito Bay on a business trip. Defendant said some time ago that he was going on a short business trip, and that he would return shortly. He may have been told by a clerk that the case would not come on this term.

In reply to Dr. Greer, witness said defendant was barred in March, but it was agreed that the bar should be removed. There would have been no need for an extension of time within which to plead, if the plaintiff's attorneys had carried out their agreement, and had not barred within ten days.

Dr. Greer said the plaintiff's object was to clear his character.

De Villiers, C.J., said he would not give heavy damages, without giving the defendant an opportunity to appear.

Dr. Greer said plaintiff did not ask for large damages.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the defendant's wife had admitted the statements, and it was not pleaded that they were true. Plaintiff had not suffered serious damages. The judgment of the Court would reinstate him in the opinion of those who might possibly have believed the story told about him. From the statement of the defendant's wife he was satisfied that the only result of a postponement of the case would be to add to the costs, and that the issue would be the same in any case. Judgment would be given for the plaintiff for £50, with costs.

CLARKE V. HEATHCOTE.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Engcobo.

It appeared that the plaintiff alleged that five head of his cattle had been poisoned through drinking sheep dip left in a pot on the commonage by the defendant. It was denied that the animals died as a result of poisoning by this means. The Magistrate gave judgment for plaintiff for £60, made up of a number of items, and against this the defendant now appealed.

Mr. Benjamin was for the appellant; Mr. Bisset was for the respondent.

Mr. Benjamin, in argument, quoted Bain on Damages, p. 426. He urged that, as there was no special damage alleged in the summons, the Magistrate was wrong in awarding a sum of £4 8s. 4d. as "some compensation to plaintiff for the disturbance of his rights."

De Villiers, C.J., said that if the notice of appeal had specified this item as being excepted to, the plaintiff might have foregone that amount.

Mr. Benjamin said he had been instructed to press that the judgment was wrong in relation to the whole sum awarded by the Magistrate. There was considerable doubt, counsel submitted, as to the cause of the animals' deaths, and the Magistrate should have given absolution from the instance.

Without calling on Mr. Bisset, the Court dismissed the appeal.

De Villiers, C.J.: It seems to me clear from the evidence that the plaintiff's five head of cattle died from the effects of arsenical poisoning. It is true that the stomachs of all the cattle that died were not minutely examined, but two of them were examined and properly analysed, and the other head of cattle showed exactly the same symptoms as the two the contents of whose stomachs were sent to the analyst. There was found to be arsenic in the contents of the stomachs of these two in quite sufficient quantity to account for the deaths of the animals. Then the contents of a pot were examined and the dip found therein was found to be rich in arsenic. This dip had been left in a pot close to a dipping tank and on a place where the plaintiff's cattle lawfully grazed. The symptoms of the illness came upon the plaintiff's cattle in the neighbourhood of that dipping tank, and footmarks of cattle were found in and about the place where this pot had been standing. It is also proved to my satisfaction that the defendant was responsible for the pot of dip being left where it was. It is said that it had been covered with corrugated iron, and that stones had been placed upon that, but in my opinion that does not remove the element of negligence in the case. It appears to me that it was a matter of great negligence on the part of the defendant in leaving a dip of that nature, which he must have known to be poisonous, in a spot where cattle might have access to it. It is well known that cattle will go about licking at things such as salt and other matters of that kind, and the defendant might have expected that cattle would probably appear on the scene and have a taste of this stuff. In fact, counsel for the defendant candidly admits that, if it is once proved that the cattle did die from the effects of taking the poison from this pot, the defendant would be liable. Well, I am satisfied that the deaths were caused by the cattle taking some of this dip, and consequently, in my opinion, the defendant is liable for damages for the loss of these cattle. The plaintiff himself gave evidence as to the value of the cattle, and according to him one of the heifers was worth £16, a black heifer was worth £14, and a black ox was worth £12 10s.

The Magistrate would have been quite justified upon that evidence in giving judgment for the full amount of £65, quite independently of the expenses of the Government analyst, or of any special damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff. But he took a round sum of £60, and then, in analysing as to how he arrived at that amount, he says that £4 8s. 4d. is some compensation to the plaintiff for the disturbance of his rights. Well, if the defendant had given notice to the plaintiff that that is his special ground of appeal, that he admits he is liable for damages, but that he appeals upon this point of the £4 8s. 4d., it is quite possible that the plaintiff might have said: "Very well, I won't insist upon that." But the appeal is general; it is upon the whole case as to the defendant's liability, and considering that there is quite sufficient evidence, independently of this £4 8s. 4d., that the plaintiff has sustained damages to the extent of £60, I do not think the Court would be now justified in making any amendment of the judgment. The appeal will be dismissed, with costs.

THIRD DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

MANSON V. TRAKMAN. { 1907.
May 8th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £500, with interest from 1st July, 1906, less £6 10s. paid on account, bond due by reason of non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property to be declared executable and the rents attached by the Sheriff.

Order granted.

BRITTAIN V. ZIMMER.

Mr. Toms moved for provisional sentence for £137, balance of certain mortgage bond for £600, with interest at 8 per cent. from the 1st January, 1907, bond due by reason of non-payment of instalments; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte LIQUIDATORS REY-NOLDS' VEHICLE FAC- } 1907.
TORY, LIMITED. } May 8th.

Mr. Russell moved for an order sanctioning a compromise proposed to be entered into between the petitioners and a certain contributory.

Buchanan, J., said that the proper course was to give notice of the application by advertisement, and allow the petition to lie for inspection before moving for sanction.

An order was granted directing that the petition should lie for inspection at the office of the liquidators for 14 days, after which date the Court may be moved to confirm the same, publication once in the "Cape Times."

Ex parte ESTATE SLABBERT.

Mr. Howes moved, on the petition of the executor testamentary of estate late Jurgens Johannes Slabbert, for a supplementary order authorising the raising of a bond for £644 10s. on mortgage of the landed property. Petitioner stated that in August, 1905, leave was granted by the Court to raise a mortgage for £250. That power had not been taken advantage of, and on the 13th February last an application was made for authority to raise a further bond for £363, the petitioner being under the impression that the order formerly granted could now be taken advantage of. It appeared, however, that that was not so, hence the present application.

The matter was referred to the Master for report.

Ex parte ESTATE SCHOLTZ.

Will—Conditional bequest of property not to go out of the family.

The late S. bequeathed certain immovable property to his children and grand-children (by substitution) subject to the condition that it was not to go out of the family. All the legatees now asked that this provision should be cancelled.

Held, that the Court had no power to alter the will of the testator.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on the petition of the thirteen legatees under the will of the late Theodorus Ernst Scholtz, of Ganna Leege, division of Aberdeen, for leave to cancel a certain provision in the will. Petitioners stated that the late Mr. Scholtz, by his last will and testament, dated 1st March, 1904, bequeathed specific portions of his landed property to them, which had now been surveyed and sub-divided, and diagrams framed so as to give to each of the petitioners, to whom transfer was to be passed, the piece of ground bequeathed to him or her. The bequests were subject to the provision: "Met betrekking tot de gronden hierin vermaakt door ons aan de kinderen en klein-kinderen voormeld, is het onze expresse wil en begeerte dat geene de regt zal hebben noch toegelaten worden eenig part of deel van gemeld gronden aan eene vreemde te verkoopen of vervreemden, daar het onze begeerte is dat dezelve in de familie zullen blyven." Petitioners were anxious to annul this provision, of which none of them wished to take advantage, and were desirous of receiving transfer free from any such condition. Owing to three of the legatees, namely, the children of the late Johan F. Scholtz, being minors, petitioners were advised that any agreement which may be made amongst them with a view of cancelling the above provision must receive the sanction and approval of this Court. They prayed for an order authorising the mother and natural guardian of the minors to enter into a joint agreement to cancel and annul the provision in question. Counsel also read an affidavit by the curator ad litem of the minors, pointing out that three of the legatees wanted to raise a mortgage, and that if the restriction remained they would be placed in a difficult position.

Buchanan, J., observed that it was a pity no translation of the clause was annexed to the petition. He read the clause as a prohibition against alienation out of the family.

Mr. Jones said it was a question as to whether the clause constituted a real or a personal prohibition, as discussed by Sande. If it were a real prohibition then, of course, the property would go to four generations, but if personal then it would only apply to the particular persons concerned. Counsel quoted Sande, 3, 5, 4 (Webber's Translation, pp. 212 and 213) and 3, 3, 7 (Trans. p. 187). If the clause in question were merely a personal prohibition, he submitted that the parties could sell one to the other, and that there would be no further prohibition. He also cited Voet 36, 1, 27 (McGregor's Trans., p. 72).

Buchanan, J.: The testator seems to have made a will—I say "seems," because the will itself is not attached to the petition, as it ought to be—in which he bequeathed his landed property to his children and his grandchildren by substitution. And he added a clause that the land so bequeathed shall not be by them alienated to a stranger, "the desire being that the property should remain in the family." Application is now made to the Court to authorise the transfer of this landed property to the legatees free from this obligation imposed by the will, on the ground that the legatees have agreed to dispense with it. No doubt it would be very advantageous to the legatees to agree to do away with a burden which the testator imposed, but if they take the land they must take it subject to the burden, or they need not take it at all. The Court has no power to alter the will of the testator, and no order will be made on the application.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

O'BRIEN V. LOGAN.

1907.
May 10th.
" 13th.

Architect — Fees — Project not carried out—Quantum meruit.

Where a proprietor instructs an architect to prepare plans and the proposed work is not carried out the Court will not feel bound in making its award by the scale of fees customary in England but will award only a quantum meruit.

This was an action for the recovery of an amount of money for services rendered.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows: (1) The plaintiff is an architect practising at Cape Town; the defendant resides at Matjesfontein in this Colony; (2) in or about the month of February, 1905, the defendant employed the plaintiff as his architect for the customary and usual remuneration to prepare plans, drawings, and specifications of a certain hotel to be erected for the defendant upon certain ground situate in Queen Victoria-street, Cape Town, and now occupied by certain buildings known as Poole's Hotel. The estimated cost of the said hotel so to be erected was the sum of £120,000 sterling; (3) the plaintiff, in pursuance of the said contract of employment, duly prepared plans, drawings, and specifications as aforesaid, and the defendant duly accepted the same, and at the request of the defendant the same were duly passed and approved by the Corporation of the City of Cape Town; (4) thereupon the plaintiff became, and was entitled to, the said customary and usual remuneration, which is an amount reckoned at the rate of 2½ per cent. upon the said estimated cost. Such remuneration amounts in all to the sum of £3,000, together with the sum of £25 for certain

